

STUDY PAPERS ON THE ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP

The Legacy of Philip Wittmeyer – Volume 6

“SP-Partial” Preview Release — 18 April 2023

Parts, chapters, sections, and subsections marked with a number in a circle ① are complete. The numbers indicate batches that I wrote and that my editor reviewed. Parts, chapters, sections, and subsections marked with a check ✓ are semi-complete: they are not yet fully polished by me and reviewed by my editor. The remaining parts, chapters, and sections (that have no mark) are incomplete; you should probably just ignore them. Instead, watch this space for additional releases on the way to “SP-Whole”.

④ Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group

by Philip Joel Wittmeyer

Under the Creative Commons License (CC BY–NC–ND 3.0) you may share (copy, distribute, and transmit the work) under the following conditions:

- Attribution — If you share this work, you must give credit to the authors and editors.
- Non-Commercial — You must use it for your own personal use. You MAY NOT use the work for commercial purposes or in any way that suggests that the authors or editors endorse you or your use of the work.
- No Derivative Works — You must keep any copy that you share intact, meaning you may not edit, change, alter, or build upon it.
- For any reuse or distribution, you must make others aware of the license terms of this work.

>Basically and briefly, just share this PDF (as is) with interested parties and you and I and they are okay.<

The intention is that this book and six others by this author will eventually be published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., a non-profit organization dedicated to procuring, processing, publishing, and promulgating Michaelian teachings materials; I am a board member there. For more information about that organization, and the Michaelian teachings in general, please visit www.centerformichaelteachings.org. And while you are there, you could purchase some of the books we have already published.

The image on the title page is of the Heart Chakra, called “Anahata” in Sanskrit; it was borrowed from the Wikipedia page on that subject. The Heart Chakra is the middle of seven major chakras; it is the bridge between a ‘lower’ triad and a ‘higher’ triad of chakras. The purple-colored image on page eight is called the “Antah’karana”. This is a Sanskrit word and image for the concept of the totality of Mind. As with the Heart Chakra, the image represents the bridge between the ‘lower’ and the ‘higher’ realms; it has been adopted by Reiki practitioners as a symbol of the healing of the three levels of Being, namely body, mind, and spirit. Note the three-dimensional cube in the center, with three ‘arms’, representing the fundamental trichotomy of the Cosmos. The image of two hands on this page is yet another evocation of the fundamental dichotomy of the Cosmos. It is from the Sistine Chapel ceiling painting by Michelangelo: the passive hand of Adam on the left and the active hand of God on the right are extended toward each other. The Yin–Yang symbol, on page nine — also with passive and active sides — has the Chinese name “Taijitu”; its meaning is that apparent opposites define and contain each other.

⑧ The Meta-Michaelian Project

Several channels have promulgated their own version of the so-called “Michael teaching” over the decades, and they have documented their words in books and on websites. When reading these, it is obvious even to the casual observer that the emphasis and style and substance and coverage embodied in each particular version is different from the other offerings, and it is also obvious that the differences depend somewhat on the personality of the channel. Thus, the Michaels’ messages have not been delivered with one ‘voice’, literally and figuratively. Each version consists of a conglomeration of doctrines and dogmas that have been delivered didactically and descriptively and without evidence or argument or explanation. Mostly there are similarities between these various versions, but there are also significant differences. Newbie students of the material quickly discover that there is not a consistent and coherent and consilient teaching that came through a single source, even though it is claimed that it comes from a single source.

By inconsistent I mean that sometimes the versions from different channels do not always agree with each other in all matters where the information overlaps; the information from one version is not supplementary or complementary to other versions, it is actually directly contradictory. By incoherent I mean that the author of each version has cobbled their doctrines together without realizing that they constitute an elegant, cohesive, integrated, holistic system that can be presented within a unified comprehensive explanatory framework. An analogy is that the various doctrines seem like a dissonant cacophony; reading about them is like listening to this musical instrument and then that musical instrument and so on without realizing that the individual instruments are playing in a combined coordinated harmonious orchestra. By non-consilient I mean that the versions do not agree in every respect with other credible sources, whether they be channeled, mystical, perennial, scientific, and/or philosophical systems. If I were to apply one word to these three types of defects or deficiencies in the Michael teachings, it would be “nonsense”.

Therefore, it seems to me that there is no collective body of information that can be reasonably called The Michael Teaching; rather, what we see is a variety of quasi-Michael or semi-Michael or Michael-like or pseudo-Michael (if Yarbro’s claim that groups other than hers are “frauds and impostors”) teachings, or what may be called “Michaelian teachings” — and that is what I call it in my books that refer to this body of information.

When I survey the situation, I see two broad divisions in the Michaelian teachings world. The “standard”, shall we say, Michaelian teachings includes the work of Sarah Chambers, of Leslie Briggs, of Quinn Yarbro and others in her orbit, of JP Van Hulle and others in her orbit, of José Stevens, of Shepherd Hoodwin, and of Troy Tolley. These channels have not drifted very far outside the ‘box’ of the generalized Michaelian teachings. Channels in the other broad division acknowledge that their work is, shall we say, “para-Michaelian”, “para” being the Greek-language prefix meaning “beside” or “next to”. For instance, Stephen Cocconi says he is working with the “Michael Consortium”, his channeling having stated that the Michaels have graduated to the next higher “plane” from where they originally spoke: (><https://www.themichaelteaching.com/about-stephen/michaels-consortium/><). Susannah Redelfs acknowledges the standard Michaelian teachings, but says she is actually working with the “Council of One” (><https://councilofone.org/><). Karen Murray (aka Talyaa Liera) says she used to work with the Michaels, but subsequently worked with “Polaris” and is now working with “Solara” (><https://oracleofdestiny.com/about-talyaa/><). Varda Hasselmann encountered Yarbro’s first two books about the Michaelian teachings in the mid-1980s, but became a channel for “Die Quelle”, described as a sibling reunited Entity to the Michaels on the third plane (><https://septana.de/septana/><). Larry Byram started out as a student of Alice Bailey, then became a channel for the Michaelian teachings in the mid-1980s, but has diverged away from that foundation to create his own teaching in the wider Michaelian world (><https://higheralignment.com/><). All of these channels in both of these divisions can be considered to be variations in the greater Michaelian teachings world, with some being more divergent or derivative than others.

Another instantiation of diversity in Michaelian sources is the assertion that the Michaels themselves do not always speak as a single unified entity. In MFM, on page 102 (quoting an early session the original Michaelian group, 27 October 1973), it was said that the Michaels are an “Entity” that consist of 850 Warrior Fragments and 200 King Fragments. However, in the first session that Sarah Chambers held when she resumed public channeling in 1996 (14 January), it was said that not just two Roles, but all Roles were present in the Michaels’ Entity. It was also stated that various channels prefer to hear from certain conglomerations of Roles, such as the Sages and/or the Priests and/or the Scholars within the Michael Entity. It was also stated that various channels are better or worse at getting information on various subjects because of the depth of understanding that the channel has on the background information on that subject. This diversity in source and receiver provides further evidence for my assertion that there is no consistent, coherent, consilient body of “Michael Teaching”; rather, there is an inconsistent, incoherent, inconsilient “Michaelian teachings”.

The fact that there are various resources in the Michaelian worlds (heavenly and earthly) has its advantages and disadvantages. On the one hand, the Michaelian teachings are broader and deeper and richer as a result of the various perspectives provided by various alleged sources and receivers. On the other hand, it might be disconcerting to students to see the many actual inconsistencies and discrepancies within and between and among channels. I am one of those who finds the situation dismaying and disappointing. So what are we truth-seekers to do about this fact? What are we to make of these variations? My answer is: Do our own research — because I have done my own research. To me, this does not seem unimportant. To the Michaels themselves, they are reported to have said that this is not unimportant; in fact, it is said to be vital.

Some students are drawn to and prefer one version in the Michaelian teachings world over the other versions, and they let it go at that; they do not examine the issues of contradiction and incoherence and non-consilience at depth, and this avoids the difficulties and unpleasantness of confronting contradictions and incoherence and non-compliance with other teachings. However, to their credit, every Michaelian channel says that their students should not “let it go at that”; they say that it is up to students to “validate” the channeled information, and that to not do so renders the teaching worthless — or worse, misleading — for those students. Some Michaelian students take this injunction more seriously than others do. Furthermore, some students have more competence in scientific acumen and/or epistemological sophistication and/or experiential curiosity than others do, and they bring these tools to bear on their process of validation.

There is more to say regarding the process of validation.

There are far too many errors in channeling for us to trust it implicitly. We know for a fact that these errors exist because there are many obvious irreconcilable contradictions. The channels make no efforts that I know of to correct the errors, and the Michaels make no efforts that I know of to correct the errors (except maybe they are using me for that purpose). To their credit, the channels do say that we should not trust them implicitly, and they do enjoin students to validate the channeling. My concern is that most students are naively credulous by nature; my observation is that few if any students actually do the validation process at all. Or it may be that if they do it they do not broadcast their conclusions, as I have done.

Almost the entirety of the Michaelian teachings has been asserted without evidence and/or argument; it is delivered ex cathedra, by ‘pontification’, and students are indoctrinated thereby and therewith. Personally, I find this type of delivery to be profoundly problematic; it is like a fundamentalist cultish religion that takes some alleged Holy Scripture as the Word of God. Perhaps I find this to be more odious than others do because I was once a member of just such an organization. (“Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me.”) What are we to do? Perhaps you have heard it said in some legal systems that a person accused of a crime is “presumed innocent until proven guilty in a court of law”. Following that pattern, my approach is to presume that a channeled dogma-doctrine is in the limbo zone of my belief system until corroborated or discredited “beyond a reasonable doubt”. Perhaps you have heard it said that “That which is asserted without evidence can be dismissed without evidence.” Following that aphorism, if I cannot accumulate enough evidence and argument to validate or invalidate a particular Michaelian dogma-doctrine, then I leave it in the limbo zone of my belief system.

Personally, I take the fact that there are issues of consistency, coherence, and consilience within and among the various Michaelian versions and scientific and philosophical and spiritual teachings as an incentive, not a disincentive, to study harder and deeper and wider. It may be that I function near the extreme, which is why I have adopted the motto, “The unexamined teaching is not worth believing.” Using the tools known to me, and bringing to bear whatever talents I may have, to my own satisfaction I have been able to validate some components of some versions of the Michaelian teachings, I have been able to invalidate some components of some versions of the Michaelian teachings, and yet other components are still in the limbo zone of my belief system, yet to be moved to one or the other side of the validation–invalidation ledger. Supplemental to the changes or modification to the Michaelian teachings arrived at via my process of validation, I have added some relevant components of my own to the validation ledger; they are my ‘special sauce’ added to the mix of various Michaelian versions. In addition to that, I have discovered that there are explanations for some of the Michaelian dogma-doctrines that were delivered ex cathedra, meaning, delivered without explanation. By “explanations” I mean that there are levels of meaning and understanding both ‘below’ and ‘above’ the superficial layer that Michaelian students have been made aware of.

Regarding the concept of “explanation”, a metaphor is appropriate. Some, if not many, Michaelian students are in the ‘grade school’ level of their learning about the Michaelian dogma-doctrines. This is where the student typically learns by rote memorization, because that is all they are capable of ... before maturity. This is where they read the books and the websites and they can repeat what the channel said about a particular subject on this page of a book or that URL of a website. This is a necessary phase in the story arc of the overall learning process for newbie students. However, the Michaels enjoined us to validate and inculcate their teaching experientially: put it into practice. The Michaelian teachings cannot do that experiential learning for you — you must do that for yourself.

However, I take the position that there are layers of “explanation” ‘above’ and ‘below’ the superficial strata of data that is imparted via channeling. For instance, a personality trait on the Overleaf chart can be described in minute detail and at great length — Michaelian books and websites do just that — and it leads to comprehension, but only of a primitive and preliminary sort. What a dogmatic didactic teaching does not do is provide an explanation of how or why that particular trait is what it is and does what it does; the mere bare description of a trait does not provide the context in which the content of the trait is to be understood at the larger and deeper level of explanation and understanding. Most books mention the Attributes of the traits — e.g., Cardinal Inspiration — but none of them other than my books explain the Attributes of those traits in the context of the ontological substrate of the reality system in which we find our consciousness embedded, namely logic and mathematics and physics. And not only the Overleaf System, but many other components of the dogma-doctrines of the Michaelian teachings can be understood in terms of these ontological primitives. The goal of my project is to provide the explanations that get behind and go beyond the mere descriptions that have heretofore been provided by the channels to their newbie students.

Returning to the school metaphor: I aspire to emulate the kind of learning that takes place in the educational system after graduation from high school, where there is less mere description and more deep explanation. In American terms, this means the bachelor’s degree, the master’s degree, and the doctoral degree. Even here though, as I understand it, getting a master’s degree indicates that the graduate has mastered a subject at its current level of understanding. Only the doctoral degree goes ‘meta’ in the sense that it teaches the student — or should teach the student — how and why to learn, how and why to think for themselves, how and why to research for themselves, how and why to extend the horizon of knowledge and understanding beyond the current level of knowledge and understanding in a particular field of inquiry. My hope is that Michaelian students will get a master’s degree in the Michaelian teachings with the help of my books, but then go even further into what amounts to doctoral degree territory with the help of my additional components, which provides something like a doctoral degree of understanding and explanation. My extensions are not the complete or the final answer, but my claim is that they are steps in the right direction.

In abidance with the ethical principle of ‘full disclosure’, I would be remiss if I did not notify readers at the beginning of my books that what I offer in my books is not The Michael Teaching, first of all because there is no such thing, as indicated above, and second of all because I offer yet another distinct version in the pool of various Michaelian teachings; my Michaelian ‘train’ is running on a different ‘track’, so to speak. Because I have made unique modifications and added explanations to the standard version, I have come to refer to my version as the Meta-Michaelian project, “meta” being the Greek-language prefix meaning “above and beyond”. Perhaps I could have called it the “Philipian” project, but that would not acknowledge its broad affinity with, and my indebtedness to, Michaelian sources. Whatever the name, the Meta-Michaelian project is my own thing; it is not a thoughtless regurgitation of what the Michaels allegedly said through some alleged channel or channels; it is what I have validated and invalidated; it is what I say through my computer word processor. And, per the tradition of all other Michaelian teachings, I encourage validation, lest the reader find my particular offering worthless and/or misleading.

As I said above, the Meta-Michaelian project is not a re-presentation of the familiar material that the reader finds in other Michaelian books and on Michaelian websites. It is, among other things, a re-formulation of the Michaelian teachings from the ground up, built on a foundation of ontological primitives in addition to channeling; in fact, the reformulation occasionally overrides channeling. I am not a ‘channel’, but it may be that I am a ‘conduit’. Frankly, I am not exactly certain where it comes from. It may be that my muse is the “technology and science entity” that was mentioned in the 14 April 1974 session of the original Michaelian group. My process for doing the Meta-Michaelian project is perhaps similar to channeling. As I conceptualize it, there is a sub-personality, which I call The Writer, which lives in the right hemisphere of my brain. It has absorbed a lot of cosmological, metaphysical, philosophical, sociological, anthropological, scientific, psychological, and technical information over this lifetime and perhaps other lifetimes; I have read a number of books that bear on ontological primitives or 'first principles', and I have had a number of transcendent mystical experiences that bear on 'first principles'. My right brain hemisphere assimilates and processes and integrates this information; it notices abstract patterns and systems and concepts; it translates it all into words, and sends them across the corpus callosum to the left hemisphere of my brain when it is in a receptive state, and that hemisphere instructs the body to write the words down on scraps of paper, take them to my computer, and commit them to a word processor. Beyond that conceptualization, I am reluctant to characterize my muse as a "higher self" or an "entity" on some Plane beyond the Physical. The bottom line is that I add to the Michaelian material when the Meta-Michaelian material comes to me or through me. Wherever the inspiration comes from, the unique perspective is what makes my books different from anything that Michaelian students have previously seen.

Looking back to August of 1981 when I first began to study the Michaelian teachings in earnest, it seems that I was not satisfied with the Michaelian teachings as they were then. Neither am I satisfied with them as they have become. From the beginning of this journey, I have seen things that Michaelian students have not yet seen; I have understood things that Michaelian students have not yet understood, even after four decades. It appears that I 'march to a different drummer'. This journey leads me to believe that I have never actually been a Michaelian student; rather, I have always been a Meta-Michaelian student. So, as I said, I have added and subtracted and multiplied and divided the mainstream orthodoxy of the Michaelian teachings in my own unique way. One metaphor for what I have done is that I found the Michaelian teachings as a 'diamond in the rough', a gem that has just been dug out of a mine, rough and covered with dirt. It is ugly in this state, but it has a lot of potential. It even has some practical utility in this raw state. My Meta-Michaelian project is to clean it, cut it, and polish it, so that it is a gem of sublime beauty as well as utility. The purpose of the Meta-Michaelian project is to throw out the 'bathwater' while retaining the 'baby'. Another metaphor, one from the Bible, is to 'separate the wheat from the chaff'. Yet another metaphor is that I found the Michaelian teachings to be like a dilapidated ramshackle edifice, and I have refurbished and remodeled them, and added some rooms. It can also be thought of in these terms, that by applying the tools of consistency, coherence, and consilience (described in the second paragraph of this section), the Meta-Michaelian project is the 'error-correction code' that attempts to clean up the Michaelian 'signal' by removing the 'noise' created by the fact that there are various sources and receivers of the Michaelian teachings. Please keep in mind that I am not averse to the sensible components of the Michaelian teachings; I am only trying to fix the senseless components. My aim in my books is to keep the beautiful, healthy 'baby' and throw out the filthy 'bathwater'; my purpose is to eat what is 'wheat' and throw out what is 'chaff'. And, speaking of babies and eating, I wish to no longer be 'spoon-fed' like an infant; what about you?

A situation that is common with Michaelian students is that they either lose interest in learning more about the Michaelian teachings so they look elsewhere, or they hunger for more within the Michaelian teaching but do not find it and become stagnant. The Meta-Michaelian project suggests that there is much to be 'interpolated' within the current realm of the Michaelian teachings, and much to be 'extrapolated' outside the current realm of the Michaelian teachings. My suggestion is that the entire cosmos, from the largest realm to the smallest realm, can be better understood with the help and guidance of the Meta-Michaelian project.

Personally, I find the defects and deficiencies in the Michaelian teachings to be awkward at best, and embarrassing at worst. The Priest-ish (Cardinal Inspiration) components in my personality (Priest tertiary influences, Spiritualist, Arrogance) feel disappointed that the teacher and the students have made no efforts to correct the issues — which are obvious even to casual observers — as part of the Validation process. The Priest in me says, "We can do better than this!" It wants to feel pride in the Michaelian teachings, it wants to be able to recommend the Michaelian teachings to others wholeheartedly, but, in its current state of disarray, it cannot be advocated.

The point that I drive home in my books is that the Michaelian teachings is not the be-all and end-all of accurate information. One should not presume that it is at the top level of available knowledge about anything. The lack of consistency, coherence, and consilience among the channels demonstrates that conclusively. To assume that a supernatural entity is able to accurately communicate through a mere human — if that is what is happening here — is a huge leap of faith. As Morpheus said to Neo in the Matrix movie, my books suggest to the reader that they take the ‘red pill’, “free your mind”, and wake up in their own intuitive faculties that are enlightened by the real worlds of science, technology, engineering, and math.

Others may find it uncomfortable that some of my work involves pointing out the defects and deficiencies of the Michaelian teachings, but this could be a useful phase in their transition to a Meta-Michaelian project of their own, should they ever become dissatisfied with the Michaelian teachings in their current condition. Even though my Meta-Michaelian project is distinctive from the Michaelian teachings, in this book and in my six other books, my aspiration for service is that I have something worth sharing with the Michaelian community, after my four decades of involvement in it. “Your mileage may vary”, as the saying goes, but here it is for whatever it is worth to you, somewhere between zero and infinity; you make the evaluation. Seven books that document the Meta-Michaelian project are in progress. My aspiration is that the reader benefit from the fruits of my efforts thus far. May you enjoy and learn.

Dedication

To all Michaelian and Para-Michaelian and Meta-Michaelian students — everywhere and everywhen.

But also, I am reminded of Jesus’s parable of the sower and the seed:

The Parable of the Sower (sometimes called the Parable of the Soils) is a parable of Jesus found in Matthew 13:1–23, Mark 4:1–20, Luke 8:4–15 and the extra-canonical Gospel of Thomas.

Jesus tells of a farmer who sows seed indiscriminately. Some seed falls on the path (wayside) with no soil, some on rocky ground with little soil, some on soil which contains thorns, and some on good soil. In the first case, the seed is taken away; in the second and third soils, the seed fails to produce a crop; but when it falls on good soil, it grows and yields thirty-, sixty-, or a hundred-fold.

Jesus later explains to his disciples that the seed represents the Gospel, the sower represents anyone who proclaims it, and the various soils represent people’s responses to it.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Parable_of_the_Sower< — retrieved 28 March 2023]

My guess is that there are many spiritual seekers who could be likened to ‘dark matter’ in that they are influenced by the books and websites of the Michaelian teachings, but they are invisible to the Michaelian students who make themselves visible to other students. May this book be like a ‘seed planted in fertile soil’ — the ‘soil’ being the hearts and minds of spiritual seekers of every kind, not just Michaelian.

Copyright Status

This publication is released under the Creative Commons License, version “CC BY-NC-ND” by the original author, Philip Wittmeyer. This allows you to share it verbatim with anyone so long as, 1) you credit the author, 2) you charge no money, and 3) you make no derivatives — without contacting Philip and getting his permission: >wittmeyer@gmail.com<. However, the recommended way to make this available is for readers not to duplicate it yourself but to refer others to me.

The purpose of the copyright is, of course, not to stop the information from spreading; it is to give credit where credit is due. Although you are not forbidden to copy and disseminate the entire document verbatim, you may prefer to borrow (some of) the ideas, modify them, and/or add to them; you are also allowed to do this to your heart’s content, and present the modifications as your own. Even here it is common courtesy to let others know where some of the original inspiration came from, and that would be me and this book and my other books.

I believe that the Michaelian teachings deserves to be as widely known as other spiritual teachings. The book has been written in a way that it can be used as a manual, a manual that might lend itself to group learning such as monthly meetings and gatherings. I am not the type to lead seminars or retreats myself, but if you are, and if you have studied the system with a view to teaching it and receiving compensation, then by all means do so. If you want to rework the information in your own words and for your own purposes, I encourage that, so long as you attribute the source to me, so that others can find me. I in my turn refer the reader to the precursors to my perspective, first of all Messages from Michael, by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro, and subsequently other books and teachers who can be found via an internet search for “Michael teachings”. In my books I have uniquely adapted and modified the information found in the Michaelian teachings community as a whole. Go thou and do likewise.

It may not be possible to apply this present copyright notice strictly. Precursor portions of this Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group manuscript have been distributed to Michaelian students over the decades since it was originally written, during the years 2010 to 2024. Many versions of the manuscript in various stages of completion and polish were released and distributed, and who knows what has become of them? Printouts of those versions had a cover letter, and it included a copyright notice that changed over the versions. Basically, my intention for copyrighting the manuscript was to preclude anyone else from claiming the work as their own and claiming their copyright on it and thereby blocking my ability to copyright it. Whatever it said in its various incarnations, perhaps those copyrights are still relevant for those printouts. If you are not sure what to do with the use and/or distribution of my writings, including this book and/or the previous versions, contact me and we will talk about it.

Acknowledgments

Thanks, of course, to Sarah Chambers for the original channeling of the Michael entity, to members of the original Michaelian group for recording, transcribing, and disseminating the transcriptions, and to Chelsea Quinn Yarbro for publishing Messages from Michael based on those and other transcriptions; all that allowed me to find the Michaelian teachings in 1980. Thanks to others who have published books on the Michaelian teachings and created websites: you know who they are. Thanks to all of the friends I have made among Michaelian students, and who have taught me much. Thanks to Nancy Gillpatrick Cross, who was my primary editor on this book; her comments were invaluable. Thanks to [\[\[names to be listed in alphabetical order \]\]](#) for proofreading and commenting on the pre-publication manuscript. “With a little help from my friends”, a crude, rough, primitive manuscript was transformed into the glorious manifestation that you have before you now. I feel such gratitude that you helped me with this project.

The serif and sans serif typefaces used in this document are from the Mesouran family of fonts. To the author’s aesthetic sensibilities, Mesouran has just the right balance between a “masculine” (angular or spiky) and a “feminine” (rounded or smooth) appearance, with a touch of elegance that is beautiful, but not so much as to be a distraction from easy readability.

*“Propagate the Logos. This isn’t trite. We expect this teaching to reach others.
We are not just hollering down the rain barrel.” — the Michaels*

Books by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc.

The Michaelian teachings, filtered through the brains of various channels:

Michael Speaks — The Legacy of Sarah Chambers (Volumes 1 & 2 & 3)

Michael Speaks — The Legacy of Leslie Briggs

Michael Speaks — A Legacy of JP Van Hulle and Aaron Christean (Volumes 1 & 2 & 3)

Books by Philip Wittmeyer [in preparation]

The Meta-Michaelian project — the Michaelian teachings filtered through the brain of an engineer:

The Tao of Cosmology: Tao’s Template of First Principles (The Legacy of Philip Joel Wittmeyer, Volume 1)

The Tao of Cosmogony: The Natural Sequence of the Cosmic Septenary (The Legacy of PJW, Volume 2)

The Tao of Personality: The Process/Aspect System of Personality Traits (The Legacy of PJW, Volume 3)

The Tao of Relationships: The Chemistry and Alchemy of Service and Intimacy (The Legacy of PJW, Vol. 4)

A History of the Overleaf Chart: From the Original Michaelian Group to the Present (Legacy of PJW, Vol. 5)

Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group (The Legacy of Philip Wittmeyer, Volume 6)

The Synthesis: The Michaelian Teachings as Perennialism (The Legacy of Philip Wittmeyer, Volume 7)

“The unexamined life is not worth living.” — Socrates
“The unexamined teaching is not worth believing.” — Wittmeyer

④ Back Cover Blurb for Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group

“Propagate the Logos. This isn’t trite. We expect this teaching to reach others.

We are not just hollering down the rain barrel.” — the Michaels

In the original Michaelian group, the Michaels referred to their teaching as “The Synthesis”. They said that it was their attempt to pass on to their students the knowledge and understanding and wisdom that they accumulated during their many tens of thousands of incarnations as humans on this planet over tens of thousands of years. During those lifetimes they experienced what the Physical Plane has to offer, from the development of mundane coping skills to enlightenment on transcendent spiritual paths. If you are familiar with various metaphysical teachings, historical and present-day, you will recognize components of many of them in the Michaelian teachings; that is why the Michaels referred to their teaching as The Synthesis.

Phil Wittmeyer has been a student of the Michaelian teachings since 1981. His Scholar soul avidly acquires knowledge of all kinds; his Artisan Role structures the knowledge and applies tools to the knowledge in the production of tangible objects, in this case, books. In a series of books, he is attempting to pass on to other students some of his accumulation of knowledge and understanding and wisdom, prompted by what he received from the Michaels and from other of their students, and from other scientific, psychological, philosophical, and spiritual traditions and teachers. The Michaelian teachings has come to us piecemeal, a little here and a little there. As part of his own process of gathering these pieces, and his process of coming to understand the scattered elements of the Michaelian teachings, Phil has reformulated it ‘from the ground up’, from ‘first principles’. In other words, this series of books represents Phil’s synthesis of the Michaels’ Synthesis.

Phil started his first book in 1981, and has added several other books over the decades, never finishing any of them along the way, until recently. Each of these books presents what the author believes might be a unique and significant contribution to the Michaelian teachings community as a whole, but if not that, then perhaps some individual students will find his offerings edifying and informative. Because of the reformulation of the Michaelian teachings, Phil’s books are rather different from all other Michaelian teachings books. Therefore, even if you have read all of those other books, you will learn a lot more from Phil’s books. This is not just a retelling or a rehash of the material; the ‘bones’ of the Michaelian teachings are ‘fleshed out’ considerably.

The Michaelian teachings first appeared in 1973, and an enormous amount of channeling has added to it over the decades. Numerous expositors have presented and explained the Michaelian teachings in books and on websites. Phil’s suggestion is that the Michaelian teachings is now mature enough and complete enough to deserve an “academic” treatment of the material in a somewhat historical, scientific, objective, critical way. That is Phil’s intention with his books. In other words, Phil’s approach is analytical as well as synthetical.

The volume that you have in your possession now is an analysis and synthesis of the transcriptions of the channeling sessions of the original Michaelian group, which convened during the years 1973, 1974, and 1975 in the San Francisco Bay area. These sessions, which were held on average about twice per week, provide the foundation of the Micheal Teaching. Portions of some of those sessions were published in 1979 in the book Messages from Michael, authored by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro. A nearly complete set of the transcriptions of the original group became generally available in the mid-1990s, and a few more session transcriptions became generally available in the early 2010s. The entire collection was published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., in 2013 and 2015. This volume, which you have in your hands now, is based on these published transcriptions.

“The unexamined life is not worth living.” — Socrates

“The unexamined teaching is not worth believing.” — Wittmeyer

Table of Contents

STUDY PAPERS ON THE ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP.....	1
The Legacy of Philip Wittmeyer — Volume 6.....	1
④ Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group.....	2
⑧ The Meta-Michaelian Project.....	3
Dedication.....	7
Copyright Status.....	7
Acknowledgments.....	8
Books by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc.....	9
Books by Philip Wittmeyer [in preparation].....	9
④ Back Cover Blurb for Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group.....	10
④ PRELUDE.....	31
Context of This Book.....	31
Alternative Terminology Used.....	33
Michaelian Teachings Books Quoted.....	34
Glossary.....	34
STUDY PAPERS ON THE ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP.....	35
④ INTRODUCTION.....	35
A Very Brief History of the Original Michaelian Group.....	35
Directive to Publish.....	36
Copyright Concerns.....	37
Gathering the Transcriptions.....	38
Scattered Delivery.....	40
Why Me?.....	41
Precedents of the Study Papers Project.....	42
Validation.....	43
The Michaelian Teachings: A Work in Progress.....	44
The Michaelian Teachings: Complete in the Original Michaelian Group?.....	45
Systematic Jargon.....	46
To Understand and Explain the Michaels' Messages.....	48
Abbreviations Used.....	50
Comments on My Commentary.....	50
Orthodox and Heterodox.....	51
How to Read these Study Papers.....	52
STUDY PAPERS ON THE ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP.....	54
⑥ ACCELERATION.....	54
Acceleration per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	54
Concluding Comments on Acceleration.....	60
ACHIEVEMENT.....	62
Definition of Achievement.....	62
Achievement per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	62
Concluding Comments on Achievement.....	63
ADEPT AND MASTER.....	64
ADVICE.....	71
Definition of Advice.....	71
Advice per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	71

Concluding Comments on Advice.....	.71
⑤ AGAPE73
Agape per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.73
Descriptions of Agape74
Facilitators of Agape77
Impediments to Agape82
Concluding Comments on Agape.....	.83
① AGENDA85
Definition of “Agenda”.....	.85
Agenda in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.85
General Comments on Agenda.....	.89
AGREEMENTS AND SEQUENCES91
Agreements and Sequences per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.91
Concluding Comments on Agreements and Sequences.....	.97
ALEXANDRIA98
Alexandrian Library and School.....	.98
Alexandria per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.98
⑤ ALIENATION101
Alienation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.101
Concluding Comments on Alienation.....	.107
ANGER108
Anger per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.108
Concluding Comments on Anger.....	.109
ANIMALS AND PETS110
Animals per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.110
Pets per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.110
Concluding Comments on Pets.....	.111
② ASCETICISM AND AUSTERITY112
Asceticism per Wikipedia.....	.112
Asceticism per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.113
Austerity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.114
Concluding Comments on Asceticism.....	.115
③ ASTROLOGY117
Astrology per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.117
Concluding Comments on Astrology.....	.120
④ ATLANTIS122
Atlantis in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.123
Summary Comments on Atlantis.....	.127
① AURAS: COLORS AND MEANINGS128
Definition of Auras.....	.128
Aura Colors During the Original Michaelian Group.....	.129
Summary of Aura Colors.....	.133
Auras Subsequent to the Original Michaelian Group.....	.133
Concluding Comments on Auras.....	.133
AUROBINDO, SRI135
Brief Biography of Sri Aurobindo.....	.135
Aurobindo per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.135
Concluding Comment on Sri Aurobindo.....	.135
⑤ AWAKENING FROM SLEEP136
Awakening per Gurdjieff.....	.136
‘Sleep’ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.137
‘Awake’ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.139
Closing Comments on ‘Sleep’ and ‘Awake’.....	.142
① BALANCED MAN143
Levels of Being per Gurdjieff.....	.143

Balanced Man per Gurdjieff.....	.144
Descriptions of Balance in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.145
Going Toward Balance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.148
Balance of Centers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.149
Achieving Balance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.152
Centering "Traps" per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.155
Leaking Centers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.156
Balance and Overleaves per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.157
Summary and Conclusion regarding Balanced Man.....	.159
BARRIERS AND BLOCKS.....	.160
Definition of Barrier.....	.160
Barriers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.160
Blocks per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.172
Concluding Comments on Barriers.....	.172
BEAUTY.....	.173
Definition of Beauty.....	.173
Beauty per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.173
Concluding Comments on Beauty.....	.174
BELIEF.....	.176
Definition of Belief.....	.176
Belief per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.176
Concluding Comments on Belief.....	.176
⑦ BELIEF SYSTEM.....	.178
Definition of Belief System.....	.178
Belief System per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.179
Concluding Comments on Belief System.....	.186
④ BIAS.....	.187
Definition of Bias.....	.187
Bias per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.187
⑤ BIO-COMPUTER: ITS PROGRAMS AND TAPES.....	.196
Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes per Lilly.....	.196
Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes in the Original Michaelian Group.....	.197
Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes per Briggs.....	.207
Concluding Comments on Tapes, Bio-computer, and Programs.....	.208
BODIES, SUBTLE.....	.209
Subtle Bodies per Esoteric Cosmology.....	.209
Subtle Bodies per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.211
Concluding Comments on Subtle Bodies.....	.211
⑥ BODY TYPE.....	.212
BONDING.....	.213
Definition of Bonding.....	.213
Bonding per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.213
Kindred Soul Bonding.....	.213
Group Bonding.....	.213
Concluding Comments on Bonding.....	.214
BODYWORK MODALITIES.....	.215
BREATH, DANCE, EXERCISE, MASSAGE.....	.215
Breathwork.....	.215
Definition of Breathwork.....	.215
Breathwork per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.216
Dance.....	.216
Definition of Dance.....	.216
Dance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.216
Exercise.....	.216
Definition of Exercise.....	.216

Exercise per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions	216
Massage.....	216
Definition of Massage	217
Massage per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions	217
Concluding Comments on Bodywork.....	219
③ BOREDOM	220
Boredom in the Original Michaelian Group.....	220
Concluding Comments on Boredom.....	223
③ BROTHERHOOD (OCCULT)	224
The Occult Brotherhood per Wikipedia.....	224
Occult Brotherhood per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	225
Concluding Comments on the Occult Brotherhood.....	228
① BUFFERS	229
Buffers per the Dictionary.....	229
Buffers per Gurdjieff.....	230
Buffers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	231
Defense Mechanism per Psychology.....	232
Concluding Comments on Buffers.....	232
CASTING	233
CAYCE, EDGAR	234
⑦ CENTER OF GRAVITY	236
Center of Gravity per Fourth Way Teachers.....	236
Center of Gravity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	237
CENTERS, HIGHER	239
CENTER, MAGNETIC	240
Magnetic Center per Gurdjieff.....	240
CETACEANS	241
Cetaceans per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	241
Concluding Comments on Cetaceans.....	243
② CHAKRAS	244
Chakras per Esoteric Physiology.....	244
Chakras per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	245
Concluding Comments on Chakras.....	249
CHOICE — DECISION	251
Definition of Choice.....	251
Choice per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	251
Concluding Comments on Choice.....	252
⑧ COMMITMENT, DEDICATION, DEVOTION	253
Definitions of Commitment, Dedication, and Devotion.....	253
Commitment, Dedication, Devotion per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	254
Concluding Comments on Commitment, Dedication, Devotion.....	263
⑤ COMMUNAL LIVING	265
Communal Living in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	265
Comments on Communal Living.....	278
⑧ COMMUNICATION	280
Definition of Communication.....	280
Communication in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	281
Channeling Communication	281
Communication Across Lifetimes	282
Non-verbal Communication	282
Barriers to Communication	285
Enhancing Communication	286
Effect of Overleaves on Communication	288
Concluding Comments on Communication.....	291
② COMPLEXITY VERSUS SIMPLICITY	293

Complexity/Simplicity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	293
Concluding Comments on Complexity/Simplicity.....	297
① COMPOSITES	298
⑦ CONSCIENCE	299
Definition of Conscience.....	299
Conscience per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	299
Concluding Comments on Conscience.....	300
CONSCIOUSNESS — SUBJECTIVE AND OBJECTIVE	301
Subjective and Objective Consciousness per Gurdjieff.....	301
Subjective and Objective Consciousness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	301
Consciousness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	301
Concluding Comments on Consciousness.....	302
② CONSIDERING — INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL	303
Considering per Gurdjieff.....	303
Considering per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	305
Concluding Comments on Considering.....	307
CONTROL	309
Definition of Control.....	309
Control per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	309
Concluding Comments on Control.....	309
① CREATURE OF REASON	311
Creatures of Reason in Philosophy.....	311
Levels of Evolution.....	312
Lines of Evolution.....	313
Creatures of Reason in the Original Michaelian Group.....	316
Post Original Michaelian Group.....	324
Mainstream Paleoanthropology.....	324
Transhumanism.....	326
Concluding Comments on Creatures of Reason.....	327
CRIME	329
Definition of Crime.....	329
Crime per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	329
Concluding Comments on Crime.....	329
⑥ CRUTCHES	330
Definition of Crutch.....	330
Crutches per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	330
Concluding Comments on Crutches.....	334
⑥ CRYSTALLIZATION	336
Definition of Crystallization.....	336
Crystallization per Gurdjieff.....	336
Crystallization per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	337
Concluding Comments on Crystallization.....	337
CULTURE	338
Definition of Culture.....	338
Nature versus Nurture.....	338
Culture per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	339
Concluding Comments on Culture.....	343
DEATH AND DYING	345
④ DIALOGUE	347
Definition of Dialogue.....	347
Dialogue per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	348
Concluding Comments on Dialogue.....	349
Habermas Dialogue	350
Buberian Dialogue	351
Bohmian Dialogue	351

Dialectic = Monads	351
DIMENSIONALITY AND AXES	353
Definition of Dimension.....	353
Dimensions per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	353
Axes per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	353
Concluding Comments on Dimensions and Axes.....	357
⑥ DISCIPLINE	358
Definition of Discipline.....	358
Discipline per Ouspensky.....	359
Discipline per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	360
Concluding Comments on Discipline.....	365
⑦ DOGMA	366
Definition of Dogma and Dogmatism.....	366
Dogma per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	366
Concluding Comments on Dogma.....	369
③ DRAMA	370
Definition of Drama.....	370
Drama per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	370
Concluding Comments on Drama.....	372
DREAMS AND DREAMING	374
History of Dream Interpretation.....	374
Dreams per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	374
Concluding Comments on Dreams and Dreaming.....	374
ECSTASY, JOY?, BLISS?	375
Definition of Ecstasy.....	375
Ecstasy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	375
Concluding Comments on Ecstasy.....	380
⑦ EGO	381
Definition of Ego.....	381
Ego per Gurdjieff.....	382
Ego per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	382
Concluding Comments on Ego.....	390
EMBODIMENT	391
Embodiment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	391
Concluding Comments on Embodiment.....	391
EMOTIONAL CENTER	393
Emotional Center Descriptions.....	393
Negative Emotions.....	395
Emotional Center as Spiritual Access.....	396
Summary Comments on Emotional Center.....	396
ENERGY AND ENERGY LEAKS	397
Energy Leaks according to Ouspensky.....	397
Psychic Energy.....	397
Energy Leaks in General.....	399
Energy Vampires	399
Energy Leaks and Centers.....	399
Sexual Center	401
Emotional Center	401
Disempowerment.....	402
Concluding Comments of Energy and Leaks.....	402
③ ENLIGHTENMENT	403
Enlightenment per Wikipedia.....	403
Enlightenment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	404
Summary Comments on Enlightenment.....	411
ESSENCE AND PERSONALITY	412

Definition of Essence.....	413
Essence and Personality According to Gurdjieff.....	413
Essence per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	414
Essence Contact.....	417
Essence Role.....	417
Personality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	417
Essence and Personality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	417
Essence Role per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	418
Concluding Comments on Essence and Personality.....	418
ESSENCE CONTACT	418
① "EST" — ERHARD SEMINARS TRAINING	419
Brief Biography of Werner Erhard.....	419
Essence of EST.....	420
EST in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	421
Concluding Comments on EST.....	427
ESTEEM, HONOR, RESPECT	428
Definition of Esteem, Honor, and Respect.....	428
Esteem, Honor, and Respect per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	428
Concluding Comments on Esteem, Honor, and Respect.....	428
EVIL AND GOOD	429
The Problem of Evil.....	429
Evil and Good per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	432
EVOLUTION AND INVOLUTION	433
EXCUSE	434
Definition of Excuse.....	434
Excuse per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	434
Concluding Comments on Excuse.....	436
EXPECTATIONS	437
Definition of Expectation.....	437
Expectations per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	437
Concluding Comments on Expectations.....	442
EXPERIENCE	444
Definition of Experience.....	444
Experience per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	444
Concluding Comments on Experience.....	444
③ EXTINGUISHMENT	445
Extinguish the Chief Feature.....	445
Extinguish False Personality.....	446
Extinguish Negative Poles.....	447
Extinguish Maya.....	447
Extinguish Negative Thoughts.....	447
Extinguish Negative Emotions.....	448
Extinguish Negativity.....	449
Concluding Comments on Extinguishment.....	449
⑧ FACADE	450
Definition of Facade.....	450
Facade per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	450
Concluding Comments on Facade.....	452
FAITH	453
Faith per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	453
Concluding Comments on Faith.....	453
④ FANTASY	454
Fantasy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	454
Concluding Comments on Fantasy.....	461
③ FASTING	463

Fasting per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.463
Concluding Comments on Fasting.....	.465
FEAR.....	.466
Definition of Fear.....	.466
Fear per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.466
Relevance of Overleaves to Fear.....	.466
Miscellaneous Fears and Comments on Fears.....	.467
Fear of Going Against Social Norms.....	.467
Phobias from Past Lives.....	.468
Concluding Comments on Fear.....	.468
FEMININE AND MASCULINE.....	.469
Definition of Feminine and Masculine.....	.469
Feminine and Masculine per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.469
Concluding Comments on Feminine and Masculine.....	.469
FLASH.....	.471
Definition of Flash.....	.471
Flash per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.471
Concluding Comments on Flash.....	.471
FRAGMENTATION and REINTEGRATION.....	.472
① FRICTION.....	.476
Friction Per Gurdjieff.....	.476
Friction per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.478
The Philosophy of Friction.....	.482
Summary and Conclusion.....	.483
FORGETTING AND REMEMBERING.....	.484
Definition of Forgetting and Remembering.....	.484
Forgetting and Remembering per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.484
Concluding Comments on Forgetting and Remembering.....	.484
⑥ FORGIVENESS.....	.485
Definition of Forgiveness.....	.485
Forgiveness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.486
Concluding Comments on Forgiveness.....	.489
④ FORMATORY.....	.490
Formatory per Gurdjieff.....	.490
Formatory per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.491
Concluding Comments on Formatory.....	.492
FUN — HUMOR — LAUGHTER — LEVITY— PLAY.....	.493
Definition of Fun.....	.493
Fun per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.493
Play per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.494
Levity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.494
Concluding Comments on Fun and Play.....	.495
GAMES, PSYCHOLOGICAL.....	.496
Definition of Game.....	.496
Game per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.496
Concluding Comments on Game.....	.500
② GLAMOUR.....	.501
Definition of Glamour.....	.501
Glamour in the Original Michaelian Group.....	.502
Glamorous Physical Plane.....	.502
Glamorous Spiritual Teachings.....	.503
Miscellaneous Glamour.....	.505
Glamour in other Michaelian Teachings Groups.....	.507
Glamour in the Briggs Sessions.....	.507
Glamour per 3MG Sessions.....	.509

GOAL SETTING	511
Goal Setting per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	511
Concluding Comments on Goal Setting.....	511
GOOD WORK, BAD WORK	513
Definitions of Good Work and Bad Work.....	513
GW–BW in the Original Michaelian Group.....	513
Concluding Comments of Good Work – Bad Work.....	522
⑦ GRACE	523
Definition of Grace.....	523
Grace per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	524
Concluding Comments on Grace.....	525
⑧ GROUP COHESION	526
Definition of Group Cohesion.....	526
Group Cohesion per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	527
Concluding Comments on Cohesion.....	532
GROWTH, SPIRITUAL	534
GUILT [— BLAME?]	536
Definition of Guilt.....	536
Guilt Cultures.....	536
Guilt per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	537
GURDJIEFF, OUSPENSKY, COLLIN, BURTON	540
GURDJIEFF — LAW OF SEVEN	541
Law of Octaves.....	541
Cycle.....	542
Concluding Remarks on the Law of Seven.....	542
GURDJIEFF — LAW OF THREE	544
Gurdjieff’s Law of Three.....	544
The Law of Three in the Fellowship of Friends.....	545
The Law of Three in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	546
Concluding Remarks on the Law of Three.....	548
HAPPINESS	550
Definition of Happiness.....	550
Happiness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	550
Concluding Comments on Happiness.....	550
HEALTH — PHYSICAL AND MENTAL	551
Physical Health.....	551
Mental Health.....	552
HIDING	554
Definition of Hiding.....	554
Hiding per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	554
Concluding Comments on Hiding.....	554
④ HIGHER EXPRESSION	555
Higher Expression per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	555
② HIGHER SELF	559
Higher Self per Wikipedia.....	559
Higher Self per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	560
Inner Self per Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	562
Concluding Comments on Higher Self.....	562
HONESTY AND DISHONESTY	564
Definition of Honesty.....	564
Honesty per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	564
Concluding Comments on Honesty.....	565
HOSTILITY	566
Definition of Hostility.....	566
Hostility per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	566

Concluding Comments on Hostility.....	.569
HYPNOSIS.....	.570
Hypnosis per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.570
Concluding Comments on Hypnosis.....	.570
"I's", MANY.....	.571
The Many "I's" per Gurdjieff.....	.571
Many "I's" per the original Michaelian group Transcriptions.....	.571
Concluding Comments on The Many "I's".....	.572
② IDENTIFICATION.....	.573
Introduction.....	.573
Identification per Gurdjieff/Ouspensky.....	.574
Identification per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.574
Concluding Comments on Identification.....	.578
ILLUSION.....	.579
Definition of Illusion.....	.580
Illusion per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.580
Concluding Comments on Illusion.....	.580
IMAGINATION.....	.581
Definition of Imagination.....	.581
Imagination per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.581
Concluding Comments on Imagination.....	.582
IMPRINTING.....	.583
Definition of Imprinting.....	.583
Imprinting per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.583
Concluding Comments on Imprinting.....	.584
INDIVIDUALITY-SM?.....	.585
Definition of Individuality.....	.585
Individuality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.585
Concluding Comments on Individuality.....	.587
INFLUENCES: A, B, C.....	.588
Influences per Gurdjieff.....	.588
Influences per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.588
Concluding Comments on Influences.....	.590
⑧ INSIGHT.....	.591
Definition of Insight.....	.591
Insight per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.592
Concluding Comments on Insight.....	.600
INSPIRATION.....	.601
Definition of Inspiration.....	.601
Inspiration per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.601
Concluding Comments on Inspiration.....	.603
INSTINCT.....	.604
Definition of Instinct.....	.604
Instinct per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.604
Concluding Comments on Instinct.....	.605
INSTINCTIVE CENTER.....	.607
INTEGRATION VERSUS DISINTEGRATION.....	.609
Definitions of Integration and Disintegration.....	.609
Integration and Disintegration per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.609
Disintegration per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.609
Integration per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.610
Concluding Comments on Integration and Disintegration.....	.612
⑧ INTEGRITY.....	.613
Definition of Integrity.....	.613
Integrity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.614

Concluding Comments on Integrity.....	.614
⑤ INTIMACY615
Intimacy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.615
Summary Comments on Intimacy.....	.618
⑧ INTUITION619
Definition of Intuition.....	.619
Intuition per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.620
Concluding Comments on Intuition.....	.632
JESUS — CHRIST — CHRISTIANITY634
JOY639
Joy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.639
Concluding Comments on Joy.....	.640
JUDGMENT641
Definition of Judgment.....	.641
Judgment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.641
Concluding Comments on Judgment.....	.641
⑦ JUSTIFICATION, SELF-642
Definition of Justification.....	.642
–Justification in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.643
+Justification in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.646
③ KABBALAH648
Kabbalah in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.648
Concluding Comments on Kabbalah.....	.649
KARMA650
Karma per Ancient Traditions.....	.650
Karma per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.650
Concluding Comments on Karma.....	.652
KINDNESS654
Definition of Kindness.....	.654
Kindness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.654
Concluding Comments on Kindness.....	.655
KINDRED SOULS656
Entities per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.657
Cadres per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.657
Summary Comments on Kindred Souls.....	.657
⑦ KNOWLEDGE AS GNOSIS658
Epistemology.....	.658
Knowledge as “Gnosis”.....	.659
Knowledge as Gnosis per Gurdjieff.....	.660
Knowledge per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.661
Conclusion to Knowledge as Gnosis.....	.666
② KUNDALINI667
Kundalini per Esoteric Physiology.....	.667
Kundalini per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.668
Summary Comments on Kundalini.....	.670
⑦ LEVELS OF BEING672
Levels of Being per Gurdjieff.....	.672
Man Numbers in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.673
Levels of Being per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.675
Concluding Comments on Levels of Being.....	.676
LIBERATION AND IMPRISONMENT677
Soteriology.....	.677
Liberation per Ancient Religions.....	.681
Liberation per Gurdjieff.....	.681
Liberation is not Escapism.....	.681

Imprisonment.....	.682
Freedom.....	.683
Liberation.....	.686
Summary and Conclusion.....	.692
LIFE-TASK.....	.694
Life Task per Psychology and Philosophy.....	.694
Life Task per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.694
Life-Task per Messages from Michael698
Concluding Comments on Life Task.....	.699
③ LOGOS.....	.700
Definition and History of Logos.....	.700
Logos in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.701
Definition of the Logos702
Propagation of the Logos703
Logos Brought to Bear705
Express the Logos707
Miscellaneous Logos708
Logos post-Original Michaelian Group.....	.710
General Comments on Logos.....	.710
LONELINESS VERSUS ALONENESS.....	.712
Aloneness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.712
Loneliness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.713
LOVE.....	.715
⑦ MACHINATIONS.....	.716
Definition of Machinations.....	.716
Machinations per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.717
Concluding Comments on Machination.....	.718
⑧ MANIPULATION.....	.719
Definition of Manipulation.....	.719
Manipulation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.720
Concluding Comments on Manipulation.....	.722
⑦ MASK.....	.723
Definition of Mask.....	.723
Mask per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.723
Concluding Comments on Mask.....	.725
MAYA.....	.726
Maya as Illusion.....	.726
Maya as Delusion.....	.726
Examples of Maya.....	.726
Maya in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.726
Yarbro on Maya in MFM733
Comments on Maya.....	.734
⑤ MECHANICAL MAN.....	.737
Mechanical Man per Gurdjieff.....	.737
Mechanical Man per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.738
Summary Comments on Mechanical Man.....	.748
MEDIUMSHIP.....	.749
Definition of Mediumship.....	.749
Mediumship per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.749
Concluding Comments on Mediumship.....	.750
MEDITATION AND CONCENTRATION.....	.751
MICHAEL: ABOUT.....	.752
④ MODERATION.....	.753
Definition and History of Moderation.....	.753
Moderation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.755

Concluding Comments on Moderation.....	.756
① MONADS757
Gurdjieff's "Law of Three".....	.758
Monads in the First Michael Session.....	.760
More Definitions and Descriptions.....	.763
More Examples of Monads.....	.766
Monads and Karma.....	.768
Monads and Sequences.....	.769
Monads and Overleaves.....	.770
Monads and Groups of Souls.....	.772
The Pleasure/Pain Monad.....	.772
Monads and Soul Age.....	.773
Quasi-Monads.....	.774
Summary and Conclusion.....	.775
Further Reading.....	.777
Monads in Messages from Michael777
The Physics of Monads.....	.779
MONEY AND MATERIALISM780
MONROE, ROBERT782
MORALITY AND ETHICS783
Dictionary Definition.....	.783
Morality and Ethics per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.783
Concluding Comments on Morality and Ethics.....	.783
MOTIVATION785
Definition of Motivation.....	.785
Motivation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.786
Concluding Comments on Motivation.....	.787
MUSIC788
Template per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.788
Concluding Comments on Template.....	.788
NEGATIVE — POSITIVE — NEUTRAL790
Definition of Negativity and Positivity.....	.790
Negativity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.790
Concluding Comments on Negativity and Positivity.....	.790
OBJECTIVITY AND SUBJECTIVITY791
Definition of Objectivity and Subjectivity.....	.791
Objectivity and Subjectivity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.791
Concluding Comments on Objectivity and Subjectivity.....	.791
OVERLEAVES792
⑥ OVERLEAVES, CHANGING793
Concluding Comments on Changing Overleaves.....	.798
OVERLEAVES — INTERACTIONS799
Interactions between Overleaves.....	.800
Concluding Comments on Interactions of Overleaves.....	.804
OVERLEAVES — WHY?806
Why the Overleaves.....	.806
The Progression of Understanding: Overleaves > Synthesis > Agape > Logos > Tao806
Concluding Comments on Why the Overleaves.....	.812
PARANORMAL, THE813
Definition of Paranormal.....	.813
Paranormal per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.813
Precognition in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions813
Concluding Comments on Paranormal.....	.815
PATH — SPIRITUAL816
Introduction.....	.816

Pre-Michael sessions.....	.816
Michael and Spiritual Growth.....	.818
Psychedelics and the Spiritual Path.....	.819
Sexuality and the Spiritual Path.....	.820
Summary and Conclusion.....	.820
PATTERN.....	.821
Definition of Pattern.....	.821
Pattern per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.821
Negative –Patterns.....	.822
Positive +Patterns.....	.822
Concluding Comments on Pattern.....	.822
® PERSONA.....	.824
Definition of Persona.....	.824
Persona per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.825
Concluding Comments on Persona.....	.826
PERSONALITY — TRUE AND FALSE.....	.827
True Personality.....	.827
False Personality.....	.828
Acculturation and Socialization and Imprinting.....	.828
PHILOSOPHY AND PHILOSOPHERS.....	.829
Definition and Description of Philosophy.....	.829
Philosophy and Philosophers in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.829
⑤ PHOTOGRAPHY.....	.832
Meta-cognition in Philosophy and Psychology.....	.832
Photography per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.833
Concluding Comments on Photography.....	.842
PLANES.....	.843
Planes per Esoterica.....	.843
Physical Plane.....	.843
Astral Plane.....	.843
Causal Plane.....	.843
Mental/Akashic Plane.....	.845
Buddhic Plane.....	.845
Concluding Comments of Planes.....	.845
PLEASURE.....	.846
Definition of Pleasure.....	.846
Pleasure per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.846
Concluding Comments on Pleasure.....	.850
POLARITY.....	.852
Polarity in General [another chapter?]......	.852
Yin — Yang.....	.853
Masculine — Feminine.....	.857
Pole and Polar and Polarity.....	.858
Ordinal — Intermediate/Neutral — Exalted/Cardinal.....	.859
Lower — Neutral — Higher.....	.863
Negative — Positive.....	.865
Active — Intermediate — Passive.....	.868
Outward — Inward.....	.869
Concrete — Abstract.....	.869
The Meaning of Cardinal and Ordinal.....	.870
Axis and Axes.....	.871
Conclusion of Chapter 2B.....	.875
PRINCIPLES.....	.877
Definition of Principles.....	.877
Principles per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.877

Concluding Comments on Principles.....	.878
PSYCHE.....	.879
Definition of Psyche.....	.879
Psyche per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.880
Concluding Comments on Psyche.....	.881
② PSYCHEDELICS.....	.882
Psychedelics in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.882
⑧ PSYCHIC ENERGY.....	.888
Psychic Energy in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.888
Concluding Comments on Psychic Energy.....	.895
① PSYCHIC UNION.....	.896
Psychic Union in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.896
General Comments on Psychic Union.....	.898
⑧ PUNISHMENT.....	.900
Definition of Punishment.....	.900
Punishment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.901
Concluding Comments on Punishment.....	.903
PURITY.....	.904
Definition of Purity.....	.904
Purity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.904
Concluding Comments on Purity.....	.904
PURPOSE.....	.905
Definition of Purpose.....	.905
Purpose per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.905
Concluding Comments on Purpose.....	.907
⑤ REAL SPACE VERSUS ARTIFICIAL SPACE.....	.908
Summary Comments on Real and Artificial Space.....	.911
⑧ RECOGNITION.....	.912
Recognition per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.912
Recognition of Paranormal Phenomena.....	.912
Recognition of Kindred and Friended Souls.....	.912
Recognition of Reincarnation and Past Lives.....	.913
Recognition of Informative Dreams.....	.914
Recognition of the Root Cause of Conflicts.....	.915
Recognition of Pre-incarnate Plans.....	.915
Symptoms of Recognition.....	.916
Concluding Comments on Recognition.....	.918
⑧ REFLECTION.....	.919
Definition of Self-Reflection.....	.919
Self-Reflection per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.920
Concluding Comments on Self-reflection.....	.922
REGRET — REMORSE — DISAPPOINTMENT.....	.924
Definition of Regret, Remorse, and Disappointment.....	.924
Regret per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.924
Remorse per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.925
Disappointment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.926
Concluding Comments on Regret, Remorse, Disappointment.....	.926
REINCARNATION.....	.927
Reincarnation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.927
Concluding Comments on Reincarnation.....	.927
RELEVANCE.....	.928
Definition of Relevance.....	.928
Relevance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.928
Concluding Comments on Relevance.....	.928
RELIGION.....	.929

Religion per Wikipedia.....	.929
Religion per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.929
Church.....	.934
Buddha and Buddhism.....	.936
Krishna and Hinduism.....	.936
Zoroaster.....	.936
⑤ RESPONSIBILITY.....	.937
Responsibility per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.937
Concluding Comments on Responsibility.....	.943
REVELATION AND CONCEALMENT.....	.944
REVIEW.....	.945
Definition of Review.....	.945
Review per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.945
Concluding Comments on Review.....	.945
REWARD, GRATIFICATION, SATISFACTION, FULFILLMENT.....	.946
Definition of Reward, Gratification, Satisfaction, Fulfillment.....	.946
Reward per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.946
Gratification per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.952
Satisfaction per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.952
Fulfillment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.952
Concluding Comments on Reward, Gratification, Satisfaction, Fulfillment.....	.952
② RITUAL.....	.953
Ritual per Wikipedia.....	.953
Ritual per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.954
Concluding Comments on Ritual.....	.958
ROLE.....	.959
① ROMANTIC RELATIONSHIPS.....	.960
15 January 1975 — Wednesday.....	.960
⑦ SCATTERING.....	.969
Definition of Scattering.....	.969
Scattering per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.970
Concluding Comments on Scattering.....	.974
SCHOOL METAPHOR.....	.975
Ancient Spiritual Schools.....	.975
Schools According to Gurdjieff and Ouspensky.....	.975
Schools per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.976
The Teacher–Student Monad.....	.979
Teachings and Students per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.979
True Teacher — Agreements.....	.979
Concluding Comments on the School Metaphor.....	.980
SEARCH — SEEK — QUEST — FIND.....	.981
③ SELF-OBSERVATION.....	.982
Self-observation per Gurdjieff.....	.982
Metacognition per Psychology.....	.983
Self/Other-observation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.984
Concluding Comments on Self-observation.....	.989
⑦ SECRECY.....	.990
Secrecy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.990
Concluding Comments on Secrecy.....	.992
⑧ SELF-REMEMBERING.....	.993
Self-remembering in the Gurdjieffian teachings.....	.993
The Psychology of Self-remembering.....	.995
Self-remembering in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	.996
Concluding Comments on Self-remembering.....	.998
⑥ SENSUALITY.....	.1000

Definition of Sensuality.....	1000
Sensuality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1000
Concluding Comments on Sensuality.....	1003
SEPARATION.....	1004
Definition of Separation.....	1004
Separation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1004
Concluding Comments on Separation.....	1004
SERENITY, PEACE, TRANQUILITY.....	1005
Definition of Serenity.....	1005
Serenity, Tranquility, Peace, Calm, Quiet per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1005
Concluding Comments on Serenity.....	1009
⑨ SEXUALITY.....	1010
⑦ SHAME.....	1011
Definition of Shame.....	1011
Shame Cultures.....	1012
Shame per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1012
Concluding Comments on Shame.....	1014
① SHOCK.....	1015
Shock per Gurdjieff.....	1015
‘Shock’ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1016
Concluding Comments on Shock.....	1020
④ SILENCE, THE.....	1021
The Silence per Gurdjieff.....	1021
Silence per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1022
Concluding Comments on Silence.....	1026
① SIN.....	1027
Definition of Sin.....	1027
Sin per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1027
SOLEAL.....	1029
SOLITUDE, SOLITARY, ISOLATION, SECLUSION, ALONENESS.....	1030
Solitude per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1030
Solitary per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1031
Isolation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1033
Aloneness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1033
Concluding Comments on Solitude.....	1034
SOUL.....	1035
Definition of Soul.....	1035
Soul per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1035
Concluding Comments on Soul.....	1037
⑦ SOUL AGE.....	1038
SPIRITUALITY.....	1039
Definition of Spirituality.....	1039
Spirituality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1039
Concluding Comments on Spirituality.....	1039
√ THE STEM ENTITY.....	1040
⑧ STEWARD, THE.....	1043
Steward per Gurdjieff.....	1043
Steward per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1044
Concluding Comments on Steward.....	1044
① STRANGERS.....	1046
Strangers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1046
Strangers per the Second Michael Group.....	1046
STRUGGLE.....	1051
Definition of Struggle.....	1051
Struggle per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1051

Concluding Comments on Struggle.....	1054
③ STUDY	1055
Study per Gurdjieff/Ouspensky.....	1055
Study per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1056
Why Study	1056
What to Study	1056
Who to Study	1058
When to Study	1059
How to Study	1059
Where to Study	1060
Adjuncts to Study	1060
Impediments to Study	1060
Concluding Comments on Study.....	1061
SUFFERING AND PAIN	1062
The Problem of Suffering.....	1062
Suffering per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1064
SUICIDE	1066
Definition of Suicide.....	1066
Suicide per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1066
Concluding Comments on Suicide.....	1069
⑦ SUPERSTITION	1070
Definition of Superstition.....	1070
Superstition per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1071
⑤ SURRENDER	1073
Surrender per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1073
① SYNTHESIS, THE	1076
“The Synthesis: The Michaelian Teachings as Perennialism”.....	1076
The Synthesis per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1077
General Comments on The Synthesis.....	1084
SYSTEM — ORDER — COSMOS	1086
Definitions of System — Order — Cosmos.....	1086
System in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1086
Order in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1088
Cosmos in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1088
General Comments on System — Order — Cosmos.....	1089
TAO	1090
Tao per Theology.....	1090
Relationalism versus Substantialism	1091
Transcendent versus Immanent Tao	1092
Absolute Absolute	1092
Absolute versus Relative	1092
Apophatic versus Cataphatic Tao	1092
Potential versus Telic Tao	1093
Objective versus Subjective	1093
Absolute versus Relative Tao	1093
Tao per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1094
God per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1099
TAO SEX ORGY	1100
TAPESTRY AND THREADS	1101
Tapestry per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1101
Threads per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1102
Karmic Threads	1102
Experiential Threads	1103
Bonding Threads	1103
Composite Threads	1104

Tapestry Post-Original Michaelian Group.....	1105
Concluding Comments on Tapestry and Threads.....	1105
TASK.....	1106
Definition of Task.....	1106
Task per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1106
Concluding Comments on Task.....	1106
TELEPATHY.....	1107
Telepathy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1107
Telepathy per Second Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1109
Telepathy per 3MG Transcriptions.....	1110
TEMPLATE.....	1111
Definition of _____.....	1112
_____ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1112
Concluding Comments on _____.....	1112
⑥ TEMPTATION.....	1113
Definition of Temptation.....	1113
Temptation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1114
Concluding Comments on Temptation.....	1115
TEST.....	1116
Definition of _____.....	1117
_____ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1117
Concluding Comments on _____.....	1117
TOOLS AND METHODS.....	1118
Definition of Tools.....	1118
Tools per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1118
Concluding Comments on Tools.....	1119
TRANSCENDENTAL AND INFINITE SOULS.....	1120
Transcendental and Infinite Souls.....	1120
Transcendental Soul per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1122
Infinite Soul per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1123
TRAPS.....	1124
Definition of Trap.....	1124
Traps per Gurdjieff.....	1124
Traps per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1124
Centering Traps.....	1124
Concluding Comments on Centering Traps.....	1131
Traps.....	1131
⑦ TROUBLED SOULS.....	1133
Definition of Troubled Souls.....	1133
Troubled Souls per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1134
Concluding Comments on Troubled Souls.....	1137
⑤ TRUST.....	1139
Trust per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1139
Summary Comments on Trust.....	1148
TRUTH.....	1150
Truth per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1150
TWINS — PHYSICAL AND SPIRITUAL.....	1158
UNDERSTANDING.....	1164
Definition of Understanding.....	1164
Understanding per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1164
Concluding Comments on Understanding.....	1165
⑦ VALIDATION AND VERIFICATION.....	1166
Verification and Validation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1166
Concluding Comments on Validation and Verification.....	1171
VALUE AND WORTH.....	1172

Axiology — the Philosophy of Value.....	1172
Description of Value System Hierarchy.....	1173
Value per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1174
Concluding Comments on Value System Hierarchy.....	1175
⑦ VIOLENCE.....	1176
Definition of Violence.....	1176
Violence per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1176
Concluding Comments on Violence.....	1180
⑦ VIRTUE AND VICE.....	1182
Definition of Virtue.....	1182
Definition of Vice.....	1182
Lists of Virtues.....	1183
List of Vices.....	1184
Virtue per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1185
Concluding Comments on Virtue and Vice.....	1186
① VECTORS.....	1187
Definition of Vector.....	1187
Vectors per the Original Michaelian Group and the Second Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1187
Concluding Comments on Vectors.....	1189
⑦ VEIL.....	1190
Definition of Veil.....	1190
Veil per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1190
Concluding Comments about Veil.....	1193
④ VULNERABILITY.....	1195
Definition of Vulnerability.....	1195
Vulnerability in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1196
Concluding Comments on Vulnerability.....	1198
WILL.....	1199
Definition of Will.....	1199
Will per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1199
Concluding Comments on Will.....	1199
⑦ WISDOM.....	1200
Definitions of Wisdom.....	1200
Wisdom per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1201
Concluding Comments on Wisdom.....	1204
WORK, THE.....	1205
The Work per Gurdjieff.....	1205
The Work per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1205
Work per the Second Michaelian Group.....	1205
Concluding Comments on the Work.....	1207
⑥ YOGA.....	1209
Definition and History of Yoga.....	1209
Gurdjieff's "Fourth Way" — a Synthesis of Yoga.....	1210
Yoga per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions.....	1212
Concluding Comments on Yoga.....	1213
CONCLUSION TO THE BOOK.....	1214

④ PRELUDE

This is a book about the Michaelian teachings as it was originally presented to a group of spiritual seekers in the San Francisco Bay area during the years 1973, 1974, and 1975. This book is an analysis and synthesis of the transcriptions of the channeling sessions of that original Michaelian group. Many other groups and many other channels focused on the Michaelian teachings have appeared in the decades since then, but these original group sessions provide the foundation of the Michaelian teachings that has evolved and expanded since then. Portions of some of those original sessions were published in 1979 in the book Messages from Michael, authored by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro. A nearly complete set of the transcriptions of the original group became generally available in the mid-1990s, and a few more session transcriptions became generally available in the early 2010s. The entire collection was published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., in 2013 and 2015. This book, Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group, is based on these published transcriptions.

Context of This Book

This is the sixth in a series of seven books — a septology (that is an actual word) — that I, Philip Wittmeyer, have written on the Michaelian teachings. It is best if you read them in numerical order, Volume 1, Volume 2, and so on, but this book actually works pretty well as a stand-alone volume.

In the terminology of the Overleaf System, a collection of personality traits that was revealed to the original Michaelian group, I am a Scholar-Cast soul or “Fragment” (to use Michaelian terminology) experiencing the Artisan Role in this and all other lifetimes. Typically, the Scholar-Cast Fragment wants to know what is, and the Artisan Role wants to understand how it works. These seven books comprise what I refer to as my personal “systematic cosmology project” to satisfy those Scholar–Artisan basic needs to know and to understand. For me, the Michaelian teachings has provided the context and much of the content of that project. I am sharing the product of the project with the Michaelian teachings community, and beyond, via these seven volumes; these are the legacy of my forty-year plus Michaelian teachings student-hood.

(By the way, my Legacy books are not to be confused with the “Legacy” books published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc.: The Legacy of Sarah Chambers; The Legacy of Leslie Briggs; The Legacy of JP Van Hulle.)

The situation that we Michaelian students find ourselves in is that the Michaels revealed and described the Overleaf categories and the Overleaf personality traits, but they did not explain the Overleaf System, its structure and its meaning, its derivation from first principles, and its existence as an instantiation of logic, mathematics, and physics. Apparently that task has fallen to me; that is what Volume 1 and Volume 2 of my Legacy books are all about. The introductory material on cosmology and cosmogony is then elaborated in the subsequent five Legacy Volumes. Unless a Michaelian student understands this fundamental structure to the Overleaf System, they do not understand the Overleaf System, no matter how well they understand the Overleaf traits as they manifest in the mere human personality. The mere human personality is a faint shadow of the primordial archetypes of the Cosmos.

Here is a list and a description of my seven Legacy books.

VOLUME ONE: The first book, called The Tao of Cosmology: Tao’s Template of First Principles (hereinafter referred to as Cosmology), demonstrates how Chapter 42 of the Tao Teh Ching presented an algorithm for generating the framework of the universe in which we live, as well as the Overleaf System that we Michaelian students all know and love:

Tao produced the One; the One produced the Two; the Two produced the Three; the Three produced All things; All things carry the yin and embrace the yang; through the blending of the chi they achieve harmony.

Fans of Douglas Adams's book Hitchhikers Guide to the Galaxy will notice that — coincidentally — “42” is also “the meaning of life, the universe, and everything”. Anyway, in my book Cosmology, the realms of logic, mathematics, physics, science, philosophy, and theology are examined in the light of Tao's Template. The three subsequent Volumes are conceptual extrapolations of this first volume, in successively smaller subsets, which means that each volume provides some of the context for the content of subsequent volumes. This first volume was written sporadically over about four decades, starting in 1983 with the discovery of the Ra channeling and the physics theory of Dewey Larson (which can be correlated with the Overleaf System, thus uniting mathematics, physics, and psychology), and ending with the date of its publication. The Overleaf System is a subset of Tao's Template.

VOLUME TWO: The second book, called The Tao of Cosmogony: The Natural Sequence of the Cosmic Septenary (referred to in what follows as Cosmogony), was written mostly in the years surrounding the year 2000, although the seeds of it were planted in 1986 with the publication of More Messages from Michael. The seeds sprouted in 1991, but serious work did not begin until the late 1990s. The book is about that portion of the Tao's Template that refers to development or evolution over time, in seven steps or stages. In the Michaelian teachings, we know it as Milestones and Levels and Ages, but there are dozens of other realms of knowledge that discuss the same seven stages of development. In the Cosmogony book, I compare and contrast, analyze and synthesize them, into a coherent picture. Concerned as they are with the structure of space and time respectively, the first two volumes in this septology are rather abstract and impersonal. However, the next volume in this series is concerned with the concrete and personal application of this foundational knowledge and understanding.

VOLUME THREE: The third book, called The Tao of Personality: The Process/Aspect System of Personality Traits (referred to in what follows as Personality), was written mostly during the years 1981 to 1986. It is about the Michaelian teachings personality system, aka the Overleaf System — a pattern of personality traits first revealed to the world in the book, Messages from Michael, authored by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro and published in 1979. I have made some significant advances in the understanding of the Overleaf System based on my understanding of Tao's Template and the physics theory of Dewey Larson as documented in Ch42. The metaphor that I like to use, to explain the function of this book, is of the ‘trees’ and the ‘forest’. Most Michaelian students become acquainted with the ‘trees’ (the individual Overleaf traits) — this is an oak tree and that is a maple tree and so on — but they do not gain much acquaintance with the ecosystem of the entire ‘forest’ (the meaning and structure of the Overleaf System as a whole in terms of the logic–mathematics–physics of the Monadic and the Axial Attributes). This PAS book describes and explains both the ‘trees’ and the ‘forest’.

VOLUME FOUR: The fourth book, called The Tao of Relationships: The Chemistry and Alchemy of Service and Intimacy (referred to in what follows as ML), was written mostly during the years 1989 to 1991. In the late 1980's, after having written PAS, some of the people who had learned of the Michaelian teachings through me talked me into leading a group. For the purpose of teaching that group, I compiled information on about sixty subjects from three Yarbro books available at the time, namely Messages from Michael (MFM, 1979), More Messages from Michael (MMFM, 1986), and Michael's People (MP, 1988). That project helped me to understand the Michaelian teachings deeply, and then I tumbled to the realization that there was a correlation between the chakras and the Centers and some of my transpersonal experiences. Two of the written products of that study and that group were the Prequel and Part One of the ML book. Part Two of the ML book followed shortly thereafter.

Legacy Volumes 1 through 4 are written in such a way as to mainstream the Michaelian teachings to people who are not Michaelian teachings students. The last three Legacy Volumes, Volumes 5, 6, and 7, cannot be divorced from the Michaelian teachings and mainstreamed to a general readership, but some chapters from them are edited and incorporated into the mainstream versions of the first four Legacy volumes.

VOLUME FIVE: The fifth book in my septology is A History of the Overleaf Chart: From the original Michaelian group to the Present (referred to in what follows as HOLC). In HOLC, I discuss precursors to the Overleaf System, the revelation of the Overleaf System and its structure, Charts of the Overleaf System, and examination of discrepancies among expositions of the Overleaf System. The seeds of this book were planted in the late 1990s, when the internet exploded and online Michaelian teachings communities formed. I did my Scholar–Artisan thing and wrote some study papers on some Michaelian teachings subjects over the period of a few years, to share with those Michaelian teachings communities. It dawned on me in about the year 2011 that these could be assembled into a book, this History book. I worked on it sporadically up until its publication; the most intense work was in 2019.

VOLUME SIX: The sixth book in my septology is titled Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group (referred to in what follows as SPOMG). This is the book that you are now reading. Herein are gathered the Michaels' answers to questions on more than a hundred topics as found in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. These subjects are analyzed and synthesized with extensive commentary. The seeds of this book were planted in 1986 when I compiled information on five dozen subjects from the first two Yarbrow books, for the purpose of teaching a group of students that met in my home. About twenty years later, about the year 2011, I started this Volume Six with a similar objective but for the entire Michaelian teachings community, and worked on it sporadically up until its publication. I regard myself as a displaced member of the original Michaelian group, and one of my soul assignments is to clean up the mess that they left behind by their premature departure from the scene.

VOLUME SEVEN: It is appropriate, given the pervasiveness of sevenness in the Michaelian teachings, that I have a seventh Legacy book. It is titled The Synthesis: The Michaelian Teachings as Perennialism. Perennialism is the notion that ancient and modern religious and philosophical traditions have a common core of understanding. The Michaels referred to their teaching as "The Synthesis", meaning that it is inclusive of the many cultural, religious, spiritual, philosophical, and theological traditions that Fragments of the Michaels experienced during their incarnations over thousands of years. My Synthesis book compares and contrasts the Michaelian teachings with Sikhism, Hinduism, Buddhism, Zoroastrianism, Taoism, Christianity, Gnosticism, Neo-Platonism, Manichaeism, Islam, Sufism, Hermeticism, Kabbalism, Idealism, Theosophy, and Anthroposophy.

FYI, my Role-ish "energies" are, in descending order, Scholar — Artisan — Priest — Sage. Six of my books are from the Scholar–Artisan–Sage "Brainiac" side of my Being; one of them (Relationships) is from the Priestish "Cardiac" side of my Being. In non-Michaelian terms, I am a scientist, an engineer, a philosopher, and a mystic in that order.

You will notice from the dates above that I have been working on these books for more than forty years. It is my pleasure that now some others besides myself will presumably benefit from this investment in time and energy. My desire and intention is that others derive as much understanding from this gift of knowledge as I have — and that is considerable.

Note that in this book and others that I use the phrase "the Michaels" to refer to the original source of the information, allegedly a collective of souls that can be considered a plural being as well as a singular being, an "Entity". The Michaels refer to themselves as a "they" in the channeling, so it makes sense to conform their name to that plurality. Others within the Michaelian teachings originally proposed this, and I have adopted it.

Alternative Terminology Used

As stated above, this book is the second in a series of seven book about the Michaelian teachings, or inspired by the Michaelian teachings. These are my septology. It so happens that I have tweaked some of the standard Michaeliese special words into my own special words, and these alternatives appear occasionally in this Volume. Therefore, it is expedient for you to have a Glossary of the translation from Michaeliese to Philzese at this location in the manuscript. A thorough explanation of each of these changes is found in Chapter E-1, in the Epilogue of my book, A History of the Overleaf System, Volume 5 in the septology.

- Age/Level → Worldview
- Centers as adjectives → Centers as nouns
- Chief Feature → Shadow
- Exalted/Higher → Cardinal
- Higher Emotional Center → Sympathy Center
- Higher Intellectual Center → Concept Center
- Higher Moving/Sexual Center → Excitation Center
- Infinite/Causal Age → Ancient Age
- Instinctive Center → Impulse Center
- Internal Monads → Life-Stages

- Old Soul Age → Senior Age
- Retardation Goal → Reduction Goal
- Self-deprecation Chief Feature → Lowliness Shadow
- Self-destruction Chief Feature → Renunciation Shadow
- Slave Role → Server Role
- Stagnation Goal → Equilibrium Goal
- Transcendental/Astral Age → Elder Age

Michaelian Teachings Books Quoted

In this book, many times I refer to and quote from other books on the Michaelian teachings. In order to streamline the presentation, I will refer to them by their acronym only. Most Michaelian teachings students will own these books and have read these books; they are the standard reference books used in the Michaelian teachings community and have been for decades in many cases. The initial letters of the names of the books are italicized, as is the custom in the publishing industry. A more comprehensive, formal Bibliography can be found at the end of this book; it includes more information, such as the publishing company. Typically, I will use the entire book name the first time that it appears in a chapter, show the acronym in parentheses, and then use the acronym henceforth in that chapter. Rinse and repeat.

AOTS = Archetypes of the Soul, Varda Hasselmann and Frank Schmolke, 1993

ETT = Earth to Tao, José Stevens, 1989

ISM = In Search of the Miraculous, P. D. Ouspensky, 1949

JOYS = Journey of Your Soul, Shepherd Hoodwin, 2013 (Also known as the Second Edition.)

JPVH = The Legacy of JP Van Hulle, 2018

LSB = The Legacy of Leslie [Susan] Briggs, 2015

MFM = Messages from Michael, Chelsea Quinn Yarbro, Classic Edition, 1979

MMFM = More Messages from Michael, Chelsea Quinn Yarbro, Classic Edition, 1986

MP = Michael's People, Chelsea Quinn Yarbro, 1988

MTBT = Michael: the Basic Teachings, Aaron Christean, JP Van Hulle, M. C. Clark, 1990

PCTGO = Psychological Commentaries on the Teaching of Gurdjieff & Ouspensky, Maurice Nicoll, 1980

PP = Personality Puzzle — Solving the Mystery of Who You Are, José Stevens and JP Van Hulle, 1990

SJC = The Legacy of Sarah [Jo] Chambers, Volume 1, 2013

TFW = The Fourth Way, P. D. Ouspensky, 1957

TJOYS = The Journey of Your Soul, Shepherd Hoodwin, 1995 (Also known as the First Edition.)

TMH = The Michael Handbook, José Stevens and Simon Warwick-Smith, 1986

TTCI = The Theory of Celestial Influence, Rodney Collin, 1968

TTE = Tao to Earth, José Stevens, 1988

TYD = Transforming Your Dragons, José Stevens, 1994

Glossary

When these books are published for real, I might make a Glossary. Until then, I suggest that you refer to the Glossary in Shepherd Hoodwin's books, The Journey of Your Soul (1995) and Journey of Your Soul (2013), if you see any words or concepts in this book that you do not recognize or understand. Two other books, The Michael Handbook and Michael: The Basic Teachings, also have a glossary. In almost all chapters, near the beginning of that chapter, I provide a definition for the subject of the chapter. Of course, in the body of the chapter itself, a through description of the subject of the chapter is given.

STUDY PAPERS ON THE ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP

④ INTRODUCTION

This book, Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group, consists of a collection of dozens of individual study pieces, which constitute its “chapters”. Each chapter provides a description and an explanation of a specific subject. These subjects are components of the belief system, value system, and behavior system of a psycho-social-spiritual movement that has come to be known as the Michael teachings, “Michael” being the name that a channeled entity provided when it first revealed itself to a group of spiritual seekers, the original Michaelian group. The channeling sessions were transcribed to written documents.

A short introduction to the history of the original Michaelian group is include here in this introduction, and the detailed story is told elsewhere. Here also is a history of how and why and by whom the Study Papers book came to be.

Apologies that there is some redundancy and out-of-sequence narrative in this Intro; it was expedient to do so because of the way I sectioned this introduction into subject categories.

A Very Brief History of the Original Michaelian Group

In early 1973, a few spiritual seekers in the San Francisco Bay Area made contact via an Ouija board with a source of information that came to be known as “Michael”. Because Michael is said to be an “entity” consisting of about a thousand souls, some students prefer to refer to them as “The Michaels”; I am one of those. In this Study Papers book this group will be referred to as the original Michaelian group. The primary channel by far for the original Michaelian group was Sarah Chambers, although there were others. By far, the most material came from the Michaels, although there were other sources, such as Tomas and Soleal. The group grew in number over the next two years until late February of 1975, when Chambers called a halt to the large group meetings. Afterwards, a core group of founders and friends continued to meet occasionally to receive messages, and some private sessions were held until about 1978. The messages, amounting to many hundreds of pages, were handwritten or tape recorded at the time of reception. They were then typewritten, and photocopies were distributed to the members of the original Michaelian group.

A much more complete history of the original Michaelian group was published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., in two volumes, as Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Sarah Chambers. Chambers channeled for another group of students from 1978 to about 1983; I refer to that as the second Michaelian group. Some of the transcriptions from second Michaelian group were published as Volume 3 of Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Sarah Chambers.

Readers of the original Michaelian group and second Michaelian group transcriptions might notice that the Michaels seemed to have a different tone of voice in their channeling to these groups than to any other group that we know of since then. In subsequent groups, the Michaels passively wait for questions and provides neutral answers, mere information. With the original Michaelian group, they seemed to have an agenda, a purpose, or at least a message on their mind that they just had to get out. They promptly introduced the Overleaf system, for instance. They also emphasized that the group was together for a reason, for a purpose, namely to finish business that they started in earlier lifetimes — and that business included hearing the Michaelian teachings, heeding the Michaelian teachings, living the Michaelian teachings, and spreading the Michaelian teachings.

As subsequent Michaelian students all know, the original Michaelian group did not fulfill its promise in itself, but subsequent groups are attempting to carry on with the original intention. Following is the story about how that came about.

Directive to Publish

Almost from the beginning of the original Michaelian group, it was the Michaels' plan that their teaching be shared outside the group:

Dick: I am concerned about the slow growth of the group. It was said that we should spread the Logos.

It is the manner in which it is being presented that frightens many. Arrange the data in some suitable form and teach it yourselves. We will be with you to keep you from embellishing. [13 October 1973]

What can I do with this?

Propagate the Logos. This isn't trite. We expect this teaching to reach others. We are not just hollering down the rain barrel. [31 December 1973]

Many months ago, we advised some other way of introducing this teaching to potential students without reference to the mode of transmission [channeling]. This has not been done as yet, and many new students are lost because of this. We would hope that you would spend some time on this. [31 January 1974]

Should we send the transcripts out to those who do not participate? Should there be a school within a school for those who come each time?

We would prefer that you assemble the material here given, editorializing if you wish, and present it to all potential students in a palatable form. There are Scholars among you who are up to this task, as well as Artisans aplenty who can contribute the imaginative approach. We could see this as one of your major tasks, and we have advised you this before.... Now it is our aim to see you eventually propagate this teaching at large. We would see you exorcise the personal data prior to disseminating any information beyond this core; other than that, you may publish at will. [08 February 1974]

In a section further on in this Introduction, I tell how the original Michaelian group members began to fulfill this task of spreading the Teaching. However, as we all know, the task was interrupted by the untimely demise of the original Michaelian group. The task was immediately assumed by other members of the original Michaelian group (Leslie and Louise Briggs), and also by someone who was not a member of the original Michaelian group, Chelsea Quinn Yarbro. As time went by, numerous others assumed the task of spreading the Michaelian teachings. This Study Papers book presumes to have a part to play in the assembly, editorializing, presentation, and propagation of the material.

A fictionalized account of the original Michaelian group was published in 1979 (in hardcover edition) by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro in her book Messages from Michael (hereinafter abbreviated to MFM). In October of 1980 the paperback edition was published (that was when I first read it). Yarbro was a writer of fiction by profession, so it came naturally to her to fictionalize the account of the original Michaelian group. All names of the original Michaelian group members were changed in MFM to maintain their anonymity. The dialog between these members of the original Michaelian group was also created by Yarbro, as well as events in their story. The words attributed to the Michaels — shown in what printers call “caps and small caps”, that is, lower case letters being replaced with smaller capital letters — are, however, the actual words from the transcriptions, with some editorial liberties taken by Yarbro. Books about the Michaelian teachings published by Yarbro after MFM, namely More Messages from Michael (1986), Michael's People (1988), and Michael for the Millennium (1995) are not about the original Michaelian group; they are about the group that Yarbro led after the cessation of the original Michaelian group in 1978.

In the preface to MFM, Yarbro said that there were about three thousand pages of typewritten transcripts in late 1978. This does not fit with what eventually emerged (see below); I believe that she made it up as part of her fictionalization of the original Michaelian group. The reason I say this is that about 700 pages of original Michaelian group session transcripts began to emerge from obscurity in the mid-1990s, plus about 260 pages of compilation material, most of which is extracted from those session transcriptions. It is obvious that the first dated session in this collection (19 June 1973) is not the first, based on a reading of that session. There are undoubtedly a few sessions missing from our collection through February of 1975, and we only have a few sessions from February 1975 to January 1978. From 1978 to about 1983, Chambers channeled for an entirely different group of students, and I refer to this as the Second Michaelian Group. I retrieved some of the transcriptions of that group from the transcriber in the early 2010s, separate from the acquisition of transcriptions of the original Michaelian group.

As we will see below, besides Yarbro, the Center for Michael Teachings, Inc. (CMT), also answered the directive of the Michaels to “assemble the material” and publish it, which they did in three volumes, Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Sarah Chambers. And it so happens that I am a Scholar–Cast Artisan, and I have also answered the call to “editorialize” as I wish, which in my case is not to fictionalize the account as Yarbro did, but to write “study papers”.

To some small extent, the original Michaelian group did fulfill this directive to publish. They created at least three compilations that extracted material from the sessions. They also, just after the large group was disbanded, produced a rudimentary magazine. These documents were obviously intended for external as well as internal use. However, the original Michaelian group never really completely fulfilled this mission itself, because the group was disbanded. It is apparent that Yarbro also began to fulfill the directive to publish, and carried the project further than the original Michaelian group did. However, I believe that her effort was also incomplete. We now know that she left a lot of material out of MFM, and based on what we have, I believe that she left out some of the best material, some of which I regard as central to the Michaelian teachings.

But regardless of what I believe or what others believe about what is or is not worthy and whether or not the Michael’s directive is fulfilled, by publishing all of the material that has been retrieved, the CMT lets the readers discern what is valuable to themselves, for themselves. The CMT has not even “exorcised the personal data”, but the names of all members except those who gave permission, were substituted with pseudonyms. Otherwise, the text is intact and complete. The CMT editors also corrected some typographical and grammatical errors, so that readers are not therewith distracted. Otherwise, the text is faithful to the original, whereas Yarbro was not. The CMT editors also “editorialized” as the Michaels suggested, with explanations, clarifications, and elaborations placed in footnotes, where it seemed appropriate.

Much of the original Michaelian group material that was published in the CMT Legacy books has nothing to do with the Michaelian teachings per se. Some of that material might seem irrelevant to many Michaelian students. The transcribers and typists who preserved this record for us included some of the peripheral and incidental information about their sessions. The CMT editors decided that current and future students of the material should have access to the complete record so that they can extract whatever learning they can from their forebears in the Michaelian teachings. They did not decide what is relevant for all time and for all students by taking something out. In the Legacy books the reader sees what the original Michaelian group members learned and what they did not learn during the few years that they kept a record of their journey.

Some members of the original Michaelian group might not be completely comfortable with the concept of serving as role models for subsequent generations of Michaelian students, but we subsequent students thank them for preserving and sharing their stories. We see in their transcriptions that they were serious about these teachings and other spiritual paths. Lengthy meetings were generally held two or three times a week. Between meetings, the transcribers were busy typing and making copies. This went on intensely for about two years. There were other spiritual events that members participated in.

Copyright Concerns

As stated above, the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group and the second Michaelian group were published by the CMT. That project had its own parameters, separate from and different from my Study Papers book project.

Note that this Study Papers book only examines material from the original Michaelian group and from the second Michaelian group, where Chambers was the channel for both groups.

Note that this Study Papers book only quotes from the original Michaelian group and second Michaelian group transcriptions that have been given to the Michaelian teachings community by members of the original Michaelian group and second Michaelian group. We know that much is missing from this collection, and we hope that it will eventually become available to the Michaelian teachings community.

Note that this Study Papers book does not include material from Messages from Michael (MFM) if the material has not also been given to the Michaelian teachings community directly by original Michaelian group and second Michaelian group members. The reason for this is that sometimes Yarbro word-smithed the original Michaelian group material for publication in MFM, and we believe that this makes MFM a “derived” work from Public Domain documents; thus Yarbro has a legitimate copyright on everything in MFM, not to be infringed upon. However, where useful to explain a topic that was derived or retained from a similar teaching to the Michaelian teachings, such as Gurdjieff and Ouspensky, we (and anyone else) may quote from other published works under the so-called “fair use” doctrine. We avoided testing the “fair use doctrine” regarding the Yarbro publications.

The reader might find some history of Sarah Chambers and Chelsea Quinn Yarbro to be interesting.

In 1977 or 1978, the original and primary channel, Sarah Chambers, provided Yarbro, who was not a member of the original Michaelian group, a copy of the transcriptions channeled up until that time. You can read about this in the Preface to MFM. We now know that a contract was signed for Sarah to receive royalties for profits from the sale of any books published by Yarbro based on the original Michaelian group transcriptions. At that time, Sarah did not wish to become a public figure, but in the mid-1990s she did just that. At that time we students found out about the contract, and that Sarah had lost her copy of the contract, so we do not really know all of the terms of the contract. Therefore, we do not know if the contract precluded anyone else from publishing (or privately distributing) copies of the transcriptions. We do know that Sarah was not the only channel. We know others asked the questions, wrote down the answers, typed up the answers, and distributed the photocopies. The material would not exist without each of these activities. None of the other members of the original Michaelian group signed a contract with Ms. Yarbro, giving away their rights to distribute the material. We received transcriptions from five members of the original Michaelian group, none of them being from Chambers. Upon the advice of a lawyer (see below), we who wished to follow the directive to publish, were advised that we could do so regardless of Yarbro’s contract with Chambers.

Therefore, regardless of the terms of Chambers’s contract, it is certain at the present time that Yarbro has no legal “standing” to prevent distribution of the transcriptions, or have a copyright on material that was so freely available before she included it in her books. This material was freely distributed by members and non-members of the original Michaelian group to dozens of people, perhaps hundreds, during the years 1973 to 1979 (and later), so it precedes Yarbro’s copyrighted books. Therefore we know that it is legally acceptable to distribute and publish the transcriptions. In the late 1990s, a member of the original Michaelian group actually made a public offering to share copies of the transcriptions. It is possible, even probable, that Yarbro found out about this, but did not challenge the right to do so. Therefore, we regard the unpublished material to be “in the public domain,” which has a legal definition.

It is hoped that Yarbro will eventually make all of the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group and the second Michaelian group available. Our reason for hope is that Yarbro said in Michael for the Millennium (1995, Introduction, page 3) that she might eventually make some of the unpublished material available for viewing. Reliable sources and rumor suggest that this is a work still in progress, many years later. It would certainly please myself, and I assume Michaelian students in general, if she would make available all the original Michaelian group material in that way. She could also publish yet another Michael Messages book containing all the original Michaelian group material. If she ever does publish it or otherwise puts a price tag on its availability, we encourage you to purchase them from her. What really matters is that the Michaels’ full teaching be made available to the students with whom they have Agreements.

So, the material in this Study Papers book did not originate from Yarbro, and she had nothing to do with the production of this book.

The story of how the original Michaelian group transcriptions came to be released by original Michaelian group members to the Center for Michael Teachings, Inc. (CMT) is recounted below. The transcriptions were published in 2013 by the CMT. A history of the original Michaelian group, derived from the original Michaelian group transcriptions and interviews with original Michaelian group members, was published by the CMT in a second volume at the same time. This Study Papers book is the synthesis and analysis of those transcriptions.

Gathering the Transcriptions

It might be interesting to some readers of this Study Papers book to know how the widespread release of original Michaelian group transcriptions came about. I know the story because I personally played a role in processing and disseminating the original Michaelian group transcriptions in the mid-1990s, and it is not likely that anyone else will tell the story, so the task has fallen to me. I am also recording the story for the historical record, on the assumption that the Michaelian teachings might some day achieve enough notoriety among academic scholars that a book about its early history might be written, as books have been written about the history of other ancient and modern spiritual movements.

For the purposes of this book, the story starts with the appearance of what I refer to as the non-Yarbro branch of the Michaelian teachings. The story of this branch is traced in detail in books published by the Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., such as The Legacy of Leslie Briggs and The Legacy of JP Van Hulle. The information relevant to this Study Papers book is that, during the years 1985 to 1990, the recently-formed Michael Educational Foundation (MEF) published a magazine called The Michael Connection (MC). Books by members of the MEF, such as José Stevens and JP Van Hulle, were also being published at the same time as the magazine. All over the world, people would buy the books and write to their publishers and be led to the MC magazine. As more and more people contacted the magazine over those years, their contact information was listed in a column called “Out of Area Groups”. This is how Michaelian students all over the world found each other before widespread internet use emerged about a decade later.

I found the MEF serendipitously, as many Michaelian students do. Someone to whom I introduced the Michaelian teachings in about 1984 moved to Santa Fe, New Mexico. In a New Age book store there she found a notification that José Stevens, Aaron Christean, and J.P. Van Hulle were coming to town and holding a seminar. She sent me a photocopy of the flier, I phoned the local contact, she gave me Stevens’s phone number, I called him, I got on the MC mailing list.

The story of the discovery and release of the original Michaelian group transcriptions starts with a fellow by the name of Terence Powers (now deceased). He also somehow discovered the Michaelian teachings in the late 1980s, found the non-Yarbro channels via their books, and got on the MC mailing list. Sometime in the early 1990s, using the contact information published in the MC magazine, he initiated telephone conversations with me and with others. Among those others, he tracked down the only original Michaelian group member who became active in the non-Yarbro branch of the Michaelian teachings: Barbara Spurlock (aka Sara Alexander, now deceased). In late 1993, she provided him with a photocopy of the original Michaelian group transcriptions that she had, which amounted to hundreds of pages. In early 1994, Powers offered to provide a photocopy to me, so I drove from my home town of Kansas City to his college town of Wichita, Kansas, and we went to the local Kinko’s Copy Center. Names had been blacked out in order to maintain the anonymity of original Michaelian group members.

What was I to do with this treasure trove to make them generally available? During subsequent months, using my computer and a scanner, I scanned the transcriptions with optical character recognition (OCR) software in order to create an electronic file that could then be edited. During this edit, some personal and irrelevant information was deleted. When I was finished with the edits in late 1994, some copies of this document were released to other Michaelian students, and the document found its way from them to many other Michaelian students via the Michaelian community ‘grapevine’ that had developed over the preceding decade.

Spurlock led Powers to the discovery of other members of the original Michaelian group, including Sarah Chambers, which led to Chambers meeting Shepherd Hoodwin, which led to Chambers resuming channeling in 1996. But that is another story line, which one may read about in the Legacy of Sarah Chambers volumes published by the Center for Michael Teachings, Inc. In the Study Papers story line, know that Powers’s explorations soon led to Eugene Trout, an Old Artisan-Cast Scholar, one of the founding members of the original Michaelian group. On one of his trips from New York state to the San Francisco Bay Area, in 1996, Ed Hamerstrom retrieved Trout’s copy of the transcriptions in Louisa, Kentucky and delivered them to me in Kansas City. Trout had preserved an almost complete stash of the original Michaelian group transcriptions; there were many additional sessions that Spurlock did not have. As before, I photocopied them, OCRed them, processed them, and thereby created an enlarged version of the original Michaelian group transcriptions document. This tranche did not have the names of original Michaelian group members blacked out, but I substituted initials for the names so that the people could not be identified, but still could be followed in the session transcriptions. This updated version was then distributed by me to a few Michaelian students, and from them it found its way to many other Michaelian students via the Michaelian community ‘grapevine’.

Subsequent to this second edit, some other members of the original Michaelian group became known to some of us in the Michaelian teachings community, so I decided to delete the initials of people’s names in order to maintain complete anonymity, and I deleted even more non-teaching material, and reissued the edited transcriptions for a third time, in 1997 or 1998.

There stood the disposition and distribution of the original Michaelian group transcriptions for more than ten years. I was content with this, but, eventually, others were not. In about the year 2010, two other Michaelian students, a Scholar–Cast Sage named Kathryn Neall and a Scholar–Cast Priest named Barbara Taylor, got it in their heads that the original Michaelian group transcriptions should be formally published. They consulted with a Scholar–Cast Sage named Tom Coates — who happened to be a lawyer and a Michaelian student — to check into the legality of formally publishing the original Michaelian group transcriptions. It was known at the time that Yarbro had an exclusive contract with Chambers, and, of course, that Yarbro had a copyright on the tweaked original Michaelian group quotations published in MFM, but what about the fact that we received transcriptions from other members of the original Michaelian group? Coates’s determination was that the original Michaelian group transcriptions are considered to be in the “public domain” because of the way the members of the original Michaelian group freely copied and distributed them within the original Michaelian group and subsequent to the original Michaelian group. A legal precedent for this determination, tested in court, was that there could be no copyright on the text of A Course in Miracles because it was declared to be in the public domain for the same reason, namely that early transcripts were photocopied and freely shared among interested persons.

With that legal license to publish in hand, the Center for Michael Teachings was incorporated (with Neall, Taylor, and myself as board members) and work began on the process of editing and publishing the original Michaelian group transcriptions. About a dozen original Michaelian group members were tracked down and interviewed for historical background; a few more session transcriptions were recovered from some of them; material that I had deleted from my 1990s versions was added back into the text so that the final book would be as complete as it could be; with this, the Legacy of Sarah Chambers was published by the CMT in 2013 via the on-demand publisher Lulu, Inc.

But my personal work on the original Michaelian group transcriptions was not finished with that publication. The seeds of this Study Papers book had been planted and sprouted during the mid-1990s.

Scattered Delivery

As every Michaelian student knows, one of the challenges to a broad and deep understanding of the Michaelian teachings is the fact that the Michaels have revealed it to their students in a piecemeal fashion, a little here and a little there, via various channels in various groups. The Michaels have not dictated entire books on various subjects, as Seth did, for instance, via a single channel. The information transmitted on any given topic is scattered within many sessions, delivered over weeks, months, years, and now decades since the Michaels first appeared in 1973.

For the most part, the Michaels have been active in the sense that they have always had a specific systematic teaching that they are willing and able to share with us, their students, delivered from their unique viewpoint on a higher so-called “plane” of consciousness. On the other hand, the Michaels have been passive in the sense that they usually wait for students to ask for information on subjects of interest to them. Thus, the history of this revelation, in every subject category, is fragmented. Only when the scattered parts are assembled and arranged by their students do we see that there is in fact a comprehensive and coherent picture of the human experience and the soul experience within the cosmic experience — the structure and meaning of which, conveniently, has also been revealed.

One of my aims with this Study Papers book, and my other books, is to remedy that fragmentation, at least in terms of the Michaelian teachings as it was delivered during the very early years, the years of the original Michaelian group; hence the title Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group.

Besides the spotty delivery during the early years, the other thing going on during the two years of the original Michaelian group, was that the information was coming so fast that they did not have time to thoroughly process it at the time; therefore many subjects got short shrift. They often had two or three meetings per week, and it was a challenge just to get the recordings and/or handwritten notes of sessions typed up and distributed to members of the group. If subsequent students are to do what the original Michaelian group members did not have time to do, which is to extract as much learning as possible, then they must study — research and ponder and ruminate on — the meager scraps given to the original Michaelian group. That is what I have done with this Study Papers project.

Why Me?

As noted above, I am a Scholar–Cast Artisan. Perhaps that personality configuration partly explains why the universe picked me to procure, preserve, process, and publish the original Michaelian group transcriptions, starting in the mid-1990s and continuing until now; more is explained in this section. Even so, I find it a bit curious that no other Michaelian students, that I know of, process and understand the Michaelian teachings materials similar to the way that I do.

The Study Papers project is unlike any previous presentation of the Michaelian teachings. About a dozen books have been published over the decades, and about a dozen internet websites have been established over the decades, but none of them have approached the Michaelian teachings the way that I have in this book. To be more specific, this book is a scholarly academic exercise. Because of who and what I am, I believe that this is a worthwhile way to present the Michaelian teachings; my method supplements (rather than supplants) the work that has been done by various other students of the revelation via their books and websites.

The scholarly academic method comes naturally to me. Prior to my involvement in the Michaelian teachings, I did something similar during my twenty-year stint in a fundamentalist pseudo-Christian cult, from age 12 to age 32: you should see my marked-up, heavily annotated, color-coded, wide-margin Bible. This sort of scholarly academic study is what Bible Commentaries and commentators do: entire books are dedicated to an analysis and synthesis of the passages in the so-called “Holy Scriptures”, done to the max. My first attempt to write a book was A Harmony of the Gospels, a synthesis of the four books of the New Testament — Matthew, Mark, Luke, John — that purport to be the story of the life of Jesus. This led to a second attempt to write a book, Bible Chronology and the Hebrew Calendar. I quit the cult in 1979 before I finished the books. I first read Messages from Michael in October of 1980 when it was published in paperback. The next year, in 1981, I started to write my first book on the Michaelian teachings, The Tao of Personality, which is about my unique understanding of the Overleaf System.

The original Michaelian group transcriptions are not to be recognized or regarded as Holy Scriptures, of course, but in my opinion they deserve a similar scholarly academic treatment, and in my opinion that sort of presentation can benefit students of the Michaelian teachings. (By the way, I no longer regard the Bible as Holy Scriptures, but one can still learn a lot from it. Rather, I regard the original Michaelian group transcriptions the way that archaeologists and scholars do the Dead Sea Scrolls and the Nag Hammadi library, as a precious window on a significant spiritual movement.)

Besides my natural penchant for scholarship with whatever I am interested in, another factor that figures into my initiation of the Study Papers project is that I regard myself as a time-displaced member of the original Michaelian group. When reading the transcriptions, I feel a special connection, as if I was a part of the original Michaelian group, ‘in the spirit’ though not ‘in the flesh’. Also, it has been extraordinarily meaningful for to me to interact with various members of the original Michaelian group since the mid-1990s. Two of the six founding members were Scholars, and I am Scholar-Cast; four of the six founding members were Artisans, and I am an Artisan, so I feel the affinity based on those soul factors. In fact, a couple of members (Eugene Trout and Louise Briggs) and myself have acknowledged the spiritual love that we feel for each other, which tells me that we have soul ties with each other. It is a feeling of a type of love that I have not felt for any one else before or since, so I do not here use the word “love” lightly. It was also channeled that in a past Grand Cycle my ‘spark’ was the Task Companion of the ‘spark’ of Sarah Chambers, the original Michael channel. (Michaelian students will know what I mean by ‘spark’ and Grand Cycle and Task Companion.) My sense of our potential relationship in this lifetime was that if Sarah had lived at least another decade (after her untimely death in 1998 at the age of 62), we would have worked together again, in this lifetime.

Whatever may be the validity, or not, of my sense of soul kinship with original Michaelian group members, my self-appointed task is now to clean up and tidy up the mess that the original Michaelian group left behind by their premature departure from the scene. In any case, this Study Papers project is very personal and very dear and very meaningful to me. You may consider this book a “brain dump” of my understanding of the original Michaelian group transcriptions: I do word searches on various words, I make a collection of the Q&A exchanges that contain those words, thoughts come to mind, and I write out that commentary on those subjects.

Because of the intimacy I feel for the original Michaelian group members, I have also chosen to use the actual real first names of the participants (but no last names). So that each person can be uniquely identified, sometimes I had to substitute a common nickname for that full name.

Precedents of the Study Papers Project

This Study Papers project is not exactly without precedent. During the original Michaelian group, in attempts to gather and organize the scattered bits of teaching material, at least three compilations of the transcriptions were produced. The first one (by Cynthia Railey Cutting, a Sage) was an edited compilation of transcriptions of session meetings that were held during 1973. This compilation was produced to have some introductory material to give to new original Michaelian group members as they arrived, to ‘get them up to speed’. Another compilation (by Louise Forrester Briggs, a Scholar-Cast Priest) was a brief introduction to the Michaelian teachings; it was a collection of a few of the basic ideas and quotations extracted from the transcriptions of sessions held in 1973 and 1974; it was produced after the large and open original Michaelian group meetings ceased in early 1975, in anticipation of spreading the Michaelian teachings under new leadership. Another one (by Barbara Spurlock, aka Sara Alexander, an Artisan–Cast Scholar, mentioned previously) was a much more thorough compilation: it gathered scattered answers on dozens of subject into categories, from sessions held during the entire history of the original Michaelian group from 1973 to 1975. All three of these compilations were published in 2013 by the Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., in Volume 2 of Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Sarah Chambers. I have had personal contact with all three of these people; I felt a special affinity for them; I regard my work as an extension of theirs.

After the original Michaelian group disbanded in late February of 1975, there were other efforts and methods to systematize and spread the Michaelian teachings. Two issues of a newsletter (that we know of) were produced, in April and June of 1975; it was called “Dimensions!”. Sometime in the late 1970s a member of the original Michaelian group, Louise Briggs, mentioned above, assembled a group, and her daughter Leslie Briggs, also a member of the original Michaelian group, was the channel for the group. Imitating the practice of the original Michaelian group, Louise tape recorded Leslie’s channeling, and produced handwritten or typed documents, (which she ultimately shared with the CMT in the early 2010s.) Perhaps this could be referred to as “Plan A” for spreading the Michaelian teachings beyond the original Michaelian group.

Separate from the work of Louise and Leslie Briggs, evidently in late 1976, Chelsea Quinn Yarbro also ‘picked up the ball’ that the original Michaelian group had ‘dropped’. She wrote and published Messages from Michael in 1979. She and other channels affiliated with her conducted their own group meetings. Perhaps this could be referred to as “Plan B” for the spreading of the Michaelian teachings beyond the original Michaelian group.

However, members of the original Michaelian group have said to me and to others that they were dissatisfied with what CQY did with the original Michaelian group transcriptions. I am also dissatisfied with her work. Perhaps my work with the Study Papers project is “Plan C” to do what they did not have time and talent and motivation to do during the original Michaelian group, and that others have not had the time and talent and motivation to do in decades subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Perhaps my involvement with the Study Papers project is part of an Agreement with the Michaels to further the Michaelian teachings, beyond previous efforts. At least that is what it feels like to me.

I have been a student of the Michaelian teachings since 1981. When many hundreds of pages of the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group first surfaced in 1994 and 1996, I was one of the early recipients of those transcriptions, as narrated in a section above. Being a Scholar–Cast, Artisan–Role “Fragment”, I felt the desire to compile the information within topic categories, then write some explanation about each topic, then arrange those topics in a logical sequence. That is one of the ways that I do the so-called “True Study” of the Michaelian teachings. I envisioned this project as a supplement to the transcriptions themselves, which were finding their way, consequent to my efforts, into the hands of many students via the Michaelian teachings grapevine. I started this Study Papers project in the late 1990s, but soon lost interest. In 2010, my friend, the Scholar–Cast, Sage–Role “Fragment” Kathryn Neall, mentioned above, revived my interest in the project. Together we were going to work toward the continuation of this project as a team, rather than as a solo, endeavor. This was going to take place on a website that was set up by Kathryn, the Michael Teachings Student Community. The online Study Papers project did not last very long, maybe a year, and that website is now defunct. Eventually, in about the year 2021, I got around to the start of driving it to conclusion on my own, as the next-to-last book of my own Legacy of Philip Wittmeyer septology.

Validation

In all of my books, I have a chapter or a section on what we in the Michaelian teachings refer to as “Validation”. This is that standard section in this particular book, the Study Papers book. I capitalize the word Validation because I regard it as one of the jargon concepts in the Michaelian teachings.

The injunction to Validate is so well known in the Michaelian teachings communities that some students thereof might wonder why it even needs to be repeated, but I for one am mindful to repeat it anyway. I do it because there are different ways to Validate; I do it because some of my methods are different from those of most other students; I do it because I have arrived at some unusual conclusions in my Validation process; I do it because I want to explain my conclusions to any others who might be interested in my Validation process. Researching and writing this Study Papers book and my other books is one of the ways that I ‘sort out’ the Michaelian teachings: I have confirmed some parts of it, I have disconfirmed other parts of it (as erroneous channeling), and I have sorted the remainder into a ‘limbo zone’, where it waits while I continue further rational research and empirical experience, which might move some limbo-zone stuff either to the confirmed zone or to the disconfirmed zone.

In this section on Validation in this Study Papers book, here is what I want to explain.

The original Michaelian group transcriptions publication project, and the Study Papers project, is subject to a potential pitfall. In the minds of some students, the original Michaelian group transcriptions could conceivably become a dogma, like the Bible or Qu’ran is in the minds of fundamentalist Christians or Muslims. I view this as an extremely remote possibility, because potential students who are drawn to the Michaelian teachings are not drawn to that worldview, and because the Michaelian teachings itself declares that mindset to be anathema. If it can be said that the Michaelian teachings has a “mantra”, then I suggest that a good candidate is to “validate, Validate, VALIDATE!” We are often reminded, by channels themselves, that the words of the Michaels are not the words of God, that the Michaelian community is not the Church of the Michaels, and that the channels are not the high priests of the Michaels.

Personally, I learned this lesson the hard way. As mentioned above, I was in a fundamentalist cult where, in the late 1970s, a few years before I discovered the Michaelian teachings, as recounted above, I wrote a scholarly book manuscript on Bible Chronology and the Jewish Calendar. Thereby I became familiar with so-called “exegesis” — expounding on co-called “sacred” writings. I have transferred the skills developed in my “religious” background to the Study Papers project, but I do not transfer the attitude of “fundamentalism”. I know first-hand how a detailed, scholarly parsing of a sacred text is done. However, now, as an introduction to my Study Papers project, I want to emphasize that I am applying my exegetical skills to the “word of Michael”, but not applying the fundamentalist attitude, as if the words of Michael were the words of God — because that would indeed treat the Michaelian teachings as if it were a religion. I fully understand that the original Michaelian group transcriptions are not sacred text as some regard the Bible to be. Rather, I analyze and synthesize the words of the Michaels somewhat as academic scholars do, for instance, the Dead Sea Scrolls. I first want to understand the information on visceral, emotional, intellectual, and intuitive levels; the subsequent application of the information is a different matter.

Perhaps because of that religious background I am more aware than others that sometimes it is easier to contact a channel and/or quote a book than to contact Essence for guidance. The easy route is not what I am ultimately advocating here. I am advocating that students progressively learn to contact their own inner authority rather than rely on any external authority (such as the Michaels) or subscribe unquestioningly to any belief system, value system, and/or behavior system (such as the Michaelian teachings). Therefore, the entire purpose of the Study Papers project is to provide an accelerated Validation, or not, of parts of the Michaelian teachings. Presumably, this will lead to various practices, which presumably will eventually make the Michaelian teachings obsolete as students learn to listen to their own ‘internal guidance system’.

Another way to say this is that I have applied the Skeptic Attitude to the original Michaelian group transcriptions specifically, and the Michaelian teachings in general, first with the Negative Pole of –Suspicion, and then with the Positive Pole of +Investigation. The Study Papers project is an investigation indeed.

Skepticism is not the only Attitude at work here. Regarding my attitude toward channeling in general, let me just state for the record that, the more I have seen of it, the less confidence I have that the product of channeling can be accepted credulously, unquestioningly, uncritically. As we all know, and as I keep saying, the mantra of the Michaels themselves and their channels is to Validate, using whatever academic and epistemic tools one may have or may develop. This injunction is especially significant to me, because of that involvement in that fundamentalist Christian cult and its dogma that the Bible was the literal, inspired “word of God”. Yes, I studied the Bible religiously, and this actually appealed to the Negative Pole of my Spiritualist Attitude, –Faith. I also actually transferred some of this –Faith to Seth at first and then to the Michaels in the early 1980s. In my journey, it took decades to fully get into +Verification, the Positive Pole of the Spiritualist Attitude.

One reason I bang on repeatedly about Validation in my books is that, over the decades I have seen a few Michaelian students want to make the word of the Michaels into the word of God. Some students may like to believe that they are in contact with a near-omniscient, or at least very wise, very knowledgeable being. I suggest that this approach is a mistake. In fact, I suggest that the majority of the Michaelian teachings — which simply cannot be Validated — be put into what I call the “dogma-doctrine” bin. We do not even know for sure that the Michaels actually exist, let alone have any idea how accurately the information comes through from wherever. Comparison of the original Michaelian group material with other subsequent Michaelian channeling, with the vast differences in style and substance, should make that iffy status abundantly clear to students, if they happen to have any lingering –Faith after comparing them all. My suggestion is that everyone does well to approach all channeling as just another opinion from just another human being, or else it becomes like a fundamentalist religion rather than personal Validation. If the information provokes insights and action, great. If not, then move on to something that does.

Allow me to elaborate on the point about the change in style and substance of the story arc of the history of the Michaelian teachings.

The Michaelian Teachings: A Work in Progress

Some students might be tempted to believe that it is a waste of time to review this “ancient history” of the Michaelian teachings, thinking that we have evolved far beyond that primitive era. I believe otherwise; one can learn from the contrast with subsequent Michaelian teachings groups; one can learn from what has been dropped from subsequent Michaelian teachings groups. Let me explain.

Anyone who has read the original Michaelian group transcriptions might notice that the information and delivery has a different “feel” compared to subsequent channeling. My perception is that there has not been anything quite like the original Michaelian group since then. It was a unique time with a unique group of people. What are we to make of this? Does or does not the information therein apply in total or in part to present and future generations of students? Was it all the best information possible, or is some of it now to be eschewed?

It can be argued that the original Michaelian group channeling was unduly influenced by the “Fourth Way” teaching of Gurdjieff and Ouspensky, which the founding original Michaelian group members were familiar with. It can be argued that the original Michaelian group channeling was improperly skewed by New Age and/or Eastern Spirituality ideas that the members were exploring at that time. It can be argued that some “advanced” Michaelian teachings surfaced in the original Michaelian group that have not resurfaced since then. It can be argued that some original information has been superseded by superior information subsequent to the original Michaelian group.

My perspective is that all of the original Michaelian group material is potentially valuable to present-day and future Michaelian students, one way or another. That is to say, anyone who has the entirety of the original Michaelian group transcriptions has the unmitigated “best” and “worst” that the original Michaelian group has to offer. By examining the unexpurgated original Michaelian group transcriptions — ‘warts and all’ — each and every student may discern what is better than, and what is worse than, subsequent channeling, what is useful and what is useless — for himself or for herself. One of my goals with the Study Papers project is to present all views, not to promote any particular view of the original Michaelian group. This will de-mythologize the original Michaelian group rather than mythologize it (as Yarbrow did), or enshrine any part or the whole of it as dogma.

Students who are mostly familiar with post-original Michaelian group Michaelian channeling might notice as they read this Study Papers book that some information delivered during the original Michaelian group has been superseded by subsequent channeling, and that some things just don’t resonate with their current understanding of the Michaelian teachings. Sarah Chambers herself, in an email to me, said this:

I don’t think Quinn owns a copyright on anything but the material in her books, but I will have to say that she was very good at culling out the drivel, so, although I’ve only read the first one of her books, I’d say what they contain is far more significant insofar as the purpose of the teaching is concerned, than the old unedited transcripts. So I'm not sure if those transcripts are copyrighted.

You will perhaps agree with Sarah as you read this book that some of the original Michaelian group channeling is "drivel". You might also agree with Sarah that Yarbrow, as a writer, had to decide how best to introduce the material to the world, and that she made an excellent selection for a first introduction to the Michaelian teachings that was released into the world at large. It is understandable that she didn't include everything from the original Michaelian group in Messages from Michael and her subsequent books. However, we now have the luxury and the method to provide everything that has become available to the Michaelian community, and each student may determine what portion thereof is valuable to them.

Some of the commentary that I provide in this Study Papers book points out the apparent dubious channeling, and also points out some of the changes or improvements that have been made to the Michaelian teachings in decades subsequent to the original Michaelian group. I also presume to point out what I regard as the good material that has not elsewhere seen the light of day subsequent to the original Michaelian group. My hope is that the reader finds this to be instructive in the art and science of "Validation", that important feature of the Michaelian teachings.

One point of this section is to emphasize yet again that the Michaels' messages are not the words of God, infallible and immutable; they have evolved and will continue to evolve. I want to emphasize that the Michaelian teachings is not a religion, once and for all time delivered to true believers. Key to these teachings are the prime directive from the Michaels that each student needs to Validate the material for themselves. This directive applies to the original Michaelian group transcriptions as well as to any and all subsequent material.

The Michaelian Teachings: Complete in the Original Michaelian Group?

It might be surprising for you to read what the Michaels had to say in one of the late sessions of the original Michaelian group, namely that their teaching was more or less complete at that time. My understanding of this is that the Michaels had an agenda when they first appeared, and that was to deliver the Overleaf System, plus some of its important implications and ramifications, to the world. When you read the first year of sessions, it is obvious that such was their plan. Of course, the members of the original Michaelian group had their own ideas of what they wanted from a non-physical teacher, so they asked a lot of questions that might be considered irrelevant to the core message. Nevertheless, a lot of information relevant to the Overleaf System was delivered, enough that the Michaels felt that they had laid the foundation, and that it was up to the students to build on that. Thus, during the original Michaelian group, the Michaels were active in pursuing their agenda; subsequent to the original Michaelian group, the Michaels have become more-or-less passive. This is the understanding that I gather from the following Q&A exchanges, which were delivered only a couple of months before the original Michaelian group ceased:

(We had also been wondering if there was anything else that had not been communicated yet by the teacher.)

As for new information, we endeavor to present some new information whenever we have your attention — new in the sense that perhaps you have never thought of it in quite that light before. However, dear students, you have heard all that there is to hear. Our task, as we see it, is to continue to present the body of this Logos until a student grasps at its meaning and begins to apply it and teach it to others. We will continue to present it, and since we are not limited by physical time, we can serve it up to you in an infinite variety of frames. Perhaps we have just not hit upon the winning combination. After all, yours is, as you have said many times, a verbal culture, and the words are eventually what you will hear, and then they can be translated into the action. Richard has hit upon the meaning of this Teaching, but his understanding is still basically intellectual and philosophical rather than emotional and transcendental.

"Intellectual" and "Philosophical" allude to the Ordinal and Cardinal poles of the Expression Axis; "Emotional" and "Transcendental" allude to the Ordinal and Cardinal poles of the Inspiration Axis. It looks to me as if the progression recommended by the Michaels is that Expression should translate into Inspiration, and Inspiration should translate into Action. In other words: think > feel > act. (By the way, this progression is reminiscent of "rational emotive behavioral therapy", which one may find discussed at length in this Wikipedia entry: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rational_emotive_behavior_therapy<.) It is not surprising that an Entity, the Michaels, that consists of Action Axis Roles (Warriors and Kings), should emphasize that this progression is the preferred path of spiritual growth.

The discussion presented above continued as follows:

(Cynthia: asked “which Richard” and this was the response:)

This Richard is the only Intellectually-Centered Richard in the room.

Cynthia mentioned that it seemed to be as she suspected, that the material the teacher has given us is complete and we just haven't figured out how to use it properly. This was the response:

No, Cynthia, the material is obviously not all there, as you — and we mean that collectively — are not satisfied and still search. When enlightenment occurs the quest is over, at least insofar as the Physical Plane is concerned. We have been so far unable to instill in you the permission, or give you the permission to seek that ecstasy or joy that is the end product of all that you seek. However, at least all of you are experimenting with the possibility that there may be such a state as ecstasy. Many are not even that lucky. Richard — the other Richard — has chosen to leave (he had fallen asleep on the floor) because this is frightening information for him. He cannot even contemplate what this quality might bring to him, for it would mean utter destruction of all of his defense mechanisms. Even simple happiness is quite beyond his grasp, and yes, anyone with the same Overleaves exactly will experience this difficulty to a greater or lesser extent. All those with Cynthia's Overleaves exactly will experience her dilemmas and frustrations, and if they are in a teaching, they will be fortunate enough to be allowed to look at them and decide whether or not to change their course [of action]. Cynthia uses the Overleaves many times to make her life not work because she has been led to believe that her life will not work. She uses her lack of formal education as an excuse not to have to formulate goals for herself because that would conflict with the picture that the Overleaves have of themselves. Alice defeats herself in the same fashion because two of her Overleaves would be terrified of success. [04 November 1977]

It is because of these statements that I regard this Study Papers book, and two of my previous books in the Legacy series, A History of the Overleaf Chart and The Tao of Personality, as a furtherance of the Michaels' original agenda to reveal the Overleaf System to the world. All of my books except one (The Tao of Relationships) are intellectual and philosophical in nature, so it is up to the reader to translate that information into emotional and transcendental experiences, and then translate the results into action.

This book is way more than a thousand pages long, but I regard the original Michaelian group transcriptions as such a rich ‘gold mine’ that it could have been hundreds of pages longer.

Furthermore, this book is not to be considered as the final word on any subject found herein. My hope is that other students with a scholarly and academic mindset will expand on one or another of these subjects in a systematic and even more thorough way.

Systematic Jargon

Perhaps you have heard the phrase “word salad” applied to someone's speech. Dictionaries have a definition of the phrase, and Wikipedia even has an article on it:

A word salad, or schizophasia, is a “confused or unintelligible mixture of seemingly random words and phrases”, most often used to describe a symptom of a neurological or mental disorder. The term schizophasia is used in particular to describe the confused language that may be evident in schizophrenia. The words may or may not be grammatically correct, but are semantically confused to the point that the listener cannot extract any meaning from them. The term is often used in psychiatry as well as in theoretical linguistics to describe a type of grammatical acceptability judgment by native speakers, and in computer programming to describe textual randomization. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Word_salad — retrieved 08 June 2021]

Some people who are not familiar with the special meaning given to the vocabulary words of the Michaelian teachings might describe many paragraphs of the original Michaelian group transcriptions as a word salad, but obviously the situation with the Michaelian teachings is not so extreme that Michaelian channels could be described as “schizophasic”. The point I want to make in this section is that one of the first things that a newbie Michaelian student must learn is to understand the Michaelian teachings lingo, or they will be confused or misled.

I prefer to refer to the Michaelian teachings vocabulary words as “jargon”. I do not regard this as a pejorative term:

Jargon is the specialized terminology associated with a particular field or area of activity. Jargon is normally employed in a particular communicative context and may not be well understood outside that context. The context is usually a particular occupation (that is, a certain trade, profession, vernacular or academic field), but any ingroup can have jargon. The main trait that distinguishes jargon from the rest of a language is special vocabulary — including some words specific to it and often different senses or meanings of words, that outgroups would tend to take in another sense — therefore misunderstanding that communication attempt. Jargon is sometimes understood as a form of technical slang and then distinguished from the official terminology used in a particular field of activity. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jargon> — retrieved 08 June 2021]

Commonly, several Michaelian teachings jargon words might appear in a long question-and-answer exchange with the Michaels, and unless one understands the special meaning of those words, one might think the communication is a “confused and unintelligible mixture of seemingly random words and phrases”. Of course, we who are seasoned Michaelian students know that such is not the case, and likely we are the type of people who appreciate that the Michaelian teachings is organized and systematic and clear and distinct in its vocabulary; otherwise, we might not be attracted to the Michaelian teachings; we might be repelled by it.

The rationale for the use of jargon arises out of the fact that the Michaelian teachings is rather more systematic than most other spiritual teachings, including channeled teachings, that one might encounter. For instance, I regard the Seth material as a long-winded, somewhat rambling discourse that is not easily broken down into subject categories that could benefit from the use of jargon words. It is somewhat as if Seth is taking a “random walk” through his “stream of consciousness”. This is instructive in its own way, and many people prefer that manner of instruction. On the other hand, the Ra Material is somewhat more like the Michaelian teachings in that it is systematized according to categories with names and descriptions. If you visit <https://www.lawofone.info/> you will see that a student of the Ra teaching has conveniently categorized Ra’s basic concepts, concepts that Ra re-cycles and re-presents in various ways and in various contexts, just as the Michaels do. Well, that man’s Ra systematization project is similar to my Michaelian teachings/original Michaelian group Study Papers project.

I am the sort of person who prefers a systematic teaching to a rambling narrative; I like an organized teaching that defines its terms clearly, and that clearly provides an understanding of the relationships of those terms to each other within the context of the teaching as a whole. My nature appears to be somewhat like what social psychologist Simon Baron-Cohen refers to as a “hyper-systematizer”. You may wish to refer to <https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2677592/> for more information about that. (Note that I am not extreme enough to be placed on the Asperger’s spectrum.) You will see this personality trait, a penchant for methodical systematization, in all of my books.

I suggest that some of the difference between systematic and unsystematic spiritual teachings has partly to do with the origin of the teacher of the teaching, either on the Astral Plane (which is emotional) or the Causal Plane (which is intellectual). The difference between teaching styles is also determined by what the students want from a teacher; they can be either primarily Inspirational and unsystematic, or Expressional and systematic.

The individual pieces that I refer to as the chapters of this Study Papers book are arranged in alphabetical order of mostly Michaelian teachings jargon words or conceptual categories. It could have been arranged in didactic order, starting with the most general subject and ending with the most specific, or some other sequence, but this book is not intended for newbie students. Learned and knowledgeable students can look up words of interest in the Table of Contents, read the relevant piece, and have their knowledge and understanding expanded and clarified thereby.

Another factor regarding jargon words is that some of the founding members of the original Michaelian group had been spiritual seekers for years in a Gurdjieff–Ouspensky group. These people were rather systematic, and these people had their own jargon. Therefore, readers of this Study Paper book will understand the individual pieces better if they are familiar with the Gurdjieff–Ouspensky teaching. Readers will also notice in the course of reading these chapters/study papers that some members of the original Michaelian group were interested in numerous other spiritual teachings and practices. For instance: Theosophy, A Course in Miracles, Werner Erhard and EST, John Lilly, Carlos Castaneda, Edgar Cayce, Jane Roberts/Seth, and many others. These teachings also had special words and concepts. New members were added to the original Michaelian group all of the time, and they brought with them questions and ideas from these other spiritual pursuits. In these studies, I have added brief commentary about these other teachings where appropriate, and I invite readers to pursue further information about them if they so choose. There are books galore, and of course lots of information freely available on the internet.

The Michaels had this to say about jargon:

Presented at the proper moment, this teaching is palatable to about thirty percent of the world's population, but for most to absorb it, it must be presented in that jargon that the Fragment already believes to be meaningful. No one of you is skilled enough to go forth and preach to the multitudes, but to individual students, yes. But we ask that you exercise care in that you know that the Fragment is asking [for it]; a teaching given against the will of the student never is absorbed. [30 September 1977]

More was said about the Michaelian evangelical agenda in a previous section, "Directive to Publish".

Besides the chapters dedicated to the examination of the core concepts of the Michaelian teachings — the ones that have jargon names — there are many chapters on peripheral subjects that came up for discussion numerous times in the original Michaelian group sessions. In my opinion, what the Michaels had to say about the various peripheral topics is almost as important as the core concepts. Those chapters cover ground that has not been covered elsewhere in Michaelian teachings publications. Therefore, my guess is that students will find them very interesting and informative.

To Understand and Explain the Michaels' Messages

While writing about the Bible, as mentioned above, I encountered the notion of "hermeneutics":

Hermeneutics is the theory and methodology of interpretation, especially the interpretation of biblical texts, wisdom literature, and philosophical texts. Hermeneutics is more than interpretative principles or methods used when immediate comprehension fails and includes the art of understanding and communication. Modern hermeneutics includes both verbal and non-verbal communication as well as semiotics, presuppositions, and pre-understandings. Hermeneutics has been broadly applied in the humanities, especially in law, history and theology. Hermeneutics was initially applied to the interpretation, or exegesis, of scripture, and has been later broadened to questions of general interpretation. The terms hermeneutics and exegesis are sometimes used interchangeably. Hermeneutics is a wider discipline which includes written, verbal, and non-verbal communication. Exegesis focuses primarily upon the word and grammar of texts.

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Hermeneutics>< — retrieved 06 February 2022]

If you know somewhat about the Bible, you might know that there are alleged to be different ways to interpret scripture, such as either literally true or figuratively and metaphorically true — or both, as if there are two levels of understanding, often called "exoteric" and "esoteric". There is no such need for a hermeneutics theory of interpretation when it comes to the Michaelian teachings. The Michaels did not speak in metaphors; they did not say things that had both a lower-outer and a higher-inner meaning. They did not need to conceal their true meaning by encoding or otherwise obscuring their presentation in some way. They did not talk in parables as Jesus did. Nor did they tell made-up stories with a hyperbolic meaning, as was typically done in ancient "mythology".

However, the original Michaelian group transcriptions do need to be interpreted and explained if they are to be understood correctly and thoroughly. The Michaels themselves said that: "We are guilty of some semantic ambiguity at times..." (27 March 1974), and so a careful parsing of their statements is required to mitigate the ambiguities. Furthermore, the Michaels did not introduce a topic and then elaborate and extrapolate on it in anything even remotely resembling a thorough exposition; that job seems to have fallen to others, their students, including me; that is what "study" is all about; that is what these "study papers" are all about.

In addition to defining the jargon words as described above, there are some other methods that help us to understand the Michaels. For instance:

- One can collate all of the quotations on a particular subject, which is what I have done for this book; Yarbro did some of that in her books. When you compare the original Michaelian group transcriptions with Yarbro's book Messages from Michael, you see that she often combined sentences from more than one session, and edited the words to make it seem as if it was all one answer, when in fact it was two or three answers that she cobbled together into one answer. Unlike Yarbro, I have not changed any wording; each question and answer exchange is shown, and the session date is shown in brackets at the end of the exchange. Within the quotations, I often added words in [brackets] where I thought it helped. I also sometimes took the liberty in some places of changing punctuation from that provided by the original typists; I am particularly fond of semi-colons.
- It helps to research what the original Michaelian group members knew of, for instance, the Gurdjieffian teachings, which was a significant influence and foundation for the Michaelian teachings. Beyond that, it helps to supplement what the Michaels said by comparing and contrasting it with yet other psychological and spiritual teachings that the original Michaelian group members were familiar with. This gives us clues about why the original Michaelian group members asked what they did, and why the Michaels answered the way that they did. That is one of the methods I have applied in these study papers.

- My primary procedure is to compare and contrast the statements that the Michaels made on a topic, and add my explanatory comments interspersed among the original Michaelian group transcription quotations. In my comments I sometimes paraphrased what the Michaels said, added historical background information, and/or did my analysis and synthesis of what the Michaels said. More than any other type of comment, I refer the reader to other chapters in this Study Papers book that elaborate on what the Michaels said in the quoted passage; the Michaelian teachings is an interwoven fabric of related concepts, and so are these study papers.
- Because Yarbrow was a writer of fictional novels, she made up stories about conversations between original Michaelian group members that fleshed out some skimpy answers. Fictionalizing the background to the material distorts the material in a way that I am uncomfortable with. This is not my style, and some original Michaelian group members told me that they did not like it either, and I did not do it that way because it is just not my style. Yarbrow herself did not do it that way in her fourth book, Michael for the Millennium.
- The point of interpretation, the goal of analysis and synthesis, the purpose of comparison and contrast, is not to read into the original Michaelian group transcriptions one's biases and preconceived notions, but to extract out of the text as much understanding as one can. The information found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is very 'rich'; it is a 'gold mine' with many 'nuggets'. A cursory reading of the text does not uncover the 'gems'. Unlike subsequent verbal trance channeling, which tend to be more verbose, the original Michaelian group used the Ouija board, which tends to be less verbose. Therefore the original Michaelian group channeling seems terse and pithy in comparison to subsequent channeling. In my view, this density lends itself to the way I do explanatory exegesis.
- This Study Papers project is limited to the original Michaelian group and the second Michaelian group, but it can be used as a model for other Scholar types with other projects focused on other Michaelian teachings channeling. This is how you do it: Pick a channel that you like and trust; pick subjects that fascinate you; collect all of the channeling that you can find on the subject; arrange it in a logical didactic sequence; study the material intensely; add all of the explanatory comments you can think of; share your work with others and solicit review and feedback.
- The way that I write about the Michaelian teachings is different from the way that any other Michaelian student does it, in their books or on their websites or in their public speaking. Specifically, my way is somewhat "academic" in nature. This means to me that I study the Michaelian teachings using the intellectual, scholarly, academic tools of analysis and synthesis, of comparison and contrast; it is as if I were a university student researching and writing a Masters or a Doctoral thesis. However, the situation is that I am not an actual trained and polished academic working under the supervision of a thesis advisor, but I am presumptuous enough to use means and methods that are somewhat academic in nature. The academic approach might not appeal to many or most Michaelian students, and perhaps I am being delusional in all of this, but one of my long-term goals is to make certain parts of the Michaelian teachings more appealing to people who are in fact actual academics, and/or they are practicing professionals of one sort or another. For instance, there are many components of the Michaelian teachings that counseling psychotherapists might find useful. Also, I foresee a time when the Michaelian teachings might become an object of study for academics in the field of comparative religion or modern religious movements, and my scholarly work might prepare the way for them. I assume that actual academics will find an academic presentation of the Michaelian teachings to be more appealing, perhaps even more authoritative, than that provided by other Michaelian sources. Thus, my hope is that academics will 'pick up' one or another of the 'balls' that I am 'throwing' to them, and then 'run' with it in their own way. Whatever the future may hold for my work, whether one or another of my imagined scenarios, this seven-volume project is just something I have to do, and this is the way that I have to do it, because this is who I am.

Abbreviations Used

Throughout this book, the following abbreviations and conventions are used.

- 2MG = Second Michaelian Group. This is another group of spiritual seekers who convened, from 1978 to 1983, for the purpose of receiving the Michaelian teachings; Sarah Chambers was also the channel, but the membership was almost entirely different from the original Michaelian group. Some of the transcriptions of these channeling sessions were published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc. as Michael Speaks; The Legacy of Sarah Chambers, Volume 3. Refer to Bibliography at the end of this book.
- [date] = Quotations of Michaelian teachings information in this book, extracted from transcriptions of the original Michaelian group and the second Michaelian group, are referenced with the date of the channeling session in which they are found.
- MFM = Messages from Michael, the first book to be published about the Michaelian teachings, in 1979; refer to the Bibliography at the end of this book. The Michaelian teachings information in this book was taken from transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, and some special channeling sessions that its author, Chelsea Quinn Yarbro, had with Sarah Chambers.
- EST = “Erhard Seminars Training (marketed as est, though often encountered as EST or Est) was an organization, founded by Werner Erhard in 1971, that offered a two-weekend (6-day, 60-hour) course known officially as ‘The est Standard Training’.” (Wikipedia) Many original Michaelian group members attended this seminar.

Comments on My Commentary

It helps me to understand my own thought processes when I organize them in a numbered list. My guess it that such a list also helps the reader to understand the function and purpose of my writings.

1. Because the Michael Entity is a plural being, a “they” consisting of an aggregation or constellation of many “souls” or “Fragments”, in this book they are referred to as “the Michaels”.
2. The Michaelian teachings is rather systematic. It consists of various and numerous concepts. Those concepts are named with common words, but because those concepts have specific meanings within the Michaelian teachings, their names become jargon words. In this book, these words are typically capitalized in order to distinguish them from the ordinary or common use of those words. This book is mostly about defining and explaining the concepts named with jargon words, but there are many other chapters about subjects on which the Michaels had somewhat to say when they were interrogated by members of the original Michaelian group.
3. Almost all readers of this book will already be familiar with the Michaelian teachings and its concepts and jargon words. Wherever one sees a capitalized jargon word in whatever individual study paper, it almost certainly has a chapter of its own dedicated to its definition, description, and explanation.
4. The study papers, aka book chapters, are arranged in the alphabetical order of the name of the chapter/subject. This arrangement will aid the reader in finding the study paper/chapter, but, of course, the Table of Contents is also useful for this purpose.
5. If the intended readership of this book were not advanced students of the Michaelian teachings, then it would have been expedient to arrange the individual studies in a non-alphabetical order, but rather in a logical presentation of the subject matter from most basic or general to more developed and specific.
6. A reasonable attempt has been made to make each chapter understandable on its own, such that if it were extracted from the book as a whole, it would still work as a “study paper”.
7. My method for producing this Study Papers book was to search the original Michaelian group transcriptions for all of the mentions of certain words plus related words and concepts, then provide an analytical and synthetical explanatory commentary on them. By “analytical” I mean that I parse the content of the text to extract as much meaning as I can from it, and by “synthetical” I mean that I compare and contrast the context of the concepts in the text with other components of the Michaelian teachings and other teachings so as to fit the topic of the chapter into the picture of the Michaelian teachings as a whole explained in the Study Papers book as a whole. My intention was to extract as much understanding from each Q&A exchange as I can.

8. This procedure is not new to me: I have an amateur background on Biblical exegesis: “Exegesis is a critical explanation or interpretation of a text. Traditionally, the term was used primarily for work with religious texts, especially the Bible. In modern usage, exegesis can involve critical interpretations of virtually any text, including not just religious texts but also philosophy, literature, or virtually any other genre of writing.” (><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Exegesis>< — retrieved 27 July 2022) So, this Study Papers book is formulated somewhat like the commentaries on the Bible that I read in my younger days when I was a scholarish member of a fundamentalist apocalyptic quasi-Christian cult. (This sort of training could have been better if I had some actual academic institutional experience writing a masters and doctoral thesis under supervision, but what prior experience I had was not nothing.)
9. If the subject was familiar to the original Michaelian group members before the Michaels commented on it, I start the chapter with an introduction to the topic, extracted from literature that they were likely familiar with. Where that is not the case, I typically use an online dictionary to define the term, and/or use Wikipedia as a resource to provide an introduction to the topic.
10. Typically, I present the Q&A exchanges on the subject in the chronological sequence that they are found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. Thus, we learn about the subject along the same trajectory that the original Michaelian group members learned about it. There are subjects, however, where it seemed natural and expedient for me to divide the study paper into sections and/or subsections based on some other organizing principle than the chronology of its appearance in the transcriptions.
11. I am not a channel. My comments on the original Michaelian group Q&A exchanges are my own idiosyncratic interpretations of the Michaelian messages, and they may not exactly reflect what the Michaels intended. It is true that the Michaels function on the Scholar level of the Artisan Plane, and it is true that I am a Scholar-Cast Artisan, and it is not meaningless that there is this correspondence, but that does not mean that I have a totally accurate perception of their meanings. Some if not all readers will almost certainly disagree with some of my interpretations.
12. I am a conduit. Besides describing the Michaelian teachings in this Study Papers book, my intention for it was also to extrapolate beyond what the Michaels had to say, if I may be so pompous, presumptuous, and pretentious. The name that I have given to my overall book-writing project is the “Meta-Michaelian teachings”; it alleges to provide an understanding of the Michaelian teachings as if given from the next higher level of integration and synthesis. My perception is that the pre-Meta-Michaelian teachings is like a dilapidated ramshackle ‘house’ that is in need of a ‘remodel’. Thus, my books present my suggested ‘upgrades’ for the Michaelian teachings communities and individuals to evaluate and implement, if they so choose.
13. This Study Papers book is one of seven books that provide my systematic explanation of the Michaelian teachings, and it provides suggestions for a Meta-Michaelian teachings. As such, this particular book is incomplete in itself; it should be understood in the context of the other six books.
14. The modern Michaelian teachings has added a lot of information since the original Michaelian group, but I suspect that many readers of this book will be astonished as they learn about how much has been lost to the modern Michaelian teachings because it was not carried over from the original Michaelian group.

Orthodox and Heterodox

It may be that some readers of this Study Papers book will not have read my others books, or otherwise may not have become aware of my departures from what I refer to as the orthodox Michaelian teachings.

One of my significant departures from post-original Michaelian group Michaelian teachings orthodoxy was not actually relevant to the original Michaelian group, because the post-original Michaelian group orthodoxy did not appear until More Messages from Michael was published by Yarbro in 1986. That post-original Michaelian group orthodoxy pertains to the so-called “Michael Math Sequence” (1-Server > 2-Artisan > 3-Warrior); it became the orthodoxy as it was adopted without question by subsequent students. That orthodoxy is distinct from what I refer to as the “Natural Sequence”. There are a few places in this Study Papers book where I will point out that the Natural Sequence was the orthodoxy in the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the original Michaelian group with regard to the Levels of Being and the Centers (1-Moving > 2-Emotional > 3-Intellectual). The discrepancy between the two is discussed at great length in my book The Tao of Cosmogony.

As for other heresies, Part Four of my book A History of the Overleaf Chart documents about a dozen doctrines of the Michaelian teachings that the Michaelian teachings communities have not come to a consensus about, even after more than four decades. It can be said then that there is no orthodoxy on those dozen subjects, which include:

1. Which septenaries of personality traits belong in the so-called “Overleaves” category?
2. Do the Body Types fit into the Overleaf System, and if so, how?
3. What are the best names for the seven planes?
4. What is the Instinctive Center all about?
5. How do the Action Centers fit into the Overleaf System?
6. How do the chakras correlate with the Centers?
7. What is the nature of the so-called “higher” Centers?
8. What are suitable names for, and characteristics of, the seven Levels?
9. What is the so-called “Mid-cycle” as purported by Yarbrow but no one else?
10. What are suitable names for, and characteristics of, the seven Soul Ages?
11. What about the awkward situation with the various dogmas concerning the Casting of kindred souls?
12. What are the variations in color assignments to components of the Overleaf System?
13. How do the seven Milestones, aka seven Internal Monads, aka seven Life-Stages correlate with the other septenaries mentioned in the Michaelian revelation?

I have come to my own conclusions about these discrepancies. Only a few of them are relevant to this Study Papers book, and I note them where appropriate in this book.

There are a few subjects where the post-original Michaelian group orthodoxy has departed from the original Michaelian group doctrine and yet I have no problem with the improvements. These instances are noted where appropriate in this book.

How to Read these Study Papers

This book could have been divided into several Parts, each Part containing several chapters on related subjects, but the Parts would have had ambiguous boundaries (some chapters would have fit into more than one Part), so I decided not to arrange the book this way. It also seemed like too much work, and I am getting too old for that.

This book could have also been arranged in a “didactic” (teaching) manner. It could have started out with the most basic and/or most general subject, and then it could follow some trail through less basic and/or more specific subjects. However, I could not figure out a logical way to make this work. Besides, readers of this book are almost certainly not newbie Michaelian students who would need this kind of ‘hand-holding’. This book is certainly not intended for newbie Michaelian students; it is most appropriate for “advanced” Michaelian students, meaning, those who already have a good understanding of the Michaelian teachings, and who are now ready to ‘dig deeper’ and ‘dig wider’.

- This book is intended to be used by Michaelian students as a “handbook” or “manual” that they can refer to repeatedly for instruction and inspiration. So far as we know at this time, the original Michaelian group was unique in the history of the Michaelian teachings; they were a unique group of people, and they had a unique agenda. (We do not know much about the nature and function of the members of the secretive Yarbrow group that followed the original Michaelian group.) However, this does not preclude the possibility that at some time in the future, a group of students could come together and pick up where the original Michaelian group left off. In that case, this Study Papers book could conceivably be used as a sort of handbook or manual, providing clues and guidance about what to do and warnings about what not to do.
- Caveat emptor: this is a massive tome of more than a thousand pages. Unless you love to read, and love the subject matter of this book, and love the way I have compiled and commented the information, you might find it daunting to contemplate the immensity of the task of reading it all. If this challenges your normal capacity to focus, then I suggest that you focus on reading it in easily-digestible bite-sized chunks, and persevere to the limit of your ability or interest.

- There are more than two hundred chapters aka study papers in this book. The chapters are not numbered. The titles of the chapters are arranged in alphabetical order, from “Acceleration” to “Yoga”. This makes it relatively easy to find a subject without checking in the Table of Contents for the page number of that chapter.
- It makes sense that I tell readers to jump right into the middle of this book somewhere, by first finding a chapter that grabs their interest. My hope is that readers will thereby be drawn into the fascinating revelations found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, covering subjects that are not usually found elsewhere in Michaelian sources. My suggestion is that you read the entire Table of Contents, then pick the chapter that most interests you, then read that chapter. Almost every chapter has comments in it that refer to other chapters that are in some way related to that chapter. So then read one of the related chapters referenced in that chapter that looks like it might be interesting to you. That procedure will eventually lead you to every last one of the chapters. If you lose the ‘scent of the trail’, then you could, of course, just check back with the Table of Contents, and start a new path of exploration and discovery through the chapters.
- As I said above, in my opinion, this book could be used by groups of Michaelian students as a ‘study guide’, to facilitate discussions, in-person or on-line. Students would not even need to read my commentary; they might prefer to read only the quotations extracted from original Michaelian group sessions, and then talk among themselves about what they have read. If you, dear reader, do this online in a discussion group, please let me know, so that I can monitor your classes, and thereby improve this book.
- We are “students” of the Michaelian teachings. Student-hood implies study. This book is a product of my study of the Michaelian teachings. You, dear reader, will derive benefit from my studies to the extent that you are willing and able to study my studies. A rapid and superficial and thoughtless reading of this book will do you little good. Take your time; stop after every question and every answer and every comment to intuit/think/feel about what the Michaels say and what I say about what the Michaels say. As you read, consider how you might change your way of being to align with what you learn by reading this book, because the Michaelian teachings is not just a belief system; it is also a value system and a behavior system.
- The fact that these study papers are presented in a somewhat scholarly academic fashion might be off-putting to many readers who are not familiar with and comfortable with this format. My suggestion and hope is that readers will persevere in any efforts to put themselves into an academic mentality or mindset, because I believe this approach — new to the Michaelian teachings community — is a beneficial way to come to understand the Michaelian teachings in its full depth and breadth.

Every time I finished one of these chapters, I found myself wishing that all Michaelian students would read them also, so that they would have the benefit of the depth and breadth of knowledge and wisdom that the Michaels imparted to the original Michaelian group members.

[[Note to reviewers: Are there any chapters on subjects that you would like to see me include in this book?]]

STUDY PAPERS ON THE ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP

⑥ ACCELERATION

This chapter is the product of a search for the word accelerate in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. In almost all cases, the word refers to the soul moving through the story arc of reincarnation at a faster pace than usual. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

The word acceleration not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Acceleration per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

As we will see as this chapter develops, there is a dichotomy in the way the Michaels' use the term "acceleration". Sometimes it refers to the fact that some souls just naturally transit the reincarnation cycle faster than others, and sometimes it refers to the fact that some souls intentionally speed up their transit time through the reincarnation cycle by various means.

Although the word acceleration is not used, and even before the Michaels showed up, the first mention of acceleration is of the intentional variety:

I would like to know how long you have been the leader of your world and I would like to know what you teach them.

[Soleal:] I have been here for ten of this world's revolutions [around its star]. I teach them what I would teach you: that is, to seek moderation in all things, to love unselfishly, to become intimate with the inner workings of your spirit, to live in the essence of that spirit, to liberate the trapped Essence is the reincarnational purpose. I try to guide them in this path, so that they might be free sooner. [mid 1973]

That passage pretty much sums up the reason for intentional acceleration of one's journey: the sooner the reincarnation cycle is over, the better, generally speaking. Refer to the chapter "Liberation" for more discussion of that. There you will read that, basically and briefly, the more the Personality understands what is really happening in life, the more effective is the learning, and the more efficient is the journey, which means that it happens faster than it otherwise would.

The next mention of acceleration is also of the intentional kind, although it seems to be the intention of the Essence rather than the intention of the Personality, which (although it helps) doesn't need to be aware of the Essence's plans:

The Mature Soul can also accelerate within the Cycle. Young Souls can burn Karmic Ribbons rapidly sometimes and accelerate; Elizabeth Blackwell and Florence Nightingale are examples. Louis Pasteur, Walter Reed, Marie Curie, [and] Frank Lloyd Wright accelerated. [18 September 1973]

These are all famous people who did important things that influenced a lot of people, and this is the sort of thing that often results in spiritual acceleration. Acceleration, in that passage above and in other passages (see below), is often connected to a fast burning of many Karmic Ribbons; refer to the chapter "Karma" for further discussion. There you will read that, basically and briefly, unpleasant though it often is, Karma is an intense and effective accelerant of spiritual growth. In fact, if it were not for Karma to enliven and accelerate the journey, life would be boring and transit would be slow.

Sarah ... stated that she had developed quite an admiration for Gaius Octavian (Caesar Augustus) upon reading [the book] Caesar and Christ and wished to know about him.

This extremely perceptive final [Seventh] Level Young Soul burned much Karma and accelerated. He chose the statesman role again in the recent past, and is a First Level Old Soul, returned as Dag Hammarskjöld.

You might or might not know that Hammarskjöld was Secretary General of the United Nations during the 1950s. People who are in positions of power can do much good or much harm; they often earn and burn Karmic Ribbons with a large quantity of people. Doing this results in acceleration.

Besides the intention of Essence to burn Karmic Ribbons in order to accelerate, the Personality can intend spiritual practices and thereby accelerate spiritual growth:

Edgar: I would like advice regards getting rid of pain.

We can be of assistance only in that your illness is a part of Karma for you, and when you come to grips with your spiritual controversy, the pain will no longer be necessary. This can be accelerated, of course, by those methods we have outlined for the others; that is: meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. Edgar is waging an internal battle with reason versus dogma. This is not unusual, just agonizing, particularly for [those] Scholars who are slaves to reason. [15 November 1973]

Refer to chapters "Meditation and Concentration", "Fasting", and "Study". Means and methods of spiritual growth are found in the Michaelian teachings and other spiritual teachings; their purpose is to accelerate spiritual growth; refer to the chapter "Growth, Spiritual". Basically and briefly, spiritual growth happens whether or not the Personality understands what is happening and why, but growth is accelerated when one knows what life is really all about, and applies tools that foster the journey. Regarding Scholars, that Role correlates with the Neutral Assimilation Center, which is not a "slave to reason"; it is actually inclined to intuition and instinct, and that Center is like a 'bridge' or 'gateway' to the higher Centers. Another comment regarding "slaves to reason", being an Artisan myself, it is fair for me to accuse them of being "slaves to reason" because that Role correlates with the Intellectual Center, the Negative Pole of which is -Reason. Edgar was a Scholar, but I take "slaves to reason" to refer to all those, not just Scholars, who are stuck at the third stage of development, the mental stage, the Artisan stage, and not able to advance to the fourth stage, the intuitive/instinctive stage, or higher, where contact with Essence is had:

The Work brings about Frictions and growths like new grass in the forest after a rain. Your growth will be accelerated because you will be working from Essence. That is what matters, not just doing Work or not doing Work. [20 November 1973]

Refer to chapters "Work, The" and "Friction" and "Essence and Personality". Although Work is not required, acceleration happens via contact with Essence, and contact with Essence is augmented by doing the spiritual practices recommended by the Michaels.

Warriors do not as a rule accelerate rapidly. This pertains to you, too, Cheryl. Because you are a Priest, you will accelerate much faster than those around you. This is why you [a Young Soul] feel the resentment now [for older Souls looking down on you]. [22 November 1973]

Whereas Priests have a spiritual consciousness by nature, Warriors do not, and this Role factor is another one of those factors that affects spiritual growth rate. This may be true in some way, but what is said above needs to be reconciled with what is said below:

The Server has all means open for reaching the goal and is the only Role that is so by nature. All other Fragments require special circumstances to achieve the goal, those special circumstances increasing with Role Cardinality. For many Kings, the circumstances for progress toward the goal may be very limited. [Yarbro, Michael's People, p. 269]

According to Yarbro, the Priest, because of its high Cardinality, would be slow to transit, and the Warrior, because of its low Cardinality, would be rapid to transit, contrary to the original Michaelian group passage. My proposed reconciliation is that the original Michaelian group passage refers to spiritual acceleration, and the Yarbro passage refers to physical acceleration. In other words, we are talking about two types of acceleration here, namely, speed in coming to understand how physicality works (which favors Ordinal Roles) versus speed in coming to understand how spirituality works (which favors Cardinal Roles).

Role is one factor that generally accounts for the speed of one's journey through the reincarnation cycle. Other than Role, Soul Age also figures into the velocity of transit:

Billie: Was that my last [most recent past] life?

No, the pirate was in between. There was no acceleration. Étienne Delacroix lived only thirty-four years. [29 November 1973]

It does not say so here explicitly, but it does say so elsewhere, that in order to advance a Level within a Soul Age, it is necessary to complete all seven Internal Monads in the Positive Poles. A premature death, such as at age 34, retards the process. Therefore, the more full lifetimes, in which one dies in advanced old age, the faster the journey through the reincarnation cycle.

In a spiritual teaching, the teacher/student ratio affects spiritual growth:

This time is good for more small group meetings. With four souls present, it will become easier to counsel each of you individually. It has come to the point that your entities will require personalized information. Also, in smaller groups, there can be greater control of subject jumping. A whole evening can be spent on one subject without covering everything. We are seeing much growth in the entities in our group, and also see the need for smaller meetings like tonight, for further advancement at an accelerated rate. [14 December 1973]

The smaller the quantity of attendees in a group meeting the faster they can move; the larger the quantity, the slower they move.

Is the entity of Tomas a young soul?

This Fragment, in the last physical interval, accelerated because of psychic growth. If he chooses to remain on the Astral Plane for several more of your centuries, growth may be such that he will be reincarnated as a First Level Old Soul. He has an advantage over you: he is not encumbered by the physical vehicle and has access to much information, but is also challenged by Maya. [20 December 1973]

Elsewhere it was said that spiritual growth is slower on the Astral Plane than it is on the Physical Plane, because the developmental catalyst is so much more intense on the Physical Plane, in spite of some impediments here that are not found there. And that is why souls incarnate, because evolution is faster here, even when it is possible to accelerate on the Astral Plane. Refer to the chapter "Maya" for more discussion of that factor that retards spiritual growth. Basically and briefly, Maya can be thought of as misinformation and disinformation about the nature of reality.

Gene: Things are happening so rapidly. Many changes are occurring. I made a New Year's resolution and kept it one day: that was to get up at 2:00 AM and meditate. Are there any suggestions for improving the meditation?

Interrupting needed sleep to meditate is not evolutionary; it would not work. Early morning would be more effective. You are moving rapidly, Gene. This will even accelerate more in the coming two weeks. Be prepared for some radical changes within. You are now able to handle some fairly wide leaps.... [03 January 1974]

Acceleration is not just something that happens gradually over long periods of time. Quite often, the acceleration happens during a brief and intense transition from one relatively stable plateau to the next. Accelerated revolutions are perhaps more the norm than accelerated evolutions.

Gene: I'd like to ask about a recurring dream. I'm in school all the time and I can't find my books. Finally, I take a test and I'm not prepared; I haven't studied well. Next dream, I am better prepared and I am going to pass the test. One thing, I'm learning to fly. In the sequence of dreams, I float up and fall. Last night, at will, in the dream, I levitated. I was also prepared for the test.

You are now ready for the next step. We see much acceleration occurring. We sense in you a new willingness that has not been there before to let go of the rational and explore new areas. [20 January 1974]

As hinted above, reality systems are structured step-wise, with levels and stages. Acceleration can happen on the 'runs' of the stairs, but acceleration is most apparent on the 'rise' of the stairs. Acceleration really gets going above and beyond the rational step, which is only the third step on the staircase.

Alice: I would like a comment on a conflict I see in Dick and myself, that whenever I come up with new directions for myself (Ellis's group, teen-parent thing at EST, electronic music course at the college), he always tries to talk me out of them by saying he doesn't see how they would do any good.

This often happens in long-term relationships. When the soul in Submission [such as yourself] decides to alter this Goal, it is quite a shock to those around it, and you must be prepared for resistance, sometimes disguised and covert, but sometimes the pot actually boils over. Dick, you should be able to see this in yourself and resist the temptation to pull (her) back. This is an interesting reaction and invariably happens even in situations where one soul has been urging the other to grow. When the growth movement occurs, the resistance is virtually automatic. This creates some fascinating paradoxes, in that sometimes the rate of growth in the one altering seems to accelerate rapidly, leaving the other temporarily behind. Many broken relationships stem from this period of relative acceleration. Many are not willing to ride out the storm and see where the evening-out begins. [27 January 1974] Spiritual growth is not a race to a finish line, but when married people run the journey at different rates, obviously there are going to be challenges for the two to adjust to each other. I am reminded of the cartoon where a caterpillar and a butterfly are seated on a marriage-counselor's couch, and the caterpillar says to the therapist, "I don't know who she is anymore." I am also reminded of the Biblical injunction to not plow with an ox and a donkey yoked together. This is a metaphor for marriage: sometimes a divorce is necessary if one is to be allowed to grow on their spiritual path and the partner resists that. This idea can be generalized to the notion that one must be free of physical encumbrances and restrictions in order to grow spiritually.

Barbara: I'd like to ask about a shaky reaction I received when I saw a guru's picture over 20 years ago. I felt he was my guru. His name is Ramana Maharshi.

We find no real fault with this man's expression. This was a Fifth Level Old Scholar in Growth, a Spiritualist, who accelerated through application of the principles we have laid out here. This man is worth reading, but since he no longer lives, cannot answer any queries you might have, which is one of the problems with all inspired literature. [06 February 1974]

Sometimes spiritual acceleration is accidental or spontaneous, sometimes it is a natural phase in the course of evolution, and sometimes it requires Work. One form of Work is to aspire to be like an exemplar personage that one reads about or that one knows personally. Not only is it okay to follow an enlightened teacher, it fosters acceleration to have a guru such as Ramana and ask oneself, "What would Ramana do?", and emulate that.

Dick: Why start [Monads] while you're here?

Many souls choose this [Monads] as a method of accelerating. [27 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Monads" for a thorough discussion of that accelerant of spiritual growth. There you will read that Monads are challenging experiences that come in two phases, an Ordinal phase and a Cardinal phase. In psychotherapeutic terms, the advice usually given is to "face your fears; don't run from them". The point is to not ignore or deny a negative experience; 'milk' it for all it is worth, and it will rebound to a positive experience. This Monadic process is actually the driver, the key element, of spiritual growth.

Did she [Mary mother of Jesus] accelerate during her lifetime?

No. [03 April 1974]

One might think that intimate contact with an exalted person would provoke spiritual acceleration, but in the 17 April 1974 session it was said that, in this case, Jesus's mother experienced "sufficient emotional trauma" regarding what happened to her son that it caused "psychic disintegration". My surmise is that some traumas can result in acceleration, and some traumas can result in the opposite.

In none of the transcriptions is acceleration exactly defined, but as we see in the next few passages, it could mean advancing a Level within a lifetime rather than between lifetimes, or it could mean skipping a Level within a Soul Age, or it could mean skipping an entire Soul Age:

Cheryl: Does that mean a jump from a Young Cycle to an Old Cycle?

We did not say that. There will be a major acceleration though. We are not saying that you could not transcend, Cheryl. We are, however, saying that we doubt that you will. The lady knows how. An entire Cycle would be a monstrous task. We are not saying that it cannot be done, but it is not attempted often and is usually unsuccessful. [15 May 1974]

Cheryl was a late Level Young Soul Priest, and was therefore extraordinarily ambitious to succeed in her endeavors, but there are limits to acceleration of one's spiritual journey.

For an example of a successful acceleration of a reasonable amount, see next.

Re: Pope Giovanni Roncalli (?) [Pope John XXIII]. SRG? Slave, compassionate? He was to have been only an interim pope (he was ill when he took over) and the services are now in English for those speaking English. He accomplished much.

The man, John, was the archetypal Sixth Level Old Soul transcendent. His acceleration was more marked in the last year of his life. Yes, a Slave and yes, in Passion and Emotional Center; mostly Jovial, some Martian; a Spiritualist in Growth. He jumped from Sixth Level Old to Transcendental level. [18 May 1974]

Pope John's Cardinal Inspiration Overleaves (Passion, Growth, Spiritualist, Sixth Level) were well suited for promoting his acceleration, and presumably they would do the same for others. The fact that John was an Old Soul "Transcendent" (unencumbered by Karmic Ribbons) was also a major boost. So, add certain Overleaves to the mix of factors that promote spiritual growth.

Dick: Question regarding the speeding up of spiritual growth.

There is some validity in the statement that the Personality and Essence must eventually "battle it out", at least if progress is to be made on the Physical Plane, and this does not happen when entities [marijuana] that knock Personality out of the box are used, but those [psychedelic] crutches do a valuable service in that they allow you to glimpse the goal and make an intelligent decision about its worthiness as a full-time pursuit. [12 June 1974]

The potential role of psychedelics to accelerate one's spiritual growth are covered in the chapter "Psychedelics".

In a previous session, quoted above, it was said that Pope John was able to skip a Level, so Gene asked about another notable person:

Gene: Was Milarepa an Old Soul? Did he shortcut many lifetimes?

The "Way of the Fakir" is not a recommended path for your culture. It is only rarely successful and requires more of its proponent than is necessary. This is successful in accelerating. [25 June 1974]

Milarepa was a Tibetan Buddhist yogi who lived in the 11th Century. Refer to the chapter "Yoga" for more discussion of that spiritual path. The point to be made here is that, besides reasonable expectations about how much acceleration is possible, there are reasonable and appropriate methods for any particular person in any particular culture.

Besides spiritual practices as indicated previously, another method of promoting acceleration is mentioned in the next occurrence of the word, three months after the previous occurrence:

Living in life requires what you are calling self-image and ego strength. Spiritual acceleration does not require this; it requires negation of the cultural facade. [14 September 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Ego" and "Culture" for more discussion about those potential encumbrances to spiritual growth. The point to be made here is that the conditions for success in spiritual acceleration often run counter to the conditions for success in advancing one's physical life. This factor is discussed at some length in the chapter "Asceticism and Austerity".

Allyn expressed difficulty "finding himself" in all areas of his SRG [Overleaf array]. Asked [for a] review. Discussion put this problem with Center, Mode, and Soul Level.

This man is in Growth [Goal] and has undergone already tremendous exploration and acceleration in this life. This is the primary reason he is uncomfortable with the Level [Fourth Level Mature]. It feels transitional to him, and at the end of this life, it very well may be. There may have been an error in transmission concerning the Centering. If so, then this man is in the Emotional Part of Intellectual Center. We find no fault with the total picture otherwise. [24 September 1974]

Here again, with Allyn as with others, we see that a person who has the Goal of Growth is prone to desire acceleration and to achieve it.

The questioner in the following exchange was said to have died in Auschwitz in his previous life:

Bill: What about Richard's intuition that he [Bill] accelerated in the past life?

(He went) from Sixth Level Mature [to First Level Old]. Ironically, these death camps provided an environment for rapid spiritual acceleration, especially for those who were able to stand aside and see their torturers as False

Personalities rather than as monsters. Many accelerated during their last days of life, when they were able to come to grips with the impermanence of physical reality in the face of a blameless existence. In other words, the realization that no crime had been perpetrated and yet they were to die in answer to a mad man's [Adolph Hitler] dream. [15 October 1974]

As stated previously, trauma can result either in acceleration or retardation, depending on the type and severity of the trauma. In this case, the type of acceleration was that a Level was able to be skipped. This case provides another argument for the acceptance and transcendence of any intense and concentrated seemingly negative experience, thereby "finding the sliver lining in the cloud" and "turning lemons into lemonade".

David asked if he had accelerated along wrong lines, outside of his boundaries, too quickly and without enough knowledge. If so, what does he have to do to Balance himself?

You are well aware of the fact that you have a marked tendency to overreach your available energies. This is no exception. The only way out of the morass is to again give yourself space. This is something you did not allow for in your present prospectus. This is the well-known danger of which Dick spoke earlier. [07 December 1974]

David was another person who had some Cardinal Inspiration Overleaves, which are the class of Overleaves that typically promote acceleration. In his case these were Sixth Level, Spiritualist, and Growth. However, the tendency of Cardinal Inspiration Overleaves is to cause "overreach" "outside of boundaries" "too quickly". Unbalanced attempts to accelerate are counterproductive. The collection of passages in this chapter about acceleration provides clues about the means and methods that foster healthy acceleration.

On erasing Tapes ... to achieve Agape eventually ...

One thing we might suggest that perhaps could be a start at least, would be to determine those core beliefs in you regarding your ability to achieve a state of Agape or consciousness. When the belief is brought to the surface, often the Tapes that accompany it are clearly heard for the first time. For many reasons, this process is more effective if performed in a group setting, as quite often it leads to what you might term psychic surgery. You have only an inkling of the strength of these master Tapes and the hold they have over you. Only when they are found, played out, and discarded does serious accelerating begin. Once the process begins, however, it does have a tendency to snowball, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to slide back into old patterns once the Tape has been erased. Sometimes, the behavior patterns continue for awhile, but even they eventually cease, as there is nothing supporting them. By the way, you are quite correct in assuming that you have both negative and positive programs on all of these and that you do play them one against the other, constantly. [19 January 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Bio-computer — its Programs and Tapes" for a thorough discussion of that particular impediment to spiritual growth. The chapter "Imprinting" covers some of the same territory. Basically and briefly, everyone is imprinted with the belief, value, and behavior systems of their parents and their society. Quite often, this is influence from younger souls and therefore an impediment to the spiritual paths of older souls.

A discussion was held about helping.

To help someone else, you must, of course, know the truth about yourself, and you must know that which is false in them. This is why Mechanical Man fails so in his efforts to help. He does not know truth in himself, let alone in others. Balanced Man can certainly accelerate the growth around him, and those on their way to Balance can impart that which is truth in them to others. Yes, Adepts are followed up the [seven] rungs of the cosmic ladder through no efforting on their part, because telling the truth is not an effort; telling lies is. [30 January 1975]

Not only does the term "acceleration" apply to skipping Levels as documented above, it also applies to climbing the ladder of the so-called Levels of Being, from Mechanical Man trapped in the lower Centers, to Balanced Man in the Neutral Assimilation Center, to Adepts and Masters in the higher Centers; refer to the chapter "Levels of Being". Also refer to chapters "Truth", "Mechanical Man", "Balanced Man", and "Adepts and Masters" for discussion of subjects that appear in that passage.

Not only does the term "acceleration" apply to individuals on a spiritual path, it also applies to socio-cultural revolution and evolution:

James Bolen received a plan from Edgar Phillips about going to Japan and contacting people to establish a magazine. Edgar told him the magazine would be successful internationally. Does Michael feel this is true?

Of course, the expansion of this type of publication is inevitable. We, perhaps, would have suggested expansion into the Soviet Union, but it does not really matter, as the receptivity would be virtually the same. The predominant reasoning behind that suggestion, of course, would be the ultimate exchange of information and the eventual acceleration of the psychic revolution. There is almost a direct current now existing between these two vortices of psychic change, which is both exciting and gratifying, and there it is that the acceleration will come about. The Orient, however, has always been receptive to this and this will prove to be no exception to this.

James Bolen had communicated with a man in Russia, who is now in jail because of their correspondence, so it was difficult to plan to go to Russia. Japan would be easier.

The difference, of course, is that we suggest sometimes the most challenging area of operation, because we see that as the ultimately most satisfactory, in terms of the long goal of spiritual and psychic rebirth. The expansion of this exchange into the Orient is not a Bad Work for now. In fact, it may prove to be the most financially sound move that could be made at this time. Finances aside, the expansion into another vortex of psychic energy would prove in the long run the most accelerating. The psychic revolution is accelerating now of its own accord, as you are well aware, but it is students such as you who have the vehicle for exchange, who can reach the outposts. We do not recommend this, however, if there is any danger to financial integrity. This is far too valuable a vehicle and tool to tamper with.

Although not all of the information thus far received has any basis in fact, much of it is valid and constitutes an enormous stride in approaching the vast problem of expressing the Logos in the language of this time frame. Never before has so much emphasis been on intellectualism and realism, and, therefore, never before has the task been so strenuous. Not since the destruction of Atlantis has so much information of a scientific nature been available to Mechanical Man on this planet, and he is so busy entering this into the computer and storing it all in the books, that he has little time to pursue the awesome and mystical. He has barely enough time to assimilate that which is absolutely necessary to shape out his survival. Yet, he has because of this also become blasé and is not easily awed by information from any source. It is not easy in this time frame to shock awareness into Mechanical Man. This shotgun approach works best, we have found, and this is why a publication such as yours can be such a valuable tool, a vehicle for expression of the revolution. It bombards the senses. This will, of course, be the ultimate battle plan. [31 January 1975]

Socio-cultural change has been accelerated by print media ever since the invention of the printing press, and the process was accelerated even more with the invention of electromagnetic media (radio and television), and the process was accelerated even more with the invention of the internet. It is no wonder then that spiritual evolution in whole groups of individuals should also be accelerated along with socio-cultural evolution.

Concluding Comments on Acceleration

Members of the original Michaelian group were especially interested in spiritual growth, apparently far more so than subsequent students, so naturally the subject of acceleration of spiritual growth came up for discussion. So far as I know, subsequent students generally have not shown much interest in spiritual growth. (Those who have psychological issues have shown some interest in A psychological components of the Michaelian teachings.)

Spiritual evolution occurs at the pace that the Fragment and/or Essence plans, but the whole point of the spiritual path is that the Personality self-consciously and intentionally participate in the process. Therefore, so far as the Personality is concerned, the process is on 'auto-pilot', and most Fragments go through the entire reincarnation cycle in the 'waking sleep', but some Fragments chose for this to happen accompanied by awareness, and apparently this is what is meant by acceleration. It is appropriate that this chapter be the first chapter in this Study Papers book because the assumption is that readers are interesting in conscious participation in the plans made by Fragment and Essence, thereby accelerating and otherwise facilitating the transit through the reincarnation cycle.

Sometimes spiritual acceleration is accidental or spontaneous, sometimes it is a natural phase in the course of evolution, and sometimes it requires spiritual practices, aka "Work". Numerous factors that determine the speed of spiritual growth through the reincarnation cycle are mentioned in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

- Burning masses of Karmic Ribbons aids acceleration of spiritual growth.
- Doing spiritual practices, aka doing the "Work", also promotes acceleration.
- Some Roles and some Soul Ages advance more quickly than others.

- The Cardinal Inspiration Overleaves, namely Growth, Passion, Spiritualist, and Higher Emotional Center, tend to impel the person to accelerated spiritual growth
- Psychedelics can be therapeutic, and also be a temporary accelerant to spiritual growth.
- Living a full lifetime, into advanced old age, gives greater scope for growth processes.
- Smaller, more intimate group meetings can result in its members advancing faster.
- Mitigation of Maya, aka misinformation and disinformation in one's belief system is a needed factor in spiritual growth.
- Traumatic events sometimes lead to acceleration in soul growth.
- Shedding ego and acculturation promote spiritual growth.
- Erasing programs and tapes from the bio-computer is a spiritual growth process.

ACHIEVEMENT

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “achievement” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions, and other words with a similar meaning. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

The word “achievement” is not capitalized in this chapter and other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that achievement issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology, the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Achievement

So what is meant by achievement? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Achievement per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Achievement

ADEPT AND MASTER

[[This chapter is arranged in the chronological order of the sessions. Consider if it could be arranged in a logical order of progressive revelation.]]

[[Check to see if Adept and Master were a component of the Gurdjieffian teachings. If so, do a section.]]

Even though the words Adept and Master do not have a special jargon meaning in the Michaelian teachings, I capitalize them anyway to let the reader know that they are a component of the Michael's cosmological system, and to let the reader know that they have a chapter in this book when they see the words in other chapters.

The original Michaelian group was convened for the purpose of making contact with a supernatural being who could give them knowledge, understanding, and accelerate their spiritual path. For several months, they had contact with "Tomas" and "Soleal" via an Ouija board, and then the Michaels appeared. In the very first session with the Michaels, the subject of Adepts and Masters came up. As we will see in this chapter, these are the two highest levels of "spiritual enlightenment". [[What is the relation, if any, to Soul Age and/or Transcendental or Infinite Souls?]]

The question was asked concerning the decision to go on in the search for spiritual enlightenment, to go on to becoming an Adept. What do you do when you get so far and are not too sure you want to continue? We wondered if the Masters picked those in whom the desire for "psychic experiences" was quite strong to become Adepts.

Complexity is the antithesis of what the spirit seeks. The body represents the epitome of complexity. That is why the spirit is again and again attracted to it, until the partially awakened Essence catches a glimpse beyond the "veil." [12 August 1973]

This seems to me to be a very obscure answer to the question. What I gather is that Essence must pass through the experience of the complexity of incarnation on its way to the simplicity of being an Adept or Master, which is beyond the veil of complexity.

Near the end of this first session with the Michaels, we find that the original Michaelian group members were impressed with their new teacher, and we find this in the transcriptions:

We tried to thank him [Michael] and he replied:

Thanks are not necessary. This gift is given freely in the spirit of love. I will give as much as you will receive. This is true of all of us. We are also Soleal's teacher. ("Soleal" is the name given to us by an entity who says that he is an Astral [Plane] projection from another planet approximately twenty light years away. Michael describes Soleal as an "Adept".) [12 August 1973]

The parenthetic statement was inserted by the editor of the transcriptions. Tomas was on the Astral Plane between incarnations. Soleal was incarnate on the Physical Plane but, due to his Adept status, was apparently able to transmit his thoughts via the Astral Plane to a channel (Sarah Chambers) living on a different planet of the Physical Plane.

Is there any way to figure out your Karmic Ribbons?

Yes, there is a way. You must first be able to recall the threads. This is what takes the practice. This is why concentration and mediation have been stressed. You have indicated that you wish this, and we are showing you how. We will dictate what amounts to a book to you within the next year. What you do with this information depends on your desires entirely, but the information will be given within this group. There will be an Adept who will aid the others. There is one among you who will master the techniques. [17 August 1973]

Based on contacts and interviews that I have had with original Michaelian group members, I doubt that anyone in the original Michaelian group actually achieved Adept status. Even so, it does not hurt to try, using the practices that the Michaels recommended: concentration and meditation. These methods have a chapter in this SPOMG book. One of original Michaelian group members (Barbara Spurlock, aka Sara Alexander) compiled the sessions into something like a book, divided into subject categories — refer to Volume 2 of Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Sarah Chambers. This SPOMG book is a continuation of her work.

The appearance of the word "master" in the answer above needed clarification:

Richard wanted to know what his obstacles were.

Richard's main obstacle is misdirected tenacity. He is attempting to rectify that. I said an "Adept," not a "Master." [17 August 1973]

This is a clue that Adept and Master are not the same thing.

Dick had a question about a dream he had.

The experience was not real. It had to do with symbols you are unwilling to deal with in reality. Part of your “dreaming” is real: it is time spent out of the body. Adepts such as Soleal can spend the entire [sleep] time out of body. [17 August 1973]

So there we are told about one ability that an Adept has. There are other abilities; see next Q&A exchange.

Because of their knowledge of various spiritual teachings, the original Michaelian group members had their understanding of what an Adept was, but then someone asked for a definition of Adept from the Michaels:

What is an Adept?

An Adept is one who has cleared the mind of all trivia. This is an integrated being who is firmly committed to the path, who is unafraid to leave the Physical Plane for hours at a time, is thoroughly versed in the occult teaching, is aware of karmic ties, and has recall beyond the grave, can materialize both self and objects from borrowed energy sources, is both clairaudient and clairvoyant. This means nonattachment to both [Physical and Astral] planes and its inhabitants. [21 August 1973]

This answer would seem to indicate that an Adept has access to the third plane, where the Michael’s live.

Unless it was a typographical error, I thought I heard you say that I would become an occult Master, and I want to know if it was meant to be in this lifetime.

Not in this lifetime, Dick. It is within you to become an Adept [in this lifetime]. [26 August 1973]

That answer indicates that a Master is a level above the Adept. Having met him on several occasions, I can say with some confidence that he did not live up to his potential in this lifetime.

Dick had a daughter who was also on a spiritual path in a different group:

Is it within Kathryn’s grasp to become an Adept within this lifetime?

Yes. All Old Souls have this within their grasp. Whether or not it is achieved depends upon the soul’s ability to burn Karma as rapidly, and then pursue the [spiritual] path. One of you has made this decision already and will become the teacher for the others. The skills are there. They need to be practiced. [26 August 1973]

In the original Michaelian group, Dick was said to be an Old Soul, but two decades later he was demoted to a Mature Soul. I am unaware of any indication that any original Michaelian group member achieved Adept status. Furthermore, having corresponded with and having met Kathryn in person — she was a member of Robert Burton’s Fourth Way commune for decades — I would say the same about her. If any Michaelian teachings student subsequent to the original Michaelian group has achieved Adept status, I do not know about it.

Richard: I will finish the book on Gandhi tomorrow. Then what should I do?

First, make sure that absorption has taken place. Then continue with the meditation. Any of the Adepts and Masters we have discussed this evening would be valuable. [18 September 1973]

Dick: I did read Sir James Jean’s book on time, and I’ve never thought about it since, but he projected this idea of movement through space. That’s why time exists ahead and behind, and you could look ahead or behind if you knew how.

There is a vortex on each celestial body through which the time planes transect. This can be used for interstellar space travel. However, it requires an Adept who can teleport to program the computer. [02 October 1973]

Gene: He says that it requires an Adept who can teleport to program the computer. What computer?

The computer in the space ship. These ships literally go back in time and forward in space. [02 October 1973]

Dick: Guess I’m saying there has to be large internal changes in order to make a change in jobs, before I can trust cosmic influences. Soleal said you have to use your own resources. Michael is saying, “Don’t toil so much.” That’s what I’m complaining about. They say not to work so hard.

We hold up Soleal as an example of how this can be done by someone living very much in the world. He is not an ascetic by any stretch of the imagination. He simply has learned to dissociate himself from the mundane and concentrate on the arcane. The decision to pursue spiritual liberation is an agonizing one for everyone who makes it, without exception. No Adept has found it easy. If we have led you to think that being an Old Soul means being on the gravy train, that is your misinterpretation. It is probably the most difficult [Cycle] of all. The only thing that makes it better is your own readiness to stand apart from the mainstream and begin to verify. This, of course, makes you even odder than ever. [06 October 1973]

Dick: It seems that the unification of Fragments goes on inter [between physical] life[times]. You can’t do it here, can you?

You can, but it is difficult. It requires psychic union and that by definition requires that you be an Adept. That is always [sexually] polar. It is usually done between lives. [06 October 1973]

Sarah: Can you tell us about the Astral Plane and its levels?

The first level of the Astral Plane is populated by living Fragments adept at Astral travel and those souls who penetrate this plane accidentally through drugs. The second level of the Astral Plane is inhabited by all those between [physical] bodies. The third level attracts Old Souls who are trying to burn final karma without being reborn. The mid Astral bodies are partially reunited Entities. You have manifested a mid Astral entity previously [Tomas]. The three higher levels are progressively integrated. Access to the high planes is through these levels. Even very high Adepts such as Soleal have fantasies concerning the high planes. We have confronted him on the low Astral Plane, and have been required to descend a staircase which does not exist except in his mind. [08 October 1973]

I am confused about which souls inhabit what planes after the physical level. I would like more information about this

There are, of course, seven planes in all, each with seven levels. Beyond the Astral Plane is the Causal Plane with seven levels: three low, one mid Causal Plane level, upon which we reside, and three higher levels upon which reside the high causal bodies — the Transcendental Souls contiguous with this plane; and the Mental Plane is the Akashic plane, which is a photographic record of all history. Some very high Adepts have access to this plane. On the Mental Plane resides the Infinite Soul and the low and mid-mental bodies. Beyond this is the Buddhic Plane, and upon this level are all of those souls who have achieved physical communion with the Tao. Beyond this of course, [is] the Tao. [29 November 1973]

Dick: My perception is that sex and sexual relationships are the major impediment on this plane to staying on the path. If we are going to have a medical clinic and grow, it is essential to deal with this problem.

Your perception, of course, is completely valid. This is the reason why most Adepts eventually refrain from entering into such relationships. Some, but only relatively few, have been able to continue to engage in a physical sexual relationship while evolving spiritually. The reason for this should be fairly obvious when you stop and realize that sexuality of the physical sort pertains to the Physical plane. This does not exist on the other planes. It is supplanted by more open communication. Persons who are hostile and aggressive enough to inflict pain or death upon other persons are always found to be sexually uptight in some way. Sexually satiated persons are normally passive, but this is only true when the mind accepts the sexual act in the same frame as the body does. As long as there is conflict in the mind, there is not complete satisfaction, and aggression results. [29 November 1973]

Betty: In my reading, a Master (Rama Krishna) touched his pupils on the forehead and told them they would be more aware.

Ritual is sometimes extremely valuable. It only works for those who believe in its power. Actual transference of energy between adepts only occurs when both are telepaths.

Betty: Will there be anyone in our group with that power?

There are Adepts who can do this. Soleal is one. There are Adepts on your planet who can do this with practice. [29 November 1973]

Like two AM?

No. We were thinking of eight or nine in the morning. He is an Adept. He is a student of mine. That, interestingly enough, is a densely populated, Emotionally Centered, masculine world. They are volatile, explosive, and kind all at the same time. [16 December 1973]

Gene: How about a five-book set of work by Thomas Spalding, The Life and Teachings of the Masters of the Far East? [These books tell of Masters who lived for hundreds of years.]

We are not aware of any Adepts who have chosen to remain on the Physical Plane beyond the allotted span. However, many Adepts do still have karmic Ribbons which bring them back for another go. [20 December 1973]

Is the entity of Tomas a Young Soul?

This Fragment, in the last physical interval [incarnation], accelerated because of psychic growth. If he chooses to remain on the Astral Plane for several more of your centuries, growth may be such that he will be reincarnated as a First Level Old Soul. He has an advantage over you. He is not encumbered by the physical vehicle, and the man of whom you speak [Thomas Spalding] is or has been in contact with several of these. Their recall is spectacular, and they do not spend as long on the Astral interval as do other souls, this accounts for the Tibetan theory of the forty days between lives. Some Adepts do this. Bodies die. The organic constituents break down eventually, regardless of the skill of the Adept. It is wiser to change the body. Yes, read this book [by Thomas Spalding]. They are interesting. [20 December 1973]

Gene: I would like to verify a story told to me by HB, about a space ship, and information from these people, with something like 45 billion souls on the ship, who will act as missionaries.

Wow, this figure is astounding. This would virtually devastate most worlds we know of population wise, especially if they were all Adepts. It is true, you will be visited probably within the coming year and this visit will have a profound effect. We have advised you of the possibility of this contact. The missionary aspect is hazy. The exchange will be good for both. [20 December 1973]

We discussed how Jesus taught that the children of light were to have no sex, and that if you want to grow in this way there would be no sex. Someone suggested this might refer to a level above our physical one, and that the soul is sexless. Someone said the Bible said there are no marriages in heaven. EM then asked if Jesus really did work miracles, or if that was imagination.

This man was an occult Master. The miracles are there for those who wish to become Masters. Mass hypnosis was not beyond the grasp of ordinary priests, let alone one who has mastered all of the mysteries. Even most Adepts can perform feats which could be considered miracles by those who were looking on. Many of the stories surrounding the birth of the man Jesus were concocted long after his death to satisfy those who felt that the ancient prophecies should be fulfilled. [25 December 1973]

Ellis: Is my soul's movement random or purposeful? From the moment the soul Fragments into pieces then the evolutionary process evolves into ultimate unity and the process is repeated. I see it as by chance and not happening by purpose.

Do you really believe that "chance" brought this group together in Walnut Creek, California? We cannot believe that at all. The searching is solely through Essence, and the False Personality fights this as long as it exists, which may or may not survive to the bitter end. All of you were involved in a specific situation, which has now brought you together in a parallel time frame, which allows you to complete the Monad. For those of you who initially came together in Rome and Syria, Palestine, there is the teaching of Christ, who you all knew of then, for you to hear this time with unplugged ears. One among you heard it loud and clear then, and will become an Adept in this physical interval. SC wrote a book during that lifetime, and now she is writing it again. Some changes are being made. Others are playing out almost identical life roles as you did then. This will become more apparent as we progress. [27 December 1973]

Edgar: We are not likely to become Adepts when we are working for Kaiser [Permanente]. The satisfaction for the yearning for knowledge is interfered with by having to work.

The thirst for pure data accumulation is almost insatiable in the older Scholar. Yes, your lifestyle is interfering with the Goal of Growth. This teaching is not well understood in solitary. (EM has done much studying alone.) [31 December 73]

Edgar: How can one figure the exact soul level and information about previous lives?

Only by becoming an Adept and having access to the Akashic Plane. [31 December 1973]

The high Mental body spends time with all adepts. Some see the Infinite Soul in several transcendental forms. This is usually because the perceptions of physically tied adepts is not keen enough to perceive that much of the synthesis.... There are many troubled souls on the low Astral plane, and contact with them is often disturbing, even to the adepts who travel there. [03 January 1974]

Does what we're doing parallel the Eleusinian way of doing things?

This can happen only with a high Priest who can do the ritual work. This should be an Adept really, but some successful Priests were simply Old Priests in Dominance. Rituals solidify groups in many instances. [10 January 1974]

I would like Michael to comment on his last statement about "cosmic consciousness".

We see in one student the desire and ability to become an occult Adept in this lifetime.

Can the involvement of the occult pull one away from the spiritual?

If you make the mistake of equating the arcane arts with "magic", yes, we agree. [27 January 1974]

We have a method by which all of you can choose to achieve a modicum of growth on a spiritual plane. Many of you can even use it as a springboard toward becoming an adept. This is entirely up to you.

I would like to know if unblocking the emotions as is seen in the Esalen film is a healthy thing. It looks good.

We do not see the necessity for this action within the group, but perhaps an outlet needs to be provided elsewhere. In this we will not mediate, as this is within the realm of life crises, and does not pertain to spiritual growth. This is not to say that these matters do not have to be dealt with — they most certainly do. Long before you can even talk about growth — spiritual growth for the dedicated student and for the Adept — requires detachment from the mundane and trivial matters which are such immoderate energy drains. How can you possibly grow if you are immersed in all this Maya? [24 February 1974]

Dick: How does the "Adept" and "occult Master" correlate to the #4, #5, and #6 Man of Gurdjieff?

They are not precisely the same, although the Adept is usually crystallized [Man] Number Four. The occult Master has use of higher Centers at will. It merely means that this soul is in Balance with no danger of backsliding. [03 March 1974]

Contrary to the above, an Overleaf chart created during the original Michaelian group indicated that an Adept equates with Gurdjieff's Man Number Five, and that a Master equates with Gurdjieff's Man Number Seven. I would rather Adept = Man Number Six. The reason I say this is that the Positive Pole of the King Role, the seventh Role, is +Mastery. It also would make sense if an Adept equated with Man Number Six because of the correspondence with the spirituality of the Priest Role.

Teleportation is a skill mastered by many Adepts. This is not beyond many on your world. The man Uri [Geller] is able to do this without understanding what it is that he is doing, which accounts for his somewhat erratic performances. He also has enormous reserves of energy available and is relatively unfettered by the usual Maya; in fact, [he] is rather simplistic. [08 May 1974]

Gene: Does my task involving teaching and aloneness — separation?

Also, an important part of this task involves the discrimination in knowing who can hear the words without wasting the energy on those who cannot. Yes, the separation is almost accomplished, and yes, it is a solitary task and cannot be interfered with. If there is interference there is nothing accomplished. The true occult Adept is usually lonely. [12 June 1974]

Gene: Is Susan an adept now?

This lady could certainly become an Adept, but lacks command of her emotions. This imbalance prevents her. [16 June 1974]

It is not unusual for Astral beings and Adepts from other worlds to use whatever method it has at hand to effect communications. [16 June 1974]

What is ectoplasm?

This is the shell left behind [at the death of the body]. Also, many fragments now who are in teachings, such as the yogis, and to a certain extent teachings such as this one, have a shorter period of adjustment [to the Astral plane] as they are prepared for what really is. "Ectoplasm" is also used to refer to the Astral material used by adepts to materialize Astral beings and phenomena. [03 July 1974] _____ talked of a headache he sometimes gets — this came tonight immediately after receiving the information he asked for. What is it? Why?

As for the band of tension, there is an underlying disappointment that needs not be. You are a good student and as capable as those others. As the goal of agape or spiritual liberation entails ultimately becoming an adept, the concept of telepathy should not be taken lightly. It is within the grasp of you, and would require an enormous amount of predictability. When you meet with an adept who is strongly telepathic, and also totally vulnerable, you will understand this more fully, but it is not an unrealistic goal for the man _____. [24 September 1974]

Can souls experience other entities or planes even if they are young or troubled or full of anger?

The difference, of course, lies in the level of the contact and the amount of volition involved. It is true that all of you spend a portion of your day on a plane other than the physical, and we have suggested to you an exercise whereby you can open your eyes and perceive this as it is. Certainly, beings other than adepts can arrive on these planes, usually under the direction of others. However, their control of the experience is limited, and their perceptions are largely based upon physical standards, and, of course, largely inaccurate; but, yes, they can glimpse this. The adept controls the visits and moves about at will. Often group work leads to an experience of the high planes, and many times this is due to the strength of the leader. If you were in the presence of an adept, the travel would be easier, yes. It is a part of the balanced man and is not available to these occasional voyagers. [29 September 1974]

You have heard it said by one [Jesus] who is an adept that, "I am all that there is, and you are with me." This is agape. [22 October 1974] _____ asked if the procrastination was on our part or on Soleal's.

You students are aware of your own day-to-day fluctuations. This student also has many doubts about his own capabilities in fulfilling this task and fluctuates about his readiness. You see, the essence travels Astrally relatively free of the personality in an adept, but the vestiges of the personality come roaring back when this student is back in his body. Although he is at a firmly fixed balance, there is still part of him that wants to maintain a certain comfortable status quo. By the way, this student is uncomfortable with the knowledge that we were going to share this with you. [10 November 1974]

Don Juan [of the Carlos Castaneda books] was referred to in the past tense. Has he died, or does it involve the transcendental soul taking over the body?

No, the Transcendental Soul has not manifested, but this soul has become an adept and for this reason much does not apply in the same sense. We referred, we believe, to Overleaves which no longer apply, such as Chief Features and entrapment in Centers. If more was inferred, this was an error in transmission. [19 November 1974]

Most of them, by the time they have reached the stage in which they can travel between the stars, can detect the readiness on a world for contact. Most have adepts who know this long before the venture is undertaken. [20 November 1974]

We asked for a comment about the "third force" of which Gurdjieff spoke; the need of this [third force] to go [progress] from personality to Essence.

We have spoken many times of the neutral universal flow. This is what they try to put into words as the force acting upon you. Yes, this does exist, and yes, does have the influence that the student is trying to explain. When the fulcrum tips too widely to one side or the other though, the neutral force has no effect on the action. Only when the middle ground is reached, or at least approached, can this [force] be effective. This is why it is so difficult for students to put [it] into words. It is illusively [elusively?] felt by all but the most powerful adepts. It is almost never recognized by the others who come into its range unaware. In other words, although they are benefited, they do not know why. They only feel the neutralizing effect, but cannot describe the feeling. [07 December 1974]

Some students are able to remain in life roles and become adepts, but this requires total detachment — or "non-attachment" if you prefer.... On some planes, even on this world, the distinction has been made by good students and adepts, and the instinctive patterns have been overridden.... The personality is clever in the way that a wild beast is clever. It learns to avoid traps that might lead to its death, which is precisely what happens in a teaching when a student becomes an adept. [21 December 1974]

JH asked if we can ever experience total death of the false personality. Are there lapses? Does it always continue?

There are instances which we remembered well where there has been total death or extinguishment of the false personality, concomitant with the emergence of true personality of the essence. This was indeed gratifying to behold, but it happens rarely on the Physical plane, even in adepts who are at a high “level of being” [a Gurdjieff term]. They must be constantly alert to prevent the instinctive behavior reactions of the false personality from sneaking in.

H commented that she thought she had perceived her Essence while in hypnosis to be fragile. Was this a valid perception of her own Essence?

In the essence of the student, there is an undeniable quality of softness of which she is well aware, but we would certainly not consider this fragile. The true personality of the essence is, in fact, tough enough to withstand anything the Physical plane can throw up as barriers. Students expressing the Higher Centers can, for instance, withstand physical torture that the personality would buckle under in the first five minutes. This is readily observable in the behavior of some adepts under fire. The false personality has difficulty differentiating between conditions such as fragility, softness and the like. These are called by the culture “feminine” characteristics, and therefore there is a tendency to lump them all together and perceive them as the same. The false personality is perhaps the most fragile, as it is one that can be extinguished. After all, the true personality cannot be [extinguished], no matter how deeply you bury it in “bullshit.”

I feel the only route to positive pole of Sexual Center is love.

We have no quarrel with that, either. The only ecstasy that we know of occurring during the sexual act has occurred in adepts who are balanced and who do express agape. [25 January 1975]

Your culture is at fault here in that all of you have core beliefs that are strongly anti-[spiritual] growth. Being spiritual is, of course, being nonproductive and everyone “knows” that this is “bad.” Just to enable you to come past this barrier requires much ingenuity and could be disaster in the hands of a physical Adept, no matter how positive the adept might be. Strange as it may seem, many of you are among our most earnest students, and yet among our most Stubborn. [30 January 1975]

A discussion was held about helping.

To help someone else, you must, of course, know the truth about yourself and you must know that which is false in them. This is why Mechanical Man fails so in his efforts to help. He does not know truth in himself, let alone in others. Balanced Man can certainly accelerate the growth around him, and those on their way to Balance can impart that which is truth in them to others. Yes, Adepts are followed up the rungs of the cosmic ladder through no efforting on their part, because telling the truth is not an effort; telling lies is. [30 January 1975]

ADVICE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “advice” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Concerns about giving and receiving advice are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “advice” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Advice

So what is meant by advice? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Advice per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Advice

⑤ AGAPE

Every seasoned Micheal Student knows that the stated purpose of the Michaels in giving their teaching is that their students learn about and practice and develop “Agape”. Students are also given to understand that Agape is the Greek word for love of a philosophical sort. Wikipedia has an article on it:

Agape ... is a Greco-Christian term referring to unconditional love, “the highest form of love, charity” and “the love of God for man and of man for God”. The word is not to be confused with philia, brotherly love, or philautia, self-love, as it embraces a universal, unconditional love that transcends and persists regardless of circumstance. It goes beyond just the emotions to the extent of seeking the best for others.

The noun form first occurs in the Septuagint [ancient Greek translation of Hebrew scriptures], but the verb form goes as far back as Homer, translated literally as affection, as in “greet with affection” and “show affection for the dead”. Other ancient authors have used forms of the word to denote love of a spouse or family, or affection for a particular activity, in contrast to eros (an affection of a sexual nature). Within Christianity, agape is considered to be the love originating from God or Christ for humankind. In the New Testament, it refers to the covenant love of God for humans, as well as the human reciprocal love for God; the term necessarily extends to the love of one’s fellow human beings. Some contemporary writers have sought to extend the use of agape into non-religious contexts. The concept of agape has been widely examined within its Christian context. It has also been considered in the contexts of other religions, religious ethics, and science.

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Agape>< — retrieved 16 June 2021]

The Michaels sometimes use the word Agape as somewhat synonymous with the word love throughout the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, and the two words sometimes appear in the same paragraph. However, I have chosen to have a separate chapter on “Love”, a compilation from the original Michaelian group transcriptions where that term is used. Personally, I am loathe to use the word love because it is so ambiguous in the English language, whereas the Greek language had three words, as Wikipedia said (philia, eros, agape). A careful reading of the transcriptions indicated to me that the best reconciliation of the ambiguous use of the two words seems to be that the word love applies to the most general phenomenon and that Agape applies to a special kind of love, just as the Wikipedia article says. I will indicate this distinction in my comments where appropriate.

Now that we know what Agape refers to, let’s take a look at what the Michaels had to say about it. We will see that the Michaels regarded Agape as central to their teaching, so I regard this as an important chapter, even among many significant chapters. The word “Agape” is capitalized in this chapter and other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has a special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Agape per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they appear in the transcriptions. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

This is a subject that benefits by division into subsections. In the following subsections on Descriptions of Agape, Facilitators of Agape, and Impediments to Agape, there is, as one might expect, some overlap in the Michaels’ answers — meaning that some extracts could fit into more than one subsection — but I did not repeat them.

Descriptions of Agape

The first instance of the word Agape in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is from a channeled source that preceded the appearance of the Michaels, namely Tomas:

[Tomas:] This is not the only kind of commune.... There are many communes with both males and females, but this ... becomes less important as the level rises. The fact that you still question this should give you a hint about some areas that need work. This won't be instant. Nothing worthwhile ever is, but the need for erotic love is Maya too. The need for Agape is real and this is the goal. The other often gets in the way and prevents the emergence of Agape, for erotic love is always based on something physical and something fleeting — it will fly before the winds and illusion, or rather disillusion, which is even worse, since it is malfunctioning illusion, will set in. It is easy for even the partially awakened soul to distinguish. Erotic love has a tendency to be fickle and slips away at the mere hint of an unfulfilled expectation, while Agape has no expectations to begin with — asks nothing in return and accepts, and is the hallmark. Gandhi was able to say, "God bless you" to his assassin and mean it. This is Agape, and do not say that you cannot get to that point; you can. Even if it takes you fifty lifetimes to do it, you will get there. That is the reason for your existence. You might as well try it this time. You have nothing to lose. If you give up now, I can guarantee a lifetime of nagging doubts, and always the gnawing suspicion that at one time you were on the right track of something great and properly awesome. [24 July 1973]

Refer to the chapter "Communal Living". There you will find that the function of communal living should be to facilitate Agape, as it says here. Many transcriptions that we review in this chapter let us know what is not loving, what is not Agape. In the quotation above, Agape is contrasted with erotic "love" — sexual desire — a distinction made in the Wikipedia article quoted above. Refer to the chapter "Sexuality" for more discussion about the distinction between eros and agape. The underlined phrases only just begin to describe Agape; many more follow below.

The next series of Q&A exchanges were extracted from the first session in which the Michaels appeared. The word Agape did not appear at the beginning of the series; it was near the end:

Comment: He's probably talking about major Monads — not minor Monads. Probably a million little minor Monads just don't make any difference. To love and to be loved may be the greatest Monad.

To be loved and to love is a positive Monad of the highest order. You must be able to realize that you are loved in order to complete this Monad, and that is what is difficult.

Refer to the chapter "Monads" for an explanation of the type of experience that involves the reconciliation of positive and negative phases — or active and passive phases as in the case of "loving and being loved". There you will see that Agape is one of the results of completed Monads. Briefly, Monads conform to the so-called "dialectic principle": Ordinal thesis plus Cardinal antithesis equals Neutral synthesis. What this means is that Agape could be understood as a neutral regard for others — in the sense that you see them for exactly who they really are, with neither a positive nor a negative bias or distortion. On the other hand, we will see below that Agape itself is described as the positive energy of the cosmos.

Comment: "Jesus loves me, yes I know, for the Bible tells me so." That's being loved.

But you must feel this force. Intellectually saying "Jesus loves me" will not do it. You use Jesus as a convenient source of love. It is one that will not backfire and that's OK, but you must eventually get it together with your own Fragmented Entity. The conscious beings are all loving.

Love is subjectively tangible as a felt energy or impulse. Conscious beings are discussed in the chapter "Adepts and Masters". Further on we will see it said that it is easiest for people to experience love/Agape with their kindred souls, Fragments of their Entity and Cadre. Unlike love experienced between people, which is sometimes unreciprocated and unrequited, love (devotion, contemplation) for Jesus allegedly does not "backfire". Refer to the chapter "Tao" for the explanation that Jesus as Christ is an Avatar (Infinite Soul) of the immanent, embodied, component of Tao, as distinct from the transcendent component of Tao, which is said to be "abstract and cannot be personified". In my view, the ultimate expression of the word "love" applies best to the immanent component of Tao and the word Agape ultimately applies best to the transcendent component of Tao, but I do not see where the Michaels were that unambiguous in their use of those two words.

Comment: When a baby is deprived of a mother because she is sick when it is born and a certain amount of time goes by, that mother doesn't have the Agape love anymore. It is gone. The mother's love is instinctive.

Nurturing, not loving, is instinctive.

Comment: We didn't all necessarily experience the love. We experienced the nurture. I've often wondered about the child that results from super high love — the planetary kind — that child is bound to experience love as an infant because of this great love between the mother and the father. He'll experience more than nurture.

They all have. Read the autobiography of Mohandas Gandhi.

Nurturing is common to all of the animal kingdom. Man, through Personality, tries to retain control by calling it love and making the relationship continue long after the need for that type of nurturing is gone. [12 August 1973]

Actually, nurturing is not really all that common with reptiles, who mate and lay eggs and the hatchlings are on their own. Nurturing is mostly from the Emotional Center, which the reptiles do not have much of, but which was developed in mammals, and which has reached its pinnacle in humans. In the above we see that love and Agape are contrasted with the instinctive nurturing that mothers, including animal (mammalian) mothers, have for their children. Not that there is anything wrong with nurturing, of course, but there is a difference between what comes naturally to parents and what comes naturally to Essence but not to Personality, as we will see further on.

The last sentence in the thread above probably referred to what psychologists call “co-dependence”, which is an unhealthy phenomenon that should be substituted with “inter-dependence”, and which is loving but still not Agape, but which can lead to Agape:

With the right partner (another Mature Soul who has become centered or an older soul), the Mature Soul can be an ardent lover. The love is deep and lasting, for Agape is possible during this Cycle if the inner conflicts are resolved. With the wrong partner, there is apathy, impotency, frigidity, infidelity. This soul has more of a tendency to “mate for life” than any of the other Cycles, providing a comfortable mating occurs. [late August 1973]

My preference is to allow that love can happen between psychologically healthy persons and that Agape can happen between spiritually healthy Fragments of the same Entity and Cadre, but the Michaels were not always that clear and distinct in their use of those two words, love and Agape. As a step toward the disambiguation, I would connect the statement above with other statements, noted further on and elsewhere in this book, about older souls seeking their kindred souls, and when they find them they can experience Agape if they are psychologically healthy and spiritually mature.

Dick: Tomas lectured to us so much on not being selfish, that that was incorrect to be selfish.

That depends on your perception of self. If you perceive yourselves as part of the larger whole, then loving self becomes Agape.

Dick: It's a substitute search for me.

Loving the creative force [Tao] itself requires separation from any personification. [06 October 1973]

More is said about self-Agape as a facilitator of other-Agape in the next subsection. These exchanges begin to make the distinction between the words love and Agape. The best reconciliation seems to be that the word love applies to the most general phenomenon and that Agape applies to a special kind of love. This interpretation is pretty clear in the following Q&A exchanges:

Dick: When love is turned on, this in itself puts you on a high. Maybe that's "Man #4" [aka Balanced Man] according to Gurdjieff and it is not permanent.

The love of the Logos or Agape permeated the being of Jesus even prior to the manifestation [of the Infinite Soul]. He lived for the Word. The quest for spiritual liberation took precedence over all things, sometimes to his despair prior to manifestation. This was an Emotionally Centered Mercury-Saturn. He was passionate and sensual. When others rejected his opinions, he was astonished. [06 October 1973]

Refer to the chapters “Levels of Being” and “Balanced Man” and “Logos” and “Transcendental and Infinite Souls” and “Jesus — Christ — Christianity” and “Emotional Center” and “Liberation”. Further on we will see that becoming a Balanced Man is the first Level of Being where Agape is possible.

Ellis: We all have negativity and there is all this evil. What do we do with it? How do we handle it?

Evil per se exists only in the minds of those perceiving an action. If you happen to be a Young Soul, your desire will be to change that evil to good, “to right the unrightable wrong.” You will not hesitate to wipe out the lives that stand in your way. After all, are they not evil? Mature Souls often perceive evil in themselves and seek to exorcise this. Young Souls perceive the differences in people often as evil. The Old Soul ordinarily does not perceive evil as such. He perceives the cause and does not seek to eradicate the agent. This is what is meant loosely by “acceptance”. On a higher level, this acceptance becomes Agape. Your negativity can be dissolved as soon as you realize how futile it is. Souls enthralled in [the] Glamour of the Physical Plane do senseless things, granted, but realize this, Ellis: the soul is eternal; these acts are temporal. [08 October 1973]

More than a year later the Michaels identified the Positive Pole of the Goal of Acceptance as +Agape. Sometimes it seems that the Michaels use the concept of Agape as a subset of love and sometimes they use the word Agape to denote an exaltation above and beyond love; both can be true. Refer to the chapter “Glamour” for discussion of one of those distortions that mitigate love and Agape. Also refer to the chapter “Good and Evil” for more about that.

If Jesus' prejudiced ideas of divorce were attributed to his early childhood, how does Michael form their ideas to set down values and judgments of divorce?

The Fragments of this Entity (Michael) at the time they were on the Physical Plane, ran the gamut of opinion culminating in the opinion that acceptance of all other souls in the form of Agape was the greatest truth. This did not occur until the [entire reincarnation] Cycle was completed.

The interpersonal relationships induced by your culture are superficial and are for the most part to be condemned in teachings such as this. The students [of such teachings] often grow to the point where the relationships transcend this superficiality and truly become spiritual bonding or psychic union, which is what Jesus was talking about. He attempted to discourage relationships based upon erotic love, especially among those close to him. [20 January 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Psychic Union”. It would seem that “transcendent spiritual bonding or psychic union” is a description of the most exalted instantiation of Agape. This can happen in a sexual relationship, but rarely in cases other than between Adepts or between kindred souls — “soul mates”, and older souls at that.

Gene: There is no positive or negative in Essence. True?

We would agree with that. But you must remember that in Essence, one experiences; one does not evaluate.

We would point out that that which is the soul operating from Essence feels that which we called “Agape” and that is a feeling of tranquility, of peace, and we doubt that the Personality of many earthbound souls would consider these particularly strong emotions. [05 June 1974]

These statements describe Essence Agape as a neutral phenomenon, whereas other statements refer to it as positive; see below. My reconciliation of this apparent discrepancy is that one must pass through the neutral phase as Balanced Man on the way to the positive phase when one is an Adept, living primarily in Essence; Agape as “positive” includes but transcends Agape as “neutral”. Refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality”; there you will read that Personality cannot love in the sense of Agape, but Essence does and can only do Agape. Note that one is not in Agape if one is disturbed or distorted toward the negative. This reminds me of the so-called “serenity prayer”: “God, grant me the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, courage to change the things I can, and wisdom to know the difference.”

Dick: Discussions of the Tao lead [to] no place. We can't perceive this. Maybe we can begin to comprehend when Astral traveling. We can feel the love ...

That for which we call for you “Agape” is the positive force of the universe. This is the only positive force. All other positive emotions or energy sources are borne of this. [25 June 1974]

The only positive energy we know of is that which we have elected to call “Agape”. Other sources may be either neutral or negative. The high states are free of the complexity found in the lower states. This should explain the purity of the energy flow. The lower states, being more complex, require more complex emotions to feed upon and be fed upon. ... if you do not believe that there is a state of Agape, you can effectively block out any experience of such. [05 October 1974]

Consider how much simpler your life would be if you abode in the positive Agape frame of mind more of the time, not being judgmental or upset so much of the time. Refer to the chapter “Complexity versus Simplicity”.

Dick: Would like some clarification of the word “Agape.”

We use this word to express the unqualified acceptance of another person's being as the greater part of self. We know of no other word that would be appropriate. This is the love of the Tao.

Is there a familiar word in another language familiar to this medium?

There is no word in the tongues of this culture that would express this concept. It is the releasing of self to the flow of the pan-dimensional universe. It is the recognition that the solid isolation of the Physical Plane is only the Personality's faulty perception, and that in truth there is no separation — there is only one. You have heard it said by one who is an Adept [namely Jesus] that, "I am all that there is and you are with me" — this is Agape. [22 October 1974]

If you resist the flow of the universe, or insist that it flow some other way, you might not be functioning within the parameters of Agape. The self as ego has a need to be in control; for more discussion about "releasing of self to the flow of the universe", refer to the chapter "Surrender". Briefly, surrender is not about always being passive; it includes being active ... if affecting the universe is part of your true nature. The trick, of course, is to learn to discern the flow of the universe and at the same time learn to discern the part that you are to play in that flow, whether passive or active. All of this is yet another description of Agape versus non-Agape.

The following three passages mostly just provide more definitions and descriptions and synonyms of Agape:

Ralph: Is there some dimension we might call "feeling" or "love" or "value"?

Or truth or light. Of course. Value, truth, love, feeling, intuition, understanding, knowledge. Synonyms. No substantial difference. Knowledge is understanding, is Agape, is the goal. Once there is understanding, there is knowledge, there is love. [26 December 1974]

You all exist in a state of love. It is merely the acknowledgment that is denied. We will amend our previous statement to say love recognized, accepted, and acknowledged with one is love of all. That is Agape. You refuse, for various reasons, to know when you are loved. Therein lies the dilemma. Often, it must be an intensely personal experience before it can grow and envelop all of life; which, of course, already lies awaiting your love. Awake to the reality, or rather the truth, of the oneness of all that lives. [12 January 1974]

In true Agape there is, of course, an intensive, constant flow of love and caring from one to another. The Personality rejects this out of hand, of course. It cannot even admit the possibility. That is why it is so difficult for you to Photograph yourself intermittently dispensing affection in your interpersonal relationships. [15 January 1974]

Facilitators of Agape

As noted above, the Michaels said that Agape is possible for the Mature Soul "if the inner conflicts are resolved", and Agape is experienced when you "get it together with your own Fragmented Entity", which usually becomes important during the Old Soul Age. There are other conditions that promote the experience of Agape, and those are collected and commented on in this subsection.

All of these overlays [Overleaves] come into play. You must learn their significance. A by-product of this will be a far deeper understanding of the others, which must be learned before you can truly feel Agape. [23 October 1973]

This is one of numerous statements about the reason that the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System, namely as an early stage in learning to Agape other people, an experience that goes beyond tolerance and beyond acceptance, to a deep understanding of other people as Fragments of the "larger whole".

Tina: What is the purpose of learning all these labels? I dislike labels.

It is only important if you wish to make the synthesis. We agree, verbal communication is a poor excuse for the sum of communication. However, until one of you break through with telepathy, this will have to do. This study enables you to have insights to the motivation of certain activities that could conceivably be perceived by you as hostile or undesirable, and prohibit the understanding necessary for Agape to take place. It will also enable you to aid those who seek your counsel. [31 December 1974]

This statement is full of words that apply to phenomena that accompany development of Agape. Refer to the chapters "Synthesis" and "Telepathy".

Ellis: I would like to ask about the meaning of "synthesis." Byron has a theory about it, and I have the theory that it means putting the knowledge into effect for [spiritual] growth.

Both are valid. You cannot begin to put this into practice until you fully understand it. The synthesis will allow you to see the entire systems of ideas as one unified idea — the continuous creative force. Understanding why those around you are like they are will open you up to Agape and true acceptance. This will allow you to put personal agendas aside and pursue the path toward communion with the high teachers. [17 January 1974]

This statement is full of words that apply to phenomena that accompany Agape.

Mallory: What is meant by "intellectual teaching"?

Answer: To translate what you have learned intellectually as knowledge into what you do — (being). It's "turning water into wine" [as Jesus allegedly did].

This is, of course, our teaching also. The discipline, of course, includes going toward Balance through concentration, meditation, and other conscious[ness]-raising techniques. Also, the understanding and ultimate complete acceptance of all others, leading to the spiritual Agape, which is the doorway to true consciousness. [03 February 1974]

The path to Agape is often described as the journey from sexual activity at the low end of the septenarian spectrum, up through Emotional Center, Intellectual Center, and Impulse Center (Balance), until one arrives in the higher Centers, which is where Adepts and Masters hang out. This is stated more clearly in some passages than in others, and it might not be said explicitly in any one of them reviewed in this chapter, so one has to assemble all of the statements to arrive at the complete picture of the journey to Agape. Following is one statement to include:

Comment: Everything we do should complement the goal of the group. We tend to take on too many things to do. You don't have to give up everything, but you should pull your life towards the goal.

[Soleal:] I would like to point out to you at this time that many of you are dabblers. You dabble in this and that, tasting all of the fruits, eating of none, and in this light you also dabble in spiritual growth as well. Now, this is all right; there is nothing wrong with this — it incurs little Karma — but on the other hand, it leads nowhere. Also, the concept of Agape requires the actions of a closely-knit group of supportive students in order to come to reality. No one can feel Agape in an ivory tower. It can only be felt when Higher Centers are contacted in the course of close association with others. There is no way to do this alone that I know of. Where the misunderstanding has come about, I think, is where the teacher [Michael] has advised you of the dangers of the cloisters and the stifling atmosphere there that retards growth, and has pointed out to you the relative lack of success among those who choose the solitary path. If you wish, we could prepare for you some examples of what works here [on Soleal's planet]. If you are being completely honest with yourselves and others, the need for privacy and aloneness disappears, and is replaced by the feeling of Agape. This is not easy. The teacher has not said that it is easy, only that it can be obtained. [18 February 1974]

There are healthy spiritual groups that can foster Agape, and beyond that there are healthy spiritual communes that can foster Agape. Refer to the chapter "Communal Living" for what the Michaels had to say about that. Compare this quote with the previous one, which mentioned "discipline", and we come to the notion that there are beneficial disciplines (concentration, meditation, fasting, study, and so on) and there are detrimental disciplines (authoritarian, doctrinaire, stifling, rule-based cloisters). One goal is to have a balanced proportion of spiritual-practice disciplines and social interactions, a balance that is different for different people and for different groups and for different communes.

Nichols: The method is to live the teaching in an attitude of love.

Individual verification of the given material is perhaps the most vital precept upon which this teaching is based, for this process alone opens the door to expanded perception, which is, of course, necessary in order to experience Agape and thus grow spiritually. [24 February 1974]

Add the process of experiential validation to the techniques for fostering Agape; refer to the chapter "Validation and Verification" for the whole story. Basically, this type of verification is beyond learning that something is true intellectually or even conceptually; it involves the whole self, which includes the higher self.

In pair bonds, is there more apt to be erotic love?

We speak of pair bonds in Essence and this leads to a feeling of Agape. Usually, however, these very fortunate souls are sexually compatible simply because they are so open, and they place so little emphasis on method and more emphasis on the quality of the relationship. [24 February 1974]

Numerous times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, the contrast is made between eros and the Agape that is experienced by kindred Fragments who are spiritually mature enough to have Essence contact.

We shared a discussion about a weekend full of Friction.

Friction such as this always forces one to objectively assess one's inner progress in a situation such as this one provided at the end of the week. One is also forced to see the contrast, as the lady Cheryl points out. Then the progress can be seen with far more clarity than if one goes on in the same old rut.

Is there anything Michael can say to help us feel Agape toward this [obnoxious, noxious] sort of person?

We feel that it is indeed possible for you all to accept this lady in all her glory and yet, we would not recommend that any of you spend too much time in that negative environment. You do not need to be present to feel Agape. This lady creates a vortex of negative energy that is particularly difficult for those souls in Acceptance, which is precisely why certain people instinctively elected not to go to this place. [03 April 1974]

None of us are spiritual giants yet; none of us are Adepts or Masters yet; we should not kid ourselves about the size and strength of our Agape, believing that we can “resist all evil” or “save the world” from itself. In physics terms, we should not get very close to the event horizon of a black hole, lest we be sucked in. Refer to the chapter “Friction”, where we find that we should regulate the amount of Friction we deal with in our lives lest we “bite off more than we can chew”.

Cynthia: That’s hard on the Agape.

We would speak of Agape in this context, thanks to Cynthia: Agape sometimes means only not appointing yourself as judge and jury. Agape also always means forgetting. Notice that we did not say, “forgive”. This is beyond you and is far too abstract. We said, “forget”, and this means quite literally “the end”. It does not mean crawling away to lick your wounds and to plan a counter-attack. It means forgetting once and for all. The concept of Agape does not mean [a required] proximity [to the other person]. In practice, it often can be more easily applied when one moves away from the immediate cause of the hostility.

Cynthia: If we have a goal of Agape, we should be able to use these situations to help us grow.

[Yes.] One of the first steps, of course, is the realization that you alone are responsible for your reaction to the situation. [17 April 1974]

Take ‘baby steps’ on the path toward Agape: take responsibility for yourself as being neither the victim nor the hero; realistically evaluate your progress.

Richard expressed the desire to know from Michael if his perceptions were valid or not of Ray and Gene.

The only way we know of to come to Agape, which presumably is the goal, is to acknowledge your feelings, likes and dislikes, and then come past them. We have not ever advocated the toleration of any obnoxious behavior to you and we never will. It is far too much of an energy drain. The fact remains that Mechanical Man has no inkling of his behavior or how it is perceived by others. The only way that he can ever have that inkling is if some higher being, or even one who is far enough along the path to see it, will hold up the psychic mirror in whatever way possible at the time. Only then can Mechanical Man perceive himself as others perceive him. That is the first step toward self-perception — especially, if the consensus that [the] latter factor is one other compelling reason for staying in a teaching rather than striking out alone. (Hello, out there!) When you do not have this constant yardstick, you cannot measure your progress. [21 September 1974]

The underlined words are yet another description of what Agape is about. There are shades of Zen Buddhism in Agape, in that Zen recommends the mitigation of cravings and aversions, of neutralizing negativity. Refer to the chapters “Photography” and “Self-observation” to learn more about those tools for mitigating non-Agape.

Ted: Would it be good for the men of this group to meet separately (as the women have done)?

The pitfalls would, of course, be falling into a masculine, Mechanical-type dialog pertaining to life interests and not to the teaching. With effort, the move could be fruitful especially in the direction of Agape. Many of you [men] need to cast out your stereotypes and learn to love in other arenas besides the sexual one. [24 September 1974]

The elimination of pre-conceived notions, and the mitigation of habits of behavior, emotions, and thoughts is very Agape, and very Zen.

As the goal of Agape or spiritual liberation entails ultimately becoming an Adept, the concept of telepathy should not be taken lightly. It is within the grasp of you and would require an enormous amount of predictability. When you meet with an Adept who is strongly telepathic and also totally vulnerable, you will understand this more fully, but it is not an unrealistic goal for the man Gene. [24 September 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Liberation”, “Adept and Master”, “Telepathy”, and “Vulnerability” in order to more completely connect those concepts with Agape. Briefly: as you grow in Agape toward being a full-fledged Adept, you will feel more liberated and experience more telepathy because you are susceptible to the promptings of your higher/greater self.

Donna: [Question not recorded.]

Love of children is not “love”. Rather, [it is] a feeling for the “Agape” wanting expression. [03 November 1974]

It is probably easier for us to feel unconditional, non-judgmental Agape toward infants because our expectations of the maturity of their behavior, emotions, and thoughts are so much lower than what we might expect from adults. Let this be a lesson for us in what Agape feels like: without being condescending toward adult people in general, let us clear our minds of expectations about them, the same way that our minds are clear and clean of expectations of new-born infants. We all have this pure and simple Agape wanting to be expressed from our Essence consciousness.

Sarah made a comment on threads bringing us together.

Getting in touch with the threads is a very strong feeling, not only from the standpoint of merging Entities, but also getting in touch with the emotions connecting the threads that are so strong. You, Sarah, are struggling with the dichotomy of the strength of feelings and the strength of Entities. You must realize the effect of this on the False Personality and its ramifications. You must deny the feelings to get in touch with the flow of the thread. The feelings are stronger than the thread, although appearing the opposite. You, Sarah, must deny these feelings as part of the Overleaves. Get in touch with your emotions. Let feelings flow. This process will free much more and you, Sarah, will experience the depth of the gift. You were attempting to get in touch with support in the great times of trial that you were going through. The denial will not be much longer. The support of Agape. The tension will cease with the adjustment. The feelings are not as buried as you think. The trust has been there longer than you would admit. [08 November 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Vectors” and “Agreements and Sequences” for the explanation of “threads” that bring people together, especially friended and kindred souls for the experience of Agape. It is easiest to feel Agape with kindred souls, therefore, as Fragments of the same Entity meet and get to know each other, Agape is felt. The Personality might resist yielding to this experience, so beware, and let go of the blocks. Refer to the chapter “Emotional Center” for more discussion of that Center as facilitator of Agape.

Ted asked what we could physically do to prepare for this visit.

The emotional preparation will be by far the most trying. Spiritually, you can accept this, but emotionally, many of you have fears, some great doubts, and then many are ambivalent. The exercises we have suggested to disengage the rationalizations would help. More closeness between members on an affectionate basis is now beginning. True affection is the beginning of the long road to Agape. This is difficult for some of you and we know this, but we will persist in recommending that you at least try. When you can express this affection openly with no expectations of gain on a physical basis, you will have come a long way. The exercise that the man Robert proposed to his students that they refer to themselves as “it” could be valuable to you in a very different sense. It would consciously help you in dropping gender. [10 November 1974]

Agape is not experienced as rational; it is beyond rationality. Nor does it conform to socio-cultural norms of expected and approved experiences. Refer to the chapter “Emotional Center”, where you will read that on numerous occasions, the Michaels recommended to original Michaelian group members — most of whom were Intellectually Centered — that they should learn to experience the Emotional Center more; that is where affection is experienced, and the exaltation of Emotional Center is the Higher Emotional Center, and the higher Centers is where Agape is experienced.

James asked what must we do to become awake.

We have, of course, outlined to this cadre the steps that they must take if they are to ever become sufficiently awake to hear the words. We have told them of the highest truth, which is Agape, which is the unqualified acceptance of other creatures as the greater part of self. We have given them the tools for attainment of this state, which are yes, meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. We have endeavored to warn them, or rather apprise them, of the pitfalls they may encounter on the Path. We have recommended that they simplify their lives, that they may free the necessary energies for pursuit of this objective. 20 November 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Awakening from Sleep”, “Meditation and Concentration”, “Fasting”, “Study”, “Path — Spiritual”, and “Complexity versus Simplicity”.

We have spoken to you many, no countless, times about what you and we choose to call a “trust level.” This trust level is, of course, essential to Agape or a spiritual love. The Personality can never experience this. The Personality cannot trust, therefore cannot love. If this trust level is to develop, it must develop in an environment of almost constant exposure. If Agape is to develop, it must develop in an environment where students observe each other in all facets of life, not just when the students are on their good meeting behavior. It is easy to love most of you during the weekly comings together of this cadre. We doubt that this would hold true twenty-four hours a day without much work. Most of you trust each other only superficially. Not one of you feels the bonds that we would foster in this [original Michaelian group] cadre, but the ability is there and a start has been made several times. However, when it becomes frightening, it is quickly aborted and the subject is changed rapidly over to something less scary. [14 December 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Trust" and "Communal Living" for more discussion of the conditions that foster the development of trust and Agape within any group of people who are focused on spiritual growth.

The following answers begin to discuss the interactions of Overleaves and how that can be used to develop Agape:

Narra asked for more information.

Just imagine how easy it would be for you to accept [your husband] Robert's Rejection were it not for the Mode you selected. Repression [Mode] automatically erects a barrier between you and the Positive Pole of your Goal [Acceptance]. To scale this barrier is a significant feat. You have begun to feel this change and are on the way to verification. It is not an easy lesson. The block or barrier stems from the Mode of Repression. Even the Acceptance of one who has chosen this Mode is repressed. To find the ability within to feel Agape in spite of this, [is a] formidable task and it requires a yardstick to measure the progress. The ideal yardstick, of course, is the polar opposite, in this case, one in Rejection [Robert's Goal]. For you to go to and remain in the Positive Pole of Acceptance requires much work and you are still not entirely able to work from there. This is simply another Balancing tool that Older Souls often choose. It would be possible, for instance, for Robert to choose to utilize the same tool [Acceptance] were he so inclined. This is usually possible in all Sequences; that is, the motive can become easily the motivator. Of course, the hallmarks of the Negative Pole of Acceptance are conciliation, placation, and ingratiation. Do you now have the feeling for the fact that in most souls not acquainted with a teaching that the Mode stands forever as a barrier between the Positive and Negative Poles of the Goal? No matter how exalted that Goal may be, this principle stands between all Modes and Goals. We would say so, yes.

All teachings?

A comparable teaching that has as its goal Agape through Balance. It may be Gurdjieffian in origin or may have true religious grounding, as long as that remains as the goal (Agape). [16 January 1975]

On erasing Tapes ... to achieve Agape eventually ...

One thing we might suggest that perhaps could be a start at least, would be to determine those core beliefs in you regarding your ability to achieve a state of Agape or consciousness. When the belief is brought to the surface, often the Tapes that accompany it are clearly heard for the first time. For many reasons, this process is more effective if performed in a group setting, as quite often it leads to what you might term psychic surgery. You have only an inkling of the strength of these master Tapes and the hold they have over you. Only when they are found played out and discarded does serious accelerating begin. Once the process begins, however, it does have a tendency to snowball, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to slide back into old patterns once the Tape has been erased. Sometimes, the behavior patterns continue for awhile, but even they eventually cease, as there is nothing supporting them. By the way, you are quite correct in assuming that you have both negative and positive programs on all of these and that you do play them one against the other, constantly. [19 January 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Bio-computer" for more discussion of Tapes and their programs that are part of unconscious, anti-Agape Mechanicity.

Dick: I feel the only route to Positive Pole of Sexual Center is love.

We have no quarrel with that, either. The only ecstasy that we know of occurring during the sexual act has occurred in Adepts who are Balanced and who do express Agape. [25 January 1975]

Refer to chapters "Poles — Positive and Negative" and "Love" and "Sexuality" and "Adept and Master" and "Balanced Man".

Liz: What are my blocks?

You know them without asking. As with many in this alienated society, you lack love of yourself. Love, acceptance, Agape — all are synonymous. Accept yourself and you may move to love for another. Until you do that, all that we say to you is theoretical. It is an illusion that Agape may be experienced before love for one may be experienced or indeed that Agape may precede your love of yourself. "Self" includes the Personality, as well as the Essence. Can you love that "self" unconditionally, without hope for change? Until you can, Agape is a theory. [05 February 1975]

Agape is not just expressed and felt toward others; one must do/feel/think the same about oneself before one can do/feel/think it toward others. The chapter "Love" also has somewhat to say about it.

It has been our experience that the most significant progress in the Work is always made by groups of dedicated committed students, together working toward the goal of Agape. This can only be done in any steady sense in a communal setting, in that there must be continuity, and there must be Overleaves that are incompatible for the Work to be continuous. Most in life choose to live with only those other souls whose Overleaves complement their own. ... Joy is an integral part of Agape and, therefore, an indispensable part of the goal of this teaching. This joy, of course, is not to be experienced by the Personality, so if you are to have this, it also is going to have to come from somewhere else. The joy is there for the asking. It can be in a walk in the woods, a meal prepared and shared in a community, a Moving Centered activity such as a game, a shared meditative period. It can be found in anything, but only if the Overleaves do not interfere. The mindlessness that is preliminary to successful meditation can also be used to prepare oneself for joy. In fact, it is perhaps the most certain preparation that we know of. [Dimensions! April 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Friction" for a discussion about the growth-producing effect of learning to Agape people whose Overleaves 'rub you the wrong way'. Friction between Overleaves can happen even when the two people involved are in the Positive Poles of their Overleaves. Part Four of my book The Tao of Personality describes in detail the positive and negative interactions of Overleaf combinations; implementing the knowledge found there will help one to understand the 'chemistry', and facilitate the transmutation of Friction into Agape. Also, refer to the chapter "Joy" for more about that; the Michaels had a lot to say about it.

We talked about efforting, not getting any place — just get into deeper and deeper trouble with life. It seems there should be no effort. (I did not get the specific comment that brought about this next response.)

What you are experiencing is passion. This is a gateway to Agape if used in the proper perspective. The man Jesus was passionate. The transcendence to Agape took place only when the Infinite Soul began to manifest. [12 December 1976]

Passion is one of the gateways to Agape, when applied to that purpose, of course; there are numerous other facilitators, recorded in this chapter.

Impediments to Agape

There are many facilitators of Agape, of course, but there are also specific impediments to Agape.

Alice: Can these [Chief Features] be changed in our lifetime? Can you get rid of them?

You must grow to extinguish this.

Comment: In other words, we must go through our Chief Features to arrive at Agape.

You must grow to the point where this [Chief Feature] is no longer a barrier to Agape. [27 February 1974]

The Chief Feature might be the biggest impediment to Agape.

Entrapment in the physical body provides another barrier:

Dick: Is Agape a function of the spirit and not the body?

It is of the Essence, yes. [03 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Essence and Personality" for clarification and exposition.

Dick: Agape love sputters for only 15 seconds and it does not happen often. Is this moving toward a #4 person?

We agree. It is a difficult place to be, but definitely rewarding. [03 March 1974]

In the Gurdjieffian teachings, a #4 person is said to be Balanced, which means being crystallized in the Instinctive Center, which I prefer to call the Impulse Center. Refer to the chapters "Balanced Man", "Levels of Being", and "Instinctive Center" to get a more complete picture. The Impulse Center is a 'launching pad' or 'bridge' or 'gateway' to get from the lower Centers to the higher Centers, which are the abode of the experience of Agape.

Dick: Ordinary morality has nothing to do with true morality.

That is valid. When you attach too much importance to this very mundane and temporal morality, you become encrusted in Maya. The only morality that exists in the high plane is that which leads to Agape. That is the unqualified acceptance of all other creatures, both physical and ethereal, as the greater part of self. [06 March 1974]

On the Physical Plane, our perspective is so limited and so distorted compared to the perspective on the higher planes, that it makes sense for us to reserve judgment about the quality of our own, and other people's, sense of right and wrong. This is not to say that we can safely ignore our “conscience”, but there is a question about how endarkened our conscience is by the socio-cultural perspective versus how enlightened our conscience is by influence from higher realms. This is not said as an endorsement of so-called “moral relativism”, the notion that morality is merely and only a socio-cultural phenomenon that differs over time and change in location. Rather, this is saying that there is a spectrum, a morality scale, and the quality of morality leaves the realm of the relative uncertainty and approaches the realm of Absolute certainty as one ascends the cosmic ethical hierarchy. We and every other human are prone to learn Agape the hard way, by first doing the inferior stuff on the way to learning to do the superior stuff. Refer to the chapter “Morality and Ethics” for further discussion.

Dick: I hear the teaching and hear the hostility. It's unchangeable sexually — that's where I am. The program is so programmed. It cuts me out of making the skip to Transcendental Soul. Agape is impossible in people with sex problems. It is impossible in people with emotional hang-ups of any sort, whether it be sex or fear of cats or the dark.

It is difficult to achieve Agape if you place the blame for your “hang ups” on others. The Agape can be present, though, in the face of inner conflicts as long as the source is realized. The man, Jesus, before the manifestation, is an example, also Gandhi: both had what you would consider insoluble sexual conflicts, but both recognized the source as themselves. [19 March 1974]

This statement builds on the previous statement about the socio-cultural standard of moral righteousness of humans on the Physical Plane differing from the standard of moral righteousness of beings on the higher planes. Knowing that there is this difference perhaps helps one to feel Agape for oneself, and Agape for others who struggle with whatever internal moral dilemmas they may have. Refer to the chapter “Guilt” for further discussion. The ramifications of “Sexuality” are covered in its own chapter.

Dick: Repression Mode — people do not feel Agape?

They do not ordinarily allow themselves this, you are right.

Gene: Sarah thinks Observation Mode keeps her from feeling Agape. Comment?

All of these Modes can be used to varying degrees to prevent the acceptance of Agape. In particular: Repression, Caution, Perseverance, and Observation. But the powerful [Cardinal] Modes [Power, Passion, Aggression] can be also used to startling effectiveness. Many souls who choose too Neutral a composite [array of Overleaves] for a resting Cycle find themselves in a position of being unable to react appropriately. This sometimes brings them to the negative attention of those around. Then, if they meet with a teaching, they can sometimes be Shocked out of their stifling neutrality.

Richard: Is Agape [the] prime energy for faith healing?

It is certainly the force that makes it effective.

Gene: Repression [Mode] — can it be used to find Agape?

We would amend that to say that the Repression can certainly be used for the impetus to propel a soul forward. The sadness of Repression is a powerful motive for seeking a teaching. [25 June 1974]

All of these organizations purport to have a lofty goal, but since the goal of none is Agape, again, they can only lead to more entrapment and more isolation from the goal. Examples of organizations that act as barriers are: the Democratic Party, or any other party; the Catholic church or any other dogmatic church; the cult of the Ku Klux Klan or any other terror organization; the Central Intelligence Agency or any other espionage agency; Black Panthers or any other separatist organization. The list is endless, and they are real barriers to growth if you align yourself solely in them to where you become identified in their dogma and accept it as your own. [21 December 1974]

So, do not join any organization that does not foster and promote and aspire to express Agape.

It is wise to keep these Overleaf factors in mind as one fine-tunes ones aspiration and path to Agape.

...all still hidden in many relationships stands in the way and acts as a permanent barrier to Agape, even on that level, to true cooperation. [16 January 1975]

The general point to be made in response to this answer is that secrecy is an impediment to Agape.

Concluding Comments on Agape

The original name of the Positive Pole of the Goal of Acceptance was given as +Agape. The following summary of this chapter provides a good if brief description of what that is like.

CHARACTERISTICS: Agape has no expectations or stereotypes or biases or prejudices; asks nothing in return; has expanded awareness; perceives the wholeness; has unqualified acceptance; is tranquil and peaceful; emanates positive energy; has profound understanding; is loving and caring; is intimate to the point of telepathic empathy; is affectionate and trusting of self and the universe; is caring rather than nihilistic; is joyful; is manifested in the higher Centers.

FACILITATORS: Agape is facilitated by spiritual disciplines such as meditation, concentration, study, and fasting; it is fostered in intense group dynamics and communal living; it is easiest to experience with friended and kindred souls, especially between and among older souls; uses Friction to increase awareness.

IMPEDIMENTS: Agape is diminished by Chief Feature, Negative Poles of Overleaves, False Personality, and Maya; it is impeded by organizations that emphasize conflict or competition rather than cooperation; it is inhibited by irresponsibility, cognitive dissonance, and “hang-ups”.

The aspiration to achieve Agape is noble and virtuous in the long run — the scores and maybe even hundreds of reincarnations — but the reasonable expectation is that in any give lifetime we learn to put up with our own and other people’s shit just a little bit better.

① AGENDA

This chapter is the product of a search for the word agenda in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Agendas are unavoidable. They are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word agenda is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

It might be a little surprising how often this word agenda shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

If you study the chapter “Spiritual Path — Physical Path” alongside this chapter on “Agenda”, you will find much overlap in the concepts covered by the Michaels under the two headings.

Definition of “Agenda”

Just to be clear about its meaning, let’s take a look at the dictionary definition of the word “agenda”:

- 1: a list or outline of things to be considered or done: “agendas of faculty meetings”.
- 2: an underlying often ideological plan or program: “a political agenda” [<https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/agenda>] — retrieved 27 August 2021]

The Michaelian use of this word does not depart from the dictionary definition.

Agenda in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that benefits by division into subsections. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

As we will see in the collection of original Michaelian group quotations that follow, during the original Michaelian group, it is said that almost always there is a conflict between the agenda of the Personality and the agenda of the soul or Essence. It is said that personal and transpersonal paths, and/or physical and spiritual paths, often interfere with each other. This is the case in the first mention of the word in the second session in which the Michaels were the source:

Later in the month, the group met again and there was some initial discussion about personal agendas getting in the way of the Teaching.

There is nothing wrong in having personal agendas; it merely interferes with concentration, and if meditation or manifestation is the goal, then all personal agendas must be set aside — suspended, so to speak. [17 August 1973]

Even though it does not say so here, it is obvious that “personal agendas” are not to be confused with those activities that are necessary to maintain one’s physical existence at a comfortable level. Rather, personal agendas are those activities where one has a choice, either to focus on one’s physical life or one’s spiritual life. What it does say here is that there is a reciprocal relationship between personal agendas and spiritual agendas: the more one focuses on one the less one focuses on the other; a person only has so much time and energy to do as one chooses. Obviously, people vary in their commitment to their physical versus their spiritual agendas. Founding members of the original Michaelian group were of a mind to focus on spiritual development, but the Michaels advise that there must be a balance of the two.

The word agenda was used again in the same original Michaelian group session:

Comment: EST might take care of people’s personal agendas.

Not if it means financial disaster to the person involved. It is enough that several of you know the techniques, then you can teach the others. [17 August 1973]

Refer to the chapter on “EST — Erhard Seminars Training”. This seminar was at that time, and is now in the present day, an intensive group psychotherapy program that has somewhat to say about managing one’s life, with a view to minimizing what is false about oneself (personality agendas) and maximizing what is true about oneself (Essence agendas). It was a valuable seminar according to the Michaels, but it was also an expensive seminar, so the recommendation here is to mitigate that expense so that one’s life does not become unbalanced with respect to physical agendas versus spiritual agendas.

Dick: Is fasting healthy?

Fasting when done properly leads to the liberated meditation. It produces the same state as marijuana if practiced long enough and diligently enough. You should not fast if you are ill or if there is honest grief or pressures of private agendas. [21 August 1973]

There are times when it is necessary or expedient to take care of a personal, private agenda. When not thus physically encumbered or distracted, then a committed seeker will turn their attention to spiritual liberation. Here again, the Michaels are advocating balance between the physical agenda versus the spiritual agenda.

Our energy levels?

Yes. You are tired and there are some agendas in the way. [13 October 1973]

A recurring problem during the original Michaelian group was that people sometimes were so encumbered with unnecessary physical agendas that they did not have the energy and/or attention to spare for spiritual matters. Often they were distracted by physical agendas when they should have been focused on the spiritual agenda, which was the purpose for which the original Michaelian group convened; the original Michaelian group was not intended to be just a social party of friends.

Ellis: I would like to ask about the meaning of “synthesis”. Byron has a theory about it, and I have the theory that it means putting the knowledge into effect for [spiritual] growth.

Both are valid. You cannot begin to put this [Synthesis] into practice until you fully understand it. The Synthesis will allow you to see the entire systems of ideas as one unified idea — the continuous creative force.

Understanding why those around you are like they are [via the Overleaf System] will open you up to Agape and true acceptance. This will allow you to put personal agendas aside and pursue the path toward communion with the high Teachers. [17 January 1974]

Here again, the pursuit of personal agendas is contrasted with the pursuit of the transpersonal agenda. The Michaelian teachings provides knowledge that demotes the former and promotes the latter, so that one achieves a balanced spiritual/physical life as explained in other Q&A exchanges.

Edgar: I would like to return to the comment you made at the beginning of the evening on the origin of the species, Homo Sapiens. We seem to ignore it with our [personal] egotistical questions.

We have discussed the problem of personal agendas before. We do understand this drive [to ask egotistical questions] and we do not deplore it; it is just that we have much more time than any of you and we would be of as much help as possible in the limited time available. Being in a more intimate [communal] situation would also eliminate this problem [because it would minimize egotistical focus]. We will discuss this question of origin

[of Homo Sapiens] again soon. It is important that you have some foundation in this before you begin to expound. [24 January 1974]

In a previous Q&A exchange, the lack of energy for spiritual matters was mentioned; here the lack of time for spiritual matters was mentioned. Also, here a contrast is made between general (Homo Sapiens) knowledge and “egotistical” knowledge; understanding the former provides a foundation for understanding the latter. Because of both time and energy constraints, it is generally better for a group as a whole to pursue understanding of general and foundational matters than to be distracted by the idiosyncratic or the trivial.

Richard: Are there suggestions for improvement? I feel the personal agenda could be handled by each person relating to each other, rather than running to Michael right away.

Richard: Personal agendas create a block. [31 January 1974]

A recurring problem during the original Michaelian group was that many new people wanted to focus on themselves rather than on advancing the Michaelian teachings in general. Also, not all new people were as focused on the spiritual path as the founding members were, so this diluted the value of the original Michaelian group meetings in general. One solution proposed by Richard is that one could have newbies mentored by oldies in a setting other than the formal group gathering. Another solution is that some subsequent Michaelian teachings groups implemented a two-meeting strategy, one meeting type being a core group of oldies, and another group of newbies. A three-meeting strategy is to add informal parties and/or outings, where the function was to get to know each other personally. Then there is the communal solution mentioned in another Q&A exchange, documented in the chapter on “Communal Living”. These sorts of things were discussed in the original Michaelian group:

On absenteeism, please let the others know if you are unable to come. Three absences in a row and you’ve missed too much and our continuity is lost. See older members before making a decision.

New persons must have several meetings with older members before coming before the board. (Ouija, that is.)

It was said that the Wednesday evening meetings be used for [Ouija] board study and the Sunday meetings for social things.

We discussed many things in doing so, compiled a list of questions to be asked later in the evening.

Later that evening: We asked if there was a comment from the [Ouija] board.

We would like to see you proceed with the agenda you have prepared. [09 February 1974]

The appropriate comment for this passage is to note that one can systematize the spiritual–path agenda as well as the physical–path agenda: make a list of priorities, policies, and procedures, and follow it; don’t just stumble blindly and aimlessly through life, whether the life of the group or the life of the individual.

Admittedly, focus is hard to do:

Richard informed us that he had “talked” with Soleal, and that Soleal was willing to be with the group this evening.

[Soleal:] I have no real revelations to offer, just that I am struck again by the tremendous scattering of energies even in this group, due in the most part to the myriad personal agendas that take Intellectual Center and sometimes Emotional Center out of play for long periods of time.

The lady who has prepared the paper has hit upon an important truth when she speaks of diverse goals within a tight partnership such as your culture demands within the custom of marriage, or really I should say, divergent [goals]. The goals of the Teaching, and thus of the Students, must be unified in order to be effective. The Teacher can only suggest to you the methods if you wish to grow. Right now, the response within the group is almost solely intellectual; there is relatively little emotional commitment to the Teaching or to each other, which is really more important. This leads to the haphazardness with which the group goes about its business.

[18 February 1974]

The lack of ability to focus on the transpersonal agenda that was present in the original Michaelian group is also present with subsequent Michaelian students; perhaps not all Students, but most. One wonders if this condition will ever change, but my hope is that as the Teaching and the Students mature, there will be more convergence, cohesion, and commitment.

Of course, there will never be perfect convergence, cohesion, and commitment:

Gene: It is important that we say what we feel as individuals, not what we think the group ought to feel. For me, the group is great and I will do it as long as it’s good growth for me. Other [people’s] agendas do not have to mesh [with mine]. [24 February 1974]

But the nature of various types of group meetings can be tweaked for maximum benefit for the greater good:

Sarah: I am seeking a way of life within the group, not to become more effective in the milieu.

There is a way, you know, that this Teaching can serve the needs of all who seek, and you have it within the original nucleus to perform this service. Those who have the need for intensified personal searches can arrange for this. Those who are not certain of their level of commitment may find that the general session is adequate for them. The smaller sessions are most valuable for the more committed students and definitely should be reserved for that purpose. There is some merriment derived in the general session merely by pursuing some of the less dedicated students' personal agendas and this will benefit all. We still see the tendency in all of you to expect of the others, and to be disappointed when the anticipated reaction does not come about. This cannot be avoided unless much intensive work is done. We could do this with you and we are always available for this. There is a need for some diversification here now with all of the parts contributing toward a greater whole in the end. We have not suggested that the nucleus of this Teaching expand to the point where needs are no longer being served. We are concerned only that you share the knowledge once it has been assimilated and verified. We have a method by which all of you can choose to achieve a modicum of growth on a spiritual plane. Many of you can even use it as a springboard toward becoming an Adept. This is entirely up to you. We will find many vehicles through which we can teach the Logos — this does not present us with a problem. We answer all calls for this Teaching. [24 February 1974]

This answer reinforced the notion broached in previous Q&A exchanges, that there should be different types of group meetings attended by different people who have different needs. One way to optimize meetings to be maximally effective and efficient for the most people is to have meetings with various agendas, and stick to those agendas, simple as that.

Easier said than done:

Dick: Things in Personality are keeping me from my Essence. Anything subjective can be called personal agenda and needs to be worked with.

By personal agendas, we refer to the irrelevant thoughts flitting through the mind and preventing a focus upon the Teaching: the projections into the business world and the movie you saw three years ago; an unpaid bill — these are the items to which we refer. [27 February 1974]

By the way, the wandering mind is sometimes referred to as “monkey mind”. One solution for this, proposed by the Michaels, is to discipline the mind with “Concentration and Meditation”, the subject of another chapter.

Heretofore we have not had a description of “agenda” by the Michaels; we inferred it from context. There we had an explicit description

From personal experience in Michaelian group meetings, I can say that, if left to human nature, and if there is no enlightened charismatic leader, they typically devolve into mundanities rather than evolve into profundities. However, one can tip the balance toward the latter if the established agenda is that members bring to the meetings specific items for discussion. These more profound items can be personal and/or transpersonal.

Dick: I believe that personal agendas are important to learn about our own internal world. Tomas wanted to get on with the Teaching and forget personal agendas. I've fought against therapy and encounter groups. We function well enough as we are, but we cannot go on to spiritual growth. Ordinary therapy deals with personality alone and the processes are usually formulated by Mature Souls for Young Souls. Is there an ultimate therapy where we can know ourselves ??????

We are here with you. Yes. We would agree with that, indeed. There is a form of ultimate therapy — a clearing house for the Essence where the final cobwebs can be swept away and the clarity can shine through. Yes, also the crutch of the Personality, the one most frequently employed in situations where the Essence might come crashing through, is a most effective barrier. [19 March 1974]

At least two insights can be extracted from this Q&A exchange: 1) there is the psychotherapeutic path and there is the spiritual path — one cannot pursue the latter well until after the former has done most of its foundational function of taking out the garbage; 2) to some extent, an intimate Michaelian teachings group can serve both functions, but there must be a healthy balance of the two, as stated in other Q&A exchanges.

Allyn asked for a comment or clarification of the Teacher's comment of 12-14-74, saying that we should set aside personal agenda. Allyn asked if the Teacher meant all personal agenda such as doing other things when the group was meeting, or personal questions during general meetings.

The agenda [is] in reference is the personal questions at the general meetings. The agenda of the group and its social gathering will evolve as the group pulls together. The agenda at meetings is loose and needs confirming. Explanation: needs to confirm the group. The group actions are what the group needs to discuss in the large meetings. The confirming of the group comes with the insights that the group discovers together. [14 December 1974]

If this answer seems accurate while also being disjointed, it is because it was via Leslie Briggs (daughter of Allyn) at the very beginning of her channeling career, rather than via Sarah Chambers. I prefer the words used previously — convergence, cohesion, commitment — to the word used here: confirming.

We started off rather slowly. Donna asked for a general comment and eventually drifted off into slumber. Bill [her husband] suggested she was sleeping "for a reason".

[Soleal:] Gathering of energies can sometimes be difficult if all of the agendas have not been run out. This is even the case on my world. [01 February 1974]

My takeaway from this answer is that, perhaps if a group were to “agendize” the meetings with a to-do list, then it would be best to get the personal mundanities out of the way first so as to then be able to focus on the transpersonal profundities. In the original Michaelian group, sometimes a person was assigned to be the “chairperson” for that meeting, apparently to help keep people on track.

[Soleal:] Perhaps we should clear the agendas and then I will be around for those who wish more.

People tend to come into group meetings with some personal “stuff” on their minds, their current concerns that are irrelevant to the meeting agendas. Clearing these agendas right away could be made a formal component of the meetings.

Is this referring to a literal or a symbolic altar?

[Soleal:] It can be either. Where is your symbolic altar if you do not have that quiet space?

As long as it does not become a crutch, the material altar serves those brothers who do not have the altar of the soul. You see, it is possible to transfer the psychic energy to your brothers, but there must not be agendas in your way or the flow will be scattered, and you will not be able to transmute the collective energy into the higher expression. Those troubled among you will simply feed on the energy flow. [16 February 1975]

Elsewhere in the original Michaelian group transcriptions there is discussion of group members whose “energy” and agenda cannot be harmonized with the group as a whole; these people typically left the group on their own volition. However, in some groups, such people must be asked to leave, for the sake of the greater good.

General Comments on Agenda

Whenever two or more people gather together on a regular basis, there is always some concern for whose agenda, or what agenda, prevails. The original Michaelian group did not have a strong, competent, mature leader that everyone looked up to and trusted — someone who could provide that agenda and make it stick, for the good of the group as a whole. Therefore, the members kicked the problem around repeatedly as they struggled to develop some cohesion and coherence in the absence of such a unifying leadership. The Michaels themselves had an agenda — to reveal the Overleaf System — but they did not exercise that kind of leadership; they did not impose their focus on the members. Frankly, I suspect that this is one of the reasons that the original Michaelian group did not live up to its promise. Warriors Leslie Briggs and Quinn Yarbrow seem to have been able to sustain group meetings longer than the Scholar Sarah Chambers.

In review: the Personality self has its plans, and the Essence self has its plans; often the two are at loggerheads because of time and energy available for each. I am reminded of a Biblical passage:

No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to one, and despise the other. You cannot serve God and mammon [money]. [Luke 16:13]

A search for the word “agenda” in the published channeling of Lesley Briggs subsequent to the original Michaelian group did not yield any results. A search for the word “agenda” in the published channeling of JP Van Hulle found that the concept of agenda was usually applied to what became known formally as the “Life Plan”, which is what the soul and/or Essence intended to happen during the lifetime. This is not exactly the same usage of the term as during the original Michaelian group; I regard it as an additional application of the term.

There are situations where physical and spiritual (aka Personality and Essence) agendas are reciprocally related: the more of one the less of the other. There are at least two ways to deal with this situation in a healthy way:

1. Minimize the physical needs and distractions, but not so much that it becomes asceticism. In other words, aim for “moderation in all things”, the Zen Buddhist ideal. One can read more about this in the chapter on “Balanced Man”. Briefly stated and generally speaking, the Michaels do not recommend asceticism — “poverty consciousness” — as the ideal spiritual path for their Students, but neither do they recommend “prosperity consciousness”, as if wealth was an indicator of righteousness.
2. Maximize the extraction of spiritual catalyst from physical experiences. One might say that this is the essence of the Michaelian teachings: it purports to provide the understanding of what life is all about, so that one can derive the most benefit from it, in both the physical and the spiritual realms.

AGREEMENTS AND SEQUENCES

Because reincarnation is the foundational doctrine of the Michaelian teachings, one can reasonably expect that the Michaels would have explained to the original Michaelian group how it worked. One of those doctrines is that Fragments on the Astral Plane between lives make plans for the upcoming incarnation. Two components of those plans are called “Agreements” and “Sequences”. Because the two components are somewhat related, they are discussed in this one chapter.

So let’s take a look at what the transcriptions have to say. The following Q&A exchanges are provided in the chronological order in which they were given.

Agreements and Sequences per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Before the doctrine of Agreements and Sequences was formally introduced, I take the following passage as a hint of them:

Billie: I would like to know where my [deceased] twins are living [reincarnated] now.

We would prefer not to [say], for some fairly obvious reasons. There was a necessity for you to experience this grief. The souls that obliged [your necessary experience] also had the need to finish out a role [Agreement] they cheated on [Abdicated]; both of them suicided previously. They needed only to experience the death [not a full life]. [01 November 1973]

The first mention of Agreements and Sequences nearly a year after the beginning of the original Michaelian group sessions. This happened the usual way that the Michaels initiated a new component of their teaching, namely as a side comment to a question asked. In this case it was in an answer about Karma:

Cheryl: Do you need to acknowledge all Karma before you can become conscious?

That is valid. There are also what we will call for the moment “Sequences” that link souls together life after life and are not true Karmic Ribbons. In these Sequences, souls Agree to ‘play out certain scenes’ together, again reversing the goals and completing Monads. Many of you are in Sequences with other members of this group, but there are no Karmic Ribbons between you. [20 February 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Karma” and “Monads” for lengthy discussions about those components of the Michaelian teachings. Basically and briefly, Karma and Sequences are types of Monads, and Monads always consist of Cardinal and Ordinal halves, and these require role reversals so that the person experiences both sides of an equation, and that advances the person forward a stage or upward a level. Regarding “play out scenes”, refer to the chapter “Drama” for more instances where the Michaels use the metaphor of the theatrical arts for some of the things that happen during reincarnation. The whole thing about Monads (which includes Karma and Agreements) is that two Fragments have some differences in terms of some Cardinal-Ordinal polarity that they need or want to resolve and reconcile and transcend in order to grow spiritually or reintegrate the Entity. I refer to this Monadic process as “alchemy” because it is like transmuting a base metal (lead) into a noble metal (gold).

Do we as a group have any obligation to our fellow man?

No. You have a desire to hear now some information that you rejected at another time. Also, you have Agreed to perform a task for yourselves to burn Karma. [13 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Karma”, where you will read further documentation that the matter and manner of burning Karmic Ribbons is a type of Agreement between souls on the Astral Plane to do a Sequence during incarnation.

The financial problems arise mostly out of the scrapes from the differing Overleaves. Mostly the two of you Agreed to play out this Sequence — this to help you complete a Monad when you were barren. [20 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Overleaves — Interactions”. There are circumstances and situation where and when issues and difficulties and problems are the result of something other than Karma, and something other than an Agreement to play out a Sequence where there is conflict resulting from the polarity that is built into the experience of a Monad.

Joan said something about the soul choosing on the Astral Plane ...

We would agree with the lady Joan. (It chooses) without interference of Maya. The Infant Soul is able to make the choices on the Astral Plane, but the quality of those choices is often poor.

Joan: Do some [souls] make choices to work out certain things while on the Astral level?

This is Agreed upon Astrally. This does not appear as difficult as it becomes on the Physical Plane. [03 April 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Maya” for more information about distorted perceptions on the Physical Plane, and Maya means that choices made by people are not totally ideal. On the other hand, souls on the Astral Plane have a distorted perception of life on the Physical Plane — they forget how difficult it is there — so that means that sometimes the Agreements made on the Astral Plane are not totally ideal. People who have a Near Death Experience (NDE) often report that “guides” help souls make better choices. Whatever the situation that leads to a choice or Agreement, recall that reincarnation is all about the learning process, and learning means that stupid, ignorant souls and people inevitably learn the ‘hard’ way.

I read in previous notes that Karmic Ribbons must be burned. How are Ribbons burned?

Burning Karmic Ribbons consists essentially of collecting or repaying debts incurred in the past. As your Sequential partners do not necessarily reincarnate at the same time always, this process may take centuries. The problem being that you as the debtor will still have subliminal knowledge of the debt whether or not the person to whom it is owed is on the Physical Plane. This will usually result in some barrier to spiritual growth. Sometimes, souls search for entire lifetimes, are restless and insecure and cannot gain any insight to why they are compelled to search. The payment or collection can consist of a physical remittance such as money or an emotional one such as nurturing, or even a spiritual bond such as master and pupil. Karmic Ribbons concerning violence are usually settled with violence in the earlier Cycles. Those occurring in the later Cycles are usually settled more pacifically. We would encourage acknowledgment of any of these. The Older Souls are generally not given to commit violent acts. [17 April 1974]

Apply what is said here about burning Karmic Ribbons to the making of any kind of Agreement to experience a Sequence. Anyone who works for a large company knows that it can be a tangled mess to coordinate the calendars of various people for the purpose of conducting a business meeting.

About a month later, a lengthy Q&A exchange on this topic ensued:

Comment: We wondered if he would burn the Ribbons he had left, and went on considering that everyone on earth has a goal — a set of things to experience and learn on the Physical Plane. We wondered about the betrayal of Astral Agreements we may have made, and someone asked if Michael would let us know what missions we had decided to accomplish.

We will, yes, but we had hoped that by giving you the Overleaves and Photographing the patterns, the insights would come. Many of you already have some inkling of what you have Agreed to do merely by discussing your Karmic Ribbons and interwoven Sequences. These tasks are not always difficult; many are not even very interesting, but in some way, they enrich the Fragment and lead to the experiencing of all of life.

Refer to chapters “Photography” and “Insight” and “Task”.

Is our Essence aware of the things we have to accomplish?

The group answered, yes, and that we needed to be in touch with our Essence.

Being in contact with Essence is a good thing in every way, not just in discerning Agreements; refer to the section “Essence Contact” in the chapter “Essence and Personality”.

Dick: Can Michael tell me what I have chosen to accomplish in this life?

On the Astral Plane, you Agreed to experience the frustrations of one seeking love through the Repression Mode, to learn the lesson of sadness, which you had not experienced previously. The true feeling of poignancy of sadness only comes to those in this Mode. Other emotions simply mock this. It is a necessary part of life in order that you experience [its opposite] joy. Also, on the more mundane side, you also Agreed to provide the children for Alice’s Monad.

Refer to chapters “Love” and “Joy”. Those are the Positive Poles of Monads, the Negative Poles being “frustration” and “sadness”.

Who do you [make Agree[ments] with on the Astral Plane?

With yourself and the others in your Sequence. For example, the man Jim and the lady Joan agreed that their paths would cross in this life so they could burn a Ribbon. [15 May 1974]

My understanding is that “with yourself” means that your Astral self (the Fragment) makes an Agreement with the “dominant thread” of the incarnate Personality self; refer to the chapter “Composites” for more about the notion that the greater self has levels within it, and the notion that coordination between them is a thing.

Following is another lengthy Q&A exchange about the relationship of the levels of the self when it comes to the whole phenomenon of Agreements and Sequences:

Shirley: Is my husband Glenn’s eye deterioration a Karmic thing?

Not strictly speaking. However, he did Agree to experience this. You were blind in a former life.

Shirley: How is he experiencing this?

He is experiencing it the reverse of that life now, except you were brothers then. You also could distinguish light from dark then. We do not see him losing light perception.

Shirley: Why would anyone choose this?

Much can be learned from this vantage point. Many Older Souls do choose blindness to come in touch with other senses. Blindness, as considered on the Astral Plane, appears quite different than that experienced directly on the Physical Plane, although the basic concept remains the same, and the lesson is learned. Perceptions and sensations are so different on the Astral Plane. It is necessary that they be, otherwise no Fragment would ever complete the physical Cycle. Most of the time, by the time the Astral Fragment settles down to work, at least twenty five and usually fifty or more, years have gone by since transition, and memories are dim.

Shirley: Would eye surgery help him? (He has glaucoma and the cornea is becoming stiff.)

This adventure will not have a great deal of effect one way or another, but if he wishes, we see no risk to his life.

Shirley: It is a hell of a lot of bother if it won’t help.

Dick: When is enough? What decides? In Personality, one could say it was enough ...

This decision cannot be made from Personality with any positive results. The only positive results emanate from the true realization that this has been experienced, but more important, that the soul recognizes a pattern controlled by self. The Essence or soul, as we have said before, does become encrusted with [metaphorical] ‘barnacles’, and has much to go through to act intuitively. Most of the time, its powers are totally suppressed, and it spends its time slumbering, as you well know. Those moments of crystal clarity come about when it is prodded into wakefulness by some shock.

Cheryl: What have I to accomplish?

Yours is much harder, Cheryl. For one thing, you have Agreed to jump from one Cycle to the other, which involves a major change in your perceptions of the world around you. We think this is progressing rather nicely.

Cheryl: Could the task be that of a teacher?

Why does this not seem plausible from your present Level? There are certain Sequences and major Monads that are more easily experienced from the Mature Cycle than any of the others. After all, it is during this Cycle that the perceptions of the emotions of those around you are sharper than they will be again. [15 May 1974]

The point to be emphasized here is a repeat of what was said previously: if one is to understand and appreciate and deal effectively and efficiently with one’s Agreements and Sequences during an incarnation, then it is good to be in contact with one’s Essence, where one can see the phenomenon from a higher perspective.

In the next session, there was another lengthy discussion of Agreements and Sequences. Again, notice that Agreements with others to do Sequences together are intended to learn specific lessons:

Dick: I found the most important key to myself was asking Michael the question concerning what my purpose with this incarnation was. Would you like to ask that?

This lady Agreed, among other things, to achieve the state of the true filial love through the barriers of rather severe disability not to give up, but to continue to seek, no matter what befell her, and this she has done. The lady has also Agreed to serve as an example to three others similarly afflicted, but not so indomitably, and to two she has presented this example; one is yet to come. The lady has few Ribbons to burn.

Mary: I feel I have much unfinished Business with many and I can't correlate this to what I have just heard.

That which incurs Karma must be considered as the most serious of all of life's endeavors. Many times, you have the feeling you describe merely by being closely involved in the lives of others, or by playing out a Sequence that has, for you, an unhappy or unsatisfactory ending. This happens more usually in the male-female relationships that ebb and flow, as those involved run into their Sequential or Karmic patterns and leave you by the wayside. This has happened several times in your life where you have had to change course in midstream in order to keep an Astral-made Contract.

Richard: I have a feeling that [with the] task I chose, I have bitten off more than I can chew.

We think that you can handle it. You are correct that you have not begun. You wasted a good many years fretting, Richard.

Dick: Would you like to ask — what is the task you have chosen when on the Astral Plane?

Richard has Agreed to come to Balance through the Intellectual Center in this life since he is still Trapped in the Emotional Part of Moving Center. He does have a formidable task. This will result in some quite startling changes in perception of those all-important priorities.

Alice: What have I agreed to accomplish in this life? I don't seem to have any perceptions along this line. Perhaps, I just had to raise the six children.

It was more important than simply bearing the children. The lesson lies in the recognition of those children as true entities within themselves and not merely as an extension of yourself. You have had many children in the past, but not these children. In them lies the lesson. [18 May 1974]

I like to capitalize the word "Business" in this context as a generic term for what souls Agree to do together (Karma, Monads, Sequences) because it is consistent with capitalizing those specific types of Business. The word "Contract" is also a good synonym for an Astral-made Agreement; a Contract seems more serious than a verbal promise sealed with a handshake. Refer to the chapters "Task" for more instances of the use of that word, here used as a synonym for a Sequence.

Shirley: What did I Agree to accomplish while on the Astral Plane?

Easy interpersonal relationships have not always been possible for this Warrior. To grow in the strength of firm interpersonal ties was one of the Agreements. In the past, you have been terribly independent and have not worked at this. It is necessary that you experience the cooperation borne of filial love. Also, Shirley, you agreed to assist the man [husband] Glenn, to adjust to the sightlessness and build a life based on this change.

Shirley had several siblings, Louise among them. The family migrated from dust-bowl Oklahoma to California during the Great Depression. This is the type of thing that required much cooperation. This instance can be generalized to the notion that spiritual family members often Agree to incarnate in a physical family in order to work out issues and learn lessons. It sometimes, perhaps often, takes the strength of an Astral Agreement to persevere in the face of adverse circumstances. Agreements are mutual: Shirley and Glenn both had things to experience. Although it does not say so here, the soul of Glenn apparently also had reasons to experience a handicap.

Mallory: I would like to know if ... I have a Sequence with these people — mother, father, son.

Yes. You Agreed to aid this man in understanding at a deeper level. [30 May 1974]

She was an older soul than they were, and understanding trickles 'down hill' in such cases.

Could we recall about him/her?

Yes. You have a Sequence that you Agreed upon with another student.

Joan: Someone in this group?

Definitely. The Sequence is not with you, Joan. In the case of Sequences, we would prefer that the students recognize them. We could easily manufacture many Sequences. Fertile imagination.

Narra: How do I discover this Sequence?

Unfolding events, most likely.

Betty: Do I have a Sequence with Barbara or Cheryl?

The lady does not have a Sequence with Barbara, but we did not say that she and Cheryl had not known each other before. They have, many times. [05 June 1974]

This is not the only time that the Michaels suggested that students figure things out for themselves, rather than depend on the Michaels to give the answers from on high; refer to the chapters “Insight” and “Intuition” for more about that.

Another extensive Q&A exchange was recorded as follows:

Dick: Regarding Sequences: Do souls differ in Sequences? How many? Are all of us in this group part of my Sequence?

Sequences, of course, vary a great deal from life to life. Usually, those in a Sequence with you will make a far greater impression upon your memory than just ordinary acquaintances. Then too, in some way, there will be influences within the relationship.

Often, a favorite teacher has been in a Sequence with you or a particularly close adolescent chum with whom you later lose track. Sequences can be between two people or can be large enough to accommodate a group this large. This group is not just one Sequence though. There are at least five Sequences here.

Dick: What establishes a Sequence?

Souls agree while still on the Astral Plane to experience certain segments of life and also may choose at that time to experience it with other Fragments of the same Entity or close Entities, primarily because of the ease with which such experiences can be accomplished.

Dick: Sequence involves Fragments or Entities?

It can involve both your own Entity and Fragments of another Entity that has the same or similar needs. For example, Richard, Sarah, Cheryl, and Victoria all have different Sequences that can be accomplished by the same route. Cheryl and Sarah are also within a same Sequence.

Louise: Shirley and I are sisters now — are we Sequencing?

This [siblinghood] does not normally make a Sequence.

Cheryl: So what does make a Sequence?

Agreement to play out a certain fragment of life. For instance, we have told you before that not all parents and their children are playing out the Parent-Child Monad. This Monad results in a far more complex relationship than just the ordinary one. Siblings are taught by this culture that they must feel something for each other and are encouraged to even falsify such conditions. This is not always true. Relationships within the typical nuclear family are rarely honest because of this.

Dick: Dislike carry over on Astral Plane, because on the Astral Plane, the facade is all gone.

Discussion about why we can't pay Karmic debts on the Astral Plane.

You may think of it as an enormous theater with continuous performances, if you wish. The analogy is a good one, for that is precisely what happens. On the Astral Plane, the actors Agree to perform certain roles, only they are cast loose on a booby-trapped stage [onto the Physical Plane], so to speak — it makes for livelier action, more experiences that way. The birth trauma [in returning to the Physical Plane] most of the time takes care of [erases] a great deal of the memories [of prior lives and Astral Plane plans]. It also plants the seeds of aggressiveness and the will to survive.

Betty: What is my Life Task?

As with most Priests, it is primarily missionary in nature and will involve your own ability to project the teaching from your own center of serenity to the most unlikely group of students. Also, in this lifetime, you have agreed to play out Sequences, only two of which you have begun.

A “task” — is it one or several things?

“The” task that most of you in this room have agreed upon is that you will attempt to hear the words. This is paramount. The others are life tasks and vary from Fragment to Fragment, depending upon what you have experienced in the past. [12 June 1974]

Richard: I would like a comment on my intuitions lately and the "fact" that my aura indicates healing. Did I Agree to this [healing intuitions] on the Astral Plane?

It is not that you Agreed to do this on the Astral Plane, it is more that the combination of Overleaves you chose given your affinity for this. By all means, try it. [16 June 1974]

Marty: [Karmic] Ribbon or a Sequence with Dennis (the alcoholic)?

This man is a Mid-Cycle Mature Sage, yes, in Submission with Self-destruction as a Chief Feature, not as strong now as formerly. He was badly frightened by his recent experiences, enough to take a look at this. An Idealist in the Observation Mode. There was Agreed upon a Sequence here that you would offer shelter. [19 June 1974]

Joan: How many Sequences have I begun in this life, how many are finished and how many have I agreed to pay out in this life

You have finished one to mutual satisfaction. You have agreed to two total life Sequences, meaning that you will probably relate closely to these two for the entire physical [life] span. There are three additional Sequences, two of which you are aware of now, one which has not yet begun. [23 June 1974]

Victoria: What is my task?

Your primary task is, of course, the same as the others, that of an attempt to hear these words. Also, you have Agreed to give of your creative abilities, the gift of color and design, and to express yourself in this mode. [25 June 1974]

Cheryl: I think I have Agreed to do something in medicine or music as a secondary task. Is this so?

Couldn't these be successfully combined or, perhaps, the answer will come to you on your journey?

Is a Sequence always an agreement or plan between two, or can three or more play out the same Sequence?

Yes, as many as is necessary. There can be several hundred [in a Sequence].

Joan: Can Sequences be categorized in any way? If so, can you describe the categories?

Only loosely, as experiential, [as] vicarious, and those Sequences that involve only minimal participation, in which you act merely as the catalyst.

Do Sequences always involve learning or do they ever agree for frivolous reasons?

Souls in resting Sequences often agree on the Astral Plane to play out frivolous Sequences.

Have Narra and Joan agreed to play out a Sequence?

Yes.

Is that the one I am aware of?

Yes. You are not in the resting interval. It is a learning Sequence.

Joan: Is the other Sequence I am to play out with Jim?

No.

Joan: Is there anybody else in the group besides Narra with whom I have a Sequence?

You do, yes.

Joan: Do I have a Sequence with anyone in this room?

All of these are more readily verified if the insights come to you.

Joan: Could my teaching be a Sequence?

In part. It is communication vastly expanded. Your talents — teaching — will be more in demand, soon. [03 July 1974]

Dick: I need a change of my Overleaves in order to have courage enough to look at strange people's eyes as deeply as I need to, but rarely do. It seems that a Power Mode would be best for this or Passion, also.

... the relationship with Kathryn is a Sequence that you Agreed upon and one that requires that you move from your present Mode if you are to see it through. [07 July 1974]

Victoria: Do I have a Sequence with anyone in this group?

Yes.

Victoria: Is it with Cheryl, or Sarah and Richard?

Liz is quite correct in saying that most of you are in a Sequence together.

For five of you, it amounts to a life Sequence. In other words, one that will keep you together for the remainder of this physical life.

Ten of you have Agreed also to work with each other in this group.

Victoria has Sequences with Cheryl, yes, but with two others who she has not yet met, and with Patrice (a French girl who spent a week with the Alice and Dick last spring and whom Victoria and Cheryl will be spending a month with in Europe, if things go right).

Carolyn: I will be taking a trip in two weeks and a friend of mine wishes to go, too. I would like verification of his SRG and if we have Sequences together. He keeps popping up at odd times. Is he a Young Slave?

Your Sequence is with the lady. [17 July 1974]

Liz: Was my experience with Paul a Ribbon or merely a Sequence?

The lady Liz is the one who has had a Sequence with the man Paul. Your experience with him enabled her to go through. The man Paul is in Stagnation. He is a Mid-Cycle Mature Sage.

Liz: Does Ted have a Sequence with Richard?

Yes. You have Agreed to work together on a dream that belongs to each of you. You have Agreed with this Artisan to assist him in the implementation of his plans for building. [13 August 1974]

[[Continue to search. Include "abdicat" in search.]]

Concluding Comments on Agreements and Sequences

ALEXANDRIA

Are you as pissed as I am, two thousand years later, about the destruction of the Library of Alexandria? Could our dismay about this monumental loss of knowledge go beyond the typical Scholarly love of information? As we will see in this chapter, when we compile and review the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, it was said that many Michaelian students were members of the Alexandrian Mystery School, which was affiliated with the Library.

Alexandrian Library and School

>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Library_of_Alexandria<

>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alexandrian_school<

Alexandria per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The first mention of Alexandria in the original Michaelian group transcriptions happened about two months after the appearance of the Michaels:

We had discussed the burning of the library at Alexandria by Justinian. Richard voiced the fear that perhaps we would do a repeat of this, but this time out of shame, so that future generations would not know how irresponsible we were. Then he asked Michael if the books were burned at Alexandria out of shame.

Misguided zeal. He (Justinian) regarded science as evil. [08 October 1973]

The Wikipedia article on the Library of Alexandria (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Library_of_Alexandria<), does not mention a burning by the Roman emperor Justinian (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Justinian_I<), who ruled from 527–565 CE, but it does mention a burning in the time of Julius Caesar in the year 48 BCE. Historical accounts differ, but many scrolls may have been destroyed, but the Library is known to have continued to function in some capacity for the next few hundred years.

Regarding the partial burning of the library, that seems to have happened a couple of times:

In 48 BC, during Caesar's Civil War, Julius Caesar was besieged at Alexandria. His soldiers set fire to some of the Egyptian ships docked in the Alexandrian port while trying to clear the wharves to block the fleet belonging to Cleopatra's brother Ptolemy XIV. This fire purportedly spread to the parts of the city nearest to the docks, causing considerable devastation. The first-century AD Roman playwright and Stoic philosopher Seneca the Younger quotes Livy's Ab Urbe Condita Libri, which was written between 63 and 14 BC, as saying that the fire started by Caesar destroyed 40,000 scrolls from the Library of Alexandria. The Greek Middle Platonist Plutarch (c. 46–120 AD) writes in his Life of Caesar that, "[W]hen the enemy endeavored to cut off his communication by sea, he was forced to divert that danger by setting fire to his own ships, which, after burning the docks, thence spread on and destroyed the great library." The Roman historian Cassius Dio (c. 155 –c. 235 AD), however, writes: "Many places were set on fire, with the result that, along with other buildings, the dockyards and storehouses of grain and books, said to be great in number and of the finest, were burned." However, Florus and Lucan only mention that the flames burned the fleet itself and some "houses near the sea".

Thereafter in the Wikipedia article followed some discussion of the varying stories about the extent of the destruction. Then we find that there were other destructive fires:

In 272 AD, the emperor Aurelian fought to recapture the city of Alexandria from the forces of the Palmyrene queen Zenobia. During the course of the fighting, Aurelian's forces destroyed the Broucheion quarter of the city in which the main library was located. If the Mouseion and Library still existed at this time, they were almost certainly destroyed during the attack as well. If they did survive the attack, then whatever was left of them would have been destroyed during the emperor Diocletian's siege of Alexandria in 297.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Library_of_Alexandria< — retrieved 15 April 2022]

So, Justinian lived and reigned a few hundred years after the library was apparently destroyed. Therefore, I would say that this passage seems to be an instance of a lack of accuracy on the part of the channel. (By the way, I personally am not of a mindset to supposedly reconcile apparently erroneous channeling with recorded history by saying that there are different timelines in parallel universes, so as to make both true.)

The next mention of Alexandria is this

Ray: Michael has said I am a Sage. I have the feeling that I have had lives before with soldiers and I would like them to verify that.

You always expressed yourself in a most vociferous way, even as a soldier. This resulted in your not always being there at the finish, but you have also been a philosopher of some renown twice; a teacher of rhetoric three times: once in Alexandria, at the same time that Shirley was employed by the household of Marcus Antonius. You were also a stevedore once, but still managed to expound. In fact, you ended up owning the ships you once loaded.

Ray: Oh, wow ... which philosophers?

One of the philosophers was Epictetus and David Hume. [08 November 1973]

JimB: Was I ever in Egypt?

In the fourth century before the Common Era and again in Alexandria at the turn of the Cycle. [31 December 1973]

Was Christ influenced by the Eleusinian mystery religion?

Not particularly, but [he] was heavily influenced by Socrates and Epicurus, as well as the Alexandrian brotherhood, which really was a counterpart to the Eleusinian School. [10 January 1974]

The Alexandrian brotherhood were those versed in both traditional Judaism and the Pagan mysteries. From the book Suns of God (page 537): the Alexandrian brotherhood became known as the Therapeuts, who in turn created Christianity using the Greek scriptures, which had been translated by their predecessors.

Richard: I would like to ask about 3 temple scenes that came to me in meditation recently.

One was the Great Mosque, Medina. One was a Buddhist monastery in Laos still extant. The other a temple in Alexandria.

Richard: Why?

The mosque was something that Sarah was remembering. The others were Fragments of your own past. [10 January 1974]

Mallory: Are there any ties for me in this group?

Your ties with this group go back to the first century of this era, when you were in Alexandria [Egypt]. [22 January 1974]

Barbara: Does this mention of Alexandria in Egypt have anything to do with the "White Brotherhood"?

By all means. We wish for you the opportunity to propagate the Logos. How you do it should be as comfortable as possible, so that you can devote yourself best to growth and not to struggle.

Refer to the chapter "Brotherhood (Occult)". From ><https://holyorderofmans.org/advanced-activity/history-of-the-white-brotherhood/><: "A few centuries before the birth of Jesus, the White Brotherhood built a college of the higher sciences at Alexandria, similar to the former religious center they built in Heliopolis centuries earlier as one of the largest and best structures for the preservation of the ancient Egyptian records."

Barbara: When? Who was our master?

You were students together at the museum at Alexandria. Medical students.

Jim: Since it was said that I was there, too, was I there at the same time?

That is valid.

Mallory: It was said that I, too, was in Alexandria; was I with them?

(You were there) several hundred years prior to that in the time of the Macedonian conquest.

Shirley: I was said to have tutored there; was I there at that time?

(You were) there also. Two of you were sent there to study: Dick and Joan.

Dick: Was it to study medicine?

No.

Dick: What, then?

Astronomy, rhetoric, philosophy. [06 February 1974]

⑤ ALIENATION

This chapter is the product of a search for the word alienation in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Alienation issues are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word alienation is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that alienation is a negative to be mitigated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypassing. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Chapters closely related to this chapter are “Intimacy”, “Strangers”, and “Trust”, as you can readily see from their names. Many other chapters are not so closely related to this chapter, and those are noted where appropriate.

Alienation per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they appear in the transcriptions. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first appearance of the word was in one of the Tomas sessions in the summer of 1973, all of which occurred before the Michaels themselves appeared:

Angie: I have been considering moving into a commune and I would like to know if it is better to live in a commune or to live alone.

[Tomas:] I think that the communal life offers a great deal so long as the goals of the commune are those of continued spiritual growth and they do not conflict with what you know to be true. Living alone offers little and I would not recommend it to anyone. Isolation breeds alienation and alienation breeds suspicion that leads to jealousy, possessiveness, and greed, the three cardinal stumbling blocks on the path to awareness. [24 July 1973]

The founding members of the original Michaelian group had been members of the Fellowship of Friends, an esoteric group based on the Gurdjieffian teachings. That group was moving toward communal living as a method for mitigating the alienation that is a by-product of civilization, and the original Michaelian group also discussed moving in that direction during the entirety of its two-year existence. Communal living mitigates alienation as a by-product of spiritual growth. Refer to the chapter “Communal Living” for the whole story.

The following appeared in the first session in which the Michaels were the contactee:

Comments: Concerning the “alien corn”. That part that was brought to mind was about homesickness and longing. The corn, you know, is neutral. It just grows and gives ears of corn, but it is called “alien corn” because it is not growing in her home.

To have the feeling of home, the Essence must be at peace. As long as the ‘different drummer’ still sounds different to you, you will remain out of step with the music. [12 August 1973]

American philosopher Henry David Thoreau (July 12, 1817 – May 6, 1862) wrote in the conclusion of his book Walden: “If a man loses pace with his companions, perhaps it is because he hears a different drummer. Let him step to the music which he hears, however measured, or far away.” The point of including this Q&A exchange in this chapter is to note that some people are born to be weird, and obviously this means that it is difficult for them to fit into the socio-cultural milieu in which they are born. Thus, they tend to feel alienated, unless they can accept and embrace themselves as weird. As we will see below, it is common for older souls to not be able to fit into this world dominated by younger souls, and this is why some of them are drawn to communal living, where their inherent belief, value, and behavior systems are not weird. Refer to the chapters “Essence and Personality” and “Liberation” where we find the metaphor that Essence feels ‘trapped’ by incarnation; this world and human bodies are not its natural abode, its ‘home’.

Dick: Do you have any suggestions for my changing attitudes in work? Is there anything I could bring into my grasp right now?

You are beginning to understand the concept of Maya. This will automatically aid you in your practice.

Structural Integration is valid only for Emotionally Centered souls who are out of contact with Intellect[ual]

Center and alienated from their [Moving Center] bodies. Gestalt therapy is valid for Intellectually Centered souls who need to contact their emotions. Hypnosis is most valuable for Moving Centered souls. None of this will be successful if you are not dealing with Mature Souls (middle Cycle) [or older]. [04 September 1973]

Not only can a person be ‘out of step’ with their socio-cultural milieu as mentioned above, they can also be ‘out of touch’ with components of their own being as discussed here. Some therapeutic modalities have been discovered or devised to mitigate the alienation that each Center can have for the other Centers. Refer to the chapter “Balanced Man” for a discussion of physio-therapeutic, emoto-therapeutic, psycho-therapeutic, and spiritual practices that foster integration of Centers. Refer to the chapter “Maya” for a discussion of the notion that the younger-soul socio-cultural milieu is ‘out of touch’ with (alienated from) truth.

That last statement is confirmed in the next appearance of the word alienation”

Sarah: People with money are Young Souls. That is what their goal is.

Dick: They [Michael] have never told us about war.

Christopher: It’s Karmically programmed to happen.

It [war] happens because Young Souls are in the majority on your world. They are largely motivated by the desire for material achievement [what money can buy]. This is an alienating goal. [08 September 1973]

In my understanding of the structure and meaning of the Overleaf System, the Young Soul Age is an Aspect of the so-called “Analysis Process” along with the other Aspects of the Analysis Process, namely Rejection, Caution, Self-destruction (Renunciation), Artisan, Skeptic, and Intellectual. All of these Aspects of Personality tend to alienate the person from themselves and from the environment, so if a person has one or more of these traits, they will have greater likelihood of feeling alienated compared to people who do not have an Analysis Process trait.

Dick: We’re likely to feel alienated from society. Perhaps the Young Souls who are with it, do not feel the alienation. [06 October 1973]

By “we” Dick referred to the older souls who were members of the original Michaelian group; they found each other because of their common interest in esoterica. “Birds of a feather flock together”. Young Souls are interested in exoterica; they are competitive by nature precisely because they are not in harmony with, they are alienated from, the natural order. However, they do gather together in businesses in order to more effectively deal with the “civilized” world that they create and exploit. In a Young Soul socio-cultural milieu, there is a constant struggle between cooperative and competitive behavior, emotions, and beliefs; as with all struggles, this is paradoxical:

Then [in the ancient Roman Empire] cities were crowded, and [yet] the city dwellers were alienated from each other. [27 December 1973]

The paradox of feeling alienated in crowded cities has been noted by sociologists. The reason for it is that humans evolved in extended family units during the paleolithic hunter-gatherer stage, and evolved in tribal villages during the neolithic agricultural-pastoral stage — everybody knew everybody else in the family and in the tribe. The human psyche has a limitation in the quantity of people that it can get to know and effectively deal with, about 150 others (the so-called “Dunbar number”, named after the sociologist who researched and elaborated on the notion). Therefore, when people began to collect into cities during the bronze-iron civilization stage of socio-cultural evolution, as a whole everyone was surrounded by strangers; thus they were “alienated” from each other. Consequently, for the city-state to work, there was a need for top-down governmental control of the citizenry. City-states both traded with each other and warred with each other as they constantly sought a workable balance or trade-off between cooperation and competition.

One of the consequences of living in large socio-cultural milieus such as cities is that people tend to seek companionship and friendship in smaller groups of like-minded people where they are not surrounded by strangers, where they do not feel alienated, such as a church or a guild or a business ... or a commune:

Take a look at the problems that bring millions of people to the psychiatric couch each year and they all boil down to alienation. The greatest advantage of communal living is the elimination of isolation in an opportunity to grow in an environment that is protective and nurturing. If you are concerned about others taking advantage of you, this simply means that much more work is needed in this area by you. Then you must get to a space where no one else can take advantage of you. You can become invulnerable, particularly if you stop taking a lack of enthusiasm on others’ part as a personal slight. [30 December 1973]

Previously I noted that the Intellectual Center and its beliefs tends to be alienating, as that Center is an Aspect of the Analysis Process. In a commune, the Intellectual Center’s propensity for alienation tends to be mitigated because of whatever shared belief system brought the people together into a cooperative environment. A commune also provides a safe environment for Moving Center “protectiveness” and for Emotional Center “nurturing”. Refer to the chapter “Trust” for relevant information.

Ellis: Going back to the origin of man[kind], I find the source of my trouble is awareness of self in contrast to intellect, as an individual.

That is valid. That is where all of the problems are. You are right on that. We have said much about alienation, and one of its causes is this awareness of self as a separate and unique being in a hostile universe. We have also said that the universe is not hostile; it is completely neutral. Man’s separatism is an illusion, part of Maya for the Essence to overcome on the upward climb. You are now beginning to reorganize your perceptions to include the larger whole; all Old Souls do. Your own manifestation has been protracted by your own design. It has taken you a long time to question this and you must still ask many questions, as there is still a hiatus in your knowledge. [24 January 1974]

Among the mentions of alienation in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, this is one of the best descriptions and explanations. Refer to the chapter “Creature of Reason” for a more complete description of the humanoid stage of biological evolution and its challenges. Briefly, the Creature-of-Reason stage of biological evolution is the third stage, the human stage, above and beyond the first stage (reptile) and the second stage (mammal). It is another Aspect of the Analysis Process that includes Intellectual Center, Rejection, Skeptic, Caution, and Renunciation.

Edgar: Did the Atlanteans have help?

They were more imaginative and far less aggressive. Also, they were not alienated. [27 January 1974]

No more information is given about the reason for the alleged lack of alienation of the alleged Atlantean civilization. If I were to speculate on the reason, I would point out that to be “imaginative” is an expression of the Higher Intellectual Center, which is said to have the Poles of +Integration and –Telepathy, both of which are contra-indications of alienation. This is in contrast to the function of the Intellectual Center, which tends to be alienating:

Dick: Is introspection a way to spiritual growth? I find if I pursue it, I get depressed and it just repeats and repeats.

Some degree of introspection is, of course, necessary in order to dredge up blocked truths. But you are right, Dick, it is a trap, a very clever one, that False Personality throws out every so often just to keep the alienation going. This is a primary defense mechanism. For Intellectually Centered souls, it is a sure way of keeping them in Intellectual Center. [06 February 1974]

This passage is yet another indication, in addition to what we see above and below in this chapter, that alienation is related to Intellectual Center function. It is the function of that Center to see and note and name distinctions in the external world as part of the symbolization process that is mostly unique to Creatures of Reason, where symbols represent things 'out there', separate from the self; symbols are manipulated in the Poles of the Intellectual Center, +Thought and -Reason. Entrapment there inhibits the person from progressing through the Neutral Center to the higher Centers, where there is no alienation.

Alice: I feel I have accepted these things.

The primary difficulty lies in the sense of longing, and this is an inner struggle that both Alice and Dick must work through. The alienation is real at the present; it may not always be. [12 June 1973]

Emotional yearning is fingered in this passage as part of alienation. Add that to the cognitive dissonance noted in other passages.

Dick: Alienation; varies from person to person. Stems from conditioning...

Also, [alienation varies] from the sense of pride one has in one's achievements, this being wholly in Personality, and it [culture-induced alienation] can be almost inversely proportional to the amount of alienation suffered by the soul [from the Personality]. And yes, this [alienation] is culturally induced. That [alienation] is valid we think directly [— it varies proportional to the amount of cultural influence absorbed by the Personality]. [19 June 1974]

This passage took some thought for me to parse what it was clumsily trying to say; the words in brackets present my best guess at its meaning. I would rephrase it thus: the Personality feels alienation to the direct extent that it is enculturated in this alienated society, and to the inverse extent that the soul or Essence is not alienated from the Personality. This is just another way of saying that as a person grows spiritually, they become less alienated from Essence, and they also become less alienated from the socio-cultural milieu because of the increase in loving-kindness and compassion and Agape and such. One might tend to believe that contact with spirit would increase alienation from physicality, but it does not work that way, because spirit should be thought of as inclusive of All That Is, unopposed to anything.

Marty: Newly recovered alcoholic living in my home. Mature Sage or Priest in Submission?

Many [Sages], yes, do have this [alcoholism] problem, sometimes due to the extremely false facade of the life they lead on stage or as a "famous personage". The alienation again drives them into an escape route that often ends in degradation. Sages, because of their flair for the dramatic, usually at one time or another, choose this type of life [alcoholism]. [19 June 1974]

Alienation produces facades or masks that either express what one is not or hide what one is. The point of this passage appears to be that if one is being more true to Essence, to one's true/higher self, then one is less alienated from oneself, and then one is less alienated from other selves and from society in general.

Dick: Could you comment on [Sigmund] Freud's Oedipus Complex?

The imprinting discovered by Freud is not normal imprinting and is perhaps then only a "half-truth." This imprinting is the result of an alienated society with limited identification. In societies where the alienated nuclear family does not exist, this phenomenon does not exist. Intense rivalry will produce this phenomenon each time it occurs, to Exalted Roles more than others. It will be more noticeable in feminine Roles in masculine bodies and the vice versa. Where exposure to models is limited, the phenomenon will be most marked and will have the most far-reaching consequences, in this society especially where seldom more than two generations occupy the same living quarters. [03 September 1974]

From Wikipedia: In psychoanalytic theory, the term Oedipus complex denotes the emotions and ideas that the mind keeps in the unconscious, via dynamic repression, that concentrate upon a boy's desire to sexually possess his mother, and kill his father. Sigmund Freud, who coined the term "Oedipus complex," believed that the Oedipus complex is a desire for the mother in both sexes (he believed that girls have a homosexual attraction towards their mother).

Sarah: Been thinking of Ann Landers and her place in the scheme of things. Her reason for existence is part of alienated society. We are isolated; can't ask anyone else for help. Sad commentary on our existence. Should I write about this?

Of course. [01 October 1974]

It does seem sad that we may have so few intimate friends in this culture that we do not know who to go to other than a newspaper advice columnist to get answers to deeply personal questions.

Would a hypochondriac be a Martyr or what?

This syndrome runs the gamut and permeates the Cycles. It is also another example of the alienation on this world, as often it is an honest plea for some attention, even though that attention might hurt or otherwise be unpleasant. It often takes the form of an uneducated person's reaction to scare propaganda; also, a need for punishment of family members who have not been nice; also, the result of imprinting by an over-concerned parent. [19 October 1974]

Not only can mental health issues result from alienation, but physical health issues can also result; refer to the chapter "Health — Physical and Mental". It has been shown by clinical psychological studies that, for optimal functioning, people should have intimate physical, emotional, and mental contact. To those lower Centers we can add that the Personality self should have intimate contact with the Essence self, in the neutral and the higher Centers.

The original Michaelian group channeling sessions were not the kind of social situation where there was time to focus on developing lack of alienation, aka intimacy, so once in a while they had a party:

We held a group discussion of experiences and impressions during the weekend we spent together. Many of us experienced verification of Soleal, Emotional Center experiences, and a cohesiveness of the group. We then asked Michael for a comment about the weekend the group had spent together, specifically about trust.

It was excellent work to have the group pressed into a crowded situation and yet come away with far more positive emotions than negative ones, even though many privately held belief systems concerning the need for alienation were violated. Those of you who made the experience count will not lose the ground gained. Those students who refused to penetrate the experience are in precisely the same spot as they were before the experience.

Dick: Asked for a comment from Michael regarding his own experiences during the weekend. He felt in an obligated emotional state, non-relating, alienated, didn't feel well, a psychosomatic type illness. He asked if this was a past life carry-over and if there was a rewarding answer, he would like to hear it. [12 November 1974]

The feelings of alienation always surface more strongly when the alienated student is in a situation where he senses on some level that the other students are in contact, either with each other or with the teacher. This happened to you this time. You even anticipated that it would happen and yet your presence was felt and acknowledged by many other students, and they would have felt a definite loss had you not conquered your fears and attended. It would probably astonish you if you could transverse these barriers and feel the cohesiveness.

Dick was an Artisan, and the central issue with Artisans is alienation from self and other, because Artisans are the 'personification', you might say, of the Analysis Process, as noted above. It is a huge step in the right direction for them to experience intimacy with themselves and others, and this often takes very special circumstances. Michaelian students who have attended one of the national gatherings get a taste of what it is like to experience a lack of alienation.

James asked what must we do to become awake.

We have, of course, outlined to this [original Michaelian group] cadre the steps that they must take if they are to ever become sufficiently awake to hear the words. We have told them of the highest truth, which is Agape, which is the unqualified acceptance of other creatures as the greater part of self. We have given them the tools for attainment of this state, which are yes, meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. We have endeavored to warn them, or rather apprise them, of the pitfalls they may encounter on the Path. We have recommended that they simplify their lives, that they may free the necessary energies for pursuit of this objective. We would give you the same advice. It cannot change. This is as we have said many times, the shortest Path of which we are aware. The most penetrating barriers on the Physical Plane are the "I cannot" belief systems that stand in the way of spiritual evolution. The easiest way we know of to break through these barriers is to eliminate the alienation, the frustrating isolation that your culture now imposes. [20 November 1974]

With this statement, all of the following named chapters are made relevant to the subject of this chapter on alienation: "Awakening from Sleep", "Agape", "Meditation and Concentration", "Fasting", "Study", "Path — Spiritual", "Growth — Spiritual", "Complexity versus Simplicity", and "Barriers".

We have suggested to you something even harder in this culture — that of living together. Some of you would much prefer to walk across the desert from Medina to Mecca than even to contemplate living together. This is why it would, in the long run, be valuable. It is perhaps the hardest task you would ever undertake on the Physical Plane, for everything in your culture mitigates against it. The entire culture is achievement-oriented, and this alone implies alienation and competition. Anti-achievement groups [such as spiritual communes] are frightening and, therefore, anti-culture and to be eliminated. Financial integrity is the watchword of this culture and, therefore, fraught with Maya. This can always be easily seen in any culture. That which is held up as the goal of society is the goal of False Personality and, therefore, opposed to spiritual growth. [14 December 1974]

With this statement, all of the following named chapters are made relevant to the subject of this chapter on alienation: “Communal Living”, “Culture”, “Maya”, “Personality — True and False”.

There are abundant resources on this planet. Even though it has been rather ruthlessly plundered, there is still much to spare. The loneliness is heartbreaking, literally, as it is so unnecessary and something that the Personality elects as a method to keep the battle going. If the Personality no longer felt threatened and alienated, there would be no incentive to continue the instinctive drama....

Belonging to these barrier groups gives the illusion of taking the edge off the loneliness. After all, if you can be a party in an organization of several million members, how can you be alone? In fact, these barrier groups only serve to alienate you even further, as they separate you from a larger segment of the population that does not belong to your barrier group. Then, of course, prejudices and hates arise from the perpetuation of these barrier groups, and these serve to fan the fires even further. The war is strengthened and you continue to struggle against the hostile environment, which you must continuously create for yourselves, as it does not exist any longer. This land has been tamed and this is the time to enjoy the fruits of your labor. Why are you not doing so? [21 December 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Loneliness” and “Instinct”.

Ralph: Is the synthesis simpler than the systems that man erects?

In its most evolved form, yes. In words suitable for communication with the members of this enclave, it becomes complex. Again, Creatures of Reason take the simplest activity and render it complex through symbols. The synthesis is not complex. The synthesis seeks integration, simplicity. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence through expressions of individuality, isolation, alienation. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence by assigning themselves a role, even a negative one, if that be the case, of subrogation, taking the responsibility from themselves, assigning that responsibility to a higher power, conveniently beyond the five physical senses and, therefore, unarguable, unprovable, unassailable, safe, comfortable, complex. [26 December 1974]

Refer to chapters “Creatures of Reason”, “Complexity versus Simplicity”, “Justification”, and “Responsibility”.

We have spoken to you earlier of fear. The fear of closeness in your culture is quite a phenomenon. Living communally is a frightening thing. It is, therefore, an experience through which you may learn to move through and beyond fear. Alienation is not synonymous with aloneness. Aloneness is essential for spiritual evolution — aloneness as experienced in the meditative state. You must ultimately stand alone. Alienation is not this spiritual aloneness, but merely a defense mechanism of the False Personality, which wishes to enjoy its illusion of uniqueness.... Group living, your most menacing new horizon, is an opportunity for embracing growth. You may, of course, make another choice. That choice leads to further apartheid, further alienation and further desire to compete — further desire, in other words, for war. [28 December 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Communal Living” and “Loneliness”.

[Soleal:] Until you open yourself to the joy of this verification, you cannot experience the “key”, as you have called it. You have asked for this key many times and it can only be given in love and joy. It cannot be given to an alienated Personality. There is no meeting point where the gift can be transferred. When the meaning of this perception of oneness comes, only then can the gift of higher expression be given. It will then become a gift to your self. It cannot come from the teacher [Michael], nor can it come from me. [11 January 1975]

Refer to chapters “Validation and Verification”, “Love”, “Joy”, and “Centers, Higher”.

Jackie asked about an experience she had about twenty months ago. It was an awful experience — she felt as if her mind had totally went away. It freaked her out. There was a tunnel and she was unconscious.

The experience of nothingness and dissemblance is a common one, for students still see themselves as alienated and alone. Even though you have a close interpersonal relationship at the present moment, at many levels, there is still much fear in you of being alone or symbolically cut off from the rest — in a tunnel so to speak, able to see, yet unable to touch. As long as you feel that alienation from those close to you, the use of these expanding techniques will occasionally produce these bad results. You have conflicts, yet, about those with you forging ahead and leaving you behind. Give them up and you will give up your tunnel vision at the same time. You have as much ability to make the choice of growth as they have — you need only to make it. [25 January 1975]

A question was asked how to go about acquiring property for communal growth.

[Soleal:] Just do it. Enough of you are able to look at this as the way out of the alienation and a new start toward true growth, so that failure is unlikely. That failure is unlikely anyway with such a preponderance of older souls. [01 February 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Communal Living”.

Liz: What are my blocks?

You know them without asking. As with many in this alienated society, you lack love of yourself. Love, acceptance, Agape — all are synonymous. Accept yourself and you may move to love for another. Until you do that, all that we say to you is theoretical. It is an illusion that Agape may be experienced before love for one may be experienced or indeed that Agape may precede your love of yourself. “Self” includes the Personality, as well as the Essence. Can you love that “self” unconditionally, without hope for change? Until you can, Agape is a theory. [05 February 1975]

Refer to chapters “Agape” and “Love” and “Essence and Personality”.

This group engaged in a lengthy discussion of communal living, discipline of small children, the rights of teenagers and the problem of domestic animals. We then asked the Teacher for a comment.

Many thoughts, of course.

The whole purpose of bringing you together communally was not to present you with insurmountable situations and more Friction than you can handle. The purpose instead was to bring you together in the Work. The most startling advantage of all would not be apparent until you were well into the venture and had some experience in dealing with a lack of alienation.

The subject of domestic animals [dogs and cats] is interesting, in that domesticating animals was one of the first symptoms of growing alienation in this culture many centuries ago — almost, in fact, at the dawn [ensoulment of hominins] of Creatures of Reason on this world. Once man gives up his need for alienation, he can then, and only then, look at the reasons for his need for substitutes; he uses domesticated animals in lieu of people. They are expendable, relatively cheap and give away no secrets. (If you are not wearing a cape, how can you conceal a dagger?) [12 February 1975]

Refer to the chapters “Communal Living”, “Friction”, “Work, Spiritual”, “Creatures of Reason”.

In less than a dozen days after this session, the original Michaelian group disbanded, at least in terms of the large group meetings, due partly to the alienating Friction of one self-righteous and obnoxious Gurdjieffian student.

Concluding Comments on Alienation

In one of the earliest transcriptions there was mention of communal living as a lifestyle that mitigates (or should mitigate, if done right) alienation, and in one of the latest transcriptions there was also mention of communal living. One does not realize how alienated one is until one experiences true intimacy with a kindred soul or a group of kindred souls.

ANGER

This chapter is the product of a search for the words “anger” and “angry” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions, and other words with a similar meaning. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Briefly and basically, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

So what is meant by anger? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

The word “anger” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that anger issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology, the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

Anger per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The Baby Soul perceives itself and the world around it as “me” and “many other me-s.” The Baby Soul forms strong beliefs early in childhood, borrowed from those around it, and these are literally unshakable and incorruptible. The Baby Soul is normally agreeable, a pillar of the community — until an opposing viewpoint is expressed. Then, inwardly the Baby Soul is bewildered, baffled by the difference. Outwardly, it will express anger, hostility, negative emotional energy, belligerence. [undated, late August 1973]

Kathryn: Back to being modest: is there any other act I could put on?

Openness would be the best approach. You are quite open, but there are still some closed corridors. You are conscious of the futility of anger, but are not quite sure of how to handle what you interpret as anger, so you tend to avoid situations that might give rise to this. [08 September 1973]

Phyllis: We were talking about depression before. Freud explains that depression is aggression turned inward or that anger turned inward creates depression, doesn't he?

Alice: Like you are mad at yourself?

Phyllis: Like you are mad at anything and if you have no legitimate or acceptable ways of showing it, if I recall Freud correctly, then you turn it inward upon yourself as it were and that creates a depressed state. Experientially, does that seem correct to the people in this room? [02 October 1973]

Phyllis: We were talking about depression before. Freud explains that depression is aggression turned inward or that anger turned inward creates depression, doesn't he?

Alice: Like you are mad at yourself?

Phyllis: Like you are mad at anything and if you have no legitimate or acceptable ways of showing it, if I recall Freud correctly, then you turn it inward upon yourself as it were and that creates a depressed state. Experientially, does that seem correct to the people in this room?

Richard: Yes.

Sarah: Uh huh. (Apparently, others nodded.)

Phyllis: It does?

Dick: It's a question of internal flagellation and I think that it is (False) Personality beating on Essence.

Depression is normally the passive Personality's only channel through which it can express hostility. The anger can be self-directed, but does not have to be.

Alice: Do you mean that people who are aggressive don't get depressed?

Phyllis: Well, that would be the logical conclusion from all this, but I suspect that people who show aggressiveness in ways that manifest to other people, but who, in fact, also suffer this inability to direct their anger in its proper places and therefore turn it inward.

Richard: Some aggressiveness may be caused by inner prodding. You know, "Well say something, dammit!" You shove it onto someone else, yet you still retain a certain amount inside.

Concluding Comments on Anger

Talk about vectors, inertia, motions, energy of motion, brakes on a car and turning corners as analogous to the creation of anger.

ANIMALS AND PETS

This chapter is the product of a search for the word(s) “template”, “__” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) “Template” issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “template” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

[[expand this chapter to include all animals]]

Animals per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Pets per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Baby Souls do not like longhaired cats as a general rule.

Young Souls often own status pets, such as ocelots and Lhasa Apsos.

The pets belonging to Mature Souls will most often reflect their owner’s personalities. Many winners of obedience trials belong to Mature Souls.

Most shaggy dogs belong to Old Souls. Old Souls begin to relate to wild animals and often have an affinity for all living creatures. [late August 1973]

We discussed wild animals and wondered if they had some feelings besides instinct.

Wild animals have no personality at all. Some domestic animals, through training, do develop the rudiments of what might be called personality. All acts of the animal kingdom except for [hu]man are the result of the hive soul or group Essence.

Gene: If two thousand years ago I had a pet cat, could that etheric part of it be in my current lifetime and recognize me?

That happens often. [03 April 1974]

Phyllis: What is the Soul Level of my rabbit?

The animal kingdom picks up on the vibrations around it. The domesticated animals have a tendency to imitate the one who renders the major part of nurturing. The hive soul is truly ancient and was here [on Earth] long before individual souls were Cast from the Tao. [03 April 1974]

The subject of domestic animals [dogs and cats] is interesting, in that domesticating animals was one of the first symptoms of growing alienation in this culture many centuries ago — almost, in fact, at the dawn of Creatures of Reason [ensoulment of hominins] on this world. Once man gives up his need for alienation, he can then, and only then, look at the reasons for his need for substitutes; he uses domesticated animals in lieu of people. They are expendable, relatively cheap, and give away no secrets. (If you are not wearing a cape, how can you conceal a dagger?) [12 February 1975]

Concluding Comments on Pets

② ASCETICISM AND AUSTERITY

This chapter is the product of a search for the words asceticism and austerity in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) The phenomena of asceticism and austerity are common in spiritual movements, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

The words asceticism and austerity are not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

The founding members of the original Michaelian group were focused on spiritual growth. One of the ways of facilitating that lifestyle that is suggested in some spiritual teachings is to minimize material possessions, and otherwise minimize focus on physical things. This ideology has a name: asceticism. The question is, how far, if anywhere, should one take this practice for best results on one's spiritual path? Various religious traditions have their answers, and the Michaels have theirs. Let's take a look at both resources in turn.

Asceticism per Wikipedia

My favorite internet resource has an extensive article on the subject. Underlined words are my emphasis on synonyms:

Asceticism (from the Greek: ἄσκησις, romanized: áskesis, lit. 'exercise', 'training') is a lifestyle characterized by abstinence from sensual pleasures, often for the purpose of pursuing spiritual goals. Ascetics may withdraw from the world for their practices or continue to be part of their society, but typically adopt a frugal lifestyle, characterized by the renunciation of material possessions and physical pleasures, and also spend time fasting while concentrating on the practice of religion or reflection upon spiritual matters. Various individuals have also attempted an ascetic lifestyle to free themselves from addictions, some of them particular to modern life, such as alcohol, tobacco, drugs, entertainment, sex, food, etc.

Asceticism has been historically observed in many religious traditions, including Buddhism, Jainism, Hinduism, Islam, Christianity, Judaism, and Pythagoreanism, and contemporary practices continue among some religious followers.

The practitioners of this philosophy abandon sensual pleasures and lead an abstinent lifestyle, in the pursuit of redemption, salvation, or spirituality. Many ascetics believe the action of purifying the body helps to purify the soul, and thus obtain a greater connection with the Divine or find inner peace. This may take the form of rituals, the renunciation of pleasure, or self-mortification. However, ascetics maintain that self-imposed constraints bring them greater freedom in various areas of their lives, such as increased clarity of thought and the ability to resist potentially destructive temptations. Asceticism is seen in the ancient theologies as a journey towards spiritual transformation, where the simple is sufficient, the bliss is within, the frugal is plenty. Inversely, several ancient religious traditions, such as Zoroastrianism, Ancient Egyptian religion, and the Dionysian Mysteries, as well as more modern Left Hand traditions, openly reject ascetic practices and either focus on various types of hedonism or on the importance of family life, both rejecting celibacy.

Dom Cuthbert Butler classified asceticism into natural and unnatural forms:

- "Natural asceticism" involves a lifestyle which reduces material aspects of life to the utmost simplicity and to a minimum. This may include minimal, simple clothing, sleeping on a floor or in caves, and eating a simple, minimal amount of food. Natural asceticism, state Wimbush and Valantasis, does not include maiming the body or harsher austerities that make the body suffer.

- “Unnatural asceticism”, in contrast, covers practices that go further, and involves body mortification, punishing one’s own flesh, and habitual self-infliction of pain, such as by sleeping on a bed of nails.

Self-discipline and abstinence in some form and degree are parts of religious practice within many religious and spiritual traditions. Ascetic lifestyle is associated particularly with monks, nuns, fakirs in Abrahamic religions, and bhikkhus, munis, sannyasis, Vairagis, Goswamis, yogis in Indian religions.

The Wikipedia article follows the above introduction with an extensive discussion of specific types of asceticism in various religious and spiritual traditions. Among those, I thought the following was the most interesting and relevant to this chapter:

According to Shoghi Effendi, in Bahá’í Faith, the maintenance of a high standard of moral conduct is not to be associated or confused with any form of asceticism, or of excessive and bigoted puritanism. The standard inculcated by Bahá’u’lláh seeks, under no circumstances, to deny anyone the legitimate right and privilege to derive the fullest advantage and benefit from the manifold joys, beauties, and pleasures with which the world has been so plentifully enriched by an All-Loving Creator. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Asceticism> — retrieved 05 November 2021]

To me, this Bahá’í doctrine seems to be consonant with the Michaelian teachings as I understand it; see below.

Asceticism per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

So, with regard to asceticism, what do the Michaels recommend in their teaching? They recommend moderation:

We hold up Soleal as an example of how this can be done by someone living very much in the world. He is not an ascetic by any stretch of the imagination; he simply has learned to dissociate himself from the mundane and concentrate on the arcane. [06 October 1973]

Know or recall that Soleal was a humanoid Adept living on another planet, who was channeled in the original Michaelian group before (and after) the Michaels became the original Michaelian group’s primary source. Even though he was the political ruler of that planet, he was also the spiritual leader of the planet. Apparently, he was able to balance his physical life and his metaphysical life — the “mundane” and the “arcane” — and be competent in both. That is an Adept indeed.

Perhaps you have heard the aphorism that you should own your possessions, not be owned by them. This means that you should be the master of your domain; your empire should be no more than you can manage competently and easily, lest it be an encumbrance to that which satisfies and fulfills Essence. The following quotation affirms that aphorism. Very early in their contact with the Michaels, the original Michaelian group members knew they had something special, and that they would become teachers of the Michaelian teachings. How were they to do that while encumbered with making a living?

You have all made strides toward eliminating superfluous material possessions. Don’t fall into the trap of begrudging younger souls their possessions. This is merely transference of Identification and equally pervasive. [The] teaching is a full time obligation. If you wish to make this commitment, you must resign yourselves to the fact that someone must support the teaching. In order to stay alive, you must eat. We see no virtue in crippling asceticism [at the impoverished end of the wealth–poverty spectrum]. The danger lies in immoderation [at either end of the wealth–poverty spectrum]. [20 October 1973]

(Refer to the chapters, “Identification”, “Teaching”, and “Traps”, for more information about those subjects.)

The Wikipedia article mentioned that there are some spiritual aspirants who teach that the opposite of asceticism, namely hedonism, is the way to go, but the Michaels recommend against either extreme. Elsewhere in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, it is said that during the multiple reincarnations that are part of a Grand Cycle in earth life, souls must experience “all of life”. Sometimes that includes extreme experiences, such as wealth and poverty, as part of completing Monads, but here we find that, for the purposes of an intentional conscious spiritual path, moderation is preferred. The point is that there is an optimal balance point that facilitates spiritual growth most effectively and efficiently. If one is too ascetic, then that is a distraction from the spiritual path, and if one is not ascetic enough, then that is also a distraction from the spiritual path. I suggest that it is up to each individual to determine where that optimal point of spiritual seeking is for themselves, apart from the teachings of any particular religious or spiritual tradition on the asceticism–hedonism spectrum.

One example of asceticism being taken too far is this:

Gene: Question about apparitions (from a book Eugene is reading by Rex Stanford).

These apparitions are very often no more than the hallucinations of a hysterical Personality, in the case of religious ascetics. In some cases, there have been appearances of Astral beings who simply assume the character desired by the medium. [05 June 1974]

Asceticism itself is an ideology that provides a very unbalanced view of the world, but the extreme negative product of some ascetic practices is when they lead to “hysterical hallucinations” due to such things as sensory deprivation and/or physiological depletion and/or psychological radicalism.

There are less extreme ascetic practices that do have potential benefits at times:

Mention was made of rituals and practices designed to bring about enlightenment.

We simply speak of various asceticisms that are unnecessary. Rituals do help the uninitiated, but only in the preparatory stages. These serve to quiet the mind. [12 December 1976]

(Refer to the chapters, “Enlightenment” and “Ritual”, for more information about those subjects.)

Ascetic practices are counterproductive if they torture the body and mind rather than quiet the body and mind. If the ascetic practices quiet the body and mind, then they are okay with the Michaels.

Austerity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

One of the synonyms for asceticism is austerity, so I searched for that word in the original Michaelian group transcriptions and found the following:

How about the other side as in India with so much spirituality?

It is more apparent than real. This method that is total austerity seldom qualifies the senses enough to complete any of the Monads, and the soul must reincarnate again in order to experience what it missed while it was sitting in its hair cloth. [24 February 1974]

In other words, the denial of physicality via asceticism and austerity does not automatically enhance one’s spirituality as the Michaels teach it. Also, add this statement to the statements found elsewhere that the soul must experience “all of life” in order to graduate from reincarnation, and “all of life” includes physicality.

Barbara: I would like to ask about the Essene Gospel of Peace. Manuscripts contemporary with Jesus are said to have strict prescriptions on diet and bathing, including a long tube. I would like some comment on this, if there is anything there that might help us along the way.

The Essene prescriptions for healthy living were among the pioneers of food fads. They were good enough for the time when they were given. We would not recommend the dietary restrictions nor the rather brutal methods of cleansing the body, which normally cleanses itself satisfactorily, provided that it was healthy. The man Jesus was not a member of the sect. The man John [the Baptist] was. The man Jesus came in contact with them in the late teens and early twenties, and thought them to be relatively austere, and not for most people. Some of their doctrines he accepted as good. This is valid. Some would still be Good Work for serious students. Exposure to periodic heavy manual labor and an extremely strong feeling of community was the hallmark of the Essene settlements. All of them took their turn in the fields and in the house, freeing them for serious study. They ate only enough to keep the body healthy, never to the point of satiation. They wore little constricting clothing. They were personally clean, although they carried this into a ritual form; the idea was good. They also felt that the good was its own reward, drawing from the Hellenes [Greeks]. [03 March 1974]

For the most part, in the times and circumstances in which they found themselves, the Essenes had a lifestyle that was not counterproductive to their spiritual aspirations.

The final quotation in this chapter does not contain either the word asceticism or the word austerity, but it does discuss the subject, and it comes to the same conclusion: find the balance between materialism and spiritualism that optimizes your search for enlightenment:

Surrender is perhaps the most difficult task before you, and the stakes are high if you wish to achieve what you set out to do. Therefore, many are likely to act out an experience that is not real. All of you here present have more difficulty with the concept of vulnerability and surrender than any other aspect of spiritual training. All of you are escaping the fear of poverty and degradation that the early decades of your lives instilled in you. Young ones, just ten years your junior, do not have this fear. It is not necessary to be poor in order to be spiritually enriched. It is only necessary to give up the effort of the unrealistic goals set for you by the culture and go on from there. More true spiritual thought and action comes from relatively secure environments than from impoverished backgrounds. Squalor does not ordinarily breed enlightenment; rather, it breeds defeat, frustration and, ultimately, a giving up of goals. It's okay to be comfortable as long as the goals are realistic and do not compromise the values of the teaching — then the amount of luxury accrued is relatively trivial. In other words, if the wealth comes easily and at no expense to the spiritual life, then the wealth is immaterial. It is when the desire for the wealth overrides all spiritual considerations that trouble occurs, and then irreconcilable conflicts [between ego and Essence] arise, and there is an inability to proceed any further with any teaching. There is a point where a choice must be made and a true assessment of your material needs versus wants must occur if you are to go on. If you decide at that point that continued acquisition beyond that which is necessary is vital to your survival, then you must pursue this or dissatisfaction will follow you and plague you the rest of this life. You will give up spiritual teachings at this point — and that is not necessarily a bad choice — just a choice. [10 April 1977]

In this answer I see yet another injunction from the Michaels to be wary of undue influence from your environment during youth — the culture, the society, and the historical circumstances — if one is serious about one's spiritual aspirations. The founding members grew up during the Great Depression and World War II. Those events created an entire generation that had a distorted view of the proper balance between poverty-avoidance and prosperity-seeking.

Concluding Comments on Asceticism

It always helps to summarize my thoughts on a subject by putting them in a succinct bulleted list.

- People who have a Chief Feature of Self-destruction (which I prefer to rename Renunciation), might be attracted to an ascetic or austere lifestyle as part of their spiritual aspirations. This Chief Feature is the opposite of the Chief Feature of Greed; where people are prone to self-indulgence. To extinguish these opposite Chief Features in oneself results in a lifestyle of moderation in all things.
- If one chooses to focus away from the material world and onto the spiritual world, one must still take care of one's material world, enough so that it does not distract or detract from one's spiritual life.
- One of the potential pitfalls of asceticism, not mentioned above, is that for some people, when the asceticism is extreme enough to become conspicuous, one can be self-righteous about it.
- On the opposite end of the poverty-prosperity spectrum, some people regard their conspicuous consumption as an indication that they are righteous, and therefore blessed by God. This even has a name: spiritual materialism. Religious Young Souls might endorse this notion, but the Michaels do not.
- One of the premises of some ascetics is that the body is evil and should be eschewed as much as possible, whereas the spirit is good and should be pursued as much as possible. Certainly, the wrong ideology about asceticism is when it punishes the body and mind for being "evil", which is not the case, according to the Michaelian teachings. This is a type of escapism, and it also has a name: spiritual bypassing. The way to enlightenment is through respect for incarnation in the body, not escape from the body. And not in the other extreme either, hedonism, but in moderation, according to the Michaelian teachings.
- If I were to characterize asceticism in terms of the Overleaf System, I would say that a Baby Soul Spiritualist Warrior in Rejection and Self-destruction would be the most likely personality type to find this lifestyle appealing, and take it to extremes.

- Fasting is a part of some ascetic traditions, and it is also on the Michaels' recommended to-do list for spiritual aspirants, so I would say that fasting is one occasional asceticism that the Michaels find reasonable, not immoderate. (Refer to the chapter "Fasting".)
- Many monastic traditions embrace asceticism. As we see in the chapter "Communal Living" the Michaels suggested that communal living was a viable and valid lifestyle as part of the spiritual aspirations of some, but I do not find asceticism within the recommendation.
- Please excuse me for getting a bit preachy here, but at this time in the history of humanity on this planet, when its resources are being plundered and exploited by the conspicuous consumerism of many wealthy people, maybe a move toward moderation is in order, or else even more of humanity will end up in ascetic poverty, whether it chooses it or not.

③ ASTROLOGY

This chapter is the product of a search for the word astrology in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

The subject of astrology is interesting to me because, during the 1980s, I more than dabbled in it: I read books, I attended club meetings, I hung out with astrologers, I ran computer-generated charts on people, I talked to people about their charts. I did this even though astrology seemed implausible to me, partly because I already knew a lot about astronomy and Greek and Roman mythology. It was always obvious to me that the ancient assignment of meaning to planetary deities was arbitrary because different cultures made different assignments, assigning stars to constellations with particular meanings was arbitrary because different cultures made different assignments, and assigning meaning to aspects of planets was arbitrary because different cultures made different assignments. The package and the practice of astrology makes sense to the way some people's brains work, but does it make sense to the cosmos itself to work that way? And even if the cosmos actually coordinated planets with people, which astrology of which culture does one use?

All of these questions leaped into my scientist-engineer mind during the 1980s, and it was still interesting to me to research what the Michaels had to say about astrology when the original Michaelian group transcriptions surfaced in the mid-1990s. That research is documented in this chapter in this Study Papers book.

Astrology per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

It so happens that Sarah, the primary channel of the original Michaelian group, had an astronomy degree, and Richard, her civil engineer husband, was an amateur astrologer who taught classes. We have been told by their daughter Dorothy that Sarah met Richard at an astrology meeting. Perhaps that is why a question about astrology came up so early in their channeling sessions:

[Richard?:] Is astrology a valid science?

[Soleal:] It is not a science at all. It purports only that which is fundamentally true, and that is that all levels exert some influence on other levels. [Mid-1973]

As you will see in the remainder of this chapter, I have no issues with that statement.

It is a huge leap of inference to go from the general principle that there is influence from level to level in the cosmos, to the specific claims of astrology, that planets affect people. Even if the former is true — and it is generally recognized as true — it does not necessitate the truth of the latter. So, how is one to bridge the gap? Our best bet is to use the scientific method to examine such claims. An internet search on the phrase “debunking astrology” reveals that a scientific examination of astrology has been unable to validate the specific claims of astrologers (e.g.: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Astrology_and_science<). Therefore, even if astrology per se expresses a valid principle, namely that the cosmos is interconnected, actual astrology fails the scientific test. Based on the evidence, we can say with some confidence that, whatever the valid connection between planets and people may be, if any, astrology has not (yet?) found it. This is what makes astrology the so-called “queen of pseudo-sciences”.

Members of the original Michaelian group did not have access to the internet to confirm what Soleal said, as we do, so the question of the validity of astrology came up on other occasions; one such was this:

Dick: Do the planets have an influence on us?

[Tomas:] Haven't you already felt the influence of the Moon? Try an experiment and chart your emotions and moving instincts. This should prove it to you. It is ancient knowledge and is true. [05 July 1973]

Picky comment: in astrology, the Moon is considered a “planet”; in astronomy it is not.

As for ancient and modern claims that the moon affects emotions and actions, scientific researchers have “charted” many people, and it finds these claims to be mostly dubious, according to this website article: ><https://www.healthline.com/health/full-moon-effects><. So, who or what is one to believe? My bias is to prefer the scientific evidence rather than channeling, but this is an instance where I suggest that the information should be considered to be in the limbo zone between confirmed and disconfirmed.

The question about planetary influence came up again, a few days later:

Dick: In that [Robert Burton] teaching, there were teachings of certain Body Types and influences of planets. Is this true?

[Tomas:] You are under the influence of all planets, as they are in you. The planets or planet that controls you the most strongly, therefore, is the most strong in you, was your [Body] Type. I assume I have that right. It is true if that is the way it was stated [by Burton]. The [Body] Types are a generalization of the common things, habits, personality traits in most people, and can resemble astrology. It can be well used if not in imagination. [10 July 1973]

This statement seems to me to be saying that there is a truth to planet-influence Body Types in principle, but one wonders if its proponents have discerned the actual correspondence, or if the specific claims are imaginary. Refer to the chapter “Body Types” in this Study Papers book, and to the two chapters on Body Types in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart. There you will see my examination of the subject and its claims, and how it is that I find some of the specific claims to be dubious, even though I allow that knowing Body Types can be “well used”.

Tomas's response was not the end of the matter; the subject came up repeatedly thereafter:

Richard: Asked question about the validity of astrology as we know it. We also wondered about the Gurdjieffian system.

[Michael:] Not [valid] as you know it, although you have good beginnings. Gurdjieff did see this. Ouspensky rejected astrology. If you construct charts for entire families, you will find striking similarities. [22 September 1973]

“Not as you know it” is a pretty clear statement, except one might ask what it is that “as you know it” refers to. Does it only mean the Western (Greek-Roman-Babylonian) astrological tradition that Richard knew, or does it include the various other brands of astrology from other traditions (e.g. Chinese, Indian) that other cultures “knew” but that Richard may not have been familiar with? Rather than this, further on we see that this repudiation of astrology most likely refers to “natal” astrology: a horoscope based on time and place of birth.

Further on in this same session, more was said:

Richard: Michel Gauquelin said a male child is conceived at the same time that the male parent was conceived; the female, at the time of the female parent. Some studies proved blood plasma changes with ionization in the atmosphere, and there is a correlation. The planet on the horizon is the important one genetically (the “Ascendant”). The soul could influence its structure.

Michel Gauquelin (November 13, 1928 – May 20, 1991) was a French psychologist and statistician who conducted research in an attempt to develop a scientific basis for astrology. His results contradicted standard astrology, and then allegedly discovered other statistically-significant correlations, which were, of course, contested; refer to the Wikipedia article referenced above.

Souls enter the Physical Plane at different times. That [assertion in your question] is not valid in that sense. The body, being physical, or organic if you will, is influenced by the celestial bodies [not by the soul].

Souls allegedly do not enter the body at conception, or exactly at birth either, according to the Michaels and Michael Newton's between-life regressions. Being spiritual, whenever a soul enters the body, it does not influence the physical Body Type. I have no problem with that statement.

Comment: Then Body Typing is not genetically determined?

Yes, they are [genetically determined]. Each strand of deoxyribonucleic acid [DNA] is totipotential. This allows for the [planetary] influence [at conception].

In the discussion of Body Types in this Study Papers book and in A History of the Overleaf Chart, there is a careful examination of this assertion of planetary influence by physical means, and I find it extremely dubious, and even if it is true, it cannot be validated by scientific means.

At what point does this [planetary] influence take place, when the sperm meets with the ovum or at the time of the first breath?

This is why we say that astrology, as you know it [based on time of birth], is largely invalid. However, ironically we might add, it does work backwards, unless you are dealing with a premature child.

One can know the time of birth, but one cannot know the time of ensoulment. One can estimate the time of conception by counting backward from the time of a full-term birth, but the time could still be hours if not days off, and that inaccuracy is allegedly significant for astrological influences. I do not see how this assertion by the Michaels, even if true, helps the case for astrology, since the actual time, within hours and days of conception that is relevant to astrology, is unknowable.

Then astrology would be valid if we knew the moment of conception?

Yes. The time of birth is also important. [22 September 1973]

So far as we know from available transcriptions, it was not subsequently explained how the time of birth was important. Even if we accept that this is valid channeling, because the time of conception is unknowable, astrology is useless FAPP (for all practical purposes), and can therefore be safely ignored.

This was not the end of the matter:

Gene: Could you comment on the virtue of astrology and the validity to this discussion?

The position of all of the planets and their position in relation to the Sun and to each other must be taken into consideration. For instance, Venus without the influence of Mars exerts much more influence than when Mars is in apposition on the far side of Earth.

Richard: [question lost].

Those who do [take planetary aspects into account?], stand a better chance of being accurate. [27 September 1973]

But if time of conception is unknowable, how can there be any validation of any of this? Ascendant, Mid-heaven, Nodes, Sun, Moon, and Mercury all move fast enough in the sky that if time of conception is off by a day or two, astrologers says that makes a difference.

The subject came up again a few months later:

Joan: It was said that astrology would be valid if we knew the time of our conception. Why?

Because of the conjunction of the heavenly bodies, and also the sunspot activity at the time of birth. (At Joan's conception,) the constellation, Leo, was ascending; the Moon was in Pisces. [27 February 1974]

Here again, in order to have an accurate cause of one's Body Type, not only planetary locations, but we would allegedly have to know about sunspots. Sunspots eject ions toward earth, which do affect the planet earth for sure, but their effect on DNA is questionable.

The following is the last time that the subject of astrology appeared in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

Question regarding astrology.

The relationship [of astrology] primarily pertains to the Body Types and the Centering. [27 March 1974]

Per documentation in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart, the Michaels regarded Center/Body Type as one of the seven Overleaf categories; above is one of the supporting passages for that notion; there are others; these are not two separate Overleaf categories.

So finally, if there is any validity to astrology, according to the Michaels, it would be that the positions of the planets and other astronomical phenomena (at the time of conception and at the time of birth) has an influence on the Body Type/Centering Overleaf that one is born with — and that is about all there is to it. Thus, according to the Michaels, the “natal” chart is not a predictor of the personality of individuals or of organizations, “horary” astrology (><https://www.astrology.com/article/what-is-horary-astrology/><) is not a legitimate form of divination for the question of the moment, and “progressed” charts are not a legitimate way to predict the future of individuals or of an organization or of the planet.

Concluding Comments on Astrology

Even though the mentions of astrology in the original Michaelian group transcriptions are skimpy and of little consequence to the Michaelian teachings as a whole, I thought it useful to discuss the subject in a chapter of this Study Papers book.

About this subject I make the following points:

- The Michaels allege that there is a connection between planetary positions and the Centering/Body Type a person is conceived with. However, the exact time (minute, hour, day) of conception is not known or reasonably knowable, so this allegation cannot be validated.
- In spite of how much I appreciate what the Michaels have to say in general, it stretches my credulity way past the breaking point to believe that every human everywhere on the planet conceived at the same moment has the same Centering/Body Type.
- The preceding point does not dismiss the subject of Centering/Body Type. In my opinion, it is okay if Michaelian students discern Centering/Body Type for themselves and for other people, if it helps with the purpose for which the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System, namely to promote tolerance and understanding, eventuating in Agape.
- What I have issues with is the unvalidatable assertions that planetary positions and sunspots and so on have anything to do with Centering/Body Type; even if it is true, it is useless information. One can benefit from understanding Body Typology while ignoring and even forgetting the alleged astronomical coupling.
- The two chapters on Body Type in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart provide much more detail about the various issues regarding Body Types than are found in this chapter.
- The Michaels said that astrology is not valid “as we know it”. With the advent of scientific measures of personality, and with the advent of computers to crunch the data about personalities, and with the recognition of cognitive biases (“I want to believe...”), the illegitimacy of astrology is now known with reasonable certainty; with confidence we can agree with the Michaels on this point, and dispense with this ancient pseudoscience.
- Astrology is something like a ‘sacred cow’ in metaphysical circles; it is a ‘doctrine’ in the New Age ‘church’ that is not questioned. To adhere to this doctrine is every bit as unscientific as fundamentalist dogmatic religions, who take certain texts as “holy scriptures”, and who take certain beliefs on “faith”.
- Unlike myself, there are some people who find astrology to be plausible, and they study it and they use it and they find that it “works”. Who can argue with that? Cognitive scientists argue with that. Cognitive errors have been studied and cataloged, and the particular error at work here is called “confirmation bias”: you believe something without evidence because it seems plausible, and then you find evidence that supports your belief; see: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Confirmation_bias<. More is said about this and other cognitive errors in the chapter “Validation and Verification”.
- So, my original bias was that astrology was not legitimate, and I confirmed that to my satisfaction during the 1980s. Yes, it seemed to “work” about 2/3rds of the time, but I saw how ambiguous the system was, such that it was possible to read into, or read out of, a chart whatever one saw in a personality, and vice versa. Unbiased and thorough scientific research has improved in the decades since then, and the science has settled on the conclusion that the specific claims of birthday astrology are bogus. This confirms what the Michaels said, that astrology “as we know it” is not valid.
- However, another specific claim that the Michaels made — the one aspect of astrology that the Michaels endorsed, about planets affecting Body Type at conception — has not, and reasonably cannot, be validated or invalidated, because the moment of conception is not discernible.
- Claims and assertions can initially be dumped into three available bins: confirmed, disconfirmed, and limbo. In the validation project recommended by the Michaels, the goal is to move claims out of limbo and into either the confirmed bin or the disconfirmed bin. Astrology “as we know it” apparently belongs in the disconfirmed bin, and regarding the Center/Body Type claim, astrology apparently belongs in the limbo bin because it can neither be confirmed nor disconfirmed.

In my opinion, the lesson to be learned from the examination of astrology via scientific methods is that one should not be credulous about metaphysical claims, even if those claims originated thousands of years ago, and even if they have gained a considerable purchase among many esotericists over that time span. To be credulous — about astrology or anything else — is to fall prey to cognitive biases, and also to the Negative Pole of the Idealist Attitude, –Abstraction or –Naivety, or to the Negative Pole of the Spiritualist Attitude, –Faith or –Superstition, or the Negative Pole of the Realist Attitude, –Supposition or –Guesswork. The claims of astrology and astrologers are subject to the same injunction by the Michaels to validate all such claims, or else real psychological and spiritual progress will not be made; refer to the chapter “Validation and Verification”.

However, in my view, even though astrology is apparently without validity, it is not completely without value. It can safely be regarded and used as a game or as a toy, and it is okay to play with it as such, and one will learn from the intellectual exercise in symbol manipulation. It embodies phenomena that are real — such as real personality traits and things that actually happen in the real world — but astrology as a proposed model of the universe does not reflect the way the universe actually works. Therefore, one should not take it seriously, as if it were valid. I toyed with astrology in the 1980s, and I learned from playing the game. The other benefit of examining astrology for me has been that it informed and enhanced my process of validation, and this knowledge and this skill can be, and has been, used in other realms of my life.

④ ATLANTIS

Certainly every reader of this book will be at least vaguely familiar with the story that there was allegedly a continent somewhere in the Atlantic Ocean that had a highly advanced human civilization, and that was destroyed by a cataclysm thousands of years ago. One may read about that in many places on the internet; the information is conveniently summarized in a Wikipedia article:

Atlantis (Ancient Greek: Ἀτλαντὶς νῆσος, Atlantis nesos, “island of Atlas”) is a fictional island mentioned in an allegory on the hubris of nations in Plato’s works Timaeus and Critias, wherein it represents the antagonist naval power that besieges “Ancient Athens”, the pseudo-historic embodiment of Plato’s ideal state in The Republic. In the story, Athens repels the Atlantean attack unlike any other nation of the known world, supposedly bearing witness to the superiority of Plato’s concept of a state. The story concludes with Atlantis falling out of favor with the deities and submerging into the Atlantic Ocean.

Despite its minor importance in Plato’s work, the Atlantis story has had a considerable impact on literature. The allegorical aspect of Atlantis was taken up in utopian works of several Renaissance writers, such as Francis Bacon’s New Atlantis and Thomas More’s Utopia. On the other hand, nineteenth-century amateur scholars misinterpreted Plato’s narrative as historical tradition, most famously Ignatius L. Donnelly in his Atlantis: The Antediluvian World. Plato’s vague indications of the time of the events (more than 9,000 years before his time) and the alleged location of Atlantis (“beyond the Pillars of Hercules”) gave rise to much pseudoscientific speculation. As a consequence, Atlantis has become a byword for any and all supposed advanced prehistoric lost civilizations and continues to inspire contemporary fiction, from comic books to films.

While present-day philologists and classicists agree on the story’s fictional character, there is still debate on what served as its inspiration. Plato is known to have freely borrowed some of his allegories and metaphors from older traditions, as he did, for instance, with the story of Gyges. This led a number of scholars to investigate possible inspiration of Atlantis from Egyptian records of the Thera [volcanic] eruption, the Sea Peoples invasion, or the Trojan War. Others have rejected this chain of tradition as implausible and insist that Plato created an entirely fictional account, drawing loose inspiration from contemporary events such as the failed Athenian invasion of Sicily in 415–413 BC or the destruction of Helike in 373 BC.

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Atlantis>< — retrieved 20 June 2022]

The lengthy Wikipedia article continues with an examination of Plato’s comments on Atlantis, then it provides ancient and modern interpretations of what Plato meant, then it notes that Theosophists and Edgar Cayce channeled information about Atlantis, then it provides an overview of the proposed hypotheses about the location of Atlantis. If you read the article you will be provided with lessons in scholarly and academic presentations, and lessons in weighing evidence and argument typically applied to disputable matters.

My second favorite channeled material is from the Entity named Ra; they refer to their teaching as The Law of One. This information is available for free on the internet. You may read what they have to say about Atlantis at ><https://www.lawofone.info/results.php?q=atlantis><. Some of Ra’s information confirms and some of it contradicts what the Michaels have to say. There is also disagreement in the information provided by other channeled sources. For instance, one may read about what Theosophical channels had to say about Atlantis at ><https://theosophy.wiki/en/Atlantis><. For instance, one may read about some of what Edgar Cayce said about Atlantis at this website: ><https://www.edgarcayce.org/the-readings/ancient-mysteries/atlantis/>< and at this website: ><https://mysteriumacademy.com/atlantis-edgar-cayce/><. Therefore, my suggestion is that we should not be naive and credulous about this subject, because it cannot be Validated, either by any objective scientific experimental methods or by any subjective psychological experiential means. Rather, my focus in this chapter is to look for metaphorical, ethical, philosophical, and spiritual lessons that can be extracted from the story regardless of its literal veracity. Plato invented or passed on the story with a similar intent; we should do likewise.

To have a chapter on this subject might seem strange, since it would seem to have little connection to the gist of the Michaelian teachings, but the subject appeared in the original Michaelian group transcriptions on several occasions, the Michaels offered their perspective on the subject, and I have discerned some interesting points that I believe make the subject worth examining in this Study Papers book.

Atlantis in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are not presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The subject was broached by an original Michaelian group member, who happened to be an Old soul Scholar, and it came up repeatedly thereafter during the two years that the original Michaelian group convened.

Edgar: I would like to know what happened to the Mayans, and if there was an Atlantis what happened to the civilization?

Like all other great civilizations, the Mayans became complacent in their superiority and allowed themselves to be conquered by [Spanish conquistador] barbarians who did not appreciate their philosophy or their astronomy, but did like their gold. Yes, Edgar, there was an Atlantis. Natural disasters destroyed both the Atlantic and Pacific [Lemurian?] civilizations, fifty and thirty thousand years ago, respectively.

Theosophy and Cayce and Ra, according to internet websites linked above, said that Atlantis lasted until about eleven or twelve thousand years ago. The alleged Lemurian (Mu) civilization is mentioned in Theosophical sources, and by Cayce.

Edgar: What happened to Atlantis?

Volcanic eruptions and tidal waves. [13 December 1973]

The Wikipedia article mentions that historians, archaeologists, and geologists who looked for scientific evidence that would confirm or dis-confirm the stories about Atlantis, often focused on examining the remnants of volcanism and earthquakes and tsunamis, because, obviously, it would take a gigantic physical cataclysm to destroy or sink a continent. The date of the destruction of Atlantis given by sources other than the Michaels coincides with the end of the last ice age (about 11,700 years ago), at which time the sea level rose by about three hundred feet to get to its current level. Obviously, this rise caused floods that covered low-lying coastal areas ... and maybe Atlantis. The destruction of Atlantis was said to be “sudden” (due to volcanism), but the rise in sea level after the ice age took a few centuries of increasing tides. Earthquakes in the ocean often cause tsunamis, so that is a type of sudden destruction by “tidal waves”.

Edgar: If I am ten thousand years old and history only goes back six thousand years, where were my previous lives?

In Babylonia, in Syria, in Atlantis; but that is more than ten thousand years ago. You were not very aware then, Edgar. You really came in touch with the occult in Sumeria.

(From Wikipedia:

Sumer is the earliest known civilization in the historical region of southern Mesopotamia (south-central Iraq), emerging during the Chalcolithic and early Bronze Ages between the sixth and fifth millennium BC. It is one of the first civilizations in the world, along with ancient Egypt, Elam, the Caral-Supe civilization, the Indus Valley Civilisation, the Minoan civilization, and ancient China. Living along the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, Sumerian farmers grew an abundance of grain and other crops, the surplus from which enabled them to form urban settlements. Proto-writing dates back before 3000 BC. The earliest texts come from the cities of Uruk and Jemdet Nasr, and date to between c. 3500 and c. 3000 BC. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sumer> — retrieved 20 June 2022])

Edgar: Were we technologically up with the Atlantis people?

Technologically, you are about equal now. Philosophically and spiritually, you are nowhere near. [31 December 1973]

One of the alleged moral lessons to be derived from the stories about Atlantis is that the Atlanteans brought the destruction upon themselves due to their technology outrunning their wisdom. This is similar to one of the lessons that some cultural critics point out from the Greek myth of the god Prometheus — who gave technology to humanity and was condemned by other gods for his renegade presumptuousness — namely that modern civilization is even more at risk of self-destruction due to its technological folly than Atlantis allegedly was. It seems obvious to some cultural critics that advancements in modern technology have outrun advancements in philosophy and spirituality; such an imbalance is thought by these somewhat enlightened people to be very risky.

Barbara: I wonder why any Atlanteans did not escape... [22 January 1974]

The Wikipedia article discusses the use of DNA analysis in attempts to find evidence for the survival of Atlanteans among modern populations, and the results so far are negative or inconclusive.

... the Atlanteans were familiar with matter–antimatter propulsion. [27 January 1974]

Obviously, “warp drive” via matter–antimatter propulsion is a technology where the Atlanteans were allegedly far ahead of present-day technology, contrary to what was stated in the 31 December session, when it was said that modern technology is approximately equal to Atlantean technology. So, was the notion of the warp drive a mere fantasy of Star Trek in the decade previous to the original Michaelian group, or was the idea an intuition or premonition of an actual possibility?

Edgar: How long will it take for our civilization to have reactions of matter–antimatter?

Without help, eons. We would add though, Edgar, that the help is available. [27 January 1974]

To “help” in such a way would violate Star Trek’s “prime directive” to not interfere in the cultural evolution of planets that are not in the Federation. It would also repeat the Promethean disaster of advancing technological maturity ahead of ethical maturity, which generally comes with the advance of the average Soul Age of the human population. One wonders if this is why the inhabitants or controllers of UFOs, whose technology is apparently ‘light-years’ beyond our own, seem to be loathe to reveal themselves openly. I seriously doubt that channeling will reveal advanced physics. Rather, some super-genius will be inspired with the information, it is hoped if/when the ‘time is right’, meaning, if/when the philosophical and spiritual maturity of humanity can handle the technology wisely and beneficially.

Edgar: Did the Atlanteans have help?

They were more imaginative and far less aggressive. Also, they were not alienated. [27 January 1974]

So, the Atlanteans did not have help from advanced sources; they figured the technology out on their own because they were so advanced “philosophically and spiritually”, as worded previously.

Dick: Could I have an approximate date when I was Cast from the Tao?

Approximately fifty thousand years ago, before the cataclysm that destroyed Atlantis.

Barbara: I’d like to ask: After the [Atlantean] cataclysm, it was said Infant and Baby Souls were Cast [into incarnation]. Now, if Infant Souls are Cast, if they do not know right from wrong, how can they be taught? Who’s to teach them?

Through us.

Questions: Were we at Atlantis?

Most of this group was, yes.

What was the population of Atlantis when it disappeared?

Five million. That was a city-state isolated by choice.

Shirley: What was I in Atlantis?

You experienced five lives there. All as [an] Infant Soul.

Shirley: How long was that?

Almost ten thousand years. [06 February 1974]

My interpretation of this is that Shirley took ten thousand years to experience five lifetimes as an Infant Soul in Atlantis. The alternative interpretation, that these lifetimes happened ten thousand years ago in Atlantis, contradicts the information, given in the 13 December 1973 session, that Atlantis was destroyed about fifty thousand years ago.

Alice: I wonder if there is any truth to what Robert [Burton] used to say, that if too many people woke up, there would be another catastrophe such as Atlantis. Robert said the reason for Atlantis being destroyed was that too many people were conscious.

We do not agree with that. It would merely speed up the evolution on this world, but would not affect the stellar evolution. [14 April 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton” for information about Robert. The Logos (mind) of this planet evolves on a timescale that is different from the timescale of the evolution of the Logos of our star — refer to the chapter “Logos” for more information. Refer to the chapter “Awakening from Sleep” for more information about that metaphor for enlightenment, used by Robert and by the Michaels. That the Atlanteans were said to be “more awake/conscious” in this session shadows the statement in the session of 31 December that they were more advanced “philosophically and spiritually”. As with the Michaels, I see no downside to having more people become “awake”, “conscious”, “enlightened”.

The following few Q&A exchanges add nothing new to the discussion of Atlantis, but I include them anyway, for the sake of completeness.

Abdullah: in May 1973 — Atlantis, white garb, black girl, body 24 years of age?

The character of whom you speak could be a valid picture or memory of your own brother during that period. He was at that time a priest, in spite, of course, being a Sage, which explains the white robe.

Were we involved in Atlantis?

All of you here present were in Atlantis during the same period, yes.

Is there some connection between Abdullah, Gene, Dick and Elizabeth?

Well, of course, you know about this life in Atlantis, also in Greece and again in Rome, then in Roman Britain. Most of you.... Then again, in Spain with Gene and again off the coast of Portugal with the lady Elizabeth. [10 September 1974]

Liz: Atlantis?

In Atlantis, you served a King, yes. [17 September 1974]

Now, the man Thaddeus remembered something quite significant when he saw the lady [Liz] again, for she was wearing the same gown she wore when he first saw her in Atlantis. [29 October 1974]

The longest Q&A exchange about Atlantis came near the end of the original Michaelian group:

Eugene asked a question about a book he is reading, written in 1860. He asked about the book's reference to Atlantis.

The information contained in this volume is for the most part a fairly good description of the civilization of which you were a part, embellished by time and the medium's bias, but still fairly good. This was an advanced civilization that would have had interplanetary space travel within fifty years of the time it was destroyed. The [channeled] source at that time was Astral, many Fragments [of] which have been since reincarnated. Of those who were Mature Souls at the time of the destruction of Atlantis, many have waited these many centuries for a similar time frame in which to experience out their physical lives. The same is true for all who were Older Souls at that time. Most of you were Baby and very early Young Souls at the time, and it was necessary for you to experience some of the interim.

This might be referring to Atlantis: the Antediluvian World, written by Ignatius Donnelly, published in 1882: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ignatius_L._Donnelly<. Refer to the chapter “Bias” for a thorough discussion of how the biases of a channel can distort and/or block accurate information from getting through to us from the Astral and Causal Planes. A review of the internet sources linked in the introduction to this chapter reveals that the information about Atlantis via various channels differs in some regards.

Question about anti-gravity devices: Did they have them in Atlantis?

Yes.

The documented ability of UFOs to apparently defy inertia, which is intimately connected to gravity, is an indication that there are physics phenomena yet to be widely understood by modern humans, but which the Michaels say were understood by Atlantean humans.

Are there any physical marks, e.g., an “M” on the palm, to show who were Atlanteans?

There is no distinctive physical mark, but all of those with Atlantean memories will seek a [spiritual] teaching. They will seek a spiritual teaching in modern times as a continuation of their philosophical and spiritual endeavors mentioned above as being more prevalent and advanced in Atlantean times.

Was there an Infinite Soul manifest in Atlantis?

The Infinite Soul did not manifest in Atlantis, but the Transcendental Soul manifested three times.

Refer to the chapter “Transcendental and Infinite Souls”. There you will see that the manifestation of an Infinite Soul is only required if the manifestation of the Transcendental Soul does not provoke the needed socio-cultural change. What is said here makes sense in the context of the Atlanteans being philosophically and spiritually advanced, as stated in the 31 December 1973 session.

Louise had a reading last year and was told she was "Temah" in Atlantis. Was this male or female?

This, or a word similar to it, was not a proper name, but a title: that of priestess. In this case, "keeper of the word." You were female, yes, and because of the annals, did not predict a cataclysm. There was widespread disbelief. You see, at that time more, but not enough, credence was given to the power of intuition. Obviously, though, it was not enough to prevent the destruction of what was then [the] civilized world, even though it was within their grasp.

Louise said she saw a white door in meditation with gold and emeralds. Was this associated with Atlantis?

In part; also, the student Alice has a similar memory of a stairway in her home.

Dick commented that not just an earthquake could sink that much land, that it had to be something more.

But a shifting of the magnetic poles could.

Dick asked if the people in Atlantis (their activities) caused the poles to shift?

What was the capital of the Atlantean civilization lies buried beneath the northern tip of Greenland.

This channeling is suspect because the planet was in the midst of an ice age fifty thousand years ago when Atlantis was allegedly destroyed:

The Last Glacial Period (LGP), also known colloquially as the last ice age or simply ice age, occurred from the end of the Eemian to the end of the Younger Dryas, encompassing the period c. 115,000 – c. 11,700 years ago. From the point of view of human archaeology, the LGP falls in the Paleolithic and early Mesolithic periods. When the glaciation event started, Homo sapiens was confined to lower latitudes and used tools comparable to those used by Neanderthals in western and central Eurasia and by Denisovans and Homo erectus in Asia. Near the end of the event, H. sapiens migrated into Eurasia and Australia. Archaeological and genetic data suggest that the source populations of Paleolithic humans survived the LGP in sparsely wooded areas, and dispersed through areas of high primary productivity, while avoiding dense forest cover.
[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Last_Glacial_Period< — retrieved 20 June 2022]

Are the Basque people a remnant of Atlantean culture?

Small scattered bands of survivors did appear on the European continent. This was one, yes. [30 January 1975]

Refer to ><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Basques>< for an introduction to these inhabitants of the western Pyrenees area, overlapping Spain and France. There you will read that DNA analysis does not necessarily support the notion, proposed by early anthropologists, that the Basque people are unrelated to other Europeans, based on the fact that their language is not of Roman or other Indo-European origin. It was and is a huge leap of inference on the part of believers in Atlantis to claim that the Basques are descended from Atlanteans.

Not since the destruction of Atlantis has so much information of a scientific nature been available to Mechanical Man on this planet.... [31 January 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Mechanical Man" for more information about the un-self-aware people who are in control of this planet, who have brought humanity to the brink of disaster. Astronomers, even those who believe that other planets in nearby solar systems are likely to be populated by advanced humanoids, wonder why we have not yet been contacted by them. (Maybe we have: UFOs?) One of the speculations is that humanoid civilizations self-destruct at the stage in technological development that humanity is at now; for the account, refer to >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fermi_paradox<. One of the stories about Atlantis is that they unwittingly engineered or otherwise prompted their own destruction. If Atlanteans learned anything from their mistakes, and if they are indeed incarnating in droves in the modern world as the Michaels (and others) said, one might hope that they would engineer or otherwise prompt humanity's diversion away from the path to apocalyptic destruction.

Louise: When we were together?

Louise, the life in Atlantis is strong in your recall. The denial of this is the Personality's. [23 February 1975]

My Personality also has issues with the notion that Atlantis was an actual island or continent with an advanced actual civilization during prehistoric times, but it might not be from "denial", because no such memory is "strong in my recall". Rather, it is due to the lack of convincing solid evidence.

Summary Comments on Atlantis

Based on what I read in the Wikipedia article on the subject, it makes sense to me to regard Atlantis as an invented story with an archetypal meaning — which people were especially prone to do back in those days — and that is why it has captured the imagination of so many people. If it was an actual island with an actual civilization, and if the information that has been channeled about it is true, then I am okay with that also. However, to me it seems more useful for us in the present day to learn the lesson that the legendary story illustrates, rather than to take it literally. One such lesson is stated thus:

Plato scholar Julia Annas, Regents Professor of Philosophy at the University of Arizona, had this to say on the matter:

The continuing industry of discovering Atlantis illustrates the dangers of reading Plato. For he is clearly using what has become a standard device of fiction — stressing the historicity of an event (and the discovery of hitherto unknown authorities) as an indication that what follows is fiction. The idea is that we should use the story to examine our ideas of government and power. We have missed the point if instead of thinking about these issues we go off exploring the sea bed. The continuing misunderstanding of Plato as historian here enables us to see why his distrust of imaginative writing is sometimes justified.

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Atlantis>< — retrieved 20 June 2022]

Certainly, all levels of government could use an upgrade from the systems that are currently extant. Plato suggested that potential leaders should be selected at an early age for their obvious nascent superior qualities, and then they should be educated and trained in all manner of knowledge and wisdom, so that they would be competent and authoritative in political positions; he famously referred to these as “philosopher kings”.

Another lesson to be learned from the story of Atlantis, mentioned a few times in this chapter, is that it is dangerous in a civilization for its technology to outrun the wisdom and ethics required for the beneficial use of the technology.

① AURAS: COLORS AND MEANINGS

There was a time span during the original Michaelian group, mostly May and June of 1974, when the members of the group became interested in the subject of auras. They explored it for a while, people asked what the color of their aura was, but soon the members of the group lost interest, and rarely returned to it, while continuing to add other information to their Michaelian teachings database.

Let's first take a look at the origin and history of the subject, and then take a look at all of the occurrences of the subject in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. After that, a summary list of the information is provided.

Definition of Auras

Wikipedia provides an introduction to this topic, with a description and a history:

According to spiritual beliefs, an aura or human energy field is a colored emanation said to enclose a human body or any animal or object. In some esoteric positions, the aura is described as a subtle body. Psychics and holistic medicine practitioners often claim to have the ability to see the size, color and type of vibration of an aura. In spiritual alternative medicine, the human being aura is seen as part of a hidden anatomy that reflects the state of being and health of a client, often understood to even comprise centers of vital force called chakras. Such claims are not supported by scientific evidence and are thus pseudoscience. When tested under scientific controlled experiments, the ability to see auras has not been proven to exist.

The concept of auras was first popularized by Charles Webster Leadbeater, a former priest of the Church of England and a member of the mystic Theosophical Society. Leadbeater had studied theosophy in India, and believed he had the capacity to use his clairvoyant powers to make scientific investigations.... In his book Man Visible and Invisible published in 1903, Leadbeater illustrated the aura of man at various stages of his moral evolution, from the "savage" to the saint. In 1910, Leadbeater introduced the modern conception of auras by incorporating the Tantric notion of chakras in his book The Inner Life....

In the following years, Leadbeater's ideas on the aura and chakras were adopted and reinterpreted by other Theosophists such as Rudolf Steiner and Edgar Cayce, but his occult anatomy remained of minor interest within the esoteric counterculture until the 1980s, when it was picked up by the New Age movement.

In 1977, American esotericist Christopher Hills published the book Nuclear Evolution: The Rainbow Body, which presented a modified version of Leadbeater's occult anatomy. Whereas Leadbeater had drawn each chakras with intricately detailed shapes and multiple colors, Hills presented them as a sequence of centers, each one being associated with a color of the rainbow. Most of the subsequent New Age writers will base their representations of the aura on Hill's interpretation of Leadbeater's ideas. Chakras became a part of mainstream esoteric speculations in the 1980s and 1990s. Many New Age techniques that aim to clear blockages of the chakras were developed during those years, such as crystal healing and aura-soma. Chakras were, by the late 1990s, less connected with their theosophical and Hinduist root, and more infused with New Age ideas. A variety of New Age books proposed different links between each chakras and colors, personality traits, illnesses, Christian sacraments, etc.... [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Aura_\(paranormal\))< — retrieved 23 August 2021]

Most of the remainder of the Wikipedia article consists of a refutation of the existence of auras based on scientific investigations. You may make of this what you will.

Shepherd Hoodwin describes auras this way:

The aura is a band of etheric substance surrounding our physical body that reflects our seven levels of self. It consists of seven layers of mid-physical substance vibrating a little more quickly than the physical body itself. It is at the fringes of human perception — some people can see it.... Our essence "shining through" our personality is like a "light bulb" lighting up the various colors and shapes of our aura. When false personality obscures essence, the aura reflects this with grayer colors; heavy blocks can show up as patches of black. The aura is constantly changing, reflecting the person's internal "climate", although its basic framework remains constant. [The Journey of Your Soul (1995), p. 350]

Even though I have not researched the notion of auras in terms of scientific principles, my general impression from what I have read, and my intuition, is that auras are a biological field, a field that is concomitant with living organisms. This bio-field is analogous to the gravitational field that is concomitant with matter, the magnetic field that is concomitant with magnets, and the electric field that is concomitant with ions and electricity.

Aura Colors During the Original Michaelian Group

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The introduction to the subject during the original Michaelian group happened in the session of 08 May 1974, as follows:

Someone discussed coming across a new concept in two different places: one, through William Bucke's book, Cosmic Consciousness; also in the Book of Aurals; and Edgar Cayce, that man[kind]'s ability to see certain colors, such as blue, is a recent development — it could not be seen in ancient history.

Color perception, as all other perceptions, is a part of the normal pattern of evolution; that is valid, yes. We would place perception of shades of the primary colors [red, yellow, blue] further back in history, though, and the second[ary] colors [orange, green, violet] later. At the time of Pericles [ancient Greece, 495–429 BCE], only vivid shades of green could be perceived as a separate shade.

Sarah asked if seeing or perception is an indication of spiritual growth.

That adaptations of the machine [physical body] are dictated by the needs of the psycho-spiritual apparatus [soul]. This will be difficult for you to verify, since you are now able to perceive blue. However, the work with hypnosis may expand your perception somewhat.

Narra: Asked a question about a class she took in coloring. Do Overleaves determine coloring? Or is there a color category that describes the personality?

Both of these are valid. The auras do change, but usually it is not a permanent change. Therefore you would not notice the clashing for long enough to bother your perceptions, but it is valid to say that certain colors do clash with the aura.

The class that Narra took might have been about the Lüscher Color Test, which is described at this website: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lüscher_color_test<. For the purpose of comparison with what the Michaels revealed, the meanings ascribed to colors in the Lüscher schema are:

- Blue = "Depth of feeling" passive, concentric, tranquility, calm, tenderness
- Green = "Elasticity of will" passive, concentric, defensive, persistence, self-esteem/assertion, pride, control
- Red = "Force of will" eccentric, active aggressive, competitive, action, desire, excitement, sexuality
- Yellow = "Spontaneity" eccentric, active, projective, aspiring, expectancy, exhilaration
- Violet = "Identification" unrealistic/wishful fulfillment, charm, enchantment
- Brown = Bodily senses, indicates the body's condition
- Black = Nothingness, renunciation, surrender or relinquishment
- Grey = Non-involvement and concealment

The original Michaelian group session transcription continues:

No one in the room has an unhealthy aura showing signs of serious physical illness. These tend toward deep grays and dark brown into black.

What are the aura's significance?

You are more at peace in an environment that is aesthetically pleasing to you. With this tool you can sometimes create such an environment. The auras do make a statement about the orientation of the individual Fragment, yes. Predominantly spiritually oriented souls tend to show the brightest blues. The vivid colors usually emanate from dynamism.

What about yellow?

This in you indicates your drive and comes from dynamism.

What about red?

This emanates from the Emotional Center.

In the modern chakra system, the Navel Chakra, which corresponds to the Emotional Center, is orange.

Phyllis: What about violet?

This in you indicates the drive to feel that which is spiritual within you.

Can it change to another color.

Yes. The reds are emotional colors, yes. Violet suggests work.

Carol: I am supposed to be in a Passion Mode and yet I am blue-green?

You do have many modifying Overleaves.

Does gray indicate Repression?

Yes. Gray has. It is not unusual for Intellectually Centered Stoics to show predominant gray. Some are much more predominant than you. You are showing much more blue than gray. We simply said that it is not unusual. You do have some very bright Overleaves.

Chakras within auras?

This is another perception. That is of the subtle changes in the wavelengths of different energy sources.

Why do I, a Spiritualist, have a red aura?

This whole line of questioning should prove most fruitful in allowing you to flash on the great differences. The various combinations of Overleaves modify the soul. The various combinations meld together and produce the total package. The Spiritualist Priest in Growth is, for instance, usually in the bluish deep color range, going toward the reds. This is modified by the Passion Mode, and will often deepen the aura to a dark red or even a bluish-red.

What about yellow-orange?

Primarily dynamic Overleaves produce vivid, bright colors. Our comment would be that some of you will wish to teach this [personality system], of course, but there are others, who, because of their Overleaves, will not be prepared to teach this lifetime. The reality of becoming a teacher does not necessarily always imply a break with former students — only personality dictates this. [08 May 1974]

The next session in which the subject of auras came up was a few days later, 15 May.

Betty: Is my aura purple?

We do not agree with that. This aura is dark blue bordering on violet.

Betty: What is the significance of that?

This is significant to this lady's innate spiritual consciousness, yet there is still some drive toward the physical glamour. The lady, Cynthia has a bright reddish-orange aura. For this emotionally active lady in the Passion Mode, this is to be expected; this is the inner fire manifesting.

Narra: What is my husband's aura?

This man's aura is reddish brown, (signifying) in him some suppression of true desires. Brown usually is indicative of subduing.

Narra: Was he born with that color?

The true color of the aura usually becomes manifest by adolescence.

Narra: Does it have to do with his health?

Yes.

Alice: Why is mine blue-gray?

Many Stoics have this feature. You have far more blue than gray.

What is the importance of knowing chakras?

It would aid you in releasing specific energy. It would be a visual crutch to help you locate the energy pocket.

Is there a source where we could read about colors?

We cannot recommend one source. (We) only can correct your misconceptions as they arise. You will feel the error soon. Most of you are now at the point where you are able to verify the validity of what you are reading, at least to the extent where you bring your questions here when the feeling is wrong.

Alice: [Son] Craig's aura?

Greenish-blue now with overtones of gray. This is not unusual in the adolescent male.

Richard: As I understand it, the aura green has to do with healing. Is there something along that line that I should be pursuing that I am not now doing?

Green does indicate strong drives to serve, yes, and most of those who choose healing and are successful do have this. You have within you the ability, but not the scope or knowledge, but could conceivably attain this. It would be much work, but perhaps far more rewarding than what you are doing now. You could certainly work miracles in the design of certain electronic crutches.

The heart chakra has been assigned the color green in esoteric lore, and it is the chakra that bridges the lower with the higher chakras, and is thereby involved in healing. Richard was an Artisan, and Artisans are typically good with technological devices. His occupation was that of an engineer, which is not a waste of Essence for Artisans, but the healing arts and technologies ("electronic crutches"!) would have been more fulfilling and satisfying. The point to be emphasized here is that, when a person is doing what the Role is built for, then that is subjectively experienced as rewarding. Evidently the aura also provides some basis for rewarding work.

Louise: What might I develop from my green aura?

You would have to take a more intellectual approach, but there again, the ability is there along with the drive.

You can learn to do energy transfers quite easily. The skill will lie in not exhausting yourself in the process.

Be a transducer [that transmits higher energy through you,] and not a battery that runs down. Clear your aura and get aligned [so that you can channel the energy].

Cheryl: What can I do with my bright blue aura?

We would say that most of the esoteric teachers have blue auras.

Joan: How can [husband] Jim develop his green aura?

The most important contribution he could be would be in the creative intellectual area, also.

Does cowardliness have anything to do with Old Souls?

Not much. Some old souls have yellow streaks. This does not necessarily mean that they will be cowardly, just very cautious.

Does this have anything to do with the common language referring to a "yellow streak" in fearful people?

Yes. Fear often brings the yellow in a given soul's aura to the point where it is subliminally visible.

I thought yellow meant leadership.

It does when it is permanent.

When it is said that a person is "seeing red", is he seeing through his own aura?

Sometimes, yes, they are, and what he sees is more orange than red. Anger and fear are quite close to passion — both are what could be called fiery emotions.

Joan: How can I develop my pink aura?

Reddish pinks are always sensual colors. There is nothing negative there about this aura. It is healthy and vibrant.

Joan: Then is my total personality sexually oriented? I don't act out the sex.

The orange-red auras normally indicate those in whom the orientation is primarily physical, or, if you will, sexual. Those going toward the pinks are more tactile, or sexually oriented.

Narra: What do I do with my turquoise aura?

This denotes the searching Personality that caused you to seek this and other Teaching(s), but because it is so bright, it also supplies you drive that enables you to succeed. This can be channeled to all of you to become spiritually successful also.

Herein lies the "greener pastures" syndrome — "I would like to change my pink aura for your purple one."

Do the planets influence auras?

No. [15 May 1974]

A few days later, 18 May, there was another flurry of questions about aura colors and indications:

[Mary's] Aura is blue with strong overtones of gray.

Is the gray from illness or Martyrdom or what?

Both. The darkness is fading now.

What is that due to?

Emotional depression and physical illness. [18 May 1974]

A few days later, 22 May, there was another flurry of questions about aura colors and indications:

We would like to know Mallory's aura. Blue-green? Red? Orange?

This aura is mostly red with overtones of blue.

What does it mean?

There has been a progressive conscious effort toward the spiritual in this lady. As she moves toward this the overtones become more striking.

Mallory: What about white auras? Do they represent Christ?

We also agree with that.

Cynthia: [What about a] rainbow aura seen in me by a medium? What is that? What did he see?

Sunlight and imagination.

Dick: What would the aura be in a Transcendental soul?

We would like you to make a distinction between Old Souls "transcendental" and the Transcendental [Soul] which is a manifestation of the high Causal body. The auras of those Old Souls who complete their physical Cycle is generally of a clearer, brighter hue [than others]. Mohandas Gandhi was physically ill and still had gray overtones until the time of the manifestation [of the Transcendental Soul], at which time the aura became deep blue. [22 May 1974]

Do the Centers and chakras correspond?

Yes, they do. This is what the yogis perceive when they expound on this. In one able to visualize [see] the auras this becomes easy, for there is a transitory "puff" of color accompanying significant outputs, such as occurs in the digestion of the major meal of the day or in deep meditation. The gut chakra is Emotional Center, Intellectual Center manifests itself at chest level, and so forth. The Sexual Center can be measured at the level of the thyroid; the Higher Emotional Center at the level of the pineal body; the Higher Intellectual Center at the level of the anterior pituitary. Procreation is handled by the Moving Center in sleeping animals. [16 June 1974]

Refer to the chapter on Chakras for a thorough treatment of that subject.

What does a gold aura indicate?

The golden shades normally indicate an altruistic bent.

Does one's aura change in one lifetime?

If the change is a permanent one, the aura will change correspondingly. As long as the desire remains, the aura will give this away in brilliant technicolor. [19 June, 1974]

After this date, references to the aura became quite spotty.

Someone asked about his attraction to healing. Is there a connection?

Well, this "connection" can successfully be made by many of the students, but you do have more affinity for it. You have a deep green aura, which would indicate success in this area to us. The Essence understands this and therefore the desire. [19 November 1974]

Can it be seen in a patient's eyes when they are going to die soon, or in their aura?

Interestingly enough, there is also a thermal change in the aura that is measurable as it changes from its usual color to black. But yes, many good students can see this in the eyes just as clearly as they can see the Overleaves. [14 December 1974]

In meditation I had imagery, flowers blooming and shutting off the bud.

Experiences such as this one should occur with increasing frequency when students begin to experience deeper states of concentration and allow the images to merely come into their focus. Of course, there is much symbolism here of the drawing closer, of the unfolding and opening, then the retreat. The colors will usually reflect the colors of the student's aura, yes, since these are the colors of maximum affinity. [21 February 1975]

Summary of Aura Colors

Vivid Auras: Indicate dynamic energies in the individual, Cardinal Overleaves.

White: Christ Consciousness.

Gold or golden tones: altruism.

True Violet: You are on the spiritual path and are driven to look within to find the Creator/Self. Read this as "on the path and doing the work".

Blues that trend to red: Passion mode for those on the path.

Brightest Blues: Spiritually oriented individuals, esoteric teachers.

Dark blue that borders on violet: Trending toward the path but still involved in maya to some degree.

Bluish-Gray: stoicism on the path.

Green: strong desire to serve others; ability to heal as energy transfer.

Turquoise: Combination of seeker with acceptance qualities, if clear and bright it has a drive in it to succeed. It has the ability to transfer spiritual energy as well.

Reds: From Emotional center, passion, agape.

Orangish Reds: can be anger, which is fear based and as such comes from emotional center. This can also be sexuality, physically emotive individual.

Bright Reddish-Orange: Emotionally centered in passion mode [the inner fire manifest].

Pink to Red: sensuality, again a positive state from emotional center.

Red with Blue overtones: a progressive conscious effort towards spiritual self.

Reddish-Brown: Emotional submission of true desires.

Yellows and Oranges: denote drive, leadership, dynamic personality, vitality.

Paler Yellow: Caution Mode.

Yellow as an overlay: fear, this is usually transitory, in the moment.

Unhealthy Auras: These tend toward deep grays and dark brown, and shade into black near death.

Gray: the graying overtones can be from Overleaves that are repressive, stoicism — not disease.

Auras Subsequent to the Original Michaelian Group

There was no significance to the time or two that auras were mentioned in Messages from Michael. Yarbro had nothing of significant to do with the subject in any of her four books on the Michaelian teachings.

The aura was mentioned a few times in the Briggs group, which met from about 1980 to 1983, but no explanation was attached to the colors that were ascribed to some people.

José Stevens wrote and published a section on auras in his 1988 book Tao to Earth, pages 226–230.

JP Van Hulle devoted a session to auras on 18 March 1993. It can be found on pages 258–261 in Michael Speaks: The Legacy of JP Van Hulle, Volume 2, published by The Center for Michael Teachings, Inc.

Several references to auras can be found in both editions of Shepherd Hoodwin's books, The Journey of Your Soul (1995) and Journey of Your Soul (2013), as noted in the Indexes of those books.

Concluding Comments on Auras

A couple of seminal books on auras were mentioned in the Wikipedia article quoted above. If you are inclined to pursue the matter, you can download a PDF or eBook copy of Leadbeater's book Man Visible and Invisible from this website: ><https://www.globalgreybooks.com/man-visible-and-invisible-ebook.html><. Christopher Hills's book Nuclear Evolution: The Rainbow Body, also mentioned in the Wikipedia article quoted above as seminal in the development of the concept, is not out of copyright, but it is available for cheap as a used book; search the internet. I have not compared and contrasted what the Michaels say with what these two books say, but of course you are welcome to do so.

So, this concept of auras was borrowed from other teachers and traditions. Is not a subject that has gained much traction in the Michaelian teachings community; it is certainly not an essential component of their revelation, and it might even be of dubious validity and utility.

AUROBINDO, SRI

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “Aurobindo” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

Brief Biography of Sri Aurobindo

From Wikipedia, as usual...

Aurobindo per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Only mentioned once?

Concluding Comment on Sri Aurobindo

The reason that I included a chapter about Aurobindo in this Study Papers book is so that I could put in a plug for longer examinations of his work, and my comparisons of it with the Michaelian teachings. These reviews are found in my other books, namely The Tao of Cosmogony and The Synthesis: The Michaelian Teachings as Perennialism. Taking a hint from the Michaels’ comment that they found nothing wrong with Aurobindo’s work, so I can with confidence recommend that you check him out, and I would say that the two teachings complement each other nicely.

⑤ AWAKENING FROM SLEEP

This phrase, “awakening from sleep”, is a metaphor for “enlightenment”. It occurs many times in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. Unsurprisingly, it is also found throughout the Gurdjieffian teachings. Because some of the founding members of the original Michaelian group were familiar with the Gurdjieffian teachings, the Michaels used the metaphor in their exchanges with the original Michaelian group members. The principle here is that what happens in the spiritual realm can be understood by analogy with what happens in the physical realm. Refer to the chapter “Enlightenment” for the definition and description of Enlightenment and its metaphors.

According to Gurdjieff, people who are not on a valid spiritual path function in what he referred to as the “waking sleep”. This is another phrase like “Mechanical Man” that refers to the typical human state of consciousness, which is to say, a minimal state of awareness. The person might actually function quite well in the world, but is more or less on 'autopilot', unaware that there is any other way to behave or feel or think than he or she does. The person does not actually have much in the way of “free will” because they are oblivious to the options. They are ruled by False Personality and Maya and they function within the parameters of the cultural ‘trance’ — the subjects of other chapters. Sleeping humans are simply not aware of the greater consciousness and the higher reality.

The word “awakening” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because, other than the fact that it is a metaphor, it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. The subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

So, let’s take a look at what Gurdjieff had to say about it, and then take a look at what the Michaels had to say about it.

Awakening per Gurdjieff

The Gurdjieffian teachings is well known in esoteric circles for its claim that people are “asleep” compared to their “higher” nature, which is “awake”. Here is how Wikipedia described this metaphor:

George Ivanovich Gurdjieff ... was a Russian philosopher, mystic, spiritual teacher, and composer, of Armenian and Greek descent, born in Alexandropol, Russian Empire (now Gyumri, Armenia). Gurdjieff taught that most humans do not possess a unified consciousness and thus live their lives in a state of hypnotic “waking sleep”, but that it is possible to awaken to a higher state of consciousness and achieve full human potential. Gurdjieff described a method attempting to do so, calling the discipline “The Work” (connoting “work on oneself”) or “the System”. According to his principles and instructions, Gurdjieff’s method for awakening one’s consciousness unites the methods of the fakir, monk, and yogi, and thus he referred to it as the “Fourth Way”.... Gurdjieff believed that people cannot perceive reality in their current condition because they do not possess a unified consciousness but rather live in a state of a hypnotic “waking sleep”. “Man lives his life in sleep, and in sleep he dies.” As a result of this each person perceives things from a completely subjective perspective. He asserted that people in their typical state function as unconscious automatons, but that a person can “wake up” and become a different sort of human being altogether.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/George_Gurdjieff< — retrieved 10 June 2021]

This entire Wikipedia article is very useful for understanding Gurdjieff and his teaching and his influence on others. For anyone wanting to understand the Michaelian teachings, it helps very much to understand the Gurdjieffian teachings.

The metaphor of ‘awakening from sleep’ as another name for that other metaphor, ‘enlightenment’, and that other metaphor ‘liberation’ did not originate with Gurdjieff; it has a history going back at least to the Buddha:

In Buddhism, Buddha (Sanskrit: ... “awakened one”), is a title for those who are awake, and have attained nirvana and Buddhahood through their own efforts and insight, without a teacher to point out the dharmā (Sanskrit: ... “right way of living”). The title is most commonly used for Gautama Buddha, the founder of Buddhism, who is often simply known as “the Buddha”. Buddhahood (Sanskrit: ... buddhatva; Pali: buddhatta or buddhabhāva ...) is the condition and rank of a buddha “awakened one”. This highest spiritual state of being is also termed sammā-sambodhi (Sanskrit: samyaksaṃbodhi) (Full complete Awakening).
[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Buddhahood>< — retrieved 24 May 2022]

My surmise is that some research would reveal that many other religious and spiritual traditions would be found to use the same metaphor for whatever their version of full spiritual maturity might be.

This chapter is divided into two sections, the first section is mostly about sleeping, and the second section is mostly about waking.

‘Sleep’ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first appearance of the ‘sleep’ metaphor appears in an original Michaelian group transcription from two weeks before the Michaels themselves appeared:

Carolyn: I have felt the need to express my opinions more lately and I wonder if this is good. Sometimes I have spouted off.

[Tomas:] Do you understand the source of the negative emotions? If so, then you should examine them carefully and see if you can turn them into something positive. Hostility is never an act of conscious will. The only positive forces are peaceful, loving ones. Carolyn still has a tendency to slip into the patterns or vibrations of the moment. Many sleeping souls provide the necessary shocks to keep her on the right track — constantly examining herself. This is a common failing among neophytes on the true path. There are always many doubts until the integration takes place, and the commitment is made and is irrevocable. Life on the material plane with all its glamour continues to lure you back. The glamour is illusion — Maya, if you prefer the more esoteric term. Maya is part of Karma and is present for a very specific purpose. It tests your spiritual growth all the time and is your sole eternal safety checkpoint. When you reach the point in your spiritual growth when you “know” that all hostile feelings and thoughts and words — and even world wars — come from lower Centers in sleeping souls and they are not in control, then you will lose the desire or need to retaliate or spout off. It’s like spouting off to a stone wall for all the good it does you. You gain nothing and lose a great deal. [24 July 1973]

This passage is full of words that refer to concepts that have study papers in this book: “Glamour”, “Maya”, “Growth, Spiritual”, “Path, Spiritual”, “Karma”, and “Shock”. My suggestion is that “sleeping souls” in this passage does not refer to spirits; it refers to unenlightened people, those who are encumbered with negative emotions, lower Centers, Maya, and so on. An alternative explanation is that the phrase refers to “Essence sleep”, mentioned several times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions; see below.

The metaphor of ‘sleep’ is found in the first original Michaelian group session in which the Michaels appeared:

Concerning being unpopular because you held unpopular beliefs, pursued teachings, etc.

There will always be unpopularity when unpopular ideas are espoused and expressed. The body does not wish the Essence to be freed. It will fight to keep the Essence asleep. It takes many such fights to strengthen the Essence. [12 August 1973]

Gurdjieff had a different understanding of Essence than what the Michaelian teachings eventually came to understand about Essence. Gurdjieff thought of Essence as the unified mind, the goal of spiritual work, whereas the Michaelian teachings regards the Essence as the “innermost core of the [spiritual] soul”. Refer to the chapter on “Essence and Personality” for a complete explanation. In both senses of the Essence referent, body and Essence have an adversarial relationship because they are opposite poles of a Monad; refer to the chapter on “Monads” for more information about that. The awakening of Essence is a metaphor for enlightenment, but it is not the only metaphor. Notice the word “freed” here; there is also a chapter, “Liberation”, which discusses that metaphor for enlightenment.

Dick: Could we have a definition of Karma from Michael?

As you reap, so you also sow. Or as you sow, so you shall reap. However, this goes far deeper than mere action by those immersed in the waking sleep. For them, the energy loss is far greater, for most of their lives are wasted in fantasy and fantasy costs much in Karmic debts. You must fulfill all carnal desires before serious work is begun on the Essence. This can take many lives, usually a minimum of forty-nine. [26 August 1973]

Recall that “waking sleep” is the phrase used in the Wikipedia article quoted above. Generally speaking, younger souls can be considered to be in the ‘sleeping’ part of the reincarnation cycle, and older souls can be considered to be in the ‘waking’ part of the reincarnation cycle; “carnal desires” are fulfilled in the first half of the cycle, and Essence desires are fulfilled in the second half. A similar statement can be said about Karma: younger souls earn Ribbons and older souls burn Ribbons. The turning point in the entire story arc of reincarnation is Fourth Level Mature. A similar statement can be made about the Milestone stages during a lifetime: a person is mostly ‘asleep’ during the first half, and ‘wakes up’ during the second half. (Milestones, aka “Internal Monads”, are discussed in Part X, Chapter X, in my book The Tao of Cosmogony.)

The following Q&A is repeated in the Awake section below:

Richard: Are the Karmic Ribbons influenced by False Personality?

Yes. Entrapment in the body and the Chief Feature are Karma for Essence. All others [Karmic Ribbons] arise from actions born of the waking sleep. If you are awake, you would not do it.

Sarah: Gurdjieff says that most people pass their lives in the “waking sleep.” If you want to verify it, just try to remember what you had for dinner last Tuesday or how many traffic lights did you drive through when you came over here. [17 October 1973]

One could make a list of unpleasant stuff that happens during ‘sleep’. So far we have Karma, Maya, negative emotions, fantasy, hostility, doubts, and mindlessness.

We do not object to expressions of enthusiasm when enthusiasm is genuine. It is when you feel compelled to exclaim that it becomes “formatory” and of the “waking sleep”. The expression “far out” can be valid or it can be inane. [20 October 1973]

Add insincerity and inanity to the list of ‘sleep’ stuff. Refer to the chapter “Formatory” for more about that.

According to Gurdjieff, only with a conscious teacher can one “do” anything. Most people plea when anything goes drastically wrong, “God help me!” At EST, we learned that only “I” am responsible for the mess “I’m” in. We have to look inward and not put the blame on something outside ourselves.

That is, of course, valid. Without a teacher, you can do nothing. You are blind and deaf; “asleep.” [27 February 1974]

Add blindness, deafness, irresponsibility, and ineffectiveness to the list of ‘sleep’ stuff.

Waking sleep results from being entrapped [in a Center]

Yes. The Cave (Plato) was analogous to this entrapment. [03 March 1974]

Refer to >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Allegory_of_the_cave< for an explanation of that reference. There is that word “entrapment” again; refer to the chapter on “Liberation” for a thorough description of this other metaphor for the unenlightened human condition, namely the ‘prison/freedom’ metaphor; it is another way of analogizing the ‘sleep/awake’ metaphor.

Could Michael give us some of James’s Agreements on the Astral Plane?

This student has elected to reach a large number of souls with what he discerns as the Logos. This to us represents a good beginning. Although on the surface this may seem to be a commercial venture, the observations are at a deeper level and the Essence here has more influence than you would think. Although he is still quite “asleep,” he does follow many intuitive drives. [20 November 1974]

This passage hints at the notion that there are stages or levels of awakening from sleep. If I were to systematize the sleep > awake metaphor in terms of the septenary — the seven stages of growth that are pervasive in the Michaelian teachings — I would put the ‘sleep’ phase in the Ordinal triad and the ‘awake’ phase in the Cardinal triad, with “intuition” in the Neutral stage. The transition from asleep to awake begins when the Personality begins to intuitively listen to the promptings of Essence.

Discussion about Artificial Space — False Personality — Karmic debts.

For a moment, look at the physical universe as an enormous stage, and all of the physical things within it as the sets and actors. Then look for a moment at the possibility that Karma or the system of Karma, may in fact be looked upon as the director of the play of life. Souls experiencing all of life on the Physical Plane never have to seek spiritual growth. They can, and most do, go through the whole cycle [of reincarnation] in the “waking sleep.” The moment that you elect to commit yourself to the [spiritual growth] path, you remove yourself from the list of available actor’s equity. Were it not for Karmic Ribbons, souls would not experience much at all. They certainly would not experience all of life. [08 February 1975]

Even though many older souls choose to experience lifetimes in which they ‘wake up’, it is not mandatory. Elsewhere it is said that it is not necessary for all souls to experience “all of life”; it is for the Entity as a whole to integrate the experiences of all of its Fragments on the upper levels of the Astral Plane, thus achieving full wakefulness or enlightenment.

Mechanical Man, or man asleep, does not communicate, at least not if one is to posit communication as a two-way street. One of the most useful Shocks we have seen applied by both Adepts and Masters in their Schools, has been when they have, from a position of awakeness (operating not from Personality but from Essence) have asked someone to leave the School. This has many times been enough of a shock to transform a leech into a student. Yes, it is a negative Shock, but it is certainly not delivered or dumped from the Negative Pole of the Overleaves [which] results in Leakage downward. All negativity comes from the negative. Therefore, we certainly do not consider it Good Work.... Of course, it is Bad Work to constantly disrupt a line of work and if this is done in sleep, it is reprehensible. [Dimensions! magazine, April 1975]

This passage is full of terms that have their own chapter: “Mechanical Man”, “Adepts and Masters”, “School”, “Essence and Personality”, “Energy and Energy Leaks”, “Good Work — Bad Work”. Refer to the chapter on “Shocks” for a description and explanation of that term, borrowed from Gurdjieff. The point is that ‘asleep’ people are resistant to and/or insensitive to feedback from other people and the world in general. That is why it takes a Shock to ‘wake them up’. One can get wakeup calls from the universe in the natural course of learning the hard way, or one can have intentional shocks delivered in a “School”, where one is surrounded by people who are more enlightened. This phenomenon has been likened to a “cosmic two-by-four” that “hits one between the eyes” to get one’s attention, indicating that a “course correction” needs to be made.

The conflict that you feel comes about because the Personality does exactly what it wants to do all of the time. The essence does not have the chance to act in the moment and it goes to sleep in order to avoid the conflict. The forces of “good and evil” that you feel fighting within yourselves are not the essence fighting the Personality, but are the Overleaves fighting each other. [21 November 1976]

I suggest that this is another instance where the Gurdjieffian understanding of essence as a component of the physical psyche is intended, rather than the later Michaelian understanding of Essence as of the transpersonal soul.

So, now let’s shift our investigation from the negative side of the ‘asleep/awake’ metaphor to the positive side of the ‘asleep/awake’ metaphor.

‘Awake’ per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Having searched the original Michaelian group transcriptions for instances of the ‘sleep’ metaphor, let’s start from the beginning again and this time search for instances of the ‘awake’ metaphor.

The first appearance of the awakening metaphor appears in a transcription from two weeks before the Michaels themselves appeared:

[Tomas:] It is easy for even the partially awakened soul to distinguish [the difference between Eros and Agape]. [24 July 1973]

The role of sexuality as a potential component of one’s spiritual path is discussed at length in my book The Tao of Relationships. There is also the chapter “Sexuality” in this Study Papers book.

Does it not seem that all [spirits who are] seeking the least complex will return to the [simple] energy from whence they came? Complexity is the antithesis of what the [matured] spirit seeks. The body [of incarnation] represents the epitome of complexity. That is why the spirit is again and again attracted to it, until the partially awakened Essence catches a glimpse beyond the “veil.” [Then it again seeks simplicity.] [12 August 1973]

In this statement we find the metaphor of Essence being allowed to ‘wake up’ in the process of reincarnation in the physical body, plus the metaphor of that embodied Essence becoming able to see beyond a ‘veil’ that obscures perception of a spiritual reality. The phrasing in that quotation is clumsy, so I added some clarifications in brackets, but if I understand it correctly, it is telling us that in the first half of a cycle of reincarnation, the simple spirit it attracted to complexity, and then there is a turning point, and then the spirit is attracted to the simplicity from which it originated. This simplicity > complexity > simplicity process is built into the seven-stage structure of the cosmos. It is explained in detail in terms of geometric space/time and time/space dimensions in the chapters on Worldviews (aka Soul Ages) in Part Three of my book The Tao of Personality.

Richard: Are the Karmic Ribbons influenced by False Personality?

Yes. Entrapment in the body and the Chief Feature are Karma for Essence. All others [Karmic Ribbons] arise from actions born of the waking sleep. If you are awake, you would not do it. [17 October 1973]

Some deep concepts presented in this quotation are discussed in depth in other chapters, such as “Liberation” and “Karma”. The phrase “waking sleep” appeared above, in the extraction from the Wikipedia article on Gurdjieff. Very unpleasant things happen when you sleepwalk your way through life, oblivious of the way the world works.

Mallory: I wonder about my recent backpacking trips: how would this relate to my Centers? I stopped picking at my fingers, did not think, did not feel: I just was. I did not feel any more awake or more high. I feel uncomfortable because I feel I’m not accomplishing anything [by merely Being in nature].

It is correct to say, as the questioner did, that there is a difference between being “awake” and being “high”.

It is related to the fact that students often experience an Essence or Balanced state for prolonged periods when removed from the Maya, error, familiar Maya of their [acculturation] environment and are forced to “be” in the moment [by being, for instance, in a pristine natural environment].

That answer is a good description of what it is like to be “awake”: it involves an absence of Maya, among other things. I added the word “acculturation” in brackets because I believe that is the type of “environment” being referred to there, as distinct from an unspoiled natural environment, which the questioner visited during a backpacking trip. To wander in nature is one of the best ways to get out of your Maya-encumbered acculturated environment, which only creates and reinforces False Personality.

Mallory: It is not a dramatic thing. It just is. A person in the present is not experiencing anything dramatic. Does a Balanced Man feel high? It was said last time that the “surge” comes when one becomes Balanced.

If the moment is a quiet one, Balanced Man will feel the tranquility. If it is a “high” [moment], then Balanced Man will feel the ecstasy of the moment. Ironically, the reverse is often true in Mechanical Man. Young Souls involved with ecology legalization will often feel surges of emotionalism when confronted with a pacific, woodland environment. [17 September 1974]

There is another endorsement for the spiritual benefits of being in nature. It does not say so here, but it does elsewhere, that the stage called “Balanced Man” is just the lowest of the higher “Levels of Being”; there are levels beyond; people “wake up” by stages and degrees; refer to the chapters by those names.

About witnessing an apparently illegal act in San Francisco on O’Farrell Street — the shock of seeing something as we interpret it — a warning?

We would call it so, yes. You see what happened then happens often to Mechanical Man. He is in his customary state of slumber and all of a sudden awakens briefly from his dreams and attempts to interpret a scene in that split second before he sleeps again. Often, his momentary vision is grossly distorted and then the Emotional Center or Emotional Parts of Centers takes over and directs the action.

Unlike a Mechanical Man, a Balanced Man will respond from the appropriate Center, not necessarily from the Emotional Center or Emotional Part of a Center.

These experiences are good for students in that they often call attention to the depths of the trance in which you go through life. It is true, students do often witness heinous crimes of violence, but then usually the alert student is prepared to spring into action and do what must be done from the proper perspective. It is not true, however, that the high planes arrange convenient accidents to aid the students. We just hope that you do notice those experiences that come your way as [spiritual] growth experiences. [08 October 1974]

Although it does not say so here, one need not wait for random shocking things to help you realize how asleep you are; one can expose oneself to new and challenging experiences in general, and one can engage in spiritual practices designed for that very thing. The original Michaelian group transcriptions, the Gurdjieffian teachings, and other esoteric spiritual paths, are full of suggestions for helping you wake up.

The Physical Plane and its pervasive atmosphere demands that you “do” something physical about ethereal matters. Consequently, when the Essence awakens for an instant and feels love for its Essence Twin or an old [physical] twin [from a previous lifetime], the False Personality immediately goes to work on this emotion, converting it into something it can understand. This is what is meant by some spiritual leaders who exhort their followers to rise above the Physical Plane. Mechanical Man has not learned to rise above the desire for instant gratification; therefore, he experiences much frustration, since the culture largely denies him that gratification.

The wording in this passage and other passages might imply that Essence can be asleep and can awake, but my preferred interpretation is that Essence is always awake and that the Personality actually needs to go to ‘sleep’ in order for the Essence to ‘wake up’ in the sense that it manifests overtly and obviously in a person; from the point of view of the Personality, it is as if the Essence awakens. The alternative interpretation is to understand essence as Gurdjieff understood it, as something that is awakened, aka “crystallized”, by working on oneself. (Perhaps it is just me, but it seems to me that the transition from the understanding of essence in the Gurdjieffian teachings and the understanding of Essence in post-original Michaelian group groups was not made clear during the original Michaelian group.)

James asked what must we do to become awake.

We have, of course, outlined to this [original Michaelian group] cadre the steps that they must take if they are to ever become sufficiently awake to hear the words. We have told them of the highest truth, which is Agape, which is the unqualified acceptance of other creatures as the greater part of self. We have given them the tools for attainment of this state, which are yes, meditation, concentration, fasting and study. We have endeavored to warn them, or rather apprise them, of the pitfalls they may encounter on the [spiritual] path. We have recommended that they simplify their lives, that they may free the necessary energies for pursuit of this objective.

We would give you the same advice. It cannot change. This is as we have said many times, the shortest path of which we are aware. The most penetrating barriers on the Physical Plane are the “I cannot” belief systems that stand in the way of spiritual evolution. The easiest way we know of to break through these barriers is to eliminate the alienation, the frustrating isolation that your culture now imposes. [20 November 1974]

Elaboration on these subjects can be found in the chapters “Agape”, “Meditation and Concentration”, “Fasting”, “Study”, “Path — Spiritual”, “Complexity versus Simplicity”, “Alienation”.

Dick asked if his painting was for him a form of concentration.

Oh, very definitely, as is some vigorous physical activity for Moving Centered individuals. Swinging [a type of dancing] is for Sarah. Many mundane chores also can be employed to keep the body busy while the Essence awakes and concentrates. [20 November 1974]

Besides the methods recommended above to awaken essence or Essence, here are some more methods; these types are meant to distract the Personality from its usual concerns, rather than to focus on awakening per se.

If you wish to Photograph your False Personality at work, then you must be in a situation where the Overleaves abrade. Then and only then can real progress take place. In a limited sense, this can be done in small, scattered groups and we would see this even before we would see total separation of the “life” and the work. You see, it is when the life becomes the work that the gift is given. As long as there is a schism there is limited chance for awakening. The discontinuity severely retards the growth. The more continuity, the more growth. [Dimensions! magazine, April 1975]

Here is another method for waking up: “Photograph” (refer to chapter by that name) the instances where you are in conflict with other people. This can happen in True Personality as well as in False Personality.

Mechanical Man, or man ‘asleep’, does not communicate, at least not if one is to posit communication as a two-way street. One of the most useful shocks we have seen applied by both Adepts and Masters in their schools, has been when they have, from a position of awakeness (operating not from Personality but from Essence) have asked someone to leave the school. This has many times been enough of a shock to transform a leech into a student. Yes, it is a negative shock, but it is certainly not delivered or dumped from the Negative Pole of the Overleaves [which] results in Leakage downward. All negativity comes from the negative. Therefore, we certainly do not consider it Good Work. [Dimensions! magazine, April 1975]

The Fellowship of Souls is a group of people who have willingly embarked upon the journey. We utilize many methods and disciplines, taking from each the essence that is relevant, and that produces growth. By studying the teachings of many who have traveled the path before us, we learn to validate the Universal Truths and apply them in our lives. By using various disciplines of meditation and concentration, we learn to reach deep within to the source of all knowledge – and we learn that All lies within, awaiting our moment of awakening. [Dimensions! magazine, June 1975]

False goals are those that are largely unattainable, as they exist only in fantasy. True goals lead to the awakening of the Essence and its breakthrough. This is indeed possible for those who wish it and without great sacrifice upon the mountain-top. [12 December 1976]

Closing Comments on ‘Sleep’ and ‘Awake’

Chapters related to this one are “Bio-computer”, “Enlightenment”, “EST”, “Liberation”, and “Shock”.

① BALANCED MAN

One of the major themes of the original Michaelian group was spiritual development. This goes beyond psychotherapy, although psychotherapy is a necessary prerequisite for spiritual development in the original Michaelian group and elsewhere. In the metaphorical ‘school’ of life, one must do the ‘homework’ in psychotherapy before ‘graduating’ to the ‘school’ of spiritual growth. One of the stages in the process of psychotherapeutic and spiritual development is where one has become Balanced. Per the Michaelian teachings, this is in fact the middle stage in a process of seven stages. Because this stage in the seven-stage story arc of psychotherapeutic and spiritual development had a special meaning in the original Michaelian group, it is capitalized.

Balanced Man, and Balance in general, is mentioned dozens of times during the years when the original Michaelian group met. Describing and explaining it makes this one of the longest chapters in this Study Papers book. The phrase, if not the concept itself, has largely been lost to later students of the Michaelian teachings. It seems unfortunate to me that a subject that was so important to the original Michaelian group has been lost to post-original Michaelian group Michaelian students. Also lost, generally speaking, to post-original Michaelian group groups is the information that there are a couple of stages of spiritual development beyond Balanced Man. These are named Adept and Master; together these two have their own chapter.

There are numerous other concepts that are related to Balanced Man, and they each have their own terminology. For instance, there are Levels of Being, Centers and Parts of Centers, Center of Gravity, Magnetic Center, Mechanical Man, Soul and Essence, False Personality, True Personality, Traps, Energy Leaks, Psychic Energy, Friction, Chakras, Meditation and Concentration, John Lilly, and Schools. Each of these terms has its own chapter in this Study Papers book.

The phrase, Balanced Man, originated with Gurdjieff. In that teaching it is often contrasted with Mechanical Man, and these terms were brought into the original Michaelian group because founding members were familiar with Gurdjieff. Basically, Mechanical Man is someone who operates more or less automatically and habitually out of his nature and his nurture — the personality he was born with and the personality he develops afterward. Mechanical Man is not aware of any transcendent influences, those transcendent influences often referred to as Essence in both the Gurdjieff and Michaelian teachings. In both, Man is used in the sense of Human, not pertaining to males specifically. By taking a look at what Balance meant to Gurdjieff, we will see what it meant to members of the original Michaelian group, and we will understand its use by the Michaels.

Levels of Being per Gurdjieff

Gurdjieff taught that there were seven stages in the development of awareness on the spiritual path, which he called “Levels of Being.” The middle stage of the hierarchy was said to be transitional between the three ‘lower’ and the three ‘higher’ stages, and the key descriptive word for it was Balanced. The higher up the seven-step ladder one was, the more awake one was, to use Gurdjieff’s term. Before the middle stage, people were said to be “Mechanical.” The following quote is from one of Gurdjieff’s star pupils, Peter Ouspensky.

Interjection: if you are not familiar with the way that Ouspensky, and his teacher, Gurdjieff, use the word “school”, it would be helpful to understanding some material quoted below to glance at the subsection “Schools According to Gurdjieff and Ouspensky” in the chapter “School — Learning — Teacher — Student” in this Study Papers book.

Man number one, number two, and number three: these are people who constitute Mechanical humanity on the same level on which they are born.

Man number ONE means man in whom the center of gravity of his psychic life lies in the MOVING CENTER. This is the man of the physical body, the man with whom the moving and the instinctive functions constantly outweigh the emotional and thinking functions.

Man Number TWO means man on the same level of development, but man in whom the center of gravity of his psychic life lies in the EMOTIONAL CENTER, that is, man with whom the emotional functions outweigh all others; the man of feeling, the emotional man.

Man number THREE means man on the same level of development but man in whom the center of gravity of his psychic life lies in the INTELLECTUAL CENTER, that is, man with whom the thinking functions gain the upper hand over the moving, instinctive, and emotional functions; the man of reason, who goes into everything from theories, from mental considerations. [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 71]

The first three categories are practically on the same level. Man number 1: a man in whom the moving or instinctive centers predominate over the intellectual and emotional — Physical Man. Man number 2: a man in whom the emotional center predominates over the intellectual, moving, and instinctive — Emotional man. Man number 3: a man in whom the intellectual center predominates over the emotional, moving, and instinctive — Intellectual man. In ordinary life we meet only these three categories of man. Each one of us and everyone we know is either number 1, number 2, or number 3. There are higher categories of man, but men are not born already belonging to these higher categories. They are all born number 1, number 2, number 3 and can reach higher categories only through [spiritual] schools.

Man number FOUR is not born as such. He is a product of school culture. He differs from man number 1, number 2, and number 3 by his knowledge of himself, by his understanding of his position, and as it is expressed technically, by his having acquired a permanent center of gravity. This last means the idea of acquiring unity, consciousness, permanent 'I', and will. That is, the idea of his development has already become for him more important than his other interests. It must be added to the characteristics of man number 4, that his functions and centers are more balanced, in a way in which they could not be balanced without work on himself, according to school principles and methods. [Bold text is my emphasis.]

Man number FIVE is a man who has acquired unity and [subjective] self-consciousness. He is different from ordinary man, because in him, one of the higher centers [the higher emotional center] already works, and he has many functions and powers that an ordinary man — that is, man number 1, number 2, and number 3 — does not possess.

Man number SIX is a man who has acquired objective consciousness. Another higher center works in him [the higher intellectual center]. He possesses many more new faculties and powers, beyond the understanding of ordinary man.

Man number SEVEN is a man who has attained all that a man can attain. He has a permanent 'I' and free will. He can control all the states of consciousness in himself and he already cannot lose anything he has acquired. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Psychology of Man's Possible Evolution, pp. 53–56]

These then are the seven Levels of Being in Gurdjieff's teaching. Notice that they are generally related to the Centers. The Centers were the only "Overleaf" that Gurdjieff was familiar with (although he did not call it that, and the Michaels added six others to it during the early months of the original Michaelian group). The next section of this chapter describes Man number Four, Balanced Man, in greater detail.

Balanced Man per Gurdjieff

Following are some more quotes from two of Ouspensky's books that bear specifically on the subject of Man #4, Balanced Man. Other resources can be found on the Internet. It is with this background that members of the original Michaelian group understood the differences among people, and what the Michaels built upon and emphasized.

Man No.4. This means the beginning of change, chiefly in consciousness but also in knowledge and capacity for observation. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 15]

Man No.4 is a man who has acquired a permanent center of gravity, but in every thing else he is an ordinary man. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 101]

Man No.4 knows his aim and how his aim can be attained. He goes with his eyes open, while we [Men Numbers 1, 2 & 3] go with our eyes shut. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 141]

Man number four is an intermediate stage. Man number four is not born ready-made. He is born one, two, or three, and becomes four only as a result of efforts of a definite character. Man number four is always the product of school work. He can neither be born, nor develop accidentally or as the result of ordinary influences of bringing up, education, and so on. Man number four already stands on a different level to man number one, two, and three; he has a permanent center of gravity which consists in his ideas, in his valuation of the work, and in his relation to the school. In addition, his psychic [psychological] centers have already begun to be balanced; one center in him cannot have such a preponderance over others as is the case with people of the first three categories. He already begins to know himself and begins to know whither he is going. The knowledge of man number four is a very different kind of knowledge. It is knowledge which comes from man number five, who in turn receives it from man number six, who has received it from man number seven. But, of course, man number four assimilates of this knowledge only what is possible according to his powers. But, in comparison with man number one, man number two, and man number three, man number four has begun to get free from the subjective elements in his knowledge and to move along the path towards objective knowledge. [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 71–73]

Building on Gurdjieff's concept of Balance, this description was fleshed out and used in the original Michaelian group.

Descriptions of Balance in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are not presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The first quote is actually from Soleal, the entity who preceded the Michaels for the original Michaelian group, rather than from the Michaels, and the word balance is not used, but it seems to apply in principle to Man #4 and higher. Soleal was actually identified as an Adept, the alleged next step in the enlightenment hierarchy above Balanced Man. (Refer to the chapter on “Adept and Master”.)

I think a sense of responsibility toward your job is essential. Don't you have a sense of responsibility toward your job?

Oh yes, I certainly do. I just do not worry about it. It takes skill to separate [responsibility from worry]. That is your Friction, to learn to take the action necessary with calm detachment. [Soleal, early 1973]

Friction is another one of those concepts that came into the original Michaelian group from the Gurdjieffian teachings; refer to the chapter with that name. Soleal here, and Michael elsewhere, used the term occasionally. So far as they both were concerned, Friction was catalyst for spiritual growth. Friction is whatever happens inside or outside that gets the Mechanical Man upset. This makes one aware of issues that probably need to be eliminated if one is to be happy and healthy. When one no longer experiences Friction in life — when one sees and accepts reality exactly as it is without getting perturbed — then one has become Balanced.

Another characteristic of Balanced Man is the ability to remain constant:

In the Gurdjieff school, we were always supposed to remain neutral and not go up and down. What you wish to separate from are all the peaks and valleys of the False Personality. The Essence seeks ecstasy. [16 December 1973]

There is internal Friction as well as external, and “harshness” is another word for issues within oneself that will relax as one achieves Balance:

Hopefully, the personality which produces harshness will soften as you move toward Balance. [08 February 1974]

So, being mellow is a symptom of Balance. The following passage reinforces the gentleness exhibited by people in Balance:

In the tranquil period, are Centers Balanced?

Usually the soul experiences a moment of Balance, yes; also during meditation. [03 March 1974]

How does the “adept” and “occult master” correlate to the Number 4, Number 5, and Number 6 Man of Gurdjieff?

They are not precisely the same, although the Adept is usually crystallized Number Four [Man]. The occult Master [Number Seven] has use of Higher Centers at will. It [Man #4] merely means that this soul is in Balance with no danger of backsliding. [03 March 1974]

Crystallized is another term that the Michaels borrowed from Gurdjieff. It means fully formed, stabilized, and permanently set. We have a chart document from the original Michaelian group equating “Man #5” with “Adept”, so I interpret the above statement to mean that a crystallized Man #4 is a Man #5/Adept still in development. As one can see, with both Gurdjieff and the Michaels, Man number Four was said to be Balanced, as well as the Adept and the Master. (That same chart document equates “Master” with Man #7.) “Adept” and “Master” are very high Levels of Being. The Balanced Level of Being seems to be a prerequisite. In other words, one has to become crystallized in Balance before one can develop as an Adept, and one has to become crystallized as an Adept before one can develop as a Master.

Someone asked a question regarding his apprehension at changing jobs (going into business for himself).

It is primarily a fear of failure, which is not at all complex, and usually accompanies a move of this type. We would be astonished if you did not manifest some of this. A completely tranquil acceptance of the possibility of failure requires Balance. [16 June 1974]

Someone brought up the subject of trust. He asked for the group response as to how we felt about trusting him, et cetera. Considerable discussion followed.

If one is truly striving toward Balance, there will be a desire for harmony in the environment. They are one in the same. There is only chaos in the environments of those struggling with conflicts on the glamorous Physical Plane. The struggle to meet the expectations of others that is, sadly enough, most often without knowledge of those expectations. There is so much guesswork going on, how could you possibly trust? We agree with you more than you think, that ultimately trust has to do with constancy — predictability, if you will. This endows the persona with a certain amount of reliability with which to operate.

Do you refer to “predictability” on my part?

At first, yes, then with those you allow access to. If the emotions are chaotic, the Work cannot proceed in this direction; that is where the Balance comes in. When the student first comes into contact with an unfamiliar Center, there is an initial surge, and then until the adjustment is made, the insights are unrelenting and chaotic. [24 September 1974]

There are some more words to describe Balance: desiring harmony, being constant, predictable, and reliable. The opposite of these are said to be chaotic emotions. We could add chaotic thoughts and actions to this, since achieving Balance is about bringing all of the lower Centers into conscious control — ruling them rather than being ruled by them. More will be said about the relationship of Balance to Centers in a following section of this chapter.

Mallory: I wonder about my recent backpacking trips: how would this relate to my Centers? I stopped picking at my fingers, did not think, did not feel — I just was. I did not feel any more “awake” or more high. I feel uncomfortable because I feel I’m not accomplishing anything.

It is related to the fact that students often experience an Essence or Balanced state for prolonged periods when removed from the Maya, error, familiar Maya of their environment, and are forced to “be” in the moment. [17 September 74]

Refer to the chapter “Maya” for more information about that subject. The Balanced Level of Being is the first Level above and beyond the lower Levels/Centers, and there Essence contact is routine. Of course it is much easier to be Balanced when one is relaxing in nature than when one is in crisis. So maybe one should spend more time in nature than in crisis to get a feel for Balance, and then recall that state of mind when one finds oneself in a crisis.

The exchange which was begun above continued into the next question:

Mallory: It is not a dramatic thing; it just is. A person in the present is not experiencing anything dramatic. Does a Balanced Man feel high? It was said last time that the “surge” comes when one becomes Balanced.

If the moment is a quiet one, Balanced man will feel the tranquility. If it is a “high,” then Balanced Man will feel the ecstasy of the moment. Ironically, the reverse is often true in Mechanical Man. Young Souls involved with ecology-legalization will often feel surges of emotionalism when confronted with a pacific, woodland environment. [17 September 1974]

The point here is that a Balanced person is internally harmonious and consistent and serene when appropriate, and blissful (in the Higher Emotional Center) when appropriate, even under duress. This passage tells us that higher states of consciousness are not a part of Balance per se. Note that “equanimity” and “tranquility” are good synonyms for Balance.

Following is another statement that a Balanced person is not a scattered, chaotic person. One can depend on them to do, feel, and think the appropriate thing.

This will be far more believable coming from a Balanced student than a scattered one. [12 November 1974]

The male-female relationship is one of the realms of life that most challenges a Balanced state of consciousness. Following is some advice given to a couple in the original Michaelian group:

It would be possible to establish a warm and close constant relationship, only if the fears of both could be erased. You [the female] must begin to perceive your own tendency to fluctuate in [response to] the intensity with which he gives of himself. In the Balanced Man, there is no fluctuation of this sort. In the climb toward Balance, this is one of the very real lessons that must be learned. Balanced Man is above all constant in his relationships. This constancy stems primarily from a lack of fear, for Balanced Man knows that he cannot be “trapped” by another less-Balanced personality. In true agape there is, of course, an intensive, constant flow of love and caring from one to another. The Personality rejects this out of hand, of course; it cannot even admit the possibility. That is why it is so difficult for you to photograph yourself intermittently dispensing affection in your interpersonal relationships.... This culture places such an enormous value on the quality of individual relationships that it is almost impossible for the student still struggling with Balance to separate from this in a confined relationship such as a resident school or commune. To see this and choose to separate from it as a task is a strong sign of progress. In very advanced students, there is a degree of detachment from the master tapes that sometimes works against them in strange ways. For one thing, it sometimes makes them unaware of behaviors that are still continuing on lower levels, mostly by rote, to some degree. There is always, until Balance has been achieved, the risk of slipping back into these behavior patterns. [15 January 1975]

The “master tapes” spoken of here is terminology used in the original Michaelian group, borrowed from John Lilly and his book, Programming the Human Biocomputer. “Tapes” refers to the programming of the biology at a very deep level, producing behavior from below the level of consciousness. Think of the reel-to-reel magnetic tapes used in the mainframe computers of the day. Refer to the chapter “Bio-computer — Its Programs and Tapes” for more information. Balanced Man is not trapped in his biology, but has integrated his spirituality, his soul, his Essence with it.

About relationships in general we have this:

No relationship that is not between Balanced Man [on both sides] can be one hundred percent intimate. [01 February 1975]

With the above, we see several more descriptions of the Balanced state: constancy, fearlessness, and non-attachment. So, the reader may want to add “working on Balance via relationships” to their toolkit; more tools are in a section further on.

Someone asked about “artificial rhythms.”

Energy, you see, does have a vibratory quality, and psychic energy is no exception to this. If the vibratory quality of the universal flow [through the Assimilation Center] is neutral, and the psychic energy flow from the Essence [through the higher Centers] is positive, then the vibratory quality of the Personality [through the lower Centers] must be negative. We would call this [Personality vibration] “artificial rhythm,” as we would call the other [Universal and Essence vibration] the “natural rhythm.” Personality lives with artificial rhythms always. Seldom does it even come into contact with natural rhythms. [Spiritual] Schools of the type we have been discussing many times will produce an environment wherein natural rhythms begin to flow. As students come to Balance, they find their own rhythmic niche and follow it through. Natural rhythms, of course, require that the Essence be satisfied with its occupation of the moment, whether it is Moving [Centered], Emotional [Centered], or Intellectual [Centered]. Much work still must be done in dissolving the grip on allurements. This still has you fast in its jaws, and we wish that you all could feel the level of vibrations emanating from you this evening: diffuse, peaked, and jerky, with no particular pattern other than discordance and jumbled rhythms going off into the ethers with no direction or focus. At this point in the Work, it is not necessary that you be receiving data. In order to focus, you must merely concentrate and focus your energies. If you are bored with the material being shared, that simply indicates to us that you are coming from an inappropriate Center. The same goes for apprehension over new students or visitors who happen to have strong Overleaves. If you respond with the appropriate Center, the apprehension will fade. [21 February 1975]

There are, of course, chapters on “Essence and Personality”, and “School”, and “Work”. In this quote we see more description of what imBalance is like: discordant, jerky, jumbled, unfocused, bored, apprehensive.

There are other spiritual paths than achieving Balance, and that is okay:

Why doesn't he see the Personality in her and work on this?

He perceives and chooses not to react. That is not the aim of this [Eckankar] movement. People drawn into this are not interested in achieving Balance in Being [as the Gurdjieff and Michaelian teachings groups are]. They [Eckankar] are interested in having a “mystical” experience, and this they receive. [15 April 1975]

Is Balanced Man tapeless?

No. There are survival tapes [programs for the biological functions] that even the realized Masters must have — the “how to” tapes. [15 April 1975]

In this passage, just as in a previous passage, “tapes” are “programs” in the “biocomputer” that play out in life, often in inappropriate ways. This of course was terminology adopted from the way mainframe computers stored programs and information in the 1970s. In the first half of the Twentieth Century, before computers existed, Gurdjieff used an equivalent concept, Mechanical Man. More is said about tapes further on.

Going Toward Balance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Achieving Balance was a major component of the Michaels' spiritual path. There are numerous instances of the phrase “moving toward Balance” in the original Michaelian group transcriptions; this section is the collection of them.

Dick: I am coming to a realization of ignorance. Is the “Dark Night of the Soul” [poem] similar to what [Saint] John [of the Cross] felt? I am beginning to appreciate the ignorance of previous conditions. I do not want to talk because there is nothing to say — you realize you know nothing.

We do feel that you are going toward Balance, and yes, the feeling [of knowing nothing] is the same [as what Saint John of the Cross felt]. That is the first step. You must plunge all the way down in order to start the climb up. Even Jesus had to do this — even before the Infinite Soul would manifest. [27 January 1974]

Wikipedia has an entry on this phrase that says: “The term 'dark night (of the soul)' is used in Christianity for a spiritual crisis in a journey towards union with God, like that described [in a poem] by Saint John of the Cross.” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dark_Night_of_the_Soul<)

Dick: I think I'm Centered in Intellectual Part. I used to think I was in Emotional Center.

We think so too, but you use Emotional Center often. You have had a tendency toward downward [energy] Leaks. This is not so much in evidence now. You are moving toward Balance [where all Centers are used]. [08 September 1973]

There is a chapter on “Energy and Energy Leaks” further on in this Study Papers book.

Dick: Agape love sputters for only fifteen seconds and it does not happen often. Is this moving toward a #4 person?

We agree. It [moving toward Balance] is a difficult place to be, but definitely rewarding. [03 March 1974]

In the long run and when successful, the destination of Balance is rewarding, but the above implies that the road to getting there can be fleeting at first and rough along the way.

Is SusanT an adept now?

This lady could certainly become an Adept, but lacks command of her emotions. This imBalance prevents her. [16 June 1974]

Over and over the original Michaelian group channeling maintains that gaining conscious control of the lower Centers is essential in going toward Balance. This is not the same thing as stuffing, ignoring, or denying their appropriate function in the Positive Poles. There is a part of one's being (Essence) that can ride above whatever is happening inside and outside the lower Centers.

Mechanical Man finds his suffering very hard to give up and certainly seldom does this willingly. It only comes with the struggle for Balance. [29 October 1974]

Keeping a lookout for times when one is attached to suffering, one will know one needs to let go of it. It might not detach easily, but one can consciously decide to let go of it. This is a very Buddhist practice. “Struggle” may have been a poor choice of words here. It is an oxymoron, because struggling with suffering does not let go of it. Elsewhere, Buddhists and the Michaels make clear that mitigating suffering involves non-attachment to it, or dis-identification with it, and identifying with a higher state of consciousness. Likewise, moving toward Balance is not so much a struggle as it is a giving up and a letting go.

Balance of Centers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

As indicated in the previous sections, the Balanced Level of Being has more to do with Centers than anything else. One of the major components of the spiritual path is to Balance the lower Centers (Moving, Emotional, and Intellectual). That is, instead of habitually reacting to life's situations from one or two of them no matter how inappropriate, the student on the spiritual path according to Gurdjieff and the Michaels learns to respond from the particular Center fitting the situation and do it in a healthy way. The student develops some of the lower Centers that are not normal for him. The original Michaelian group transcriptions had considerable to say about Balance of Centers, and that is the subject of this section.

We start off with a definition straight from one of the original editor-typists of the transcriptions:

What is Balance of Centers?

Comment: Access to all Centers at will when required — that is, all Centers doing their correct work, not wrong working, such as growing ulcers and causing hypertension, etc. [03 March 1974]

And there is a lot more to it than that:

Comment: I'd say he was in Balance so he is not in any Center. [23 June 74]

It can in fact be difficult to tell what, if any, lower Center a Balanced person is responding from. The #4-Balanced state of consciousness cannot necessarily be characterized as #1-Moving, #2-Emotional, or #3-Intellectual. The study paper further on, "The Instinctive Center", makes the point that Balanced consciousness is equivalent to being seated in the Neutral Assimilation Center because the NAC is the composite or blend of all the other Centers.

One of the comments in the transcriptions describes how they understood Balance of Centers:

Georges Gurdjieff said that the only way to consciousness was through the Moving Center. When Peter Ouspensky was nearing his death he had premonitions of it, and he advised everyone to abandon the system and start a new system based on [doing] what you want. Are there any comments?

The man Georges [Gurdjieff] was accurate in assessing the needs of most students. Yes, this [Moving Centered approach] can be a way toward Balance. The man Peter [Ouspensky] glimpsed the truth in the need for a living teacher who can render the teaching dynamic [adapted to the times and to the students]. He saw change in the attitudes and the "wants" of his students. This was an Intellectually Centered teacher with mostly Emotionally Centered students. The man Georges was Moving Centered in the beginning, and had mostly Intellectually Centered disciples. This helped him to verify the need for Balance. He and Peter both had a tendency to deprecate Emotional Center, and the man Peter went even further and refused to acknowledge the very real need to grow to the point where sexuality can be expressed through the Sexual Center. This was due, for the most part, to guilty inhibitions. The man Georges did not have this handicap, but did not give Emotional Center quite the status it deserved. Balance is just that — a balance of all Centers. But, yes, most of you are suffering from physical inertia [a deficit of Moving Center]. [27 February 1974]

That was another good general statement about developing and using all Centers appropriately if one is to achieve Balance.

I would like to know if the Gurdjieff idea of Man #1 [kinetically-focused], Man #2 [emotionally-focused], Man #3 [mentally-focused], et cetera, is correct, and if so, at what level am I.

It is valid when the Man number six is thought of as the Transcendental Soul. You are going toward Balance [Man #4]. Fear of emotional abandon holds you back [from achieving Balance] — the fear of losing emotional control. [20 October 1973]

Fear of any particular Center means of course that one's consciousness has not risen above it and gained control over it, which is the case when one is Balanced. The control mentioned here, which a Balanced person has over the lower Centers, does not mean suppression. There are times when uninhibited emotional (or intellectual or kinetic) expression is appropriate, and it would be inappropriate to deny or repress it.

The next question and answer exchange is an example of appropriate use of Centers:

Dick: I am in my head [Intellectual Center] at [my job in] the hospital, in Moving Center playing golf, Sexual Center in sex, but my Emotional Center is always "playing background music." The Emotional Center seems to pull in the opposite direction [of all those others].

This [Emotional Center background music] is the sensation that accompanies the beginning of the moving toward harmony and Balance. This sensation, however unpleasant it may seem, heralds being able to bring all Centers into play during all activity, so that the situation can be [intellectually] assessed, [emotionally] felt, and [moving] acted upon. Not in everyone it does, but in you, the Emotional Center has come in for the strongest barrage of work. You must be able to see intellectually, feel emotionally, and act with Moving Center almost instantly in order to be working out of Essence through intuition. [16 December 73]

This would seem to indicate that as one develops on the spiritual path, the Center that needs Balancing will start to act up, clamor for attention, and then get worked on. The word intuition here is appropriate for the influence from Essence when working through the Positive Poles of all of the Centers, not just the lower Centers mentioned here, but also the middle Center and the higher Centers.

The following passage explains more about what is meant by control of the Centers. It is an intentional centralizing, channeling, refining, and transmuting of the psychic energy for appropriate utilization:

I would like comments on energies used by various energy Centers.

All of this energy is psychic energy. Imagine a superconductor with many terminals, each representing a different power drain. If one of these users or consumers is utilizing massive amounts of power, there will be a corresponding loss in the other areas, occasionally even short circuits and blown fuses. The power that energizes the psyche is all the same type, or rather, the same grade of electromagnetic radiation. There is no refinement from one Center to the other until the powers of transmutation become yours to utilize; then this energy becomes centralized — channeled, so to speak. When we speak of harmonious Balance, we refer to that state in which this concentration is reached. And this also goes for the release of specific amounts of energy.... We wish to remind you that there are two very specific types of reactions: implosion and explosion; also, two specific charges in polarization: negative and positive. A great deal of the energy utilized by the lower Centers in life situations are implosion reactions with negative charges. Controlled reactions of this type do not ever become as spectacular as their antitheses [the higher Centers]. [27 December 1973]

The date of this passage is approximately one year before the reveal of Positive and Negative Poles of Overleaves, but the phrases "implosion reactions" and "negative charges" seem to foreshadow the description of Negative Poles.

There was a definition of psychic energy in an earlier session:

Psychic energy is the energy generated by the Essence. It is naturally a more refined energy than that generated by the internal [lower] Centers of emotion, intellect and instinctive and moving functions. This energy is independent of the others. [29 November 1973]

Some months later there was an exchange that revealed the relationship of psychic energy to Balance and higher Centers:

The source for the [psychic] energy is the same. The speed that it is burned as fuel is faster when utilized by the Higher Centers.

Dick: Clarify this.

The fuel is the same for all Centers. It is the consumer [Center] that is different.

The production of fuel: does it have anything to do with self-remembering? In order to balance the Centers, we have to have a larger supply to reach higher Centers.

An analogy would be an old fashioned stove with insufficient insulation, a leaky chimney and an inefficient flue compared to a brand new radar [microwave] oven. Moments of pure consciousness do produce contact with Higher Centers, yes.

Is Self-remembering the way to produce psychic energy?

Not the way, simply the by-product. The Self-remembering must be produced first through those methods we have outlined to you [meditation, concentration, fasting, study]. Then as you go progressively toward Balance, you automatically will have more and more flashes of consciousness, opening the door to higher expression. [07 February 1974]

Numerous times during the original Michaelian group, the Michaels mentioned these methods for achieving Balance: meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. Another name for Balance is also used here: Consciousness of higher expression which is present in the higher Centers.

One Scholar was concerned that his lack of Emotional Center would be an impediment to achieving Balance:

Edgar: If Scholars who are not Emotionally Centered have trouble with their emotions, how can we overcome that part in us?

First, you must wish this. Most Scholars have little regard for emotional entanglements, unless they happen to be Emotionally Centered. Most Scholars would prefer not to be bothered with the responsibility that goes along with these intrigues. The way you can handle it is to become Balanced, and thus come into contact with the Emotional Center and learn to control the output. Right now, there is sporadic high output with little insight — it resembles volcanic eruptions. [27 December 1973]

Here again is that word “control”, but remember it does not mean repression; control means it does not rule one automatically; one rules it with heightened, Balanced self-awareness.

Ray: How close am I to being Balanced?

Work must be done still in the Intellectual Parts of all Centers and in the Moving Part of Moving Center. You need to be able to detach from the romance of even this [Michael] Teaching. [06 March 1974]

Some prefer the word and concept “non-attachment” to “detachment” for describing a Balanced response. Detachment implies that one does not care about what is going on; non-attachment does not imply that. The ideal toward which one on the spiritual path aspires is to empathetically and compassionately care and yet not lose personal integrity, or contact and intimate involvement with reality. Regarding “romanticizing” things, that refers to an idealistic projection of one’s own unrealistic perceptions onto something else. It typically comes from the Negative Pole of the Emotional Center.

Edgar: Moses “raised the serpent” and Jesus said, “If I be lifted up,” etc. What is the relationship to Kundalini here.

Yes, this is the highest form of movable energy you have at your disposal, and therefore that which you can utilize for each: the emotional states or Higher Emotional Centers, Higher Intellectual Centers — which are synonymous with subjective consciousness [and] objective consciousness respectively. The lower Centers are fixed, and the energy is like a closed system. The higher Centers are capable of ecstasy or bliss; the lower Centers are not. The Sexual Center or the Kundalini force can only be breached by bringing the lower Centers into harmonious Balance — in other words, in separating from the Maya or illusions for glamour of the Physical Plane, and by giving up your expectations of what a sexual experience “should” be. [24 April 1974]

The relationship of Kundalini (or psychic energy, as it is otherwise called) to the Centers is discussed in another chapter “Sexuality”. There we see that the Sexual Center was a higher Center, aka the Higher Moving Center. There are also the chapters “Maya” and “Glamour” in this Study Papers book.

Joan: Unless there is Balance [in the lower Centers] we can’t reach higher Centers? Am I getting in touch with my Moving Center?

The desire is certainly there, and sometimes you are able to just move without rationalizing it away as being “good for me.” When you reach the point where you no longer do this rationalization, you will be utilizing the Moving Center exclusively for these moving activities. [16 June 1974]

Mechanical Man lies to himself all of the time. Mechanical Man tends to rationalize his emotions and actions with improper use of his Intellectual Center, rather than perceive and use the other Centers accurately, realistically, and appropriately from the Balanced state of consciousness.

Loving is [from the] Higher Emotion[al Center] and that requires Balance [of all Centers]. The person who is “conscious” is not a doer anyway. Most who have reached that exalted state of physical being prefer not to do. They are content merely to be with the present. [14 September 1974]

Note the juxtaposition of “balance” with “be” — not “do”, “feel”, or “think.” A Balanced person has a state of consciousness outside or above or beyond doing, feeling, and thinking.

Dick: Should the proper role for the Intellectual Center for a Balanced person be shut down until there is an actual problem to be solved?

[Not exactly:] The Intellectual Center should be functioning as a decision-making partner in the process. The Emotional Center cannot make decisions properly, as it cannot think out the ramifications of any given situation with the speed necessary to make a valid, split-second decision. The Intellectual Center works at a far greater speed than does the Emotional Center when the soul [person] is in Balance. In Mechanical Man, the Moving Center takes over the rapid functions. This is, of course, necessary for survival of the body, as when a hand is removed from a hot stove by the Moving Center in cooperation with the Instinctive [Physiological] Center. In

Balanced Man, the Intellectual Center claims its rightful functioning and becomes the decision maker. In other words, Balanced Man chooses to remove the hand. [17 September 1974]

Here again we see that Balanced people are more “conscious” or “self-aware” or less “automatic-mechanical” than people operating merely out of their nature and nurture in the lower Centers.

A word about Balance for the new students: this means simultaneously utilizing the Moving Part of Moving Center, the Emotional Part of Emotional Center, and the Intellectual Part of Intellectual Center, and in a split second differentiating which applies in a given situation, with no consequent energy leak. [10 July 1974]

Another point in achieving Balance is to not have extraneous Parts of Centers active and distracting or “leaking” energy. More is said about is in the chapter “Energy and Energy Leaks”.

Dick: I've read that, in Zen, once one has reached satori, he realizes he's always been there. Does this mean that all the Centers are operating all the time, but we are not aware of them?

All Centers are not working in Mechanical Man — they are only potentially workable. This is why perceptions of man are so inaccurate and so scattered. This is the reason that criminal identification is so fraught with error. No two souls perceive the moment in precisely the same way, unless, of course, you happen to have two Balanced men [wherein all Centers are working correctly]. [17 September 1974]

“Satori is a Japanese Buddhist term for awakening, ‘comprehension; understanding’. In the Zen Buddhist tradition, satori refers to a deep experience of kenshō, ‘seeing into one’s true nature’. Ken means ‘seeing’, shō means ‘nature’ or ‘essence’. Satori and kenshō are commonly translated as enlightenment, a word that is also used to translate bodhi, prajñā and Buddhahood.” [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Satori> — retrieved 16 October 2021]

The final point to be made at the end of this section is that Balance is not just that the lower Centers are functioning well, but Centers all up and down the spectrum are working well.

So now that we have Balance defined, how do we get there? That is the subject of the next section.

Achieving Balance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

It is one thing to understand Balance and aspire to it; it is another thing to have the tools and practices to achieve it. In this section, we are given the toolkit. They are highlighted in bold text to make them easy to spot.

[Gurdjieff taught that] To translate what you have learned intellectually as knowledge into what you do [is] “being” [a Gurdjieff term]. [To use a Biblical reference:] It is “turning water into wine.”

This is, of course, our Teaching also. The discipline, of course, includes going toward Balance through concentration, meditation, and other conscious[ness] raising techniques; also the understanding and ultimate complete acceptance of all others, leading to the spiritual Agape which is the doorway to true consciousness. [03 February 1974]

So, there some specific tools are listed. For more information about them, check out the chapters on “Concentration and Meditation”, and “Agape”. Another tool is having higher Centered experiences:

An analogy would be an old-fashioned stove with insufficient insulation, a leaky chimney, and an inefficient flue compared to a brand new radar [microwave] oven. Moments of pure consciousness do produce contact with higher Centers, yes. [09 February 1974]

The phrase, “moments of pure consciousness” seems to be related to the following question about “self-remembering” from the previous day’s session:

Abdullah felt very highly charged bolts of energy coming in. He don't need much sleep, and cannot find a way to outlay the energy.

You can utilize these periods of positive energy flow to work toward Balance through work in the Centers. Moving Center is a good one for this channel [Sarah], and is, of course, the easiest to reach. [All you have to do is move your body.] Other Good Work can involve the breathing exercises that you experienced, turning the energy upward and out into the liberated meditation. You see, even meditation is subject to real and artificial space, and the Personality imposes limitations on the space that the meditation may occupy. The liberated meditation of the Essence utilizes the energy efficiently, and does not cause leakage, resulting in fatigue. The moments of power that those in the Caution Mode experience from time to time may be utilized in the same fashion. [08 February 1975]

Other methods for achieving Balance of Centers are ones commonly used in esoteric spiritual teachings, namely, breathing techniques and directed intention.

Is self-remembering the way to produce psychic energy?

Not the way, simply the by-product. The self-remembering must be produced first through those methods we have outlined to you [meditation, concentration, fasting, study]. Then as you go progressively toward Balance, you automatically will have more and more flashes of consciousness, opening the door to higher expression [psychic energy]. [09 February 1974]

Note that “Self-remembering” is yet another term from the Gurdjieffian teachings. It means:

Beyond the division of attention lies “remembering oneself” — a state, which is permanent in a “conscious” person, while fleeting and temporary in the average person. In this state a person sees what is seen without ever losing sight of himself seeing. Ordinarily, when concentrating on something, people lose their sense of ‘I’, although they may, as it were, passively react to the stimulus they are concentrating on. In self-remembering the ‘I’ is not lost. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fourth_Way — retrieved in 2014, subsequently removed]

Refer to the chapter on “Self-remembering” for more information. It is good work to add the practice of self-remembering to the toolkit of spiritual growth (meditation, concentration, study) influences, while not ignoring increasing self-awareness of, and conscious use of, the lower Centers.

Self-remembering and the experience of higher Centers were mentioned above as tools for moving toward Balance. Another tool is to expose yourself to higher influences that will draw you up from the lower Centers into Balance; in order to Balance the Centers, we must have a larger than normal supply of higher Center energy. This tool (higher Center experience) is mentioned in another passage:

Joan listens to [the music of the German composer Richard] Wagner and has a high. Where does this come from?

Very high influences such as this can prepare you for transient higher states. These can be experienced in the moment and perceived as great, overwhelming joy. This is fine, but should be experienced when they happen and not sought to the exclusion of work with [Balancing] lower Centers [Moving, Emotional, Intellectual]. [15 April 1975]

Music (and dancing) have been a means to experience higher or greater states of consciousness from the beginning of recorded history for sure, and probably from the time of ensoulment.

Dick: I would like to ask about Eugene. He leads a simple, healthy life in Essence. He uses his Moving Center and enjoys what he does.

This man now has access to the sum of the Moving Center. He needs only to pursue his present line of internal questioning to come into Balance. [03 March 1974]

The hint here is to look inside for the subtle promptings of Essence and pay attention to them. If there is something niggling one at the moment, it might be Essence drawing one into Balance.

I have trouble with seeing Mohandas Gandhi as a Transcendental Soul. Why do I feel negative toward him and his way of denial?

It [denial] is only one way to achieve the Balance. We have offered still another. [03 July 1974]

Gandhi’s type of “denial” was valid, according to the Michaels, but it was extreme, and probably not a preferred way for most aspirants for Balance. The “denial” here spoken of was perhaps Gandhi’s focus on the things that really mattered to him and to Essence, rather than pandering to the whims of the body, the lower self, the False Personality, the cultural imprinting, and such.

Are my Centers changing from Emotional to Balance?

Yes, you are beginning to utilize Intellectual Center. This has been a hard pull for you, and you still react emotionally to what you read, occasionally, but the work is good. [03 July 1974]

This passage is best interpreted as a recommendation to avoid negative and inappropriate reactions to what one reads. Some people get emotionally upset about things they cannot do anything about, such as what they read in a newspaper, but this is characterized here and elsewhere as an energy drain and a distraction from the path toward Balance. It is a different matter if what one reads elicits a positive response — to do, feel, or think positively.

Abdullah: How about Balance?

We speak of blocks now. Coming to Balance entails removing those blocks. Blocks experienced, blocks erected, by those in this room have been largely predicated, yes, we would agree, upon three incidents involving withdrawal, retreat, dissemblance. This is the same for most of you, not limited to the one who asked the question. [26 December 1974]

It is unstated what specific “blocks” are being referred to, but there are a number of references to “traps” in the passages quoted in a section further on. Elsewhere Balance is said to be characterized by flowing freely with the situation, rather than getting hung up by Moving Center habits, Emotional Center attachments, and Intellectual Center expectations.

David asked if he had accelerated along wrong lines, outside of his boundaries, too quickly and without enough knowledge. If so, what does he have to do to Balance himself?

You are well aware of the fact that you have a marked tendency to overreach your available energies. This is no exception. The only way out of the morass is to again give yourself space. This is something you did not allow for in your present prospectus. Planning does take energies away from growth, and the more complex the planning becomes, the more energies are expended uselessly. Any venture too well planned is bound to die aborning. This cannot be emphasized enough. Dragons aplenty will rise up to be slain. Your own case is no exception. In your planning, you forgot to allow for enough space for your own continued work, which is with self. Please remember, all of you, the first and only obligation is to self. This is only true if spiritual growth is the goal. In all other cases this is, of course, not true. If spiritual growth is the goal, and Balance is one step toward the goal, then space must be allotted to be sure that this comes about. This, in the case of this cadre, means much interaction to reprogram the bio-computer. Many of these students have not allowed for this either, and so you are not alone. Your own growth over the near future will depend solely upon your willingness to allow those closest to you to hold up the mirror so that you can begin anew looking at the many facets of the personality still cropping up in your dealings with your own students. You wish to teach, and we do not feel that this is an unreasonable aspiration for you; but for you to be a valid teacher you must also be a dutiful student. This you need. All of you can take heart here. All of you can now be teachers, but not by laying aside the student’s cloak. In fact, we are somewhat gratified that some of you have begun to show more spunk in teaching. We will not hesitate to remind you of the precepts when a schism occurs. [26 November 1974]

There we have a couple of other tools. One can think about and plan one’s strategy for achieving Balance, but it is wise to not over-plan. It is advisable that one’s expectations about Balance be reasonable and realistic, so that one can pace oneself. Also, working with other students on the same spiritual path is a very useful tool for achieving Balance.

Liz: I just started dancing again, and all of a sudden my depression lifted, and everything looks okay to me — my life, my marriage, etc. I feel I’m using Moving Center to get high. If I want to be Balanced, should I not give in to the urge to use Moving Center and dance?

No. This is a false interpretation. In Essence, there is a movement [that does not involve moving the body]. The [Balancing] work in this for you would be to get in touch with the Moving Part of Emotional Center during the dance, which is essentially what you are doing. As long as you do not compete with yourself, you will succeed at this [Balancing exercise]. [28 September 1974]

Evidently she had an appropriate amount of Moving Center, but could use some more Emotional Center, accessed via the Moving Part of it. The injunction about not competing with oneself is Good Work for anyone on the path toward Balance.

Following is a recommendation on how to bring Intellectual Center into the Balance equation.

Liz: How can I get in touch with Intellectual Center?

This will be the most difficult for you, and for all others in the Centering you are in [Moving], as it involves single-minded concentration, and application of non-judgmental logic. Reading very studious works has done it for other students. Continuous study will also do it. The determining factor is the boredom factor. As soon as boredom creeps in, the Emotional Center has crept in too. Boredom is simply not intellectually possible. It is a lower [Negative Pole] emotional function. Most of the time, in fact, it is a function of the Emotional Part of Moving Center. [28 September 1974]

In this section we have seen a number of tools for achieving Balance. What is not explicitly mentioned in any of these passages is the Gurdjieff practice called “self-observation” — which in the original Michaelian group was referred to as “Photographing” — even though that practice is the essence of these tools. The main trick to achieving Balance is to notice when one is unBalanced, and that in itself will help nudge one into Balance. There is of course a chapter on Photographing.

Centering “Traps” per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

According to both Gurdjieff and Michael, when people habitually respond from one Center rather than from the appropriate Center for the situation at hand, they are said to be “Trapped” in that Center. Obviously this keeps them from becoming “Balanced” — responding appropriately from the appropriate Center. Following are a few quotes to that effect.

Betty: What Center am I Trapped [in]?

The Emotional Part of Emotional Center. If she wishes Balance, she must reach Intellectual and Moving Centers.

Dick: Are some intellectual Scholars trapped in the Intellectual part of Intellectual Center?

It is possible to be Trapped here, and yes, you are right. Many of the theoretical scientists are indeed immured [imprisoned, confined, held captive] in the Intellectual Part of Intellectual Center. [However,] This is a route to higher Centers when there is Balance. [03 March 1974]

Other statements declare it is Good Work to respond from the Intellectual Part of Intellectual Center when appropriate. Therefore, it is only a “Trap” if one is “stuck” there, meaning one cannot respond appropriately from Emotional Part of Emotional Center or Moving Part of Moving Center. Balanced Centering is a “route to higher Centers,” and Intellectual Part of Intellectual Center is as good a launching place to higher Centers as the appropriate use of other lower Centers.

Dick: I would like to ask how to bring the perceptions of the Emotional Center and those of the Intellectual Center together to be Balanced. Perceptions seems so limited: there is so much input and only one thing seems to get through.

Of course, the perceptions of one Trapped in the Intellectual Center are going to be based upon what is thought, and will be largely analysis of the perception rather than a perception at all. The perception itself will be lost in the analysis. The perceptions of one lost in the Emotional Center will be swamped by the feelings surrounding the moment, and again the perception itself will be lost to sight. This is what is meant, of course, by not experiencing one’s experiences. Those trapped in the Moving Center will be already planning or carrying out some action surrounding the perception before it has time to register. No Mechanical Man is able to appreciate any experience fully because of this. All perceptions are, of course, stored, and can be recalled by the Balanced Man if need be. In order to perceive and experience a moment in time, all Centers must be working (correctly). [17 September 1974]

Balanced people experience life objectively rather than subjectively. That is, they are aware of and in control of what they are doing. This paragraph is mostly a description of unBalanced people who experience life subjectively. The gist and purpose of “Self-remembering” is to experience life objectively. Even for Balanced people, it is sometimes difficult to experience one’s experiences objectively, but at least Balanced people are more likely to review after the heat of the moment has passed. Unbalanced people rarely do this as life happens to them, but once taught about it, they can ease their way toward Balance by reviewing and reflecting on their life experiences sometime after the experience — retrospectively Self-remembering.

Edgar asked about his work recently in trying to get into the Moving Center by using hobbies. He is Trapped in the Intellectual Center, and by using the hobbies is trying to Balance this.

Yes, this is a good attempt on your part and could be successful if pursued. [26 November 1974]

The point here is to intentionally do, feel, or think from a Center not one’s typical Center if it increases one’s Balance. This will help one escape their habitual enTrapment.

Am I in Emotional Center when I am meditating? It seems like I am simply perceiving.

Sometimes it is Higher Emotional Center Emotional Center, when it is not the Trap, acts merely as a barometer, sensing the variances around. This includes the dangers and the anger, the joy and the pain being beamed about. This Center makes no judgment on this information and cannot react to any situation when it is being used in tandem with the other Centers. When it is the Trap, it is utilized much as the other Centers, having then a Thinking, Reacting and Acting Part. This [Emotional Center] does not differ from the other Centers. Balanced Man thinks with the Intellectual Center, perceives with Emotional Center, and acts with the Moving Center. The divisions [“Parts” of Centers] no longer hold [when you are] in Balance. [15 April 1975]

This means that a Balanced person has deactivated not only the “Traps” but also the “Parts” of their lower Centers. Balanced people respond purely from unified Centers, so to speak. Their Centers are not confused or ambiguous; they don’t send mixed messages.

More is said about “Centering: Traps” without reference to Balance in a chapter by that name.

Besides “Traps” and “Parts” of Centers that hinder the achievement of Balance, there are also “Leaks” to watch out for, and these are explored in the next section.

Leaking Centers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

In previous sections we learned that all Centers are “energy” centers in the consciousness. There can be a “Leak” of energy when there is “wrong use” of that Center. These words with quotation marks are all Gurdjieff terms adopted in the original Michaelian group. There are a number of passages on the subject of Leaking Centers, and it connects to the concept of Balance.

Dick: Is there anything useful about this [energy Leak subject] for us to know?

Well, of course, you can use them as a fairly handy yardstick by which to measure your progress toward Balance [of Centers]. You can feel the energy being expended, and after a while locate its point [chakra] of exit and then more accurately pinpoint the Center responsible for the output. If it is not the proper Center to handle the particular action then you know that there has been a leak. [16 June 1974]

The “point of exit” here referred to is apparently the chakra correlated with the leaking Center; see next quoted Q&A exchange. As you would expect, “Chakras” is the subject of yet another chapter. However, take a look at the following:

Is there a correlation between energy Centers and chakras?

When one becomes Balanced, there is tremendous correlation, yes, for you feel the use of the energy in these spots described as, or called, chakras, with the higher Intellectual Center being, of course, analogous to the highest chakra or the chakra of liberation that places it above the physical body. All the chakras would be felt as energy centers, yes. Now that the Emotional Center was responding to an appropriate situation, this would be felt in the “gut” chakra. [25 January 1975]

Betty asked about Centering, and what force makes one achieve Balance.

The achievement of Balance is an act of will. The force behind it is the combined energies of the true “center of gravity” [a Gurdjieff term] within you. You always have this energy, but normally you allow it to dissipate unused. When you work toward Balance, you learn to conserve this energy and divert it into the [spiritual] Work [another Gurdjieff term]. This energy does not run out, by the way. It is part of the neutral universal flow and is infinite. You must learn to tap it, however. Your centers of gravity are now top heavy, or off true center. When you go to Balance it is centered — ergo, balanced; not very mystical, but far more practical. There is no Leakage of energy in Balanced Man, and all of this energy can be diverted into the [spiritual] Work — whether this be meditation, concentration, or study. The trap into which most fall is simply a continuation of habit patterns picked up early in life. This happens in part because of the [adult role] models that an adolescent observes. There is beneath that a chosen direction of flow, but unfortunately, this can be overridden easily by the influences; for instance: a hysterical parent, a parent with serious dissemblance, a parent who is unduly stern. The direction then takes a reactive turn and the trap is exchanged for another. With [spiritual-path] Students then, there is another pitfall. They begin to go toward Balance, find new experiences, and make a subliminal choice to stay there [unBalanced] because it is a richer experience. [26 November 1974]

The Gurdjieffian term, “Center of Gravity”, is the subject of another chapter. Basically it means the most important thing in your life, that which gives it meaning and direction. The “true” center of gravity for a Michaelian student should be this “psychic energy”, the subject of yet another chapter. Regarding the unBalanced state being a richer experience, this is only true when one has not had one’s fill of trauma–drama. On the way to Balance, the person increasingly prefers equanimity, which has its own riches and rewards.

Dick asked about Centers. He was disturbed that his concept of Centers is so hazy. What part of the brain would correspond to the Centers? Is it a set [part], a gestalt [whole], or what?

More than anything, this [Balanced Centering] can be seen as an appropriate reaction to the situation. In the case of the lower Centers, [when you respond appropriately] it means that there is no Leaking of energy and fatigue buildup as a result. You see, if you respond to an intellectual situation with an emotional reaction, it is usually totally inappropriate, and it comes not from Emotional Center, but usually from the Emotional Part of the Center in which you spend your life. If you respond to an emotional situation in a Moving Centered way, there is a tremendous downward relegation of energy, and fatigue follows. You can readily determine wrong use of Centers in yourself by the way that you feel after the situation has passed. If you are tired, angry, or any of those negative things, you can be sure that wrong use of Centers is to blame. If you feel high, elated, joyous, et cetera, then perhaps good use of Centers has occurred. Any situation that produces a negative reaction is wrong use of Centers, and therefore wrong work for Students on this path. This is why we ask that you look at your negative reactions, even in retrospect, and determine what happened to your energy when you expressed. Centering, or [rather] Balance, is, above all, appropriate. That is what it means — the loss of all of these unreasonable [unaware, unconscious, automatic] lapses in the volition. When you react negatively, you are certainly not in control — your [unconscious, automatic, “mechanical”] False Personality is in control. The True Personality of the Essence merely looks at the script and makes the appropriate response at the moment it is called for — from the Center equipped to handle that situation with dispassion. [25 January 1975]

This paragraph is almost pure Gurdjieff. “Wrong use of Centers” is another Gurdjieff term. Right use of Centers is one of the central tools for raising “Level of Being” in Gurdjieff’s version of spiritual development. “True” and “False” Personality also came from the Gurdjieffian teachings. Note that Balanced people are self-aware people, in conscious control of their lower Centers so that they can do the right thing in the world. Note that if people are not self-aware enough to make their response appropriate in the situation immediately at hand, then it helps their spiritual development to review it afterward at a time when they can be reflective without distraction or distortion. This also takes enough self-awareness to sense when there is an energy Leak/drain in their body and/or in their psyche. Hopefully they will do better next time in a similar situation.

Not only the Centers, but the other Overleaves are involved in the climb toward Balance. This is the subject of the next section.

Balance and Overleaves per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following paragraph is one of the earliest instances that begin to explain how one can use Overleaves that abrade as a tool for spiritual growth. That is to say, harmony and Balance can be learned because of the shock and contrast of conflicting Overleaves.

Narra asked for more information.

Just imagine how easy it would be for you to accept [your husband’s] Rejection [Goal] were it not for the Mode you selected. [Your] Repression [Mode] automatically erects a barrier between you and the Positive Pole [+Agape+] of your Goal [of Acceptance]. To scale this barrier is a significant feat. You have begun to feel this change and are on the way to verification. It is not an easy lesson. The block or barrier stems from the Mode of Repression. Even the Acceptance [Goal] of one [such as yourself] who has chosen this Mode is repressed. To find the ability within to feel +Agape [the Positive Pole of Acceptance] in spite of this, [is a] formidable task, and it requires a yardstick to measure the progress. The ideal yardstick, of course, is the polar opposite, in this case, one in Rejection [your husband’s Goal]. For you to go to and remain in the Positive Pole of Acceptance requires much work, and you are still not entirely able to work from there. This is simply another Balancing tool that Older Souls often choose. It would be possible, for instance, for [your husband] to choose to utilize the same tool [Balance] were he so inclined. This is usually possible in all Sequences; that is, the motive can become easily the motivator. Of course, the hallmarks of the Negative Pole of Acceptance [–Ingratiation] are conciliation, placation, and ingratiating. Do you now have the feeling for the fact that in most souls not acquainted with a Teaching that the Mode stands forever as a barrier between the Positive and Negative Poles of the Goal? No matter how exalted that Goal may be, this principle stands between all Modes and Goals. [16 January 1975]

In the channeling from subsequent groups, there is some elaboration on the task of coming to Balance within oneself via conscious monitoring and neutralizing of the abrasion between one’s and other’s Overleaves. Also elaborated in later channeling is the practice of using the complement of one’s Overleaves to achieve Balance within oneself. In the passage above, there is Balance to be found between Acceptance and Rejection, complementary Goals on the Expression Axis. The principle applies to all other Cardinal and Ordinal Overleaf pairs. For instance, refer to More Messages from Michael (1979), p. 211.

More was said about Balance in this same session, as follows.

All teachings?

A comparable Teaching that has as its goal Agape through Balance. It may be Gurdjieffian in origin, or may have true religious grounding, as long as that (Agape) remains as the goal.

Balancing seems to involve more than just Centers. What about other Overleaves?

Not only can Mechanical Man not “do” [as Gurdjieff said], but he also cannot think, and, if this is denied, how can you possibly choose to change an Overleaf? All that Mechanical Man can possibly achieve is the continual playing out of the master Tapes around the beliefs. A good beginning would be for each of you to look within and discover once and for all those hard-core beliefs that are running your life. Then, stand apart and listen to Mechanical Man play out the Tape. It will be enlightening, to say the least. For each belief, there is a Tape: a master Tape for each core belief, an auxiliary for each auxiliary belief. In the latter case, many are Tape Loops.

Narra asked if we had some "good" core beliefs.

You have some core beliefs without which you could not [physically survive], yes.

Dick: Are these the only legitimate ones?

These core beliefs and master Tapes are the property of the personality, and — aside from the rules for survival — are unnecessary. The Balanced Man is flexible above all. You remember the teaching of the man, Robert [Burton], insisting that you learn to turn on a dime. By becoming Balanced, you replace the master Tapes with [conscious] thought [versus "mechanical", automatic, unconscious thoughts, feelings, and behaviors]. [16 January 1975]

The Michaels did not here directly answer the question about Balance in regard to Overleaves other than Centers. They said that unBalanced people definitely cannot change Overleaves, but in a session three weeks later, they said Overleaves can be changed. This still does not address the question if one can be Balanced and retain your Overleaves. It was a week later that this question gets answered.

Joan asked if the Essence has a personality. Does this relate to the Positive Poles [of the Overleaves]?

In order for the True Personality to emerge, the student must be in a firm state of Balance, and if the Centers are Balanced, all work will be from the Positive Poles of all Overleaves. In fact, at that moment, the whole concept of Overleaves becomes obsolete. Balanced Man is not a victim of his Overleaves any longer. This is, of course, why the Work is to strive for Balance and why we attempt to effect those exercises that will allow you to choose the Work you need tailor made. [25 January 1975]

More is said about obsolete Overleaves in a session a few days later:

Balanced Man can certainly accelerate the growth [of people] around him, and those on their way to Balance can impart that which is truth in them to others. [30 January 1975]

The converse is also true: If one is not Balanced, then one's untruth will affect others negatively, hindering their spiritual development.

Joan asked about the personality of Essence. What is it? Could Michael describe it? Traits?

The True Personality perceives the oneness and does not feel apartness. Thus, it is expansive in its expression. The True Personality does not need the pain, for it has access to the joy and again, can express this in the world. The True Personality knows truth and therefore has no further use for lies. Above all, the True Personality is appropriate in its response to each and every situation. Of course, this is manifested in the world as joyousness, as warmth, as a very special radiance, as a high energy course of a positive nature. However, False Personality is uncomfortable around this True Personality, and the farther removed from a Teaching one is, the more uncomfortable one will be when faced with an encounter with Balanced Man. Balanced Man has the confidence that only knowledge of truth can possibly bring. Balanced Man brings this confidence to bear in all of his endeavors. Balance implies obsolescence of the Overleaves. Balanced Man is no longer stuck. He is free to move into real space where there are no limitations. For the "[women's] libbers" present, substitute balanced "woman" for Balanced "Man." [08 February 1975]

"Obsolescence of the Overleaves" is not a concept that survived beyond the original Michaelian group, so it begs consideration. Post-original Michaelian group, it has generally been considered Good Work enough just to get into the Positive Poles of one's Overleaves and mitigate one's Chief Feature. This creates a healthy Personality. This idea could be described as mere psychotherapy because it goes no further than making a better human being. For those whose spiritual paths take them beyond mere psychotherapy, then there is guidance for that in the original Michaelian group version of the Michaelian teachings. They can go beyond False Personality, go beyond even the Positive Poles of the Overleaves, and into the personality of the Soul or Essence itself, which here is referred to as the True Personality that functions in Real Space. Using this definition of terms, Overleaves are a limitation non-existent in the Real Space of the soul/Essence.

Michael had addressed the relationship of the Overleaves to Essence and Personality some months before:

What part of the Overleaves are in Essence and what part are in Personality?

All of the Overleaves are geared to the Physical Plane and thus primarily of the False Personality. Of course, you cannot alter your Body Type or Role except by subtle extinguishment, and this is achieved only after all else is Balanced. Thus, the Role can still manifest in one acting primarily out of Essence, but not to any measurable extent in the occult Master. [25 June 1974]

In subsequent channeling however, after the original Michaelian group, the Overleaves were said to be part of True Personality. (“True Personality is the manifestation of the Overleaves in the life.” MMFM, p. 48, and see MMFM, p. 104) This is one of the changes that Ms Yarbro made to the original Michaelian group revelation. The later presentation may refer to people not on a spiritual path upward toward Balance and beyond – which includes most Michaelian students, actually. If so, then MMFM is true because the Michaelian teachings for them is mostly psychotherapy — making a better Mechanical Man — which is Good Work so far as it goes. However, for people on track to advance beyond mere psychotherapy, then transcendence of Overleaves is part of the package. The spiritual–path component found in the original Michaelian group has been largely lost to Michaelian students because that component was not published in MFM and beyond, leaving the mere–psychotherapy component as standard fare in the subsequent Michaelian teachings community.

A fuller explanation of the dichotomy between “Personality and Essence” is presented in another study paper by that name.

Summary and Conclusion regarding Balanced Man

The following comments on Balance look like a cross between paraphrase and quotes from the Michaels. They appeared in the June 1975 edition of Dimensions magazine.

Schools and Teachings differ, and this divergence must be understood. Schools are environments wherein Students can work toward Balance and understanding of the Truth.

Schools can only be considered valid when the aim has been achieved, e.g., the Students come to Balance and understand Truth. Teachings are only valid when the system can be verified as True. Also, Teachings must be dynamic. They must be contemporary, flexible, and constantly in motion. It does not matter how much or how little Truth is contained within a system. Each individual system has but a finite period of dynamism.

The “Law of Accident” applies only to the Overleaves, the False Personality operating in artificial space, using the artificial rhythms of the Physical Plane. This term does not apply to Students in the Work. Things happen to Mechanical Man; Students and Balanced Man choose to experience.

Following is the collection of words used by the Michaels to characterize Balanced Man:

- does not worry and has calm detachment
- maintains neutrality, the highest form of which is Agape
- lacks harshness
- is tranquil and serene
- desires harmony and lack of chaos and drama in the life
- is constant, unwavering, predictable, and reliable
- maintains a state of being rather than doing, feeling, or thinking
- is fearless

Following is the collection of tools mentioned by the Michaels for achieving Balance:

- Relationships of all sort polish off the rough edges
- True spiritual Schools promote the Teaching about achieving Balance
- Meditation, concentration, fasting, and study help this and all other spiritual aspirations.

BARRIERS AND BLOCKS

This chapter is the product of a search of the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group on the word “barrier” and its variants and synonyms. The word appears in the context of many Michaelian ideas that are discussed in other chapters, but I thought it would be helpful to students to see all of the instances gathered into one place, and helpful to students for me to provide an analysis and synthesis of those instances. You might be surprised to see just how many times the Michaels waxed eloquent and impassioned on this subject.

The gist of the idea of barriers is that the sense of separation between people is artificial; it does not reflect the underlying reality that we are all connected ...

Numerous other chapters bear on this subject, such as “Maya”; I will note those where appropriate.

Other types of barriers were mentioned in the transcriptions (language, recall,), but only spiritual barriers are documented in this chapter.

The word “barrier” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular, although I provide one in the next section, below. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing for me to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that barriers are pervasive in human psychology and sociology, the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Barrier

1a: something material that blocks or is intended to block passage [as in] highway barriers, a barrier contraceptive

1b: a natural formation or structure that prevents or hinders movement or action [as in] geographic barriers to species dissemination, barrier beaches, drugs that cross the placental barrier

2: barriers or Barriers plural : a medieval war game in which combatants fight on foot with a fence or railing between them

3: something immaterial that impedes or separates : obstacle [as in] behavioral barriers, trade barriers

Barriers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they appear in the transcriptions, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

[[perhaps section into personality, culture, etc. barriers]]

Dick: Is my incarnate soul a single Fragment?

In your physical body, there is a single dominant thread, but you must understand that you are no longer separated from your integrated Fragments; they are very much a part of you. When the Entity first fragments and all of it is on the Physical Plane, there is wide separation, then there is progressive integration. All of the Fragments still incarnate have the pull exerted on them by their Astral Fragments. There is no "real" separation, merely a physical barrier that is easily scaled. [22 November 1973]

Refer to chapters "Casting", "Fragmentation and Integration", and "Composites" for more information about how the "Tao" (refer to the chapter by that name) divides and subdivides and sub-subdivides and so on itself ad infinitum, ad eternum. From the point of view of the Tao, these partitions are artificial, but to those of use who are Fragments, they seem "real". That passage above is key for understanding the concept of dissolving these artificial barriers as we develop spiritually. It can almost be said that the entire process of spiritual evolution is the dissolution of artificial barriers, first on the Physical Plane, then on the Astral Plane, and then on the Causal Plane. The closer the soul kinship, the easier it is to dissolve barriers, and the sooner it happens in the overall scheme of things.

Permit me to wax theological-philosophical about this subject. The so-called "fragmentation" of the Tao went like this: "Tao produced the One; the One produced the Two; the Two produced the Three; the Three produced All things." (Lao Tsu, Tao teh Ching, Chapter 42) In terms of the actualization or realization of geometry, three-dimensionality is the creation of a membrane (barrier) that separates an "inside" from an "outside". (One-dimensional and two-dimensional objects do not have this attribute.) Membranes serve the purpose of maintaining the integrity that is necessary for life to function inside the membrane even when the outside is not alive. If the membrane is breached, the organism inside it dies. Similarly, as our human artificial barriers are breached as a result of our spiritual practices, our ego (sense of self) 'dies'. However, there is larger 'membrane' around the next more integrated group of kindred souls: 7-Cadence > 49-Greater Cadence > 343-Side > 1029-Entity > Cadre. The reintegration of the Tao can be visualized as the dissolution of the artificial barriers around increasingly larger composites of Fragments. The Fragmentation of the Tao is the invention of "Personality" is the creation of 'barriers'. The reason that the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System in the beginning of the original Michaelian group was to show us students what it is that we are to master — and then transcend by dissolving increasingly larger barriers, level by level.

After this first mention of barriers that are created and un-created between kindred souls, over the course of the original Michaelian group, the Michaels named various other types of barriers. First up for our review are the types of barriers erected between the Overleaves, particularly the Soul Ages:

Nichols: Is there any relation between super Maya, Goals, and Roles?

Of course, souls in the various Goals will create specific sets of obstacles and barriers — in other words, Maya — and the older the soul, the more exalted the Maya becomes, and finally, it even comes around to masquerading as spiritual growth — the most super refined Maya of all. When you have learned to differentiate between this and the genuine article, you will have arrived at the point where you can no longer slip back into old, safe patterns and, therefore, must go forward. The awareness groups are, of course, super Maya groups of Mature Souls, the political action groups of the Young, and splinter religious quackery groups of the Babies. It all comes back to the lack of inner purpose and the knowledge of the trapped Essence. Many Young and Mature Souls actively practice witchcraft and black magic in answer to the increased perceptions that they encounter in themselves but are unwilling to investigate at a deeper level. Many Old Souls dabble in Orientalia for the same reason. [24 February 1974]

Refer to chapters "Maya" and "Soul Age". The concept is Maya is almost synonymous with barrier. As the saying goes, "Birds of a feather flock together", and the same principle applies to Soul Age. It is as if the people in a Soul Age gravitate to each other in the formation of informal or formal groups, whether it be in a type of church, or a type of business, or a type of political organization, or whatever type of endeavor — wherever a singleness of perception and purpose are required to get something specific done. We may call this "natural segregation". Furthermore, organizations typically write a "vision" or "mission" statement because the group as a whole must share the same 'Goal'; it must collectively go in the same direction, whether it be to build and sell a widget, or serve a human need, or change the world.

Comment: In other words, we must go through our Chief Features to arrive at Agape.

You must grow to the point where this [Chief Feature] is no longer a barrier to Agape. [27 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Agape". Whereas Soul Age provides a high barrier in terms of group affiliations, the Chief Feature provides a high barrier in terms of individual egos. Refer to the section on "Chief Features" in the "Overleaves" chapter. There you will see that the CF is the core of one's false self-image, and as such it is a personality factor that alienates us from each other; it is a repulsive force that counteracts the magnetism of intimacy and Agape.

Dick: Things I cannot deal with are subconscious — say a guilt feeling. I have no idea where its source is. The thing that triggers the guilt feeling does not seem bad. Ordinarily, morality is B.S. In all cases, the guilt emotions are from lower Centers, as the higher Centers are not operating.

Anger is another reaction that is self-programmed by Personality as a barrier.

Refer to the chapters on "Guilt" and "Anger" for more discussion about those negative emotions. There you will read that anger is caused by unfulfilled expectations. In the context of this chapter, we can say that expectations exist because Personality exists; Personality itself is a barrier, and its function is to be and to perceive differences, and when reality does not agree with Personality's pre-conceived expectations, then anger results.

Eugene: The body throws up a shield to keep Essence from coming through. First, we have to start by seeing our Chief Feature.

We discussed phobias such as fears of staircases, cats, heights, and wondered if they could be carryovers from past lives. Someone added that we should not resist evil, that we should face the fear and experience it out. The little evils are barriers to experiencing life. [27 February 1974]

Refer to chapters "Fear" and "Evil and Good". The point to be made here is that negative thoughts, negative emotions, and negative behaviors are like 'barriers' in that they block Essence from our awareness.

Mallory: What is the work necessary for me to becoming unTrapped in Essence?

The work for you, Mallory, includes moving. Your dance is an excellent place to start, preceded by your period of meditation, with the thought of preparation for the dance. We see emotional involvement. The way through to Intellectual Center is, of course, the rendering of this type of input neutral. The inability to accept input in a detached fashion separates you from the Intellectual Part of this Center, and thus there is a barrier to Intellectual Center. The love of the movement, or more accurately, the exhilaration you feel when moving, creates a barrier to Moving Part of Moving Center. All students must discover their area of enTrapment and work from there, emulating the energy Center toward which they are moving. Students Trapped in the Emotional Part of Intellectual Center rationalize all technical material well, but romanticize all other input, trying to find that completely personal slant. There is "love" of literature and words in these souls. They are normally exceedingly verbose in tutorial positions, not so much in others. These souls find the romance of the Logos so alluring that this enTrapment is among the most difficult to scale. Most souls Trapped in the Moving Part of Intellectual Center are veritable whirlwinds of intellectual activity. They spend the entire [incarnation] interval collecting facts, sometimes in a random fashion and sometimes to negligible results. On the other hand, many inventors, such as the man Thomas Edison, were trapped here [and his results were not negligible]. [03 March 1974]

Refer to chapters "Work, The", "Meditation and Concentration", "Centering Traps". Previously we have been informed that aspects of the Overleaf System, including Soul Age and Chief Features, provide barriers. The point to be made here is that much work on the so-called 'lower' Centers is required before one can surmount them and 'ascend' to the so-called 'higher' Centers, where certain types of barriers do not exist.

Ray: I would like a comment from Michael on my past six weeks' activity, my new experiences with bioenergetics and work with Dr. Palmer. I want an updated evaluation of myself.

You are correct when you say that you are now allowing new experiences to happen. Of course, this is a positive movement. When you limit your experiences, this is fear and it serves as a barrier to growth. [06 March 1974]

One of the conditions of the soul being in a physical body is the tendency for the body's behavior to become habitual. We learn new stuff, but then it becomes old stuff, and we get 'stuck in a rut', and that 'rut' has 'walls', aka barriers, to spiritual growth. One exercise that is often recommended by psychotherapists is that we should intentionally extend ourselves outside of the limitations that some part of our 'lower self' have artificially set. We can do this in a structured, safe setting established by a healthcare professional, and/or we can seek new experiences of our own choosing, outside of our “comfort zone”.

As Dick, the soul sees beyond the brain barriers set up by the organism in order to cushion the Shocks. [17 March 1974]

The body, the organism, has barriers against the soul and Essence. Refer to the chapter “Shocks” and you will read that we sometimes receive a “wake up call” from the supernatural realm, which is beyond our barriers.

There is a form of ultimate therapy — a clearing house for the Essence where the final cobwebs can be swept away and the clarity can shine through. Yes, also the crutch of the Personality, the one most frequently employed in situations where the Essence might come crashing through, is a most effective barrier. [19 March 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Crutches” and “Essence and Personality”. Psychotherapy can be regarded as a ‘crutch’ that helps us ‘ambulate’ toward the “ultimate therapy”, which is the spiritual ‘path’ recommended by the Michaels. The Overleaf System itself, because it is of Personality and not of Essence, is a temporary ‘crutch’. We should master it, and then move on. Past a certain point on the ‘journey’, the ‘crutch’ can be discarded.

More is said about the desirability of a ‘change in scenery’ in the following passage:

Mollie: I read the group’s book and would suggest a glossary would be most helpful, with definitions of such words as Maya, Monad, Logos, and Karma.

We propose an exercise in psychic Photography for all of you as follows: begin to Photograph yourselves reacting to suggestions of change with the statement, “I cannot”, then realize that this is not true. Sometimes, the truth will be that you do not at the present moment possess the required skills or knowledge, but more often than not, the truth will be, “I do not want to.” This is vital, and a positive step on the path. You can help by Photographing each other in this. Also, all of you are guilty of using this as an excuse many times a day to shift the blame, and this accomplishes that nicely. You present then the picture of a student at the mercy of the cosmos, which is, of course, absurd. Personality sets up many barriers along the [spiritual] path. This is merely one of them, and chipping away at this will only result in the uncovering of many more similar guises.

The goal of the organism [Personality and the physical body] is, of course, survival. Sexuality is made more difficult by culturally imposed barriers and artificial conditions. This is another barrier. Denial of the pleasures of eating, sleeping, and just biding your time on a pleasant, sunny day are more.

The Personality can come up with many efforts to rationalize why these pleasures should not be experienced: they are not good for you; they cost too much; they waste too much time; they are not useful; they are evil, et cetera. [20 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Photography” for more information about that technique for getting around the barriers that Personality erects. Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” and “Culture” for more information about how culture inhibits sexual expression, which can be a gateway to spiritual experience if practiced with that intention.

In order to teach the Logos, must we get rid of problems, such as cultural problems, before we teach?

We would agree with that. Where major conflicts stand as significant barriers between the students and the Logos, then the student can seek the guidance group. Most of you, though, are in a position where you can begin to look at your own conflicts and, with our help, work through them. [27 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Logos”. There you will read that the Logos is the organizing principle of creation, and, as such, can be regarded as our ultimate teacher about how things exist and function. If we have any “conflicts” with, or barriers to, the primordial and fundamental reality system, then we should not presume to teach others.

I feel isolated from people. Is it related to sex or Overleaves or what? How can I approach this problem?

We would also point out to you that you have erected many barriers between yourself and possible emotional trauma. You do not allow yourself the luxury of intimacy. [27 March 1974]

The potential rewards of physical, emotional, and psychological intimacy outweigh the risks of potential trauma, so don’t make it harder than it needs to be by imagining problems (creating barriers) that might or might not arise.

Is the work ethic a carry-over from a past life?

We would see it as one of the most tenacious barriers you must scale. In some instances, the man Robert [Burton] was right about this. We feel, however, that you should discharge your obligations made in good faith, whether or not the respondents are in the teaching or not. Whoever is beyond this, we see no real obligations. We would see you pursuing some form of relaxation every day, even though this may at first seem like work for you. The relaxation obtained with the marijuana is all right. Just resting is all right, also. The penchant to “do” is part of Friction for the Ordinal Roles. [27 March 1974]

The body, the emotions, and the mind all need “R&R” — rest and relaxation — on occasion. Some cultures are hung up on the “work ethic”, and if we abide by that, it is a ‘barrier’ to spiritual growth. Refer to the chapter “Friction” for more about the notion that we experience discomfort when the Essence rubs up against the barriers erected by Personality and culture.

The choice is your strongest barrier to success right now — or to be more explicit, your denial of the fact that the choice rests always with you. We have suggested to you all various methods by which others have achieved spiritual growth. This is all that we are employed to do. If and when you make the choice to follow this path, the protection is there. [14 April 1974]

One common type of barrier to spiritual growth is the reluctance to make a decision and then take responsibility for the consequences of that decision. Refer to the chapter “Choice” for more information about that.

I read in previous notes that Karmic Ribbons must be burned. How are Ribbons burned?

Burning Karmic Ribbons consists essentially of collecting or repaying debts incurred in the past. As your Sequential partners do not necessarily reincarnate at the same time always, this process may take centuries. The problem being that you as the debtor will still have subliminal knowledge of the debt whether or not the person to whom it is owed is on the Physical Plane. This will usually result in some barrier to spiritual growth. Sometimes, souls search for entire lifetimes, are restless and insecure and cannot gain any insight to why they are compelled to search. The payment or collection can consist of a physical remittance such as money or an emotional one such as nurturing, or even a spiritual bond such as master and pupil. Karmic Ribbons concerning violence are usually settled with violence in the earlier Cycles. Those occurring in the later Cycles are usually settled more pacifically. We would encourage acknowledgment of any of these. The Older Souls are generally not given to commit violent acts. [17 April 1974]

Evidently, delayed repayment of Karmic debts is a drag on spiritual progress while incarnate. This is something that the Personality can do nothing about; it is up to the Fragment on the Astral Plane to make the arrangements.

... The lady struggles with this in her head and may come to grips with it, but now cannot go past the cultural barrier. [13 May 1974]

Refer to Chapter “Culture” for more information about the desirability of shedding acculturation where it is an impediment to True Personality and spiritual advancement.

Karma with other people was addressed in a previous QA exchange; self-karma is addressed in the following Q&A exchange:

Dick: I found the most important key to myself was asking Michael the question concerning what my purpose with this incarnation was. Would you [Mary] like to ask that?

This lady Agreed, among other things, to achieve the state of the true filial love through the barriers of rather sever disability not to give up, but to continue to seek, no matter what befell her, and this she has done. The lady has also Agreed to serve as an example to three others similarly afflicted, but not so indomitably, and to two she has presented this example; one is yet to come. [18 May 1974]

Self-karma is a type of Agreement made by the Fragment to experience an impediment in an incarnation for the purpose of learning a specific lesson. Perhaps “barrier” is a poor choice of words here because it does not really fit well with the other instances of the use of this word as documented in this chapter. I suggest that “challenge” would have been better, so my comment is this: It has been said “What does not kill you makes you stronger” (Nietzsche), and it has been said that “no pain, no gain”, and it has been said that “suffering is good for the soul”. To the extent that these aphorisms are true, then the path forward is not around, but through the ‘barrier’. Facing adversity squarely in order to overcome it does result in resilience and progress. There is something deep within us that tells us that an easy life is a wasted life. Note the innumerable stories about a hero’s journey of defeating some monster. In the Michaelian teachings story, the ‘monsters’ are Karma, Maya, False Personality, the Negative Poles, the Chief Features, and so on, as documented in this chapter on barriers, and in other chapters.

Dick: A step there is unknown to me and that is what turns on the fire? I'd like to verify that I was on the Astral Plane.

We would agree with that.

Comment: There were powerful, positive emotions.

It [powerful, positive emotion] is present throughout [the Astral Plane], but those still in the physical body seldom penetrate higher levels, mostly from fear. However, there are no real barriers, but they feel the energy emanating from those levels and refuse to trespass. This can be surmounted. Of course, the emotions are powerful. They are diluted. [18 May 1974]

The barrier that exists between the Physical Plane and the Astral Plane is said to not be “real”, meaning that it is illusory. Here again the illusion is attributed to the natural human condition, in this case the physical body. A Fragment living on the Astral Plane does not perceive such a barrier.

Do dolphins and whales communicate with each other?

There are barriers, much the same as your language barriers present. [22 May 1974]

Refer to chapters “Cetaceans” and “Communication”. Add language to the list of barriers that have already been given, such as Personality, Culture, and Karma.

Jean: I feel open and vulnerable.

One of the most positive changes in you, Jean, has been your willingness to throw down barriers. Yes, knowing your Role and your philosophical Attitude has helped you in this. [27 September 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Vulnerability”. There you will see that the Positive Pole, +Vulnerability, is about “throwing down barriers” that the Personality has erected against Essence. The reason that the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System is to show us the barriers, the specific personality traits, that we are to throw down in our own case.

The flagrant misuse of someone else’s definition of a word usually denotes a lack of understanding and a semantic barrier rather than any particular breach of trust. [24 September 1974]

Even if one is speaking the same language, one might not attach the same meaning to what another person is saying. It is Good Work to try to understand where other people are “coming from”. The chapter “Trust” is very relevant to this chapter on barriers, since distrust — unless earned by another person’s unwillingness to come to an agreement on what is Good Work — is an artificial barrier.

Dick visioned that life should contain joy and rapture. He felt that no barriers were between us and that experience [except] imaginary ones created by us.

True. You can have it any time you wish. It is not a difficult transition, but it requires that you cease denying yourself the pleasure. You see, this culture places pleasure on a high shelf marked “reward” and it must be earned. Ironically, Mechanical Man is totally unable to experience this as joy, and continues to strive toward an elusive goal that always remains just beyond the fingertips. This is truly sad, Dick, perhaps the only sadness on the Physical Plane, for it is really within your grasp all the time. Give up the idea that joy must come as a reward for faithful service. This is nonsense. You can have it free. [05 October 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Joy”, “Reward”, “Culture”, “Mechanical Man”, and “Planes” for further discussion of terms found in that passage. The point made here as well as in numerous other passages is that many kinds of barriers are more imaginary than real, and are self-imposed.

Comment: During hypnosis, Dick asked the question, “Is the power in the present moment?” This was in relation to material he had read in the newest Seth book.

You see, there is truly a power in the present moment, but it can only be felt when that moment is expanded to include all that you have been and all that you are now. If you are erecting and maintaining barriers against past pain, then how are you going to do this? [05 October 1974]

In order to make progress in the future, one must deconstruct barriers that were constructed during past negative experiences. The brain itself, not just the mind, has a way of denying or suppressing painful memories. Sometimes psychotherapy can mitigate the barriers, and psychedelics have also been found to be effective.

... [He is] in the Emotional Part of Moving Center, which right now is a barrier also toward full potential, as the enTrapment is truly strong. He can look at this, also. [15 October 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Centering Traps”. There you will read that, basically and briefly, Work on Centers involves, among other things, experiencing a Centers purely, as in Moving Part of Moving Center in the case of this person, rather than experiencing the impure mixture of two Centers.

Ralph: I have the impression that within our group, the articulation of the teachings emphasizes the static, the intellectual, and the hierarchical. Is this primarily a distortion arising from my biases or the group's or the languages? Or is this an accurate transmission of the teachings? Please comment.

In the beginning of this group, the primary concern was in the development of the belief system in the language necessary to explain it to each other and to oneself. This is a necessary step in the formation of any group, but in most, becomes a barrier toward further growth, and eventually becomes the belief system itself. In this group, there has been evolution of a sort that now points toward continuance in growth. The possibility still exists, however, that you will continue to concern yourselves with the intellectual hierarchical aspects and neglect the spiritual, yes, but you do not have to. You can put this belief system to the acid test and see if it works. Until you do this, yes, you are still trapped in the beginning stages. This is where most of the other belief systems remained throughout their existence, including the world's great religions. The concern remained hierarchical and primarily intellectual and never got off the ground spiritually. You are right, of course, you are trading one belief system for another; but there is a unity here that has not been before, and there is a trend toward integration that you are capable of verifying implicit within the system. [19 October 1974]

The chapter “Crutches” has more to say about this phenomenon, where something that is good in the beginning stages of a journey should be cast aside after it has done its work of healing.

The session of 22 October 1974 was mostly focused on the theme of barriers:

Man's place in the universe should, of course, have become a little more apparent to you since we opened the discussion on complexity. As we have intimated before, the Tao is the epitome of simplicity, and therefore the simplicity toward which we all strive in our return to the primeval. Therefore, the Physical Plane, with its enormous complexity, offers by far the most challenge and also the most barriers to spiritual liberation. Man, or rather, Mechanical Man, must then cut through the glamour and allurements of the Physical Plane in order to see the light of truth. Nowhere else is this as difficult, for on the Physical Plane, all is glamour and all is complex, even compared to the Astral Plane, which to the high planes can seem quite complex.

Man must strive uphill in the battle to free the Essence. By “man”, of course, we refer to all Creatures of Reason. For in all languages we know of, there is a word meaning “man” [in the sense of human as distinct from other animal species]. This uphill battle is growth-producing and also provides the strength to persevere through the several Cycles spent on the Physical Plane. The lessons learned on the Physical Plane are necessarily [psychologically] painful just because they are so complex. With simplification, there is analgesia [less pain]. On this world, there have been significant cultural and religious barriers to growth. On other worlds, there have been hostile natural environments and threats from without to contend with.

Man is the first rung on the cosmic ladder and must take this rung slowly, learning to place one foot in front of him at a time. Here on the Physical Plane, there are limitations placed on size and speed, on senses and acuity, with which man can perceive his universe. Until he realizes that he can break these barriers, he is trapped. We say trapped by Maya, and this is precisely what it amounts to, because he becomes so immersed in life crises that he fails to contemplate even the purpose of his sojourn here until quite late in the [reincarnation] Cycle. Then he must race to make up for lost time. By that time, however, he has usually experienced the greater part of life, and can relax and get down to the real business of study and contemplation that allows him access to the pan-dimensional universe.

You have been told [by Gurdjieff] that Mechanical Man cannot love, and that is true. Love is the highest truth of all, and isn't it said that ultimate truth is sealed off from man? Man also cannot “help”. In fact, man cannot do anything at all, at least from the standpoint of will or volition, because of the two imperative senses he chooses not to use: we speak of the intuitive sense and the telepathic sense. One would think that these had suffered the atrophy of disuse. This is not the case at all; they are simply held in abeyance until such a time that Mechanical Man can willingly look behind the barriers he has constructed about these very frightening senses and put them to use. This is usually the last lesson learned on the Physical Plane, and the hardest one, because it, or rather they, are the one that the Personality fights the most. Of course, it fights these, and it is a fight for survival, for once the door is open in this direction, only the Essence can go through it and behind the barrier is knowledge.

Man must meet with a cosmic teaching in order to look behind the barriers. Psychology will not do it for you: for, if the psychologist is a Mechanical Man himself, he also has adaptive behavior taking place, and he cannot look behind your barriers or very well allow you to, either. It would be too scary for him — he would then also have to look behind his own barriers. The broad purpose of the Physical Plane, of course, is then to cut through the first layer of complexity.

Comment at this point: Richard asked how can we prepare ourselves? What can we do to help ourselves see through the veil?

You are right, Richard: “veil” is a word we would prefer for these barriers — from our vantage point — are as insubstantial as the morning mists. But man chooses to solidify them to the point where he cannot destroy them. This brings them into line with the solidness of the Physical Plane. “Solid” is very much like ponderous to us. The weighty philosophical battles, battles waged by Mechanical Man, are his attempts to solidify even thought and make it more complex. He must first come to the point that he can verify for himself the tenuousness of that which stands between him and the pan-dimensional universe, and the path toward simplicity and therefore perfection. All in this universe is truly perfect; it is only faulty perception that renders it imperfect. Once the perception is full, the imperfection is gone and the liberated Essence can perceive all there is on the higher planes, and can move about without the solid limits of the Physical Plane. Many of you have had a taste of this and know of what we speak. The heavy weightiness of the Physical Plane is a burden you have chosen to bear in order to come to this point. Now you wish to throw off the yoke and this is why we have chosen to assist you. If you were not ready, you would simply not hear the words. We have stated, essentially, the purpose — succinct to be sure, but still essential.

There are steps, of course. Man’s purpose, then, being to learn that there is love and that it is accessible, and that it is accessible only through those “extrasensory” perceptions that he chooses to deny. The foundation we have given; the application you have agreed to try. Until you manage to open these doors — or at the very least, verify that they are there — you will notice no significant change in yourself, although that change may be readily perceptible to other students, but not to the one stuck with it. The application of this teaching in a loving, trusting environment could enable you to verify the presence of these blocks. If you choose to take advantage of this, of course, we will be there to assist.

Essentially, what Mechanical Man is saying when he says, “I do not trust you,” is, “I do not trust you not to show me what is behind those blocks.” Perhaps this, then: “If I allow you to come too close, you will violate my barriers and I will be naked in the void.” Once the stripping happens, the work, of course, becomes far easier and Personality begins to lose ground. It can do nothing else at this point. The Essence knows no shame, no guilt. If you can learn to share your fears, however childish they may seem to you, you will have gone a long way along the path. The realm of unfulfilled desires is fraught with Maya and one that must be conquered. What you are saying, in saying that you do not trust, is also, “I am so terrible that if you knew it, you could not love me,” and on a Personality-to-Personality basis, this is, of course, probably true; but the level of comprehension in this group is such that very little has not been met and dealt with already. It is doubtful that you could peel away the acceptance with your escapades. In fact, this would invariably bring you all much closer, and at this moment that is the goal. You have all been told about the utter foolishness in setting up impossible goals for yourselves: fixating on a goal years in the future is another of the Personality’s defenses against the Essence’s experiencing of the moment. [22 October 1974]

The Michaels were on quite a roll there as they riffed on the subject of various barriers. Refer to chapters “Complexity versus Simplicity”, “Mechanical Man”, “Glamour”, “Liberation”, “Knowledge”, “Planes”, “Culture”, “Religion”, “Creatures of Reason”, “Maya”, “Love”, “Intuition”, “Telepathy”, “Trust”, “Essence and Personality”, “Veil” for more information about subjects that appear in that passage. All of those chapters discuss phenomena that constitute barriers, or are related to, barriers or the lack of barriers.

If you first learn to express your feelings to one another without shame or guilt or any of the other myriad barriers, then you open the door to silence. Only then can you be truly comfortable without the chatter. Chattering is usually just another shield so the Personality does not have to be honest. You see, the Essence cannot lie; therefore, the Personality cannot tell the truth. It can only lie. This is an important point to remember, since the chattering emanates from the Personality. The Essence does communicate. There is no need for mindless silence in the path toward Balance, but it might as well be truthful communication, and until you can knock away the barriers, this cannot come about.

The feelings of alienation always surface more strongly when the alienated student is in a situation where he senses on some level that the other students are in contact, either with each other or with the teacher. This happened to you this time. You even anticipated that it would happen and yet your presence was felt and acknowledged by many other students, and they would have felt a definite loss had you not conquered your fears and attended. It would probably astonish you if you could transverse these barriers and feel the cohesiveness. [12 November 1974]

Refer to chapters “Shame”, “Guilt”, “Alienation” for more information about subjects that appear in that passage.

How do we burn Ribbons on the Astral Plane? Was Tomas on the Astral Plane burning Ribbons? Is it easier that way?

It is less painful in a physical sense, but that does not mean that it is pain-free. It takes much longer to accomplish anything this way, as all [that] can be offered is guidance to those who are on the Physical Plane and to whom the debt is owed. It involves patient monitoring and the establishment of rapport through the barriers of the planes. We would discuss this when the energy level is better. There is much scattering now and transmission is difficult. [19 November 1974]

The barrier between planes is not of the kind that we create in our imaginations as described above; rather, it is of the ‘imaginary’ kind that the Tao has created, thus much more difficult to surmount.

The most penetrating barriers on the Physical Plane are the “I cannot” belief systems that stand in the way of spiritual evolution. The easiest way we know of to break through these barriers is to eliminate the alienation, the frustrating isolation that your culture now imposes. [20 November 1974]

A negative attitude toward life is obviously a huge barrier. Refer to the chapter “Alienation” for more discussion of that particular barrier to spiritual evolution. In the next passage, we see how a person’s array of Overleaves affect their approach to lived experience:

Joan asked if fear is a part of the Caution Mode.

All of your experiences will vary tremendously over the next several months, much according to the Mode of approach by which you live. Naturally, those in Caution or Repression and, of course, those in Observation, will continue to put a distance between themselves and the experience. Those in Passion will perhaps experience more, sooner than the others, but sooner or later, students will be able to work through the barriers. [26 November 1974]

The Modes indicated (Caution, Repression, Observation) that create barriers are not the Cardinal Modes; the Mode mentioned that mitigates barriers is a Cardinal Mode (Passion). It can reasonably be inferred that, not just the Mode, but all of the Ordinal Overleaves incline one to create barriers, whereas the Cardinal Overleaves mitigate barriers. This notion could even be quantified in a person’s case by counting the quantity of Cardinal (positive) Overleaves they have and subtracting the number of Ordinal (negative) Overleaves they have. If the result is a negative number, then they might be especially beset by barriers to intimacy at the level of Personality.

Lyle asked what stops him from submitting to love — growth — what is the barrier there for him to the emotional experience? His SRC is Old Priest, Spiritualist, Arrogance, Emotional Part of Intellectual Center.

... we have suggested to you an alternative method wherein much stripping [of the barriers of Maya and False Personality] would occur and you would all be forced to confront your own and other student’s Personalities. When you commit yourselves finally to a cause, whatever that cause might be — Christianity, occultism, revolution, et cetera, et cetera — there is too much at stake to pull out, and you are forced to confront your blocks and either sink or swim with them. The concept of extended community or family is one environment in which this can come about. The students can sometimes overcome these blocks or barriers rapidly when their livelihood depends upon it. Right now in this cadre, nothing real is at stake. There is nothing to lose if the students are unable to work through their blocks.

The barrier between you and the Emotional Center is one that many in this cadre share. You are not alone. The sacrifices, yes, are necessary in yours and other cases, for only through these “sacrifices” will you be able to have this experience. As it is now, there is no good reason, and your Personality is well aware of it. In many ways, you and other students are much like the Sunday Catholics throughout the world, who do not have the experience [of transforming knowledge into understanding] either, because there is no commitment.

We have recently decided that this will no longer be the case, at least where we are concerned. We will no longer go along with the whims, the capriciousness, of various students who do not wish to face their barriers. Perhaps then we should say, the winnowing has begun. [14 December 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Emotional Center” for a review of other passages where original Michaelian group members were apprised of the benefits of developing their Emotional Center as an adjunct of spiritual experiences. Refer to the next section in this chapter for the collection of passages that contain the word “blocks”, an obvious synonym for the word “barriers”.

The Michaels delivered another lengthy lecture on barriers in the next session, a week later. It is as if they picked up where they left off:

We first asked for a general comment from the teacher. This is what we received.

As long as you continue to play the game of the culture and undergo the constant role-switching that occurs day in and day out, there will not be too much outward change in you. But this does not mean that there has been no change. It is merely that the role-switching uses up a tremendous amount of psychic energy that could be utilized for Work on the Path.

Some Students are able to remain in life roles and become Adepts, but this requires total detachment — or “non-attachment” if you prefer. You see, as long as you are involved in the conflict of the Personality against all other Personalities, then the Essence is held back. If the student is performing in a capacity that allows the Essence to bloom, it is possible for him to remain in the mainstream if he wishes and yet not lose contact with the Teaching.

Most of you Students still lose contact with the greater part of the teaching the moment you walk out into your life role. It is even at times, spectacular, to observe as you don your masks. There is still some need in many of you to hide the fact that you are “into” something like this from those who still have your permission to organize your lives. Do you wonder then why you do not live the teaching or why there is no outward visible sign at all that you have grown through this teaching? As long as this remains something to be hidden, your Personality will be externally vigilant to ensure there is no slip-up and that no one suspects you might be a little strange.

When souls are first Cast into a dominant species, some, or rather many, of the instinctive drives of the creatures-of-no-reason still remain embedded with the bio-computer. The Personality makes no attempt to override these instinctive behavior patterns and fights against the intrusion of any outside source. This suggests that they can be overridden.

One who observes from this [Causal Plane] vantage point is struck by the commanding, overriding trait of this culture, that of loneliness. You are the loneliest people we know of. This, in part, relates to your not attempting in any way to override the embedded instincts left as vestiges of a more primitive self.

Before souls were Cast [into incarnation], the creatures-of-no-reason from which you [Creatures of Reason] have ascended were largely governed by fear, and their lives were taken up in many ceaseless battles for survival. This is no longer necessary on this world, and yet it goes on ceaselessly in spite of this. There are few large carnivores roaming the city streets, and yet most behave as though there are. The battle for survival is but another Tape Loop that plays on and on, even to the point of starving large portions of the culture, while the others waste and hoard. This only provides for the realism in the drama, for this is no longer necessary at all.

There are abundant resources on this planet. Even though it has been rather ruthlessly plundered, there is still much to spare. The loneliness is heartbreaking, literally, as it is so unnecessary, and something that the Personality elects as a method to keep the battle going. If the Personality no longer felt threatened and alienated, there would be no incentive to continue the instinctive drama.

You see, the instinctive drama is safe and easily learned, for the memories are all still there. The dominant species from which you ascended ran in packs. There was a dominant leader. This has continued, for it enables the Personality to abdicate self-responsibility. In other words: “The boss told me to do it”; “Hitler told me to do it”; “God told me to do it”.

Whatever your particular persuasion happens to be, you can always manage to delegate the response[ibility?]. Even in emotional battles, it is always someone else who is ultimately blamed or credited for the action, whatever it may be. This is animal behavior and is widespread in this culture. We see examples of this every day, even in this cadre, where the responsibility is given over to someone else, while the choice and the result was distinctly yours.

On some planets, even on this world, the distinction has been made by good Students and Adepts, and the instinctive patterns have been overridden. But it is not easy, especially since so many of you have chosen to be “top baboon” and the pecking order is well delineated. This top space is just as hard to give up as the bottom rung, even though the latter does afford much more magnificent suffering.

To be “bottom baboon” in this culture is an enviable spot, as everyone can feel sorry for you and offer sympathy and comfort. “Top baboon” requires independence and is rather difficult in this culture, as you are told from the cradle that someone else, or many someones, are in charge of your lives — your parents, your teachers, your bosses, God, your clergy — though no one is in charge but you.

You even choose to live with terrifying organizations within the fabric of society, just to keep the conflict going. This is the only reason. If these organizations were eliminated, then the war would be weakened.

You choose to continue to live with terror only because the instincts for survival in a terrifying environment are still so strong.

You raise your own dragons. They are carefully nurtured in the bosom of your society and equally as carefully released as the need arises, to fan the fires.

If this ceases, then again, the war is weakened, and all those instincts begin to spin wheels and leak energy. Without a Teaching, you do not know that there is any alternative to this, and you do not have a chance to break the patterns. This permeates all facets of your living. Even your eating and sleeping rituals are stylized and smack of earlier times. Few break from these patterns, and even those who do, feel pain when they do.

Sexual behavior in this culture is largely instinctive to the point where any gesture of friendliness is interpreted as a sexual overture if it comes from one of the opposite gender, and the fantasies and expectations begin. When you behave as society wishes you to, you can know for certain that instinct has a large part in it, unless of course it happens to coincide with what you really desire, and this is rare.

The dictates of this culture are severe and stern. We doubt that it is much fun for anyone. This is not necessarily true of the entire Physical Plane. Although the Physical Plane is by nature solid, ponderous and complex, you make it even more so by trying to analyze these behavior patterns in terms other than instinct.

You have been taught that to even think of instinctive behavior in conjunction with human beings is bad. Well, this is nonsense. It is so strong that it overrides your pleasure and your growth.

Creatures of Reason have it all over their fellow inhabitants, as they alone are able to experience awe and delight. But the Creatures of Reason in this culture seldom allow themselves this luxury. They instead find devious methods of avoiding these experiences. The denial of pleasure and the pursuit of pain is high on your list of priority, and it should be clear now why this is true, but there is no reason for it other than the instinctive memories. This is the strongest reason we know of for working on the separation from your Personality and allowing the Essence to free itself. Only the Essence can experience ecstasy. We have told you this before and we emphasized it again and again, to keep you aware of the goal. Separation from the Personality’s conflicts allows the student to override the instinctive behavior patterns that now govern your actions.

This culture erects tremendous barriers in the name of progress to keep you from sighting the goal. Many of these are in the forms of false organizations that supersede the true organizations and keep you from seeking your cadre. When you align yourself with these false organizations or barriers, you become completely caught up in their dogmas and lose sight of any alternatives.

All of these organizations purport to have a lofty goal, but since the goal of none is Agape, again, they can only lead to more entrapment and more isolation from the goal. Examples of organizations that act as barriers are: the Democratic Party, or any other party; the Catholic church or any other dogmatic church; the cult of the Ku Klux Klan or any other terror organization; the Central Intelligence Agency or any other espionage agency; Black Panthers or any other separatist organization. The list is endless, and they are real barriers to growth if you align yourself solely in them to where you become Identified in their dogma and accept it as your own.

Other barriers can be found in the educational system. Many have seen this and have written about it, but their words have fallen largely on deaf ears. The moment that you Identify with any of these barrier groups, you move off the [spiritual] path, and Personality likes this and struggles to keep you Identified.

Changes in government cause the Personality great pain as they result in a failure of the chosen barrier, and those identified with the barrier feel fear. Naturally, they would, as they associate their personal barrier with the “good” while all other barriers are “bad”. Even the barriers [of] liberalism and conservatism are fear-producing if you happen to be on the other side. The alignment with one or more of these barrier groups rules out effectively a positive change in any other direction, especially if the alignment occurred early in life, childhood for instance.

When we speak, for instance, of a totally different economic system than any so far introduced on this planet, all of you go through an exercise — some mental, some verbally — in which you ultimately conclude that it will not work. This without any evidence that it will not work, because it has never been tried, and even though we assure you that it has indeed worked quite successfully elsewhere. Now this defeatist attitude is not limited to members of this cadre — far from it. Most of you, in fact, are a little more optimistic than average. But this attitude prevails throughout your culture because the alignment with barrier groups is so strong that you must fear change of any kind.

Belonging to these barrier groups gives the illusion of taking the edge off the loneliness. After all, if you can be a party in an organization of several million members, how can you be alone? In fact, these barrier groups only serve to alienate you even further, as they separate you from a larger segment of the population that does not belong to your barrier group. Then, of course, prejudices and hates arise from the perpetuation of these barrier groups, and these serve to fan the fires even further. The war is strengthened and you continue to struggle against the hostile environment, which you must continuously create for yourselves, as it does not exist any longer. This land has been tamed and this is the time to enjoy the fruits of your labor. Why are you not doing so? Oh, of course, if you identify with this group in the same manner and to the extent that you identify with barrier groups, it will serve as an isolating factor and a very good one at that.

On the other hand, you can take the teaching for what it is — a liberating, growth-producing force and expand your love to include all man. You see, this teaching does something that these barrier groups do not like very much. It gives you carte blanche permission to love and it does not specify that you must love only white American Protestants or any other barrier group members.

Of course, there is a method by which you can override the instinctive behavior patterns that separate you from the truth. We believe it was the man Lewis Carroll who first suggested that you do at least six impossible things before breakfast.

From Alice in Wonderland by Lewis Carroll: The White Queen: "I'm just one hundred and one, five months and a day." "I can't believe that!" said Alice. "Can't you?" the Queen said in a pitying tone. "Try again: draw a long breath and shut your eyes." Alice laughed. "There's no use trying," she said: "One can't believe impossible things." "I daresay you haven't had much practice," said the Queen. "When I was your age, I always did it for half-an-hour a day. Why, sometimes I've believed as many as six impossible things before breakfast."

Just gradually forcing yourselves to attempt all of these impossible things, such as meditation and even communal living, which is the most impossible thing of all, since it violates all of the precepts of all the most prestigious barrier groups in this culture. To admit that this might be a viable alternative to some of your struggles would be to give up all of your cherished concepts of how you should suffer.

The reason that this concept of communal living has been such a dismal failure when tried on this world is fairly easy to understand when we reflect upon the foregoing. We do not even suggest that you would be able to solve all the problems that would arise, but even a positive discussion would be a step in the right direction, as all previous discussions have revolved around how none of these problems could ever be solved.

We will now give response words we would like to see Photographed in yourselves and they are: "never," "forever" and "always." These irritate us far more than "very," "a lot," et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Yes, it would be valuable for a while to photograph these in each other. We will tell you when you have become identified with the exercise, when it has become mechanical. It would be interesting to tabulate all those situations to which you apply these absolutes. There are truly few conditions and most of them are cosmic, to which these do apply. [21 December 1974]

Refer to chapters "Photography", "Communal Living"

Blocks per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

[[search for “block(s)” and “shield(s)”]]

Concluding Comments on Barriers

Ego-dissolving psychedelics – see that chapter

The whole subject of barriers is fundamental to experience all up and down the levels of creation. In fact, making and breaking barriers is what it is all about.

The usual suspects

So many barriers, so little time to throw them all down in one lifetime.

The subject of ‘barriers’ is an instantiation of a mathematical abstraction, a component of the structure of the Cosmos, namely three-dimensionality (3-D). What I mean by this is that a 3-D entity has an ‘inside’ that is separated from an ‘outside’ by a semi-porous membrane or boundary. Other terms for this are: an agent in an arena; a self in an environment. The chapters on [\[list in alphabetical order:\]](#) “Casting”, “Ego”, “Fragmentation”, “Group Cohesion” [\[and so on\]](#), discuss other instantiations of 3-D. The goal of the evolution of consciousness is that it crash the barriers, metaphorically shed its ‘skin’ as it outgrows what it was before, become ‘all that it can be’ in a succession of ‘molts’.

BEAUTY

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “beauty” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Beauty has always been a consideration in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “beauty” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Definition of Beauty

So what is meant by happiness? Wikipedia:

Personally, I believe that beauty might be an ontological primitive, meaning that it is built into the structure and function of the cosmos at the level of the seven fundamental archetypes, namely the fourth level....

Beauty per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The word appeared in the very first session that has come into our possession:

[Tomas:] This man, [who] is from India, can do this because he has developed himself through meditations and through research and through his traveling down through his various lifetimes, until he has reached this place. It is a beautiful thing, and many people do reach it — many more people than you realize do reach it. [19 June 1973]

The meaning of beauty in this context is that people of a certain type find it to be aesthetically pleasing when they see some other person reach their goal or their potential. People of some other type might experience gratitude; some people of yet another type might experience empowerment. These three types are all manifestations of higher Centers.

Sarah: How do I put me out of the way?

[Tomas:] You are doing a good job, Sarah. You are doing a beautiful job. You just close your mind and let in whoever wants to talk. You will get great things. You are writing a book. [19 June 1973]

There are various ways to offer support for what people another person is doing. Tomas was fond of the word beauty for this purpose, above and below:

[Tomas:] I would like to continue on this subject, perhaps next week if you like. I would like to study and meditate now, in order to bring the beautiful words that are associated with love [to fruition], and learn the correct way, in order to help you understand. [10 July 1973]

Comment: Soleal is very psychic.

Soleal is also a seeker. He is a beautiful being. [17 August 1973]

Alice and Dick expressed how good they felt when they met him.

He is a beautiful guy. [17 October 1973]

The Michaels also used the word beautiful to describe a person, and I suspect they were not referring to the outer beauty, but the inner beauty. Perhaps this is a lesson for us all, to look for the beauty in all people, wherever that may be.

Dick: Should I keep the Capri?

The Capri is a worthless piece of junk, but it is providing you with some beautiful Friction. Yes, scrap it.

The Michaels were using the word “beautiful” here ironically, for emphasis, as Friction is ‘ugly’; refer to the chapter “Friction”. There you will read that Friction is a Gurdjieffian notion borrowed by the Michaels. The idea is that there are “opportunities/challenges” in life where things or people do not do as you prefer, and the proper “spiritual path” is to “turn the lemons into lemonade.” Therefore, you should regard Friction as a beautiful, attractive thing, because facing it and embracing it and overcoming it is for your own good in the long run.

The Mature Soul perceives beauty with a clarity not found in earlier Cycles. [08 September 1973]

The Mature Soul Age is the fourth of seven Soul Ages. It is the Neutral Assimilation Age, which is both/neither Cardinal/Ordinal. As such, it is the symmetrical balanced stage of the Cycle. Note what is said in a Theosophy book about what that theological philosophy refers to as the “Fourth Ray”:

The fourth note [Ray] is the middle unit, the pivot, the fulcrum, the stable point of rest, the lowest point in the swing of the pendulum of Life between the primordial three pairs of opposites. It is the state of perfect interrelation, of balance, of the highest area of self-expression, of harmony between Life [Cardinal] and form [Ordinal], vehicle [Ordinal] and consciousness [Cardinal]. It is the point of rest at which the pendulum of manifested life makes an apparent pause in its everlasting swing between Spirit [Cardinal] and matter [Ordinal]. In that “momentary pause” of ultimate stability, perfect equipoise, the beauty of the Supreme is revealed. In the universe, it is the beauty of Nature. In the Logos, it is Beauty’s Self. In man, it becomes love of the beautiful; in developed man, it is the faculty of perceiving and portraying the beauty of the Supreme. [Geoffrey Hodson, The Seven Human Temperaments, p. 7]

Kathryn: Who should I go to, to meditate with better?

Chogyam Trungpa’s methods would work for you.

Kathryn: What? Who is that?

Sarah: He’s a Tibetan Llama from Delhi. He has one place in Vermont and another in Colorado.

She could read the book or could seek him out; either would work; the latter would be more interesting. He is a beautiful, joyous Essence. Find him. [08 September 1973]

Previously we saw that beauty was been mentioned in conjunction with love, and here we see it mentioned in conjunction with joy. That passage implies that not all Essences are beautiful and/or joyous...

The language is really very beautiful. [18 September 1974]

Sight and sound can be beautiful. Touch and taste and smell are described with different adjectives.

Could you appreciate the beauty of the differential equation if you did not first have understanding of algebra and the linear equation? [18 September 1973]

Besides sights and sounds being beautiful, abstract concepts and procedures can seem to be beautiful to some people.

Concluding Comments on Beauty

BELIEF

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “belief” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Belief issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “belief” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Belief

So what is meant by belief? Wikipedia has an article that provides a definition and a description, as follows:

Belief per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. [These extracts are \[not\] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group.](#) As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Belief

⑦ BELIEF SYSTEM

This chapter is the product of a search for the phrase “belief system” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This phrase does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Belief systems are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

The phrase “belief system” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word or phrase that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Generally speaking, the Michaels are not keen on belief systems, preferring what might be called “knowledge systems” instead; refer to the chapter “Knowledge as Gnosis” for the whole story. Basically and briefly, by definition, it is possible to have false beliefs, but it is not possible to have false knowledge. There is also a chapter, “Value”, which discusses the concept of a value system. If you ask me to place these systems into the Overleaf System, then I would say that belief systems are of the Expression Axis, knowledge systems are of the Assimilation Axis, and value systems are of the Inspiration Axis. Behavior systems are of the Action Axis, and one relevant chapter for that subject is “Ritual”.

Among other things, the Michaelian teachings presents an elaborate belief system as a psychological component of a spiritual path. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings usually address either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated during a lifetime. In this case, the Michaelian teachings asserts that its belief system is superior to other belief systems. Obviously, having a true and healthy belief system is a positive worth cultivating. Both negatives and positives are amenable to psychotherapeutic techniques. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on various websites, including https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Belief System

So what is meant by belief s system? Wikipedia describes it this way:

Belief systems

A belief system comprises a set of mutually-supportive beliefs. The beliefs of any such system can be religious, philosophical, political, ideological, or a combination of these.

A belief system can refer to a religion or a world view. A world view (or worldview) is a term calqued from the German word Weltanschauung. Welt is the German word for ‘world’, and Anschaung is the German word for ‘view’ or ‘outlook’. It is a concept fundamental to German philosophy and epistemology and refers to a wide world perception. Additionally, it refers to the framework of ideas and beliefs through which an individual interprets the world and interacts in it.

Philosopher Jonathan Glover, following Meadows (2008), says that beliefs are always part of a belief system, and that tenanted belief systems are difficult for the tenants to completely revise or reject. He suggests that beliefs have to be considered holistically, and that no belief exists in isolation in the mind of the believer. Each belief always implicates and relates to other beliefs. Glover provides the example of a patient with an illness who returns to a doctor, but the doctor says that the prescribed medicine is not working. At that point, the patient has a great deal of flexibility in choosing what beliefs to keep or reject: the patient could believe that the doctor is incompetent, that the doctor's assistants made a mistake, that the patient's own body is unique in some unexpected way, that Western medicine is ineffective, or even that Western science is entirely unable to discover truths about ailments. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Belief> — retrieved 05 February 2023]

The Michaelian teachings is a comprehensive mutually-supportive belief, value, and behavior system, and the Michaels refer to it as such, naming it “The Synthesis”; refer to the chapter by that name. Typically, belief systems are formalized by appending the suffix “-ism”. That being the case, this Study Papers book is about Michaelism.

Belief System per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first mention of “belief system” came three months after the Michaels introduced themselves to the original Michaelian group:

The only souls who would really benefit from this [Michaelism] approach would, of course, be Mature Souls and Old Souls. Young Souls do not possess a developed sense of self, and could not direct the knowledge inward. Also, their belief system would mitigate against their acceptance. [15 November 1973]

The older the soul, the more comprehensive and encompassing is their belief system. Every Soul Age has an appropriate belief system (and value system and behavior system). Altogether, these three systems add up to a worldview that is common to whatever Soul Age. One characteristic of older souls versus younger souls is that the former have a much richer “inner” world than the latter; their “sense of self” is more “developed”.

Ray: Where do people stay after death? In what space are they?

This depends a great deal on the level [Age] of the soul and the belief system going at the time of transition [physical death]. [15 November 1973]

That statement implies that a person's belief system changes over a lifetime; evidence for that is everywhere, including within ourselves. Also implied is that our belief system influences “what [metaphorical] space” we inhabit, and who we ‘hang out’ with. “Birds of a feather flock together”, as the saying goes, here on the Physical Plane and apparently on the Astral Plane. If we accept the analogy of soul growth being like advancing through ‘grades’ in a ‘school’, then people learn best when surrounded by souls functioning at approximately the same level, and this includes the belief, value, and behavior systems operating at that level. Soul Age is not the only factor, but probably one of the most significant.

Jeff.: What benefit or harm is there to stimulating the acupuncture point known as the “Divine Door”?

No harm. The benefit depends on your belief system. If you think or believe in it, it will probably be of benefit. If your belief system is such that you believe that stimulation of certain areas of the human brain such as the hypothalamus, the pineal gland, [or] the anterior pituitary produces a doorway to enlightenment and this belief is strong enough, sometimes the result is just short of miraculous. [15 November 1973]

This appears to be a reference to the so-called “placebo effect”: <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Placebo>. The placebo phenomenon is better studied and documented than another “mind over matter” phenomenon, namely psychokinesis (<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Psychokinesis>), but the placebo effect is thoroughly confirmed in clinical medical trials. Life works best when one's internal belief system is consistent with external reality, and that can include the higher reality where co-called “miracles” can happen; refer to the chapter “Enlightenment” for more discussion about that.

More is said about that sort of thing in the next Q&A exchange to be found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

Gene: I have several questions here from someone else, Denise. Denise felt moved to move to the East Coast [but did not], and now because of what has happened to her, she feels like they should have moved.

We do not feel that the move would have altered the course of Denise's disease. It already reached the state where she, or rather that body, had decided. Psychically, Denise would benefit, not by the experience, only by searching. She believes that she would. She would have to work with someone there just as she would have had to do in the beginning. It is important that she stay in contact with Gene now. Gene can help her to reevaluate her belief system. [20 December 1973]

It usually takes a lot of external information and/or a charismatic personality and/or an acknowledged authority figure and/or a trusted friend (as Gene was to this person) to help a person reevaluate their entire belief system. It is easier if the person gets to the point where the old belief system is simply not working for them any longer, and then the person of their own volition and conviction looks for and tries to find a better belief system to take its place.

Susan: I wrote a letter to my parents recently, thanking them for their support and help while I was working on a goal, and my mother wrote back and said she knew all the time that I would do this, because when I was born I had a "veil" over my face, and the midwife predicted great things for me. I would like to know how valid these superstitions are, and if "omens" mean anything.

The superstition concerning the psychic power of those born with a "caul" is a very ancient one, having its roots in Babylonia. The place of superstition in the scheme of things is sometimes valid, in that it allows powerfully psychically energetic souls to exercise their powers without disrupting their already formed dogmatic belief systems. The lady in question was one of those. She used a convenient superstition to explain the tremendous amount of psychic energy she felt. [20 December 1973]

Refer to the chapter "Superstition" for more discussion about that subject. Our belief systems are such that we tend to interpret novel phenomena that we encounter within the framework of the existing belief system ... at least up until so many anomalies accumulate that the old belief system cannot reasonably accommodate the anomalies. At that time it becomes necessary that a whole new belief system come into view and/or snap into place, one that does adequately accommodate the new data. In the scientific realm, this is called a "paradigm shift": ><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Paradigm><. A philosopher of science named Tomas Kuhn wrote the book about that: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/The_Structure_of_Scientific_Revolutions<.

Richard: Is "False Personality" and "Maya" the same?

He [Tomas] is challenged by the glamour of the diversified belief systems, and is only able to differentiate because of higher teachers [than him] who are available. We do not prevent the dissemination of valid information from the Astral Plane [where Tomas was], but this is monitored carefully, and attempts are made to invalidate false data. Sometimes this is not possible, primarily because of the rigid belief systems of the medium involved. This is why we always attempt to work with Older [Soul] mediums. Their convictions tend to float more easily, and it is possible to sneak past their bias. [20 December 1973]

Refer to chapters "Glamour" and "Bias", where two impediments to arriving at an accurate belief system are discussed at length. Such impediments as glamour and bias are why the Michaels emphasized the value of "Validation and Verification", documented in a chapter by that name. Implied by the words "diversified" and "rigid" is the notion that a person can hold their belief system too loosely or too closely for their own mental and social well-being. Perhaps you have heard the aphorism "Don't be so open-minded that your brains fall out". This situation appears in the Overleaf System in such things as the Negative Pole of the Idealist Attitude, namely -Naivety, and in the Negative Pole of the Scholar Role, namely -Speculation. In the opposite case, a too-rigid belief system appears in the Overleaf chart in such things as the Negative Pole of the Pragmatist Attitude, namely -Dogma, and in the Negative Pole of the Stubbornness Chief Feature, namely -Obstinacy.

Gene: I would like to ask about Denise and her recent receiving of the "Holy Spirit," which she received unsolicited and unexpected at the Charismatic Catholic Renewal. I had worked with her on our ideas, and since going to the Holy Spirit meetings, [she] has gone for that. How does this fit?

It fits in with her belief system. It still remains to be seen whether she can transform it into a conflict-resolving mechanism. [03 January 1974]

As I said above, we tend to fit new information into our existing belief system, but a belief system can be supplanted if it proves inadequate in the long run, as the evidence accumulates to the breaking point. Often the anomalies that accumulate enough to challenge a belief system provoke a reorientation that "resolves" the "conflict" in a catastrophic fashion, as in 'the straw that broke the camels back'.

Nichols: I would like to ask about Mike, a key leader in TFR ("Time for Reality"). He demonstrates an ability to accept people where they are and not try to change them.

He still will not perceive, but he will accept your explanation with some reservations as long as he is not existentialistic in his present belief system. This man is not. [20 February 1974]

Existentialism is a philosophy, aka a belief system, that does not concern itself with any alleged supernatural realm, limited as it is to an interest in understanding the human condition, not the soul condition:

Existentialism is a form of philosophical inquiry that explores the issue of human existence. Existentialist philosophers explore questions related to the meaning [Intellectual], purpose [Moving], and value [Emotional] of human existence. Common concepts in existentialist thought include existential crisis, dread, and anxiety in the face of an absurd world, as well as authenticity [Higher Intellectual], courage [Higher Moving], and virtue [Higher Emotional]. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Existentialism> — retrieved 05 February 2023]

The Michaelian teachings is existentialist to the extent that it concerns itself with the human condition, which is much. Getting all philosophical now, I note that Existentialism focuses on the processing of life experiences in the various Centers, as shown with the words in [brackets]. In this interpretation, Existentialism as a whole would be the word for the processing that takes place in the Neutral Assimilation Center, which is a combination of the other six. An internet search revealed to me that the opposite of the philosophy of Existentialism is Nihilism, a belief system that denies belief systems, and is therefore self-contradictory. However, the Michaelian teachings is not limited by Existentialism or Nihilism; it is a belief system that affirms the meaningfulness of life in human form, but also affirms that there is a life transcendent, a life above and beyond the human form.

Comment: When there is bias through the Ouija board, there is distorted information due to thought patterns of the one operating the board.

The bias is most easily defined as the absolute limit of the individual's belief system. [03 March 1974]

Previously I mentioned that there is a chapter on "Bias". The Soul Age, and consequent belief system, of the channel influences the type and the quality of the information that comes through that channeling. As the soul ages, its belief system becomes more and more open to a larger and higher reality.

There is, more often than not, a period of utter confusion following transition [from Physical Plane to Astral Plane] for those who had no well-thought-out belief system, or those who fluctuated wildly from one [belief] system to another. They will inevitably flit back and forth for sometimes many years, sampling all the fruits of their floating convictions. [27 March 1974]

The Michaels are not the only ones who tell us humans that for a while in the afterlife, to a significant extent, the soul experiences what the personality expects to experience. However, just as with life on the Physical Plane, on the Astral Plane reality inevitably and eventually overrides an inferior or false belief system. Pushing the Michaelian metaphor, I say that, as with fruit, belief systems come in a spectrum of quality, from poor to fair to good to best. The Michaels provide a belief system that will supposedly fare well in the immediate afterlife world, but one of my "notes to self" is to, when I get there, immediately ask what is really going on as distinct from whatever I might have been lead to believe via channel bias, as noted above, and below:

The information received by the man Edgar Cayce in his trances was difficult for him to transmit as it was so contrary to his own belief system. The more rigid and orthodox the person is, the more ambiguous the transmission will be. [24 April 1974]

Cayce had a fundamentalist Christian background. History has proven that his channeling was of poor quality, unreliable. Considering the nature of his religiosity, it does not seem likely that he was an older soul. One of the ways to validate or invalidate channeling on the subject of the afterlife is to review other sources, such as the Near Death Experience and between-life hypnotic regression. Doing that helps to inform and firm up our belief system. The principle of validation and verification applies to all beliefs, not just the nature of the afterlife.

Comment: Someone intimated that the sisters may be Baby Souls who are rigid in their belief systems. [18 May 1974]

As stated elsewhere in this chapter, the more primitive the soul, the more primitive the belief system that belongs to that Soul Age. Rigidity of belief system is a component of primitivity, and flexibility of belief system is a component of maturity. But not too flexible, as noted above, because wishy-washy is not healthy.

One of the longest single passages in the original Michaelian group transcriptions on the subject of belief systems is this one:

Dick: Many teachings speak of an inner fire that needs to be turned on to achieve consciousness. I cannot turn it on consciously. Can Michael give us the secret to turn this on?

To answer your question, Dick, let us speak of belief systems for a moment. For you see, if the belief system is strong enough and tenacious enough, the Lower Centers can effectively block out all information conflicting with that belief system and all of its attendant emotions. In other words, if you do not believe that there is a state of Agape, you can effectively block out any experience of such. The secret for you, Dick, is in that space of which you have spoken. If you can ever once allow yourself to feel the presence of one who loves, then experience that state vicariously, you can incorporate that into your belief system. Right now, your belief system does not allow for that experience. You may have it by experiencing this Entity and knowing that this state does exist. You must feel it before you can give it yourself. You must be at a point where you know beyond the shadow of a doubt that it does exist, and the only way you will is to experience it from one who is there. You almost felt it with the man Robert [Burton] because he was very close to achieving it. He could, at times, bring his entire following to that neutral energy flow, which for Mechanical Man is a very high place. This neutral energy force is within the reach of this group, if you wish to strive for it and once there, you will find the access easier to allow. But all of you first must feel, then you can love. Mechanical Man does not like innovation or change. This explains the reason. Experiencing this feeling will light the fire. [05 October 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Mechanical Man” for a discussion of the Gurdjieffian concept of a person trapped in a faulty belief system. Several sentences in that passage indicate that a verified belief system is actually a knowledge system based on personal experience; refer to the chapter “Experience” for more about that. I take the word “feel” to refer to personal subjective experience, which helps to bump beliefs up into the verified knowledge category; refer to the chapter “Knowledge as Gnosis” for more about that.

Comment: During hypnosis, Dick asked the question, “Is the power in the present moment?” This was in relation to material he had read in the newest Seth book.

You see, there is truly a power in the present moment, but it can only be felt when that moment is expanded to include all that you have been and all that you are now. If you are erecting and maintaining barriers against past pain, then how are you going to do this? When two souls meet again and there is Recognition, this can be a powerfully positive experience, if it is felt by both. It can also be scary, as it was for this man, because his belief system does not go beyond the grave.

Refer to the chapter “Barriers and Blocks” for more about that which blocks substituting a good belief system in the place of a bad belief system. Refer to the chapter “Recognition” for a discussion of the general principle that you learn to “know a good thing when you see it”, and that includes one’s belief system.

Should Jim tell his friend about this?

Please know that belief systems permeate all lower Centers in their control. Although this man can intellectually rationalize on alternatives, this intellect eventually comes to reject these alternatives, as the belief system does not allow them room. It is like the mountains of evidence versus the shred of proof of which you have all spoken before. You will cling to the shred of non-proof tenaciously as long as the belief system is in control. [05 October 1974]

Here again is an instance where a belief system needs to be updated by a personal experience that indicates that “there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in their philosophy” (Shakespeare). The typical reaction to a severe challenge to a Mechanical Man’s belief system is fear, and the person might even get defensive or offensive in order to maintain the status quo. The proper response for a Balanced Man is to investigate any new belief or experience with curiosity. Also important is to take steps to mitigate preconceived ideas and other biases; psychologists have made lists of “cognitive biases” that make people resistant to updating their belief system; refer to https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cognitive_bias for the definition and the descriptions.

Perhaps you have heard the joke: “How many people does it take to change a light bulb? None. If the light bulb is ready to change, it will do it itself.”

... we would recommend a very radical approach, such as ... regression hypnosis if their belief system does not include the possibility of reincarnation. The latter will still often be successful, as the memories are still buried there, and in the trance can override the belief system. However, these souls are experts at rejecting solutions to their problems. It still remains that you cannot force one to change ... but if you are successful, it will simply mean that one was ready to seek the change. [08 October 1974]

Due to the suggestible state of mind that exists during a hypnotic trance, it is possible to sneak around an entrenched belief system.

Perhaps there are other clever ways to introduce and inject new ideas into the belief system of otherwise resistant people, such as the Socratic method:

The Socratic method (also known as method of Elenchus, elenctic method, or Socratic debate) is a form of cooperative argumentative dialogue between individuals, based on asking and answering questions to stimulate critical thinking and to draw out ideas and underlying presuppositions. It is named after the Classical Greek philosopher Socrates and is introduced by him in Plato's [book] Theaetetus as midwifery (maieutics) because it is employed to bring out definitions implicit in the interlocutors' beliefs, or to help them further their understanding. The Socratic method is a method of hypothesis elimination, in that better hypotheses are found by steadily identifying and eliminating those that lead to contradictions. The Socratic method searches for general commonly held truths that shape beliefs and scrutinizes them to determine their consistency with other beliefs. The basic form is a series of questions formulated as tests of logic and fact intended to help a person or group discover their beliefs about some topic, explore definitions, and characterize general characteristics shared by various particular instances. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Socratic_method — retrieved 10 April 2023]

The upshot of the Socratic Method is that, if a person expresses an opinion that you disagree with, it does not seem good to simply rebut their opinion or assert your opinion. The most effective strategy is to interrogate the person in detail about the factual evidence and logical arguments that back up their opinion until, presumably, they see that it does not 'hold water'. And, of course, the other person in the disputation is well-advised to do the same with you, because, whether you realize it or not, your own opinion might be 'full of holes'. The basic idea is that the interactive dialogue will get both parties closer to truth; refer to the chapters "Communication" and "Dialogue". The Socratic method does not come naturally to most people, so they must be consciously intentional about implementing it.

... the mind of a Mechanical Man intent upon his comfortable belief system that rejects order. [15 October 1974]

As I said above, people are comfortable with their own belief system ... until there aren't, either by the accumulation of external contrary evidence or by reason of some internal transformation process. The thing about Mechanical Men is that they have been 'programmed' to believe as they do, mostly by the parents and the schools and the culture in which they grew up, and it feels right to them on that account; refer to the chapter "Bio-computer" for the whole story. Basically and briefly, to change a belief system one has to have one's brain neuronal connectome 'reprogrammed' throughout. I know what this is like because in my youth I was a member of a fundamentalist quasi-Christian cult. They had their answer for everything. It was only because I am by nature not of a fundamentalist mentality that I grew out of the programming, with a little help from a better belief system.

Her belief systems are quite tenacious, even though she tries to deny this intellectually, and now she is lost out on the goal of her particular dogma, and that is frightening. [19 October 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Dogma" for more discussion of that term. To "deny something intellectually" is called rationalization. The thing about a belief system is that it seems so rational and reasonable to the person who has it. The belief system has been developed over the course of the person's life and it makes perfect sense ... until it doesn't. What makes belief systems hard to crack is that they appear to be coherent, with each belief in the system interlocked with and confirming the other beliefs in the system as a whole. However, reality has a way of intruding, and a dogmatic person finds this to be scary.

The Michaels readily admit that their teaching is a belief system. The questioner in this case, Ralph, was a very bright, well-educated, academic-minded, social-activist person:

Ralph: I have the impression that within our group, the articulation of the teachings emphasizes the static, the intellectual, and the hierarchical. Is this primarily a distortion arising from my biases or the group's or the languages? Or is this an accurate transmission of the teachings? Please comment.

In the beginning of this group, the primary concern was in the development of the belief system in the language necessary to explain it to each other and to oneself. This is a necessary step in the formation of any group, but in most, becomes a barrier toward further growth, and eventually becomes the belief system itself.

In this group, there has been evolution of a sort that now points toward continuance in growth. The possibility still exists, however, that you will continue to concern yourselves with the intellectual hierarchical aspects and neglect the spiritual, yes, but you do not have to. You can put this belief system to the 'acid test' and see if it works [leads toward transcendence]. Until you do this, yes, you are still trapped in the beginning stages. This is where most of the other belief systems remained throughout their existence, including the world's great religions. The concern remained hierarchical and primarily intellectual and never got off the ground spiritually. You are right, of course; you are trading one belief system for another; but there is a unity here that has not been before, and there is a trend toward integration that you are capable of verifying implicit within the [belief] system. [19 October 1974]

By "acid test" the Michaels were probably referring to the psychedelic method of blowing one's belief system 'out of the water':

The Acid Tests were a series of parties held by author Ken Kesey primarily in the San Francisco Bay Area during the mid-1960s, centered on the use of and advocacy for the psychedelic drug LSD, commonly known as "acid". LSD was not made illegal in California until October 6, 1966." [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Acid_Tests< — retrieved 10 April 2023]

Refer to the chapter "Psychedelics" for more information. Taking them is one of the most effective and efficient ways to change a person's belief system. In fact, psychedelics often launch a person out of their intellectualism into spiritualism, and, as we see in the "Psychedelics" chapter, that was one of the goals that original Michaelian group members had for themselves, and that the Michaels were teaching them how to do.

The Michaelian teachings has proven to be a better belief system than the religion that I participated in during my youth. In my opinion, part of being "better" means to me that the Michaelian belief system points beyond itself to what I am calling a "knowledge system" in this chapter. A knowledge system is not merely intellectual and hierarchical; it is experiential and spiritual; refer to the chapter "Knowledge as Gnosis" for a thorough discussion.

Besides psychedelics, positive emotions and intimate social experiences are good breakers of intellectual belief-systems:

It was excellent work to have the group pressed into a crowded situation and yet come away with far more positive emotions than negative ones, even though many privately held belief systems concerning the need for alienation were violated. Those of you who made the experience count will not lose the ground gained. Those students who refused to penetrate the experience are in precisely the same spot as they were before the experience. [12 November 1974]

Sometimes a belief system breaks down under its own weight in the natural course of life, but sometimes the process can be engineered or accelerated, as for instance, when one puts oneself in an intense situation where a breakthrough becomes likely. Refer to the chapter "Alienation" for more about that component of a primitive belief system. The better belief system of a group can prompt experiences that can help individuals break down an obsolete belief system and replace it with the better belief system, one that does not include alienation.

Dick: Asked for a comment from Michael regarding his own experiences during the weekend. He felt in an obligated emotional state, non-relating, alienated, didn't feel well, a psychosomatic type illness. He asked if this was a past life carry-over, and if there was a rewarding answer, he would like to hear it.

With some students, and we include you, Dick, in this, the desire to experience the experience was counterbalanced by the feeling of unreadiness and unwillingness to verify that on a strong plane. Also, the belief systems of some students includes the "I'm not psychic" fact, and this was strongly operative during this group gathering. [12 November 1974]

Some few people are psychic from birth; they take this for granted and don't deny it. Most people are only a little bit psychic, so they might not recognize it on those rare occasions or in those rare circumstances when it happens. Refer to the chapter "Paranormal, The", and open yourself to the possibility, if not probability, that you might be just a little bit psychic. One would hope that Michaelian students would examine their limited belief system, if such be the case, acknowledge their psychic gifts, if any, and even cultivate them; refer to the chapter "Intuition".

This verification [of past lives via reincarnation] is always shattering as it usually strips away belief systems of long standing. [12 November 1974]

Such is the case except in cultures where reincarnation is a component of the prevailing religious belief system. Reincarnation is more widely believed in Western civilization now than it was in the 1970s, thanks to the incursion of Asian religions.

The most penetrating barriers on the Physical Plane are the “I cannot” belief systems that stand in the way of spiritual evolution. [20 November 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Barriers and Blocks” for an accounting of many impediments to spiritual progress. Many of them are self-imposed as in the case here of self-sabotage; many of them are part of parental and cultural belief systems.

Ralph: You have told us about man’s habitual rendering complex — the way he complicates things. If we have moments of knowledge and love, it seems difficult to maintain them in this culture. Can you comment on this?

These moments are moments of utter simplicity. Of course, it is difficult to maintain in this state, in the false order, the complicated chaos that this and other cultures like it have created. As we have said before, to explain away the unexplainable, man must create for himself the answer to all those questions, those imponderables for which there is no proof. Man, in order to be satisfied, must define, within the limits of his belief system, all those phenomena that he observes. In moments when the Essence breaks through the barriers, the true order — the natural order — becomes perceivable. Man takes the simplest activity and renders it complex by analyzing, examining, granting it priority, granting it precedence. We should not limit this simply to man. This is common to Creatures of Reason throughout the Physical Plane. This is not unique to that which you call man. Man takes the simplest function and renders it complex in order to give an illusion of importance to his life.

The thing about “Creatures of Reason” (refer to the chapter by that name) is that they are slaves to intellectualism, which, although complicated, is a rather limiting belief system because the universe is so much richer than that which can be comprehended by the intellect.

Ralph: Is The Synthesis simpler than the [belief] systems that man erects?

In its most evolved form, yes. In words suitable for communication with the members of this enclave, it becomes complex. Again, Creatures of Reason take the simplest activity and render it complex through symbols. The Synthesis is not complex. The Synthesis seeks integration, simplicity. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence through expressions of individuality, isolation, alienation. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence by assigning themselves a role, even a negative one, if that be the case, of subrogation, taking the responsibility from themselves, assigning that responsibility to a higher power, conveniently beyond the five physical senses and, therefore, unarguable, unprovable, unassailable, safe, comfortable, complex. [26 December 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Synthesis, The” and read about what the Michaels called their teaching. It is indeed a belief system, as indicated above, but it is rich enough to include all phenomena.

Refer to the chapter “Complexity versus Simplicity”. There you will read that the Michaels acknowledged the seeming complexity of the belief system that they teach, but the suggestion is that it is necessary to start with a complex belief system in order to extract students from the belief system that people are mired in, and then move toward the simplicity of the truth, which is not a belief system but is reality.

Only that which your mind has decided [belief system] and your heart has become committed to [value system] can occur [behavior system]. All is possible when you give up the dearly held belief systems, and open your being [experiential system] to the new. [11 January 1975]

That was yet another statement that belief systems, value systems, and behavior systems are usually limiting rather than freeing. Ideally, one does not have a rigid belief, value, or behavior system; rather, one does well to live in the flow of an experiential system that is consistent with a Balanced Level of Being or higher. That passage reminds me of >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cognitive_emotional_behavioral_therapy<. The basic idea of CEBT of that the ‘lower’ components of one’s whole being should be understood and governed by the ‘higher’ components of one’s whole being. Thus, intuition (Essence) rules intellect rules emotion rules behavior.

Carolyn: I have no Agreement to do anything for him?

In a sense, the Agreements made benefit both parties. In the long haul, this will be evident. Remember that the conflicts felt are the result of, first, the individual belief systems, which are part of the Mechanical Man, as well as some rather rigid master Tapes on the part of both students.

Carolyn: Will this recur if I allow it to?

If you allow it to, and if he persists hanging onto old patterns, yes. [15 January 1975]

Romantic relationships, because they are an attempt at intimacy and unification, are almost always made difficult by differing belief, value, and behavior systems. The solution is to graduate from being “Mechanical Man” to being “Balanced Man”; refer to the chapters by those names. Also refer to “Bio-Computer” for the story about ‘Tapes’, which are deeply-ingrained beliefs or values or behaviors.

Jean asked for a comment about the “psychic revolution” and the magazine’s role in it.

Well, you see, there are ten, approximately, alternative courses open to this world at this time — eight of which we would consider fairly unattractive. The other two concern what we are terming “psychic revolution”. This would, of course, be in fact the overthrow of the prevalent belief systems that now control the governing forces of this world, and would return leadership to those best qualified to lead on the basis of intuitive knowledge and what we call truth. Whether you like this or not, it is what is happening now, and it is what the [original Michaelian group] cadre has asked to become a part of. This revolution, like all other revolutions, would result in widespread anxiety and perhaps even an exchange of hostility. We can in no way guarantee that this will not happen, but it is far less “bloody” than the eight alternatives. They will burn witches again as they have in all ages past. We never told any of you that it would be a “rose garden”. [31 January 1975]

Each Soul Age has an accompanying belief system, value system, and behavior system. Allegedly, at this time in human history, the average Soul Age on the planet is in transition from Young Soul to Mature Soul. This is one of the biggest transitions in the Soul Age cycle, so that is why we see it being so disorienting and tumultuous.

Joan asked for help with her “blind spots” in order to work on herself.

In the first place, there are at least three blocks caused by traumatic events that the Personality is unable to assimilate, and it insulates itself against further recall. This might include acts of violence and betrayal. There are those blocks caused by pride in one’s own creations. These might include one’s children, paintings, compositions, etc. The third type of blocking occurs when imprinted belief systems, such as religion, are attacked from without. Surprisingly, the latter are most tenuous and require the most drastic work in order to detect them in oneself. [21 October 1977]

Refer to chapters “Violence”, “Imprinting”, and “Religion” for more discussion about those sources of belief systems.

Concluding Comments on Belief System

It is impossible for a sane person to not have a belief system, some more firmly held than others. In a relative sense, some belief systems are more appropriate for some people. In an absolute sense, some belief systems are better than others.

There is the belief system that a person adopts from external influences, such as family and church and school and culture. In the Michaelian teachings, this is called False Personality. But then there is the belief system that is inherent or inborn in the soul that incarnates and expressed through the brain, and in the Michaelian teachings this is called True Personality. Much of psychology and spirituality is aimed at making the transition from the False belief system to the True belief system. Many study papers in this book speak to this struggle. And not just belief system, but also value system and behavior system.

Personally, I remember vividly when the quasi-Christian belief system that I had been involved in was replaced by the belief system found in the book Seth Speaks, which I read on Saturday 12 July 2008, when I was 33.5 years old. The disorientation and reorientation was palpable as my belief system turned inside-out, top-for-bottom, end-for-end.

④ BIAS

This chapter is the product of a search for the word bias in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Issues of bias are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word bias is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that bias is a negative to be mitigated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one's psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Bias

Although we all know what the word means, it seems expedient for me to provide a formal definition.

Definition of bias:

a: an inclination of temperament or outlook, especially : a personal and sometimes unreasoned judgment : PREJUDICE

b: an instance of such prejudice

c: BENT, TENDENCY

d(1): deviation of the expected value of a statistical estimate from the quantity it estimates

d(2): systematic error introduced into sampling or testing by selecting or encouraging one outcome or answer over others

Synonyms: Noun

favor, nonobjectivity, one-sidedness, partiality, partisanship, ply, prejudice, tendentiousness
[><https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/bias>< — retrieved 11 June 2022]

Obviously, bias is something that we do not want in a spiritual teacher or in a spiritual teaching or in ourselves.

Bias per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Recall that before the Michaels appeared, the original Michaelian group was in contact with Tomas and Soleal. The first appearance of the word "bias" in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is found in the second session in which the Michaels were the teacher, and in that session Sarah Chambers was the channel. Some students might be surprised to learn that Sarah was not the only person to channel during the original Michaelian group. In the early sessions, different channels and different methods were used, but Sarah soon emerged as the main channel. Sarah at first preferred to work the Ouija board with her husband Richard, but soon was able to work the board alone. Besides Sarah, there was Lorraine and there was Carolyn. Gene used hypnosis to induce Carolyn into trance. Sarah was the channel for this answer:

[Please comment on] Carolyn.

Her bias is quite strong, and [it is] difficult [for us] to manifest [accurately]. [17 August 1973]

Regarding the words in brackets, it may seem that I am putting words in the Michaels' mouth, but as we will see in the next (and following quotations), the Michaels were more explicit, so I stand by my extrapolation. Carolyn almost never channeled the Michaels during the original Michaelian group, even though she continued as a regular attendee until at least 1975, when the large group was disbanded, and only a core group continued.

Gene, one of the founding members of the original Michaelian group, reported to us that he met a trance medium named Ruth Flagg during his first year of surgical residency (1966). She was a psychic who told him things that she could not possibly have known by non-psychic means, and this was such an astonishing experience for him that he became interested in metaphysical subjects. Gene's wife Susan was also interested in spirituality. This is the reason that they asked about Flagg in one of the earliest Michael sessions:

Susan: Does that mean the high Mental body [Infinite Soul] is expressing itself through Ruthie Flagg?

No.

Susan: Who is manifesting through Ruth Flagg?

A mid-Causal [Plane] teacher.

Gene: Is this material that I have then, from this mid-Causal teacher, of value?

That which is without Ruth's bias [is of value]. The manifestation can be partially or wholly blocked by a medium unwilling to apprehend certain facts. [27 September 1973]

That statement confirms my interpretation of the previous communication. One form of bias blocks information from even getting through. Other forms of bias distort the information that gets through:

Michaels: I would like to ask about the direction I am going and the Entities I have contacted.

This is Good Work for you if you do not attach too much bias of your own to the information. It would be helpful to work with another [Entity] as a 'safety valve'. Michaels, you have an exotic imagination, and this could throw you in 'hot water'. [01 November 1973]

The related metaphors of 'safety valve' and 'hot water' might have been especially meaningful to Michaels; maybe he was a plumber who had a painful experience.

It might be meaningful to you to refer to the chapter "Good Work, Bad Work" to gain an understanding of the Michaels' use of those phrases. One of the advantages of the Michaelian teachings (compared to other teachings that come through only one channel) is that we students can compare and contrast what various channels say, and thereby work to eliminate the bias of each channel. There is not much of that in this Study Papers book because Sarah was the channel for almost all of the original Michaelian group sessions, but there is a lot of it in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart.

Billie: Could Michael give me some names of my Fragments?

We are not unkeen about this. This sort of transmission frightens Sarah. [01 November 1973]

Obviously, the word "bias" is not used here, but a source of bias in channeling, namely fear, is mentioned.

Dick: I would like to ask about Sue's Role. I believe she once was said to be an Artisan, and last Tuesday it was said she was a Warrior.

Sue is a Warrior. The information was given correctly but transmission was coming through a great deal of bias. [22 November 1973]

Newbie Michaelian students quickly learn that getting accurate Overleaves on a person is notoriously difficult. If more than one channel is consulted, more often than not the results are different. Sometimes it takes years for a student to Validate their Overleaves after getting various sets of Overleaves — refer to the chapter “Validation and Verification” for more about that. Perhaps lack of bias is especially difficult if the channel knows the person, and the channel has formed an opinion of what that person’s Overleaves are, based on their own subjective perceptions. In Sue’s case, the only channel was Sarah, and yet she gave contradictory information. In her later years, Sarah acknowledged to others that in those early days, before knowledge of Casting was given, sometimes she was getting the Casting “Role-ish” rather than the Role. It is possible that Sue was what we modern Michaelian students refer to as an Artisan-Cast Warrior. It is notoriously difficult to objectively distinguish a person’s Casting from their Role.

Soleal’s advice is colored by his own personal bias, but still good. [29 November 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Soleal” for more information about this highly-evolved Adept from another planet (not on the Astral Plane or the Causal Plane) who was a student of the Michaels, and a source of the Michaelian teachings in the early days of the original Michaelian group, and who showed up occasionally over the next couple of years to pass on his “colored” but “good” information. If we assume that, unlike Soleal, the Michaels had no bias, they still had difficulty getting through the bias of whatever channels they used.

Susan: Comment on the value of her present work done at the A.R.E. clinic, especially their views of dream interpretation.

Some of the work being done there is extremely valuable. We are not impressed with what appears to be a doctrinal bias, but aside from that, yes.

Most readers will probably know that A.R.E. is Edgar Cayce’s “Association for Research and Enlightenment”, but if not, you may refer to www.edgarcayce.org/ for more enlightenment.. Two physicians interested in researching and applying the modalities of the Cayce readings had established the A.R.E. Clinic in Scottsdale, Arizona. Susan’s “work” there may have been her work on issues that took her there, in a standard 2-3 week stay at the Clinic, where clients participated in a structured program of Cayce-derived holistic modalities, one of which was focused on dream study. Susan continued to work with the A.R.E. at least into the early 1980s.

Gene: [Do you mean] religious bias?

Not specifically religious, more judgmental, but this pertains to the scientific method of research. The dream work is perhaps now their most valuable study. [29 November 1973]

So much of organized “religion” is about inculcating biases — dogmas and doctrines. True and valid religiosity should be about experiencing the transcendent, which is very freeing; refer to the chapter “Liberation”.

The “scientific method of research” can be biased if it limits or excludes other legitimate methods of research. Usually, the biased limitation of the scientific method is to do “objective” research of the outer universe, and its exclusion is of “subjective” research of the inner universe. My suggestion is that objective and subjective paths of inquiry ultimately lead to the same truth. Advancement in either direction is fostered by not having preconceived expectations, aka biases, of the outcome of the journey. One of the most common biases of the human condition is to not like surprises, because they are perceived as alarming, as potentially dangerous.

There are different types of bias, most of them having to do with personality factors. In my opinion, one of the most important components of one’s spiritual path should be the study of personality traits, because it will help the seeker to understand that their own perceptions are biased by their own personality, that their perspective is therefore not privileged, that therefore their view of the universe is not truly objective. I believe that the reason why the Michaels launched into their revelation of the Overleaf System shortly after their first appearance was because this is the first step toward the transcendence of the biases of personality. One can also use dream work to transcend the limits of one’s personality — refer to the chapter “Dreams and Dreaming”.

Jack: I would like to know how long the Ouija board has been used and what other forms of communication can be used.

We communicate in many ways with many people....

Jack: Okay, and how long has the Ouija been used and what other means of communication are possible?

We have communicated this way [Ouija board] for approximately one hundred years. We communicate directly with all those students who have mastered the skill of Astral [Plane] travel. We are willing to use hypnosis for induction of trances, but trans-mediums who can go into trances spontaneously are easier to work with. There are different kinds of mediums.

According to <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ouija>, the modern version of the “talking board” was 1890. The article noted that there are historical records of similar devices hundreds of years prior to that.

The best methods of channeling are those that bypass the biased conscious personality more effectively and efficiently. With the Ouija board, the personality is awake and aware and capable of interfering with the transmission, whereas with trance channeling that is not the case. There is even less bias from the personality when the soul is on the Astral Plane communicating with the Michaels on the Causal Plane.

Billie: Can Michael tell us where other groups are located and are working with them? Would it be worthwhile to contact other groups in contact with Michael?

Ellis: They won't give that to you. I don't think they will because it isn't necessary.

Ellis is right; we won't. Actually, yours is the only organized group void of sufficient bias for us to transmit to. There are other students, either in very small groups of two or three individuals, or single souls in search. [13 December 1973]

Apparently the Michaels were on the lookout, from the late 1900s onward, for a group of seekers of a type and caliber that could faithfully receive their messages. There was a surge in so-called “spiritualism” (contact with the spirit world via seances) at that time; refer to <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritualism> to read about the history of that phenomenon.

More was said about the reasons that the Michaels' selected the original Michaelian group in a later session: it was because of the presence of older souls, who tend to not be as opinionated as younger souls:

Richard: Is “False Personality” and “Maya” the same?

He [Tomas] is challenged by the glamour of the diversified belief systems, and is only able to differentiate because of higher teachers [than him] who are available. We do not prevent the dissemination of valid information from the Astral Plane [where Tomas was], but this is monitored carefully, and attempts are made to invalidate false data. Sometimes this is not possible, primarily because of the rigid belief systems of the medium [channel] involved. This is why we always attempt to work with Older [Soul] mediums. Their convictions tend to float more easily, and it is possible to sneak past their bias. [20 December 1973]

Refer to the chapters on “Personality — True and False” and “Maya”. These are two of the personality factors that lessen as the soul matures over the course of many incarnations, making it easier for denizens of the higher planes to communicate accurately, with a Causal Plane source being even better than an Astral Plane source.

Richard: I had a strong Soleal presence feeling this afternoon and would like a comment.

It is partially valid. You were not sufficiently relaxed to destroy your own bias. You were quite angry this evening. We suggest that you try to discover the source of this anger. The source [cause of an anger] can be deceptive and, of course, this teaching is moving toward the understanding of these hostile emanations. [03 January 1974]

So, bias is not just a product of erroneous intellectual opinions; emotions are also factors in to bias, especially negative emotions such as anger. Note that it is impossible to feel emotions (positive or negative) when the physical body is completely relaxed — try it next time you get pissed. Entering a trance state for the purpose of channeling involves relaxation of the body and a dismissal of the emotions, as well as a quieting of the mind.

Dick: Robert [Burton] said that [his teacher] Alex's [Horn] teacher was Lord Pentland, and that he was a “C” influence teacher. Could we have a comment?

He [Lord Pentland] was a student of Rodney (Collin). The Englishman (Pentland) did have [“C” = Cosmic] contact, but the psychic energies [of Alex Horn] were low, and there was much bias. [20 January 1974]

Collin was a student of Ouspensky; refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton” for the history of successive students of the Gurdjieffian teachings, which included Alex Horn and Henry Sinclair, aka Lord Pentland. Refer the chapter “Influences: A, B, C” for more information about the characteristics and qualities of various teachers. There you will see that according to Gurdjieff, “C” influence, aka “Cosmic” influence, is the highest and best. According to https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Alex_Horn, Alex turned out to have questionable ethics, so it is understandable that the Michaels would characterize his work as low quality. The point to be made here, and with other statements about bias, is that not only the quality of the channel but the quality of the source is important.

It seems that even Jesus, a Seventh Level Old King before the manifestation of the Infinite Soul, was not immune to bias in his teaching, due to some adverse childhood circumstances:

I would like to hear something about the teachings of Jesus in relation to divorce. He was always so harsh.

The question of divorce is a tragic one only in your culture, as relatively little thought is given to the suitability of the pair-bonding initially. Assigning all of this to "Providence" is nonsense. We are surprised only that more pair-bonds contracted in this haphazard manner do not dissolve. Jesus was cognizant of this. There was some personal bias here that came out in this man [Jesus], as the marriage between his mother and father was dotted with interference from his mother's family. His father's only recourse was to threaten regularly divorce when he could no longer stand the pressure exerted by an obnoxious brother-in-law. Jesus grew up with this hanging over his head. [20 January 1974]

(The Biblical reference that elicited that question is as follows:

Some Pharisees came to him to test him. They asked, "Is it lawful for a man to divorce his wife for any and every reason?" "Haven't you read," he replied, "that at the beginning the Creator 'made them male and female,' and said, 'For this reason a man will leave his father and mother and be united to his wife, and the two will become one flesh'? So they are no longer two, but one flesh. Therefore what God has joined together, let no one separate." "Why then," they asked, "did Moses command that a man give his wife a certificate of divorce and send her away?" Jesus replied, "Moses permitted you to divorce your wives because your hearts were hard. But it was not this way from the beginning. I tell you that anyone who divorces his wife, except for sexual immorality, and marries another woman commits adultery." The disciples said to him, "If this is the situation between a husband and wife, it is better not to marry." Jesus replied, "Not everyone can accept this word, but only those to whom it has been given. [Matthew 19:3-11, NIV]

My understanding of this Biblical passage is that the Tao Casts kindred souls with polarities, and the problem with the majority of marriages is that the people involved do not marry one of their kindred souls — their "soul mates" — so the marriages end up in divorce. Refer to the chapter "Psychic Union". Also refer to the chapter "Romantic Relationships" and there you will find that the Michaels were okay with "open" relationships (polyamory, polyfidelity) among spiritually-mature kindred souls.)

Refer to the chapter "Jesus – Christ – Christianity" for the complete review of what the Michaels had to say about Jesus during the original Michaelian group. The point to be emphasized here is that some of our biases are produced by adverse or unusual circumstances that affect us during our entire lives, in addition to the biases given to us by inborn personality traits. We see this phenomenon mentioned again in the next appearance of the word "bias"; in this case it was about the alleged author of the Gospel of Matthew:

Comment: Matthew seemed the most judgmental and bitter [of the Gospel authors].

The concept of bitterness in Matthew is valid. He had an ax to grind and, although he tried desperately to purge his bias, it did spill out at times. He was cruelly treated in the country of his birth. [20 January 1974]

Matthew was one of Jesus's twelve apostles, and that Gospel book was attributed to him about a hundred years after Matthew's and Jesus's time, but many modern scholars reject the notion that Matthew was the actual author: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Matthew_the_Apostle<. The Michaels did not dispute the connection of Matthew to that Gospel book, and whatever the truth about authorship may be, that does not negate the notion that adversity creates a biased person. So, how idyllic was your childhood?

Barbara: I get some different information from Betty Bethards. What is the reason?

The differences must be attributed to the individual mediums, in ability to reconcile certain bits of information and successful blocking. Your method of confirming and verifying should successfully overcome what little bias exists here. [22 January 1974]

Here again the Michaels enjoin their students to Validate channeling by whatever means and methods they have available. You may read about Betty Bethards at ><http://www.bettybethards.com/>< and also at >www.innerlight.org<. In 1969 she founded the Inner Light Foundation in Petaluma, CA, and she died in 2002.

Some members of the original Michaelian group entertained the notion that they could become channels:

Would Jim be a good trance medium?

Jim has now tight control, and would have to learn to relinquish this before it would work. Cheryl would be easier, yes. Cynthia has sufficient energy, but it is true there is difficulty involved in transcending a Plane, and the attentions of the group must be directed toward the manifestation. There is an infinite supply (of energy), which she may draw upon. Tight control would act as inhibition; also the Acceptance Goal [her Goal]. The only difference is in the amount of bias that must be fought in order for us to manifest with complete control. We would not attempt to manifest through a Baby Soul. We do not see that much bias in you, Cheryl. You are a bit unique right now. You have most of the perceptions of the Mature Soul and all of the potential [even though you are a Young Soul]. [18 February 1974]

Jim and Cynthia were Mature Souls; Cheryl was a Young Soul. As noted previously, the Michaels prefer Old Souls as their channels because their biases tend to be weaker than in younger souls, but the Michaels were willing to work with younger souls, if they were able to transcend their biases.

Michael channels (and other channels) have typically been women, apparently because they usually are more able to yield or surrender any need to control than men are. The men who are Michael channels usually tend to femininity, even if they are not actual homosexuals. It is not just a cultural thing that femininity is commonly associated with passivity; it is a bias that is built into the gender, generally speaking.

Richard: Is bias [the same as] Tape Loops?

A major part of it, yes. Some [biases] are, of course, original [not imprinted].

Comment: When there is bias through the Ouija board, there is distorted information due to thought patterns of the one operating the board.

The bias is most easily defined as the absolute limit of the individual's belief system.

Richard: Some have a stronger rubber band than others and can stretch more.

Also, the rubber can stretch more easily in one direction than the other. [03 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Bio-Computer: Its Programs and Tapes" for the discussion about Tape Loops. Briefly, that is a name for irrational and inappropriate maladaptive behavior, usually resulting from adverse personal experience. A Tape Loop restricts behavior to a predefined pattern, whereas the opposite condition is an open mind that has been exposed to diverse ideas and is able to entertain them without the interference of personal predispositions. At the time of this writing (2022) there is a lot of angst in the zeitgeist about the apparent fact that so many people are sequestered in "information bubbles", in tribalism, in factionalism. This Balkanization does not foster the needed breakthroughs into more eudaptive belief systems, value systems, and behavior systems. Obviously, the Michaels are able to work with open minds more easily than they are able to work with closed minds.

The following two extracts from the original Michaelian group transcriptions are about the greater potential for bias when one channels about themselves.

Eugene: Am I Emotional or Moving Centered? The [Ouija] board at home said I was in Emotional Center and I see Michael has said I was in Moving Center.

This is your bias [belief that you are Emotionally Centered], Eugene. This is also due in part to the fact that when you are using the Ouija [board], you go into Emotional Center. [06 March 1974]

Refer to chapters on Centers and Overleaves. It is appropriate to shift into a Center that is appropriate for the immediate situation or circumstance one is involved in. The least biased Center is the Instinctive Center because it is Neutral, neither Ordinal nor Cardinal. If a channel can quiet the other Centers and get into that Center, there will be less blocking and distorting of the flow of information.

Sarah: I'd like to ask if I was Aristotle or Ptolemy but I need someone else to act as medium. I do not trust my own answers as bias may come through. [06 March 1974]

We do not know if the answer to Sarah's question was ever answered through another channel. In the history of the Michaelian teachings, it is acknowledged that the greatest potential for a biased answer exists when a channel is channeling something about themselves.

According to the Michaels, Sarah had good reason to not trust her own channeling, including that about other people, not just herself:

How much of the transmission is altered by Sarah?

Substantially, where guests are concerned. Much is blocked, but what does come through with old students is unvarnished.

Eugene: Would Michael comment on the session I had Monday night with a medium?

The only comment we would make at this time is that the emotional bias differs greatly from intellectual bias. Different processes [are] at work here and, therefore, the alterations will be at variance. [22 May 1974]

In the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings it has been stressed that one learn to respond to the immediate situation from the appropriate Center for that situation. Otherwise, things get all “altered”, aka distorted, biased.

We have seen it above, and we see it here, that some original Michaelian group members consulted channels other than those within the original Michaelian group:

Question: “Life reading” by a friend. [Is it] valid?

Mostly valid.

What isn't?

We find no great fault with this man. He is a trance medium and he does surrender well in trances.

Bias comes from lack of surrender (giving up) of the biases of the channel.

Louise: Information from Evelyn valid?

Not all, but some. Some comes through considerable bias.

Personally, I have never been one to run to a psychic of any sort to get answers to whatever question was bugging me at the time, preferring to tune into my own “internal guidance system” and/or let the “universe” work it out. Maybe this is just me, a typical guy who does not like to “ask for directions”, but then again, in the long run, the onus of Validation is on me for my stuff and you for your stuff, not on what some channel may or may not say.

Delia: Is the Fischer-Hoffman school valid?

This school is as valid as the other Astral physical schools. It must cut through the bias of Arrogance, but is essentially valid. The man will do no harm if he continues to Photograph his vanity. He has been [Photographing], yes, but when a physical teacher begins to regard himself and his Astral counterpart as omnipotent, trouble begins in a snowballing fashion. This does not need to happen. [03 July 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Photography” and “Self-observation” for the essays on one type of procedure that will decrease one’s own biases. Inappropriate Centering was mentioned above, and so was immaturity in Soul Age, but among the seven Overleaf categories, the Chief Features are especially egregious in their tendency to bias a person’s perceptions.

Leslie: From where is Seth speaking?

This Entity speaks from the Causal Plane. The bias through which he is speaking lessens now. (The medium’s bias is lessening.) [Parentheses in original.] [15 October 1974]

One would hope and expect that a channel would get better in terms of less bias as the years go by. This notion applies to the Michaels and their teaching as well:

Ralph: I have the impression that within our group, the articulation of the teachings emphasizes the static, the intellectual, and the hierarchical. Is this primarily a distortion arising from my biases or the group’s or the languages? Or is this an accurate transmission of the teachings? Please comment.

In the beginning of this group, the primary concern was in the development of the belief system in the language necessary to explain it to each other and to oneself. This is a necessary step in the formation of any group, but in most, becomes a barrier toward further growth, and eventually becomes the belief system itself. In this group, there has been evolution of a sort that now points toward continuance in growth. The possibility still exists, however, that you will continue to concern yourselves with the intellectual hierarchical aspects and neglect the spiritual, yes, but you do not have to. You can put this belief system to the acid test and see if it works. Until you do this, yes, you are still trapped in the beginning stages. This is where most of the other belief systems remained throughout their existence, including the world’s great religions. The concern remained hierarchical and primarily intellectual and never got off the ground spiritually. You are right, of course, you are trading one belief system for another; but there is a unity here that has not been before, and there is a trend toward integration that you are capable of verifying implicit within the system. [19 October 1974]

So, the Michaels say that their own revelation is evolving to become less biased ... because it must happen that way. It is necessary for the teaching to start out biased in order to accommodate the level of spiritual development of their newbie students, but as the level of understanding of the students rises, so does the quality of the revelation, with less distortion and more balance and more thoroughness.

Regarding the “world’s great religions”, typically there has been the “intellectual hierarchical” mainstream exoteric institution with its dogmas and doctrines suitable for the less-advanced souls, and then there has been the spiritual mystical esoteric branch, of the same nominal religion but with a revelation suitable for the more-advanced souls. This phenomenon was recognized in the Bible, using the metaphor of the weaning of infants off of milk and onto meat:

And I, brethren, could not speak unto you as unto spiritual, but as unto carnal, even as unto babes in Christ. I have fed you with milk, and not with meat: for hitherto ye were not able to bear it, neither yet now are ye able. For ye are yet carnal: for whereas there is among you envying, and strife, and divisions, are ye not carnal, and walk as men? [1 Corinthians 3:1-3 (KJV)]

For when for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye have need that one teach you again which be the first principles of the oracles of God; and are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. [Hebrews 5:12 (KJV)]

We might do Good Work to ask ourselves where we are in the weaning process.

The subject of bias in the Michaelian teachings came up again a month later. As usual, it is repeated that it is up to us as students to validate and verify the channeling, because bias is almost inevitable:

Carolyn asked if the interstellar travelers on the Causal Plane are teachers. Information that seems discrepant could be biased because of the medium involved.

... yes, there are many Entities on this [Causal] plane who are working with groups and with single souls, on this and many near worlds. You are not unique in this and you are quite right, the individual bias through which we come [via human mediums] does distort the words somewhat, in some cases, beyond verification. We choose [channels] on the basis of desire and ability to serve as a transmitter. This does not always prove successful, and the only positive feature arising from this is that the resulting distortions are readily discerned and discarded. Those who perpetrate them are quite quickly branded as “crackpots” and forgotten. Those who make the most unbiased transmitter-receivers are those with the most Neutral Overleaves. Unfortunately, these are also the ones who normally resist their intuition the longest and sometimes never span the chasm. [20 November 1974]

As it says above, the least biased Overleaves are the Neutral Traits: Fourth Level Mature Scholar in the Observation Mode with a Goal of Stagnation, a Pragmatist in the Instinctive Center with a Chief Feature of Stubbornness. If such a person exists, they would be incredibly bland, but they would also be “fair and balanced”, you know, like the news reports are supposed to be, and like Joe Friday enjoined the witness: “just the facts, mam”. (><https://www.snopes.com/fact-check/just-the-facts/><)

Eugene asked a question about a book he is reading, written in 1860. He asked about the book's reference to Atlantis.

The information contained in this volume is for the most part a fairly good description of the civilization of which you were a part, embellished by time and the medium's bias, but still fairly good. This was an advanced civilization that would have had interplanetary space travel within fifty years of the time it was destroyed. The source [channel] at that time was Astral, many Fragments [of] which have been since reincarnated. Of those who were Mature Souls at the time of the destruction of Atlantis, many have waited these many centuries for a similar time frame in which to experience out their physical lives. The same is true for all who were Older Souls at that time. Most of you were Baby and very early Young Souls at the time, and it was necessary for you to experience some of the interim. [30 January 1975]

One of my personal biases is to not take channeling about Atlantis credulously, precisely because of the difficulty of Validating it with means and methods of my preference. Just because two or more channels say the same thing, to me that is not the type of Validation that rings true for me. In my personal belief system, I tend to sort stuff into three categories: probably true, probably not true, and undecided. ‘Your mileage may vary.’

Sarah felt she had blocked on this information. Much discussion was held about the Role being wrong. Why was the word “child” used?

This selection of the word was the bias of the medium. It does not matter to us. The Goal of Dominance [which Sarah had] will often display the confusion in the Role of Slave. The Mode [Observation, which Sarah had] will at times border on Stubbornness and Power, yes. The Mode [of Observation] will not block, but rather clarify [in the Positive Pole of +Clarity] the Role and Goal, as this child manifests. You, Sarah, are correct in the feelings of blocking, and this is the one area we hope to work on. He is a Third Level Mature Slave. We would not argue. [30 January 1975]

This is just another reminder that the reason the Michaels gave their students the Overleaf System is so that they could Photograph themselves and thereby mitigate the biases provided by their default Traits.

When the Infinite Soul manifested through the man Jesus, the sum of the Logos was brought to bear. In the stories about this Master and his system, however, there is much emotional bias, occult nonsense and romantic embellishment. [Dimensions! June 1975]

So, even if there is no bias in the teacher, their teaching gets distorted by their students, who are not functioning at the same level of development as their teacher. Therefore, caveat emptor, “buyer beware”, “do your own research”, “the unexamined teaching is not worth believing”.

That is a good note on which to end this chapter.

⑤ BIO-COMPUTER: ITS PROGRAMS AND TAPES

If you have not read the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, you would wonder what in the world bio-computer, programs, and tapes have to do with the Michaelian teachings. There are mentions in some of the transcriptions that some of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions were tape recorded, but that is not the subject of this chapter. Rather, the situation under review here is that the mainframe computers of the 1970s were programmed with punch cards and used tape reels for data storage, and this provided a metaphor for the psychological phenomenon where subconscious memories stored in the human brain influence the conscious Personality in ways that counter or thwart the manifestation of Essence.

So far as we can discern from the transcriptions, the original Michaelian group members, and the Michaels, borrowed the metaphor from a contemporary person, a prominent psychologist named John Lilly, who used the words “bio-computer, programs, tapes” in conjunction with the metaphor of the human psyche as functioning somewhat like a computer. This metaphor was not carried forward into subsequent Michaelian teachings lore because it was not perpetuated by Yarbrow in her books [verify], or by Briggs in her groups [verify], or by the Bay Area channels [verify]. Even though the metaphor did not survive the demise of the original Michaelian group, the analogy is still valid and useful for subsequent Michaelian students, in my opinion, so that is why I compiled the relevant quotations and wrote this chapter.

The words Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes are capitalized in this chapter and other chapters of this Study Papers book because they have a special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; they are therefore Michaelian jargon words that need a definition apart from their use in the common vernacular.

Before we find out what the Michaels had to say on the subject, let’s set the stage with some background documentation on John Lilly and his ideas

Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes per Lilly

Not everyone will be familiar with John Lilly and his work, so let’s first have a brief biography, and then an introduction to his theory about the human biocomputer.

John Cunningham Lilly (January 6, 1915 – September 30, 2001) was an American physician, neuroscientist, psychoanalyst, psychonaut, philosopher, writer, and inventor. He was a member of a generation of counterculture scientists and thinkers that included Ram Dass, Werner Erhard, and Timothy Leary, all frequent visitors to the Lilly home. He often stirred controversy, especially among mainstream scientists.

Lilly conducted high-altitude research during World War II and later trained as a psychoanalyst. He gained renown in the 1950s after developing the isolation tank. He saw the tanks, in which users are isolated from almost all external stimuli, as a means to explore the nature of human consciousness. He later combined that work with his efforts to communicate with dolphins. He began studying how bottlenose dolphins vocalize, establishing centers in the U.S. Virgin Islands, and later San Francisco, to study dolphins. A decade later, he began experimenting with psychedelics, including LSD, often while floating in isolation. His work inspired two Hollywood movies, The Day of the Dolphin (1973) and Altered States (1980).

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/John_C._Lilly< — retrieved 23 June 2021]

Werner Erhard also had an influence on members of the original Michaelian group; refer to the chapter named “EST”. Both Lilly’s isolation tank (23 June 1974) and Lilly’s communication with dolphins are mentioned in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. It was Lilly’s involvement with dolphins that led to the revelation by the Michaels that cetaceans were sentient in the same way that humans are sentient; refer to the chapter “Cetaceans”.

The blurb on the Amazon website that offers Lilly’s book Programming the Human Biocomputer is as follows:

The parallels between the human brain and computers is easy to see today. But in the 1950’s when John Lilly developed his theory of the human biocomputer, this was a dramatic new way of viewing humans. Much like a driver can step out of the car, we are not our biocomputer. The Self is something far greater and more mysterious. Rooted in his extensive knowledge of neurophysiology, neuroanatomy and electronics and developed through personal experimentation in the sensory isolation tank which he invented, Lilly presents a method for learning to manipulate — to drive the bio-robot, which is our vehicle here on Earth. This manual shows how to step out of the mind-body and find out who we really are.

[><https://www.amazon.com/Programming-Human-Biocomputer-John-Lilly/dp/1579510655>< — retrieved 23 June 2021]

The blurb on the Amazon website that sells Lilly's book Center of the Cyclone is as follows:

In this long-out-of-print counterculture classic, Dr. John C. Lilly takes readers behind the scenes into the inner life of a scientist exploring inner space, or "far-out spaces", as Lilly called them. The book explains how he derived his theory of the operations of the human mind and brain from his personal experiences and experiments in solitude, isolation, and confinement; LSD; and other methods of mystical experience. It also includes glimpses into Lilly's friendship with such 1960's notables as Oscar Ichazo, Ram Dass, Timothy Leary, Albert Hofmann, Fritz Perls, and Claudio Naranjo. Written for the non-specialist, Center of the Cyclone shows an important, modern thinker at his most personal and profound. [<https://www.amazon.com/Center-Cyclone-Looking-Inner-Space/dp/1579510388>< — retrieved 23 June 2021]

To summarize: "Tapes" are subconscious memories, usually negative, that get "recorded" during some life situation, often childhood, and then "played" in another later situation, usually as an inappropriate response or reaction to the current situation. This is a well-known concept in psychology and spirituality.

The subconscious mind ... is like a tape player — it just goes on playing the same old tapes we learned in early childhood. Those tapes are the messages we picked up mostly from our parents, or from anyone else who was very influential for the first six years of our lives. Most of the tapes run along the lines of, 'You are not good enough,' 'You don't deserve,' 'Other people are better than you,' 'You are not acceptable or respectable as you are, you have to be better.' Whether these messages were given to us directly or indirectly, they are what we picked up from the way we were treated, and those messages went into our innocent unconscious minds where they became truths. And then the tape player started re-playing those messages any time we were in similar situations, and we acted accordingly. In other words, we started living in a vicious cycle where we went on proving those negative ideas about us were true, thus making them even stronger. And it still happens today! We still continue to sabotage our attempts at happiness, success, love, etc. Just we are not aware that we are doing it ourselves, because it is, well... unconscious. [><http://www.oshonews.com/2011/09/law-of-attraction/>< — retrieved 13 July 2021]

A Michaelian student will recognize the similarity of the above statement to the descriptions of acculturation, socialization, and False Personality.

Both of Lilly's books Programming and Metaprogramming in the Human Biocomputer and The Center of the Cyclone, were available when the original Michaelian group was meeting.

Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes in the Original Michaelian Group

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

This section is the product of a search for the words "bio-computer", "program", and "tapes" in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. These words are a metaphor for features of the electronic computers that had been coming into increasingly common use ever since World War II, and are still on the ascendant even today. Underlined words and phrases in the following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are my emphasis.

Evidently the computer-tape metaphor for a psychological phenomenon was known to some of the original Michaelian group members from the very beginning of the meetings:

[Richard:] I've been told that I have some obstacles toward spiritual growth — some "bad Tapes", so to speak — that are keeping me from progressing. Can you tell me about them?

Anxiety over others' impressions of your actions, obsessions with systems and procedures, worry about what is right, the fear that you will not be somehow the good little boy. [But the reality is:] Your halo can be tarnished, and many will still love you. [mid-1973]

This answer is a good introduction to the kind of things that are subconsciously recorded on bad Tapes, and played to the conscious Personality: anxiety, obsession, worry, and fear.

Richard: I am trying to work on my bad Tapes and get rid of them, and I have a strong feeling when these impulses are coming in on the board and we're going over certain words, I get a different register than I get when we're going over other words, and I seem to correlate the one group of words with the bad Tapes. Are you helping me work on the bad Tapes in that way?

[Soleal:] Not to my knowledge. You may be picking up on core words that have special meaning to you. If this can be of help to you, if you can be conscious to it. Whenever you ask a question, there is much hesitation because you have so many auxiliary readings going. To separate, Richard, is as I told you already, your major part of Friction. [03 July 1973]

The "hesitation because of many auxiliary readings" mentioned here is probably from what later came to be called "inputs", which were described as channels of focus and processing. The Artisan (Richard was an Artisan) is said to have five, more than any other Role. Artisans seem "scattered" to the point of often being disconnected from self and from reality. Therefore, one of the primary challenges for an Artisan is to collect themselves into a coherent, unified being. Bad Tapes provide a similar disconnect in a person. Hesitation can happen when there is conflict between a subconscious Tape and the super-conscious Essence. Richard was also in the Caution Mode, which makes a person hesitant.

Richard: Some time ago, Soleal suggested that I get a hypnotist to help me work off some bad "Tapes" and I am having difficulty doing this. I wonder if I could have a comment on this? Should I continue to look for someone or what should I do?

When you really wish this to happen, the hypnotist will be available. Eugene is capable; Dick, also. [26 August 1973]

Psychotherapy to mitigate Tapes, via hypnotism or any other method, is a useful prerequisite, perhaps even a necessary one, for successfully treading the spiritual path.

Christopher: [silent question.]

It would be Wrong Work for you to even try. Much wasted energy. You cannot change anything outside of self and you are not in contact with self.

Karma is subject to change, but only by those who know. Any attempt without knowledge will be wasted. You have chosen this role. You have also chosen the course your life must take. Unless you know why, then you cannot make alterations. I could tell you why, but it would not change the role. We cannot erase your Tapes. [08 September 1973]

This passage apparently refers to self-Karma ("you have chosen this role; you have also chosen the course your life must take") rather than other-Karma. A soul is said to have plans for a lifetime, and that would seem to include the Tapes that it is likely to acquire during childhood, which the Personality self might not be equipped to change. This entire chapter on Tapes should be understood in the light of this caveat: you had better understand the implications and ramifications before you attempt to change the 'program' (see below): if the program is from the Essence, do not interfere; if the program is from Personality, you may attempt to erase the Tapes.

Dick: They [Michael] have never told us about war.

Christopher: It's karmically programmed to happen.

It happens because Young Souls are in the majority on your world. They are largely motivated by the desire for material achievement. This is an alienating goal. [08 September 1973]

Refer to the chapter on Karma to see what the relationship of Karma to programming may be: Karmic compulsions (via the Soul) are not the same thing as Tape compulsions (via the environment), but it might be difficult for an unintuitive or unenlightened person to discern the difference.

Ellis: I had a blissful childhood, with love and enjoyment. Was I aware of my Role then?

Children, before they are thoroughly programmed for their societal role, usually operate from Essence and know their Roles. The Role the child first voices as a desire usually comes from Essence. After that, from False Personality, based on expectations of those around the child. To return to this state is, of course, a major part of the goal. Until you do, you cannot shake the enthrallment of the physical, material plane. The child, especially the young child, often sees beyond the veil. This is quickly squashed. The happy childhood is mostly a myth. In your case, it was a bona fide ["good faith" = genuine, valid] experience and your desire to return there is Good Work. [23 October 1973]

This answer is one of the best summaries of the metaphor of programming the bio-computer and storing the data on tapes during childhood, to be played repeatedly into adulthood. The comparison of programming is made to False Personality, and the contrast is made to Role and Essence.

Someone helpful: It serves a useful purpose and also Buffers the Essence.

False Personality is only a part of this. The total False Personality includes, of course, all of the "shoulds" that you learned in childhood, the various machinations you go through as a result of your Goals and those reactions that are solely the result of the Tape Loops provided by the Attitude. [24 February 1974]

Add the three underlined words to the list of Bad Tapes to those words given above. At the time this answer was given, the Negative Poles of the Overleaves had not been revealed. However, I propose that a Tape (and also False Personality in general) reveals itself in the Negative Poles of all Overleaves, not just the Goals and Attitudes mentioned here. This is the first, but not the last, mention of "Loops", which refers to the fact that Tapes can play the same song over and over.

Dick: Things I cannot deal with are subconscious — say a guilt feeling. I have no idea where its source is. The thing that triggers the guilt feeling does not seem bad. Ordinarily, morality is B.S. In all cases, the guilt emotions are from lower Centers, as the higher Centers are not operating.

Anger is another reaction that is self-programmed by Personality as a barrier.

Eugene: The body throws up a shield to keep Essence from coming through. First, we have to start by seeing our Chief Feature.

We discussed phobias such as fears of staircases, cats, heights, and wondered if they could be carryovers from past lives. Someone added that we should not resist evil, that we should face the fear and experience it out. The little evils are barriers to experiencing life.

Most computer programmers study hard to learn their trade. It takes you many years to program the bio-computer thoroughly. [27 February 1974]

The ambiguity of this statement (not all of the programmers of the bio-computer are listed) led to the next question.

Alice: Are they [Overleaves] chosen on the basis of Karma?

First of all, the locale, the socioeconomic status, the parents you chose — all are formative in programming the bio-computer. These Overleaves are chosen by the soul to be acted out in life, independent — most of the time — of the wishes of the Essence. The soul chose them to complete the specific task. The soul desires simplicity and freedom, making a split between soul and Essence. [27 February 1974]

My understanding is that the Fragment, which lives on the Astral Plane, "casts" a part of itself as a "soul" on the Etheric levels of the Physical Plane. The soul or so-called "Etheric Body" is complete with Overleaves and other plans and configurations for the lifetime as part of programming the bio-computer at the time of ensoulment of the physical body. This soul programming is obviously at a deeper level of the person than the programming that happens after birth, and one needs to be very careful about messing with that level of the programming, as stated above.

How much does the Attitude determine where one is Trapped?

Very much. Most of the imprinting of early childhood is very effectively converted into Tape Loops. [03 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter named Liberation for a discussion of Traps. The Attitude provides the lens through which one views the outer world, and imprinting comes from the outer world, so imprinting distorts the lens, the Attitude; thereby a Tape Loop Traps a person in the Negative Poles, in the False Personality. These various Michaelian jargon words are all related, and they all have chapters in this Study Papers book.

The Q&A exchange above was followed immediately by the Q&A exchange below.

Richard: Is bias [the same as] Tape Loops?

A major part of it, yes. Some [biases] are, of course, original [not imprinted]. [03 March 1974]

Tapes provide some of a person's biased perceptions and perspectives, but not all of them.

Ray: I'd like a comment from Michael on how best to learn or deal with Impatience.

The best way to counteract the Chief Feature of Impatience is to deliberately expose yourself to exasperating situations and then Photograph the feelings around the Impatience. Usually, you will find that the reaction is habit rather than emotion and amounts to a Tape Loop. [06 March 1974]

Original Michaelian group members progressively explored how the metaphor of Tapes relates to the Overleaves. The Goal and Attitude are documented above, and here the Chief Feature is mentioned. Habitual reactions come from the subconscious programming of a Tape; the goal of a psycho-therapeutic technique, such as Photography, is to have appropriate conscious responses to exasperating situations. The chapter on Photography makes clear that it is the Essence that decides what to do with its observations, but the next Q&A exchange also has somewhat to say.

The metaphor of 'programming' covers both spiritual and physical 'Tapes'. In the spiritual realm the Fragment programs the Soul which programs the body as discussed above; in the physical realm the environment forms the Tapes as discussed below.

Dick: I hear the teaching and hear the hostility. It's unchangeable sexually — that's where I am. The program is so programmed. It cuts me out of making the skip to Transcendental Soul. Agape is impossible in people with sex problems. It is impossible in people with emotional hang-ups of any sort, whether it be sex or fear of cats or the dark. [19 March 1974]

The biological imperative to reproduce the species is obviously a very strong program, and if that program is unhealthy, it can indeed impair spiritual growth.

Apparently some of the members of the original Michaelian group were familiar with this metaphor from the very beginning of the original Michaelian group. Lilly's book was published in the calendar year 1972, one year before the original Michaelian group first convened in mid-1973. The first mention of the concept was in one of the first session transcriptions as noted above, but the source was not explained there. The first mention of the source of the concept did not appear until about a year later:

Is John Lilly correct about LSD unprogramming [the] Personality?

It can, if you transfer the knowledge gained [in the altered state] to the waking state. Yes, it is difficult because you are immediately bombarded with Maya [after return from the LSD]. [16 June 1974]

This same book was mentioned in a subsequent session:

Dick: I've been reading John Lilly's [book], [Programming] The Human Biocomputer and would like to ask about his method using isolation. It looks scary. An alternative would be the "hypnosis machine", which would be less hazardous.

The "isolation" referred to in this question is probably the sensory deprivation tank mentioned in the brief bio above. The "hypnosis machine" referred to in this question is probably the "hemi-sync" audio device of Robert Monroe, which some members were experimenting with; refer to the chapter on that man. A third alternative for achieving altered states of consciousness is the use of psychedelics, mentioned above and in the answer below:

Of course, the chemical [psychedelic] route is much swifter than the electronic [audio], but since you have the option, you might try the hypnosis first and if this is too slow for you, then go to the other. We personally think that the man John Lilly hit upon the only sure method by which souls in Repression [such as yourself] can force themselves out of that space. Then, even though they might slip back again, the slipping is not as far and it is no longer as difficult to regain the ground lost so, as we said before, the man John hears the words.

Dick: In the book, he describes a person who had a below-conscious baby Tape running where he would run to mommy and mommy was busy and he was told to run to daddy, and when he would do that, daddy was busy, so back to mommy who.... Under LSD, this came out in consciousness and he became aware of it. He had much energy after that, but then began to sink into unconsciousness after six weeks or so. The programs are so intense that it is hard to remain unprogrammed.

In many instances, the soul deliberately chooses not to erase the Tape and merely deactivates temporarily. After all, many of these [Tape] loops afford enormous security in relationships and one never knows when one might need them again.

As you may know, computers in those days were the size of refrigerators, used reel-to-reel tapes for memory storage, and were programmed with punch cards; hence the metaphor that Lilly used to describe how humans get 'programmed' in childhood, and the subconscious memories get played over and over again in 'loops'.

Dick: It seems to me that John Lilly's book is a better exposition of how human beings operate than I've ever read before.

We agree with that. [23 June 1974]

Various therapies from then to now, especially the body-centered kind, are aimed at unprogramming the adverse pre-conscious memories stored in the organism before the conscious mind of the child was developed enough to defend itself.

Dick: I would like to ask about the pineal [endocrine] gland. I never quite believed the stories about the Third Eye in relation to the pineal. To me, the hypothalamus [endocrine gland] is the link between the mind and the body for the biocomputer.

This is, of course, a tremendous source of raw primitive energy that enables the organism to preserve itself. We agree that it [pineal gland] should be given more credence than it has been as an important pivot in the struggle between Personality and Essence. [07 July 1974]

If I understand the answer correctly, the hypothalamus is a link between mind and body as Dick said, and the pineal is a link between Personality and Essence as the Michaels' said. (For those few readers who might not know this: both endocrine glands are brain structures.)

In many instances, the soul deliberately chooses not to erase the Tape and merely deactivates temporarily. After all, many of these Loops afford enormous security in relationships and one never knows when one might need them again. [23 June 1974]

As you may know, computers in those days were the size of refrigerators, used reel-to-reel tapes for memory storage, and were programmed with punch cards; hence the metaphor that Lilly used to describe how humans get 'programmed' in childhood, and the subconscious memories get 'played' over and over again in 'loops' in adulthood. Apparently, the soul or Essence chooses, for reasons of its own, which battles to fight with Tapes specifically and False Personality in general. Refer to a following section on Programs for more instances of that word in the original Michaelian group transcriptions.

Most of you have Tape Loops of agreeability going for you. Your behavior is stylized and rigid. In certain situations, the timidity is especially pronounced when the person who needs confronting is in an Exalted [Cardinal] Role [Sage, Priest, King]. We would see you looking at this in the psychic mirror. Progress is never made by timid people — only by those who are strong enough to resist the pressures exerted upon their psyche by those Mechanical Men around them. As long as you allow those around you to dictate your mood of behavior to you, you will remain entrenched in the fixed Tape Loops and there will be no progress. [21 September 1974]

Add some more words to the description of Bad Tapes: "stylized, rigid, timid, and fixed" — this is what 'programming' does to a person.

Dick: In my work [as a physician], I find getting fat people to diet is virtually impossible. They will not diet. We are immutable.

In view of the fact that most of the programming of your "computer" was done by someone not cognizant of your Overleaves, we would say that most of it was traumatic, particularly to the Personality. [21 September 1974]

Research, in the years since the 1970s, on the reasons that people get fat and stay fat, indicate that it is not just a matter of diet: there are genetic factors and there are gut microbiome factors involved, and who knows what else. The problem is still intractable as of the date of this writing (2022).

The unwitting programmers are parents and teachers and the culture in general. The Michaels said that teachers would do well to be aware of their students Overleaves, in order to be appropriate in their instruction.

If spiritual growth is the goal and Balance is one step toward the goal, then space must be allotted to be sure that this comes about. This, in the case of this [original Michaelian group] cadre, means much interaction to reprogram the bio-computer. Many of these students have not allowed for this either and so you are not alone. [07 December 1974]

Because adverse programming of the bio-computer happens in the cultural milieu during childhood, then changing the cultural influence to a spiritual one should help to reprogram the bio-computer. Among other things, the Michaels recommended communal living to intensify this process: refer to the chapter "Communal Living".

Before souls were Cast [into incarnation], the creatures-of-no-reason from which you have ascended were largely governed by fear and their lives were taken up in many ceaseless battles for survival. This is no longer necessary on this world and yet it goes on ceaselessly in spite of this. There are few large carnivores roaming the city streets and yet most behave as though there are. The battle for survival is but another Tape Loop that plays on and on, even to the point of starving large portions of the culture, while the others waste and hoard. This only provides for the realism in the drama, for this is no longer necessary at all. [21 December 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Instinct” for a further discussion of this concept.

[Soleal:] All of want or desire is played through the [subconscious] Tapes that the Personality has accumulated.
[11 January 1975]

Understanding the existence of Tapes is important because they distort “all of want or desire”.

Carol: I have no Agreement to do anything for him [Gene]?

In a sense, the Agreements made benefit both parties. In the long haul, this will be evident. Remember that the conflicts felt are the result of, first, the individual belief systems, which are part of the Mechanical Man, as well as some rather rigid master Tapes on the part of both students. [15 January 1975]

Any given two people are likely to have rather different Tapes, and this will muck up their interactions in whatever kind of relationship they have. Especially in romantic relationships where psychological intimacy is attempted, the people involved are likely to expose these discordant Tapes, and this can result in serious conflict. Unenlightened people rarely enter an intimate relationship wanting to grapple with discordant Tapes, but even a half-enlightened spiritual seeker should face the challenge squarely when it shows up.

The subject of Tapes surfaced again in this session, which was a special session held for two people who were having difficulties in a romantic relationship:

Carol: I don't feel I am playing a game. I haven't said I am burning any bridges.

In very advanced Students, there is a degree of detachment from the master Tapes that sometimes works against them in strange ways. For one thing, it sometimes makes them unaware of behaviors that are still continuing on lower levels, mostly by rote, to some degree. There is always, until Balance has been achieved, the risk of slipping back into these behavior patterns. In this cadre [the original Michaelian group], there are students at all levels [of spiritual growth] and you can observe this easily. In society, most contracts and most interpersonal relationships are based upon manipulative behavior patterns. In the male-female relationships, this is especially apparent. In this cadre, there is an increasingly low level of this type of behavior, but in this case we do see some evidence of manipulative behavior on almost an entirely instinctive level, with detachment from the feeling of wanting to manipulate. [15 January 1975]

Add three more phenomena to the description of bad Tapes: lack of self-awareness, rote and instinctive behavior, and manipulation of others.

The next day, in a group session, the subject of Tapes also came up for review and discussion:

Balancing seems to involve more than just Centers. Other Overleaves?

Not only can Mechanical Man not “do,” but he also cannot think and, if this is denied, how can you possibly choose to change an Overleaf? All that Mechanical Man can possibly achieve is the continual playing out of the master Tapes around the beliefs. A good beginning would be for each of you to look within and discover, once and for all, those hard-core beliefs that are running your life. Then, stand apart and listen to Mechanical Man play out the Tape. It will be enlightening, to say the least. For each belief, there is a Tape: a master Tape for each core belief, an auxiliary for each auxiliary belief. In the latter case, many are Tape Loops.

“Master” Tapes are mentioned many times, above and below, without embellishment; only here are “auxiliary” Tapes mentioned. This is not enough context for me to arrive a clear distinction or complete understanding of the subject.

Narra asked if we had some “good” core beliefs.

You have some core beliefs without which you could not [physically] survive, yes.

Dick: Are these the only legitimate ones?

These core beliefs and master Tapes are the property of the Personality, and aside from the rules for survival [of the physical body], are unnecessary. The Balanced Man is flexible above all. You remember the teaching of the man Robert [Burton] insisting that you learn to turn on a dime. By becoming Balanced, you replace the master Tapes with [conscious] thought [versus unconscious thought, feelings, and behavior].

Physical survival Tapes are the type of Tapes that good parents should inculcate into their children.

Dick spoke of realizing that as you get older, you get tired of thinking Tapes and action Tapes. [16 January 1975]

One could add “emotion Tapes” to this list, and then all three lower Centers would be covered. Tapes distort all components of the Personality. The aging process mitigates Tapes whether or not a person assists the process intentionally via self-observation, as recommended by the Michaels in the previous two answers, and in the next session.

On erasing Tapes ... to achieve Agape eventually ...

One thing we might suggest that perhaps could be a start at least, would be to determine those core beliefs in you regarding your ability to achieve a state of Agape or consciousness. When the belief is brought to the surface, often the Tapes that accompany it are clearly heard for the first time. For many reasons, this process is more effective if performed in a group setting, as quite often it leads to what you might term psychic surgery. You have only an inkling of the strength of these master Tapes and the hold they have over you. Only when they are found played out and discarded does serious accelerating begin. Once the process begins, however, it does have a tendency to snowball, and it is difficult, if not impossible, to slide back into old patterns once the Tape has been erased. Sometimes, the behavior patterns continue for awhile, but even they eventually cease, as there is nothing supporting them. By the way, you are quite correct in assuming that you have both negative and positive programs on all of these and that you do play them one against the other, constantly. [19 January 1975]

Tapes impede Agape; refer to the chapter "Agape".

The sexual Tapes are only strong in the culture because of the spectacular expectation placed upon this simple biologic process, while ignoring the tremendous energies available through the Sexual Center if it can only be tapped. When you once tap this energy and have a taste of it, of course you want it again, and it can be yours but only after you release all of the unreasonable expectations placed upon the physical act itself and on the partner, and take responsibility for your own experience. We have said this before, but cannot emphasize it enough. [19 January 1975]

In the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the original Michaelian group it was understood that the Sexual Center was a higher Center, and that its energy, called Kundalini, could be used for spiritual growth. Refer to the chapter "Sexuality" for more information about that. The relevance to this chapter is that the energy of the Sexual Center is typically encumbered with Tapes and Programs.

For you, Dick, in order that this be of help to you, several events must take place. First of all, you must give this [original Michaelian group] cadre permission, something that they do not now feel. In other words, you must place yourself in the student role in such a way that they feel this from you. Otherwise, the group process will only be another session of bullshit. Then you must make an agreement with both yourself and the cadre that you will not stop the process at the point of break-through, as you have done in the past. You must promise your Essence the experience it wishes to have, in other words. We admit this is a scary proposal, but it is a way and it does work. This is not to say that you cannot at a later time, even the same evening, resume your leadership role. But for the time set aside for a Tape-playing, you must be a student. Merely revealing yourself in this fashion will boost the trust level tremendously, as this is a side of you that not many of the group has been privileged to see. Many students regard you as a teacher, much more than a student, and most are reluctant to Photograph for you while not for themselves. We have knowledge sure and certain that this cadre will be positive toward such an experience and will welcome it. [19 January 1975]

Evidently, "tape-playing" involved revealing one's deepest and darkest secrets to oneself and to others. If one does not have a Michael group in which to do this, then one might consider attending a group therapy session led by a professional psychotherapist. This might be geared for a specific issue, such as some type of addiction. (The word "addiction" is not used by the Michaels in the original Michaelian group sessions, nor is it discussed as such in this chapter, but surely an addiction is a Program or a Tape.) Here again, it is self-observation, aka Photography, that sheds light on Tapes, and it is the light of Essence that erases Tapes that are embedded in the Personality.

(Thaddeus plans to work with us [for] one hour during the next weekend together.)

In order to use the appropriate Center, you must be ahead of the game, at least ahead of your human brain, the great computer that plugs in all the Tapes. [25 January 1975]

In this, and other passages quoted above, we see that Tapes in the Bio-computer affect the appropriate use of Centers — appropriate use of Centers being a major feature of the psychotherapeutic and spiritual-path component of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the Michaelian teachings.

Carol: In hypnosis, she experienced something that seemed like a skipping from one lifetime to another. True? Also, experienced a feeling of physical expansion and feeling very small at the same time.

In answer to the latter question, while in the hypnotic state, the person experiences both the Astral and Physical Plane in an incomplete symbiosis, and thus the distortion of physical boundaries with the accompanying unpleasant sensation. This same applies to all other instances wherein the Astral Plane is experienced in the waking or the trance state, where the Personality remains vigilant.

Yes, there were many memories crowding into play here. Many times, this does happen in [past-life] regression, which does much for discrediting the experience to those wishing to discredit. When this happens, you can always go back to the starting point and move forward more gradually, for instance, day by day, until you are thoroughly oriented to that life you wish to pursue.

Incidentally, this form of remembering is far more valuable than myriad transmissions of information from the Akashic Plane. The experiencing of the past directly through recall triggers many more insights than receiving this indirectly from this Entity. You see now that by our reading of this into your memory banks merely facilitates the manufacture of a new Tape. [30 January 1975]

The takeaway from this Q&A exchange is that the best way to erase Tapes is not from acquiring knowledge from outside to inside. Rather, it is much more effective to experience altered states of consciousness — from inside to outside, as it were. For example, having a past-life-regression via hypnosis is far better than getting a past-life reading from a channel.

Each teaching now on-going has different tools, and yet the Synthesis can be easily made by one caring to make the comparison. In choosing the specific tools that we have, each of your Overleaves was taken into consideration, as well as all your imprinting, your core beliefs, and your master Tapes. [30 January 1975]

So far as I have been able to discern, these three (imprinting, core beliefs, Tapes) are aspects of the same phenomenon, namely the fact that as humans we have a so-called “lower self” that functions in opposition and hindrance to the manifestation of the so-called “higher self”.

Alice: I tried giving myself the suggestion to eat less carbohydrates. It worked for eight hours, at which time I indulged in them. I tried looking at that and found that I probably did not like myself enough to eat what is good for me, so for the past week I have been suggesting to myself that I will like myself better and will do those things that are good for my being. I've been feeling better about myself, but seem to plunge into more frequent downs. Comment, please, on what I can do in this area?

[Soleal:] You need to learn to use your moments of Power to extinguish your Chief Feature [Self-deprecation]. This can even work with Chief Features such as Arrogance, although that is a tough one to drop. The moments of Power must be utilized in the work, for it is in this way that you will be able to finally switch Modes. You cannot go through the Self-deprecation Tape from the Power Mode as easily as you can from Caution [Mode]. Use your moments of Power to emphasize your positive feelings about yourself. In those moments, appreciate your own humor [and] intelligence, and savor the feelings of Power. You do have these moments, as you also have moments of Dominance [rather than the usual Submission]. These must be utilized. The post-hypnotic suggestion that you will recognize the moments of Power would help; then you would be able to look at yourself more realistically. [01 February 1975]

As in previous Q&A exchanges, the use of hypnosis for erasing Tapes is suggested here. Also suggested is the intentional application of the opposite Overleaf on an Axis to break the Tapes; in Alice's case, Submission > Dominance, Caution > Power, and Self-deprecation > Arrogance.

Donna: I would like to ask about a new space I experienced through meditation. When I opened my eyes after meditation, I saw a beautiful fish on the wall. His mouth opened and closed, and then he disappeared into the wall. Is this a first lesson with a neutral object? I've been wondering why I haven't been seeing images as others have.

These visual images are excellent in determining the depth of the meditative state. If you do not allow them to be distractions, you can use them as a gauge. They will not appear if the mind has not been effectively cleared. If you are still running your Tapes, there will be little imagery of this type; in other words, totally unrelated to anything in your consciousness. In the Orient, this image would be afforded tremendous mystical importance, since the poi is a symbol of reawakening. [01 February 1975]

My takeaway from this Q&A exchange is that meditation is another potential way to erase Tapes, if the meditation is deep enough to circumvent Personality programming.

When a soul not in a teaching encounters the True Personality in Essence for the first time, it is, of course, a devastating experience. This usually comes about [in] moments of extreme stress, grief or sometimes, even trauma. It can, however, come about if the soul is suddenly catapulted in a situation so unusual that not one of the Tapes is applicable. Of course, it is undeniably true that none of you has a permanent Tape telling you how to react to the surface of the Moon, and it is conceivable that all of you would encounter your True Personality were you to suddenly find yourself at the controls of a large jet aircraft without any prior training to guide you except perhaps a few flying lessons in a small propeller-driven plane. [08 February 1975]

In this passage, traumas and such are negative ways of exposing the Tapes; positive ways are mentioned in previous passages: meditation, Photography, hypnosis, psychedelics, and such. (There are Study Paper chapters on all of these.) In this passage, Tapes are contrasted with True Personality and Essence; by erasing or bypassing the former via one means or another, the latter appears because it is already there. Many times and in many ways it is said in the Michaelian teachings that you do not need to develop the higher self; it always exists, waiting for you to shed the lower self.

If the trust level is high enough [in a commune], the need for substitutes [pets in place of people] will diminish. Of course, your needs will continue for a time, until you are willing to look at the basis of the need. Perhaps, there will be some things that you will be unwilling to give up, but you should at least look at them, so that you know where the need is. It is, again, not Bad Work at all if it is done consciously and not Mechanically. Many of your needs now are based upon the core beliefs and master Tapes that are stored for use by False Personality. Looking at them [the alleged needs] collectively will be more valuable again than looking at them individually, just as looking at the core beliefs and master Tapes will be. [12 February 1975]

So-called “needs” are either legitimate or illegitimate, and it is Good Work to discern the difference; that is accomplished by discerning the source of the “need”, as being either sourced from Personality or from Essence.

... until the true issue is explored in each and every Photograph, no progress will ever be made. It is, of course, easier for those in Exalted [Cardinal] Roles to put up the facade, for it is more important for them to show the world the bella figura [good impression]. This is not to say that they are not locked into their own Tapes — one being that they are above it all, and that Tape needs erasing too. But it still remains that no conflict will ever be solved if you deal with it in Artificial Space with the Overleaves [rather than Essence]. [12 February 1975]

Three more examples of Bad Tapes are underlined here. Here again it is said that Photography is the way to erase Tapes. Refer to the chapter “Real Space versus Artificial Space”.

Jude: Is the following statement true: You are here and the problem is not when you are coming, but when we can see you?

[Soleal:] It is also true that in another frame of reference, I am not [coming]. Many would never perceive the etheric [body]. Of course, in the sense that you question, that is true. Actually, though, all of you could perceive me in my present form if you would open your [etheric] eyes. Only in a sense are your eyes open. They are open only to those experiences protected by the master Tapes that define reality to you. The eyes, as they are now, are trained to see only that which exists in Artificial Space. They are able to perceive in Real Space, but they must be retrained. The master Tapes you now have would not allow this experience, even in your dreams. You run from images [that come] out of Real Space. The Essence, of course, perceives in Real Space; the Personality can only perceive in Artificial Space. Artificial Space encompasses the entire Physical Plane. [16 February 1975]

There are reports that a few very young children see beyond the ‘veil’ to the etheric levels of the Physical Plane (imaginary friends, past lives, and so on), but this perception gets suppressed as the child grows up — perhaps this passage alludes to this particular adverse function of Tapes. Some kinds of “psychics” apparently see beyond Artificial Space; they are born with this capability, whereas others develop it by one means or another, such as the use of psychedelics, Near Death Experiences, and spiritual disciplines.

Was Leslie [Briggs, a budding channel] close to a trance just now?

[Soleal:] That was a light trance. What we would hope to achieve is a far deeper one. Then much facilitation would occur.

Eugene: How much of his experience with Soleal was real?

[Soleal:] Much of your perception was valid. Much of the blocking was from the Overleaves and from those master Tapes that define reality for you. Did you hear the words [in your head]?

Was Soleal’s experience with JohnL directed by Liz [also a budding channel]?

[Soleal:] It was an attempt to establish a link, yes. Blocked by the Warrior [Leslie]. Relax please. It does not hurt.

JohnL: A master Tape was present and resulted in a block in consciousness and memory. Do both parties have to be ready and willing when transferring energy?

[Soleal:] In this type of link, yes, readiness and willingness are imperative. [16 February 1975]

The last few sessions brought out the information that Tapes block access to supernatural realms; they are not just erroneous ‘programs’ that distort or impede one’s dealings with the Physical Plane. There are no programming Tapes on the Astral Plane:

... there is no life survival programming going on on the Astral Plane and the encumbrances are less heavy. [21 February 1975]

Comment: A name was mentioned.

The name is not Halstead, but Haldane. This Fragment had satisfied the spirit and was prepared to go on and chose this exit — or perhaps we should say, “took” this exit. He simply willed the terminal process. But this was a Fragment who had been rigidly programmed [as a British aristocrat] to regard his eliminatory functions as “nasty”. In spite of his scientific education, he never overcame this program. [21 February 1974]

That was just another statement about how tenacious Tapes can be.

Allyn had a dream and woke up sobbing. Someone had died, that Allyn loved very much. He took his prize possessions and piled them against an old shed in the alley and set them on fire, but the fire did not consume them. The last thing placed on the fire was the thing he loved most — a beautiful Victorian nightstand covered in red velvet. Was this a recall dream?

Getting in touch with past lives is often very emotional, yes. At this time, the Essence is bombarding the Personality with these lessons from the past, yes. The Essence often appears to overdo.

The Personality’s only recourse is to interpret this as the present and attempt to place these experiences with the feeling of the day that will “happen” to coincide with the events of the dream.

In this case, the student Allyn is gaining much, and in a way his gain must catch with the Personality. The Tapes will play even during sleep. The Personality will relate the dream and gradually assimilate the facts that the Essence is feeding it.

The Personality has the upper hand, yes. Even in sleep, it has been trained to do such. Why expect less? The emotions are the Personality’s only way of recognizing the previous lives the Essence is now free to permit to come through. The student’s progress is only measurable by his Personality in the emotional terms. [Undated, early 1975]

Well then, dream interpretation provides yet another means for discerning Tapes, so that one may deal with them appropriately.

[Please comment] on John’s dream.

Instinctual drives are strong in dreams often. The student was experiencing this and other aspects of the Personality’s attempt at grasping the significance to the Overleaves in this operation and its mode of operational viewpoint. Often in dreams there is a multi-level thing going on: the Personality, the Tapes, the Essence astral travel, and recall of the difference. In astral travel we would say that the person often experiences the feelings and fears of the place where they are visiting. This is what the men cowering and being hunted were in this particular dream. If a diary of dreams is kept regularly, the difference between all the aspects will become clearer and clearer. [07 April 1975]

Again, dream interpretation provides yet another means for discerning Tapes, so that one may deal with them appropriately.

We talked about the different spiritual teachings and how, while they said much the same thing, the approach was different and each of us had different feelings about them. For instance, the [Course in] Miracles material is very scholarly. The Seth Material appeals to Cynthia more. And this led to discussion about programming from the past, which led to a question about the value of de-conditioning processes.

De-conditioning processes: If there is a great deal of doubt and perseverance [perseverance] and the inability to move forward without them, then these [de-conditioning] processes are essential if the life goal is to be achieved. However, we must say that if the “break-away” occurs normally, then the manifestation of the soul level will also occur unimpeded, and then the fragmentary learning can be brought together in a more cohesive whole. It is possible to learn this material and allow it to effect a change of sorts without peeling back the layers, but the gains will be superficial and there will be backsliding. As to which is better, the answer would be that all that takes one back to “go” are better. In other words, the man [Arthur] Janov and the Fischer-Hoffman process, etc., are valid as long as the recipient is truly able to surrender and allow the self to have the experience. There is a great deal of “faking it” in these processes. [10 April 1977]

The break away from the parental influences and early imprinting typically starts to occur in earnest during the so-called “fourth internal monad”, at the “manifestation of the soul level”. This was not discussed in detail during the original Michaelian group so far as we know, but it is in Messages from Michael, pages 217 to 218.

From Wikipedia: Primal therapy is a trauma-based psychotherapy created by Arthur Janov, who argues that neurosis is caused by the repressed pain of childhood trauma. Janov argues that repressed pain can be sequentially brought to conscious awareness and resolved through re-experiencing the incident and fully expressing the resulting pain during therapy... Primal therapy became very influential during a brief period in the early 1970s, after the publication of Janov's first book, The Primal Scream.

The Fischer-Hoffman process provides a very deep working through of childhood programming. It is discussed at ><http://www.hoffmaninstitute.org><. For more information about the history of this psychotherapy, refer to >https://rationalwiki.org/wiki/Hoffman_Quadrinity_Process<.

Bio-computer, Programs, and Tapes per Briggs

This computer metaphor was not nearly as prominent in the Briggs group that followed the original Michaelian group as it was in the original Michaelian group. (Recall that the Briggs family — Louise, Allyn, and Leslie — were members of the original Michaelian group, and Leslie learned to channel therein.) There are only a few instances of its mention in the Briggs transcriptions (published by the Center for Michael Teachings, Inc., in Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Leslie Briggs).

Louise: I see I created a lot of karma with myself by mis-Centering, running old Tapes, thought patterns, et cetera. [It has] shown up in ill health.

That was Essence having to experience illness.

Louise: That's what's been hard — is to NOT run a judgment Tape on it.

That's right — because somewhere along the line you got that if you mis-Center you're asleep (and asleep is bad!). If that were true, no one would have any hope of applying this teaching. You can Center — you have worked very hard on it. Another block you use is the Intellectual Center to explain away your integrity when you mis-Center.

Louise: [illegible] ... all I have to do is 'stop'?

Better for you to say, "Time out". Then you won't run a judgment Tape. [03 December 1980]

Louise: We have a value judgment on health and illness, beyond the fact of comfort and discomfort. We run the Tapes so that illness is a 'make wrong', and the truth is it's just being here.

If it were not a process of the Physical Plane to follow this concept, then how come dogs and cats get ill? They most certainly do not walk around bemoaning their jobs and want to rest. So it's a process or a belief system of the Physical Plane. Otherwise dogs, cats, frogs, and [illegible] wouldn't get ill. It is perpetuated by belief. It's part of the Physical Plane. Trees get fungus. [17 December 1980]

Louise: Spoke of how uncomfortable she feels when mis-Centering, whereas she never used to know it — not that she can stop it at will.

Normally once you're mis-Centered and Slippage starts, it has to run its course. You've blown it. All you have to do is observe that you've blown it. Let it run its course and it will run quieter, and you can get back to [Balanced] Centering. If you run a judgment Tape on yourself, [then] you stay stuck in the mis-Centering.

Don: I feel I've finally let go of a lot of imprinting. Is that true? I feel my ego is going nuts with this.

Yes. That's called "erasing Tapes". Yes, the ego does go wild and calls you wrong for doing it. With blame Tapes you have to make up something new — your Overleaves.

Don: Then I seem to be stuck in –Intolerance [the Negative Pole of Impatience].

That's valid coming from your Overleaves. That's –Intolerance without guilt.

Don: That's right.

The guilt was the Tape, the –Intolerance was

[Line cut off at bottom of page.] [29 December 1980]

Don: Is one way to get 'back' to one's own space to tell the truth about where one is?

'Truthing' does two things: [It] clears your conscience and erases Tapes. 'Truthing' does not prevent Slippage. [10 January 1981]

Don: Not prevent it, but after you've Slid does it have to run some kind of course?

To get to Centering you work on Centering. 'Truthing' does not change Slippage. 'Truthing' eliminates Number Two and Three experiences, which are Tapes. 'Truthing' clears up the ego so that next time that Tape is played it's empty. It doesn't play because you've erased it, and it doesn't play when the button is pushed.

[10 January 1981]

Caren: So is that just 'getting off' it?

No. 'Getting off it' is observation — not Identifying with what is going on. 'Getting off it' is an excellent exercise in erasing the Tape that got you mis-Centered to begin with. 'Centering' is coming from the appropriate Center at the appropriate time. Footnote is: that's the only time you can [truly] do anything. Short of being Centered, you not only can't do anything, you can't think either — you're a Machine. When you are Centered, you are being what you incarnated to Be. Mis-Centering comes from being unwilling to explore or allow the other Centers to function. The Trap you're in has been a way you have survived. It is a large threat to the Personality to not come from its enTrapment. The main basis of this teaching is to recognize that you are a Machine and then work on Centering. You all have experienced Balanced Man. [10 January 1981]

Concluding Comments on Tapes, Bio-computer, and Programs

A few points can be listed here, some of which are found elsewhere in this chapter, and some of which are new:

- Besides this chapter on the Bio-computer, the chapters titled "Awakening from Sleep", "False Personality", "Instinctive Behavior", "Liberation", "Maya", and "Mechanical Man" also address this factor in human psychology. Therefore, even though the metaphor of Tapes of the Bio-computer has not survived the demise of the original Michaelian group, the basic concept has survived.
- There are various types of "programs" that have chapters of their own in this Study Papers book that are not of the Physical Plane, but involve programming by the soul: Karma, Agreements, soul's choice of Overleaves.
- Considering that the subject of Tapes appeared in the original Michaelian group from beginning to end, it would seem to be an important component of the teaching. Considering the quantity of mentions of Tapes, this is not an unimportant component of the Michaelian teachings.
- Consider this chapter to be a mere introduction to the concept that the human brain works somewhat like a computer, in that it is governed by a program and a memory.
- From a philosophical perspective, the basic idea of "programming" as used in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is that so-called "higher" or "greater" or "stronger" levels of the cosmos "supervene" on so-called "lower" or "lesser" or "weaker" levels of the cosmos. This is a rather deep subject, as one may see by reading about supervenience at, for instance, <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Supervenience> and, for an even more abstruse presentation, <https://plato.stanford.edu/entries/supervenience/>. However, for this chapter, all one needs to understand is that the cosmos is structured in levels (space-like layers and time-like stages), and the levels of the cosmos affect each other in both directions: the top>down influence is called "emanation" and the bottom>up influence is called "emergence".

BODIES, SUBTLE

Not exactly the same thing as Aura

Subtle Bodies per Esoteric Cosmology

According to Geoffrey Samuel and Jay Johnston, professors of Religious studies known for their studies on Yoga and esoteric traditions:

Ideas and practices involving so-called 'subtle bodies' have existed for many centuries in many parts of the world. (...) Virtually all human cultures known to us have some kind of concept of mind, spirit or soul as distinct from the physical body, if only to explain experiences such as sleep and dreaming. (...) An important subset of subtle-body practices, found particularly in Indian and Tibetan Tantric traditions, and in similar Chinese practices, involves the idea of an internal 'subtle physiology' of the body (or rather of the body-mind complex) made up of channels through which substances of some kind flow, and points of intersection at which these channels come together. In the Indian tradition the channels are known as nadi and the points of intersection as cakra. — Geoffrey Samuel and Jay Johnston, Religion and the Subtle Body in Asia and the West: Between Mind and Body [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chakra> — retrieved 31 October 2021]

A subtle body is a "quasi material" aspect of the human body, being neither solely physical nor solely spiritual, according to various esoteric, occult, and mystical teachings. This contrasts with the mind-body dualism that has dominated Western thought. The subtle body is important in the Taoism of China and Dharmic religions such as Hinduism, Buddhism, and Jainism, mainly in the branches which focus on tantra and yoga, where it is known as the Sūkṣma-śarīra. However, while mostly associated with Asian cultures, non-dualistic approaches to the mind and body are found in many parts of the world.

Subtle body concepts and practices can be identified as early as 2nd century BCE in Taoist texts found in the Mawangdui tombs. Although "evidently present" in Indian thought as early as the 4th to 1st century BCE when the Taittiriya Upanishad describes the Panchakoshas, a series of five interpenetrating sheaths of the body. A fully formed subtle body theory didn't develop in India until the tantric movement that affected all its religions in the Middle Ages. In Indo-Tibetan Buddhism the correlation of the subtle body to the physical body is viewed differently according to school, lineage and scholar but for Completion stage purposes is visualised within the body. The subtle body consists of focal points, often called chakras, connected by channels, often called nadis, that convey subtle breath, often called prana. Through breathing and other exercises, a practitioner may direct the subtle breath to achieve supernormal powers, immortality, or liberation.

Subtle body concepts have become part of Western developed perspectives. In esoteric studies the Theosophy movement were the first to translate the Sanskrit term as "subtle body" although their use of the term is quite different from Indic usage. This makes the term problematic for modern scholars, especially as the Theosophist view often influences New Age and holistic medicine perspectives. Western scientists have started to explore the subtle body concept in research on meditation.

BUDDHISM

Early concepts of the subtle body (Sanskrit: sūkṣma śarīra) appeared in the Upanishads, including the Bṛhadaranyaka Upanishad and the Katha Upanishad.^[7] The Taittiriya Upanishad describes the theory of five koshas or sheaths, though these are not to be thought of as concentric layers, but interpenetrating at successive levels of subtlety:

The anna-maya ("food body", physical body, the grossest level),

The prana-maya (body made of vital breath or prana),

The mano-maya (body made of mind),
The vijñāna-maya (body made of consciousness)
The ananda-maya (bliss body, the subtlest level).

WESTERN ESOTERICISM

Theosophy

In the 19th century, H. P. Blavatsky founded the esoteric religious system of Theosophy, which attempted to restate Hindu and Buddhist philosophy for the Western world. She adopted the phrase "subtle body" as the English equivalent of the Vedantic sūkṣmaśarīra, which in Adi Shankara's writings was one of three bodies (physical, subtle, and causal). Geoffrey Samuel notes that theosophical use of these terms by Blavatsky and later authors, especially C. W. Leadbeater, Annie Besant and Rudolf Steiner (who went on to found Anthroposophy), has made them "problematic" to modern scholars, since the Theosophists adapted the terms as they expanded their ideas based on "psychic and clairvoyant insights", changing their meaning from what they had in their original context in India.

Post-theosophists

The later theosophical arrangement was taken up by Alice Bailey, and from there found its way into the New Age worldview and the human aura. Other authors treated the subtle body in varying ways. Max Heindel divided the subtle body into the Vital Body made of Ether; the Desire body, related to the Astral plane; and the Mental body. Samael Aun Weor wrote extensively on the subtle bodies (Astral, Mental, and Causal), aligning them with the kabbalistic tree of life. Barbara Brennan's account of the subtle bodies in her books Hands of Light and Light Emerging refers to the subtle bodies as "layers" in the "Human Energy Field" or aura.

Fourth Way

Subtle bodies are found in the "Fourth Way" teachings of Gurdjieff and Ouspensky, which claim that one can create a subtle body, and hence achieve post-mortem immortality, through spiritual or yogic exercises. The "soul" in these systems is not something one is born with, but developed through esoteric practice to acquire complete understanding and to perfect the self. According to the historian Bernice Rosenthal, "In Gurdjieff's cosmology our nature is tripartite and is composed of the physical (planetary), emotional (astral) and mental (spiritual) bodies; in each person one of these three bodies ultimately achieves dominance." The ultimate task of the fourth way teachings is to harmoniously develop the four bodies into a single way.

Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn

The Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, a secret magical Order originating in 1888 in Victorian England, describes the subtle body as "The Sphere of Sensation". The occultist Israel Regardie published a collection of Golden Dawn magical texts which state that "the whole sphere of sensation which surroundeth the whole physical body of a man is called 'the magical mirror of the universe'. For therein are represented all the occult forces of the universe projected as on a sphere..." Regardie connects the Sephiroth of the Kabbalistic Tree of Life to this sphere as a microcosm of the universe. The Kabbalistic concept of the Nepesch is "the subtle body of refined Astral Light upon which, as on an invisible pattern, the physical body is extended".

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Subtle_body< — retrieved 31 October 2021]

Notice that all of these sources list the subtle bodies in what I refer to as the Natural Sequence: Physical → Emotional → Mental → Spiritual. This is because, obviously, the planes follow the Natural Sequence. This sequence is discussed in more detail in my book The Tao of Cosmogony. For a convenient summary, these are tabulated below:

SUBTLE BODIES

MONADIC	ORDINAL		NEUTRAL		CARDINAL
AXIAL	ACTION	INSPIRATION	EXPRESSION	ASSIMILATION	EXPRESSION	INSPIRATION	ACTION
BUDDHISM	Anna Physical	Prana Vital	Mano Mind	Vijnana Consciousness		Ananda Bliss

Comments on this table are as follows:

-

Subtle Bodies per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Are spirits real? (Discussion of "spirit" in Lisa's house.)

It may be an etheric vehicle. If so, it will decompose as body decomposes. Then, you will be alone again. This sometimes happens when one dies suddenly or violently. The etheric vehicle is the innermost aura. It borrows minute quantities of energy from any available source — a cat or dog or you. It decomposes rapidly. This entity [etheric vehicle] cannot harm you at all. It is like the dura sans the brain. The Astral body leaves immediately. The etheric vehicle cannot leave — it has no power by itself. It probably feels comfortable in your house. We can take it away. It is only a shadow. It has no intrinsic energy. [21 August 1973]

Concluding Comments on Subtle Bodies

Compare and contrast with "Composites" of Cadence, Greater Cadence, Side, Entity, Cadre.

⑥ BODY TYPE

Founding members of the original Michaelian group learned about Body Types in the Fourth Way group (Fellowship of Friends) where they had previously been members. That group was lead by Robert Burton; refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton” for more information about that story. Gurdjieff did not himself teach about Body Types, nor did his student Ouspensky. Rather, the typology came from one of Ouspensky’s students, Rodney Collin, who invented it in the 1950s. I say “invented” because he conflated ideas gathered from endocrinology, astrology, and mythology rather than evidence gathered from empirical observations, or intuitive revelations of one kind or another. The point to be emphasized here is that the Michaels did not originate the concept; from reading the original Michaelian group transcriptions it appears to me that the Michaels just went along with the Collin–Fellowship of Friends formulation because original Michaelian group members found it to be useful.

The subject of Body Types is thoroughly covered in two chapters in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart. Chapter 1M, “The Seven Body Types”, covers the time period before and during the original Michaelian group. There you will read that the Michaels added and subtracted from the Collin–Fellowship of Friends formulation as they saw fit. Chapter 4D, “The Seven Body Types”, covers the history of the subject during the period after the original Michaelian group. Neither of those chapters is reproduced here in the Study Papers book, so the reader should review them in the History book if they want to understand that history. There you will read that, basically and briefly, attempts of channels and students to fit the Collin–Fellowship of Friends Body Type system into the Overleaf System are so inconsistent with each other that it becomes obvious that the Collin–Fellowship of Friends Body Type system cannot be made to fit into the Overleaf System without such extreme metamorphoses that the Collin–Fellowship of Friends formulation becomes absurd.

However, all is not lost. During the original Michaelian group, the Michaels said that the Body Types and the Centers count as one Overleaf. I take this to mean that there is an exact correlation of some kind between the two, when properly understood. This assertion of conflation was not developed by the Michaels, either in the original Michaelian group or subsequent to the original Michaelian group; that task has apparently fallen to me. My suggestion is that the Body Types and Centers constitute an Axis, where the Body Types are Ordinal and the Centers are Cardinal. Beyond that, in my History book, you can read that, during the 1940s, 1950’s, and 1960s, Dr. William Sheldon, an academic, empirically discerned a body type system that happens to have a pattern that maps easily onto the pattern of the Centers, without distortion. Therefore, I reject the Collin–Fellowship of Friends schema, about which the Michaelian teachings communities have not been able to come to a consensus, and inject the Sheldon schema into the Overleaf System.

My assertion is that Michaelian students would do well to forget the Collin–Fellowship of Friends Body Type schema, and adopt Sheldon’s so-called “somatotype” schema. For that reason, I am not going to document and comment on what was said in the original Michaelian group about the Collin–Fellowship of Friends schema in this Study Papers book. The somatotype schema is described and discussed enough in my History book that students can begin to incorporate that Body Type system into their study of this interesting component of our incarnate human experience, if they are inclined to think and research outside the current Body Type ‘box’. In addition to what I have to say in my History book, curious people can read about somatotypes in various places on the internet, such as:

- https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Somatotype_and_constitutional_psychology<
- <https://www.mysomatotype.com/body-type/><

BONDING

This chapter is the product of a search for the words bonding and binding and their derivatives and synonyms in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) bonding issues are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

The word bond is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings are usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated; both are amenable to psychotherapeutic techniques. Obviously, bonding is a positive to be cultivated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Bonding

So what is meant by template? The online Merriam Webster online dictionary definition is: Wikipedia has an article that provides a definition and a description, as follows \(underlined words are my emphasis\):

Bonding per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is a subject that benefits by division into subsections. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

Kindred Soul Bonding

Group Bonding

Concluding Comments on Bonding

BODYWORK MODALITIES: BREATH, DANCE, EXERCISE, MASSAGE

This chapter is the product of a search for the words “dance”, “exercise”, “massage”, “yoga” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, the subject of body-work modalities does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the subject appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the subject and its contexts. Briefly and basically, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that body-work modalities are physically beneficial, of course, but also spiritually beneficial.

The words for the various bodywork modalities are not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because they have no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; they are not Michaelian jargon words that need a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why this subject is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that the subject came up for discussion in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

In the Gurdjieffian teachings the lowest Center was often referred to as the “Instinctive–Moving Center”; refer to the chapter “Instinctive Center” for more discussion of that historical fact. In that chapter you will read that the Instinctive Center was all about physiology. However, in the Michaelian teachings, the Instinctive Center became a personality trait in the Overleaf System, finding a place in the midst of the other Centers. This chapter is about servicing the needs of the physical body, the Gurdjieffian Instinctive–Moving Center, because that is how original Michaelian group members understood it.

Bodywork modalities, such as those reviewed in this chapter, have been a component of “spiritual” work from ancient to modern times. The obvious reality is that it is beneficial, perhaps even necessary, to have and maintain and foster a healthy body as the foundation for a healthy mind and a healthy spirit. During the original Michaelian group, bodywork modalities were also a component of the Michaels’ outline of a well-rounded spiritual path for their students. However, bodywork is yet another one of many subjects that seems not to have gained much traction in subsequent Michaelian teachings formalism. It seems to be the case that many individual students practice a bodywork modality, but bodywork is not an “official”, one might say, component of the modern Michaelian teachings. One of my visionary aspirations with this chapter is to nudge the Michaelian student body (pun intended) in that direction, not only as individuals, but in the long run as the quantity of students presumably increases enough to form local groups that meet on a regular basis, and in the even longer run as students presumably live together communally.

Breathwork

Definition of Breathwork

Breathwork per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Dance

Definition of Dance

Dance per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Exercise

Definition of Exercise

Exercise per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Christopher: What can I do to clear up the troubles with my body and get in tune with it more. (Christopher has suffered with asthma most of his life.) It's really hanging me up lately.

Hiking with compatible souls would also be good.

Richard: The Sierra Club offers much for singles program. [08 September 1973]

Massage

Definition of Massage

So what is meant by massage? Wikipedia has an extensive article on the subject, and the introductory paragraph is this:

Massage is the manipulation of the body's soft tissues. Massage techniques are commonly applied with hands, fingers, elbows, knees, forearms, feet, or a device. The purpose of massage is generally for the treatment of body stress or pain. In European countries, a person professionally trained to give massages is traditionally known as a masseur (male) or masseuse (female). In the United States, these individuals are often referred to as massage therapists, because they must be certified and licensed as "licensed massage therapists". In professional settings, clients are treated while lying on a massage table, sitting in a massage chair, or lying on a mat on the floor. There are many different modalities in the massage industry, including (but not limited to): deep tissue, manual lymphatic drainage, medical, sports, structural integration, Swedish, Thai, and trigger point. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Massage> — retrieved 08 November 2022]

Thereafter followed a lengthy description of the subject, including its history in various countries and cultures, its various types and methods, its facilities, equipment, supplies, and its medical and therapeutic uses.

So now let's see what the Michaels had to say on the subject.

Massage per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first appearance of the subject of massage was at least six months into the original Michaelian group sessions:

Christopher: What can I do to clear up the troubles with my body and get in tune with it more. (Christopher has suffered with asthma most of his life.) It's really hanging me up lately.

Structural Integration would help....

Christopher: Would someone explain "Structural Integration"?

Voices in chorus: That's Rolfing. We can explain that later and perhaps put you in touch with an experienced Rolfer. [08 September 1973]

Rolfing is a form of deep muscle massage originally invented by Ida Rolf (1896 – 1979). Additional forms of deep massage and bodywork like Hellerwork Structural Integration were developed from the work of Ida Rolf and are now included in the term "Structural Integration."

Body movement would be Good Work. Also, meditation, group concentration, and perhaps massage. [31 January 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Good Work, Bad Work" and "Meditation and Concentration". The fact that physical modalities, such as body movement and massage, were mentioned in conjunction with spiritual modalities, tells us something about their proper role in the support of the health of the physical body, and perhaps of the personality and of the soul. The Q&A exchange following the above tells us more:

What is the value of the group?

Answer: For energy.

Ray: [Question lost.]

In order for this group to achieve the cohesion necessary to provide [spiritual] growth, a level of intimacy and trust far exceeding what you now have must be reached. This cannot be achieved through dialogue. Dialogue is False Personality's defense against Emotional Center. [31 January 1974]

Refer to chapters "Energy and Energy Leaks", "Intimacy", "Trust", "Dialogue", "Personality — True and False", and "Emotional Center". The point of this answer here is the same as the point that the Michaels made numerous other times during the original Michaelian group, namely that the students were trapped in their Intellectual Center, and it would be Good Work if they broadened their learning modalities by dropping down into the Emotional Center and the Moving Center on occasion.

Alice: If I am tired and would rather have slept, we have sex and you [Dick] ask me, "How it was" for me when you have enjoyed it and if I tell the truth for me that it was OK instead of great, you go down with that. Why can't you simply enjoy it without having to have it be great for me every time?

By eroticism, we speak of the total abandonment of the body to sensual experience and, yes, this is a solitary experience.

Refer to the chapters "Sexuality" and "Sensuality" for more discussion of those topics that are somewhat related to bodywork. In those chapters you will read that sensuality and sexuality can, and should, augment each other for individual (solitary) and mutual benefit.

Alice: You do not even like massage and I love it.

This you have not done. We have suggested massage before and for good reason. You are not the only one bound up in this. Most Adepts are extremely sensual in their personal lives. This may come as a surprise to you but it runs pretty true to form. [19 March 1974]

People who "live in their head" or "live in their emotions" tend to not "live in their body", and this is an unbalanced lifestyle. For best results on a spiritual path, live as an Adept lives, with the appropriate functioning of all Centers in proper proportion; refer to the chapter "Adept and Master".

Dick had some angles on the group toward a more cohesive, active one:

- Group massage. (Good for Instinctive Center.) [07 July 1974]

As stated above, in the Gurdjieffian teachings and the original Michaelian group, the Instinctive Center was understood as the "physiology" Center, a Part of the Moving Center. With that background knowledge in mind, thus statement and others like it become more understandable.

Structural Integration is valid only for Emotionally Centered souls who are out of contact with Intellect[ual] Center and alienated from their [Moving Center] bodies. [04 September 1973]

Structural Integration is sometimes known as "Rolfing", deep muscle massage, or Hellerwork massage therapy. People who are Emotionally Centers enjoy massage more than those not so Centered, but massage can, and should, be far more than merely sensually pleasurable; it can, and should, also be therapeutic. The basic premise of therapeutic massage is that there is a psycho-somatic process where the body stores intellectual and emotional insults in the muscles and joints, and there is the opposite somato-psychic process where this insult stored in the body is fed back to the thoughts and emotions. The function of massage is to mitigate this escalating negative feedback loop. The point to be emphasized here is that if you find yourself trapped in negative thoughts and/or emotions, then treat your body to/with some pleasurable, sensual bodywork. Do so and you will find that negativity has dissipated or disappeared; refer to the chapter "Pleasure" for more about that.

Louise: I asked if the pain in my right shoulder had anything to do with the imbalance of yin-yang.

Yes. The trouble is not as strong as in the past, and this confuses your Intellectual Center. The student is blocking the force of the Goal, the Mode, [and] the Chief Negative Feature. The Centering, the Attitude, the Body Type and the Role are in Balance. The energy is the reason [not the Overleaves], Louise.

Louise: I felt that the teacher here is referring to the Reichian Therapy I have been involved in. [07 November 1977]

From Wikipedia: Reichian therapy can refer to several schools of thought and therapeutic techniques whose common touchstone is their origins in the work of psychoanalyst Wilhelm Reich (1897 – 1957). Some examples are: 1) Bioenergetic analysis, which combines psychological analysis, active work with the body and relational therapeutic work. 2) Body psychotherapy, which addresses the body and the mind as a whole with emphasis on the reciprocal relationships within body and mind. 3) Neo-Reichian massage, whose practitioners attempt to locate and dissolve "holding patterns" (also called "body armoring"). 4) Vegetotherapy, a form of psychotherapy that involves the physical manifestations of emotions.

Concluding Comments on Bodywork

③ BOREDOM

This chapter is the product of a search for the word boredom in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Boredom is pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word boredom is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that boredom is a negative to be mitigated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

One might think that boredom is hardly a topic worthy of discussion in a book such as this, but the word does appear several times in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. The experience of boredom is not a subject of note in the Gurdjieffian teachings, and it is not a jargon word in the Michaelian teachings, but let’s take a look and see if we can learn something of value anyway. Personally, as I read the transcriptions, I notice that the subject appears in several interesting contexts, such as Essence Contact and Centers. It was also interesting enough in various contexts that Yarbro included three mentions of boredom in her book Messages from Michael.

Boredom in the Original Michaelian Group

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The word first appeared very early in the sessions, and continued to appear until near the end of the original Michaelian group. The first mention of boredom is what the “Essence” sometimes experiences if the Personality is misbehaving:

Dick: My patients have headaches and I have no inkling of why they have chronic ones. Some I just don’t understand at all. I can’t figure out why they have headaches all the time.

Headaches are repressed emotions. Many things can be said through the painful head. Most frequently, a weariness of the body coupled with a bored, trapped Essence will produce the worst headache..... [04 September 1973, MFM, p. 228]

This statement is subject to various interpretations because of the ambiguity of what the word Essence refers to. Check out the chapter on “Essence and Personality” for the changing understanding of that word over the history of the development of the Michaelian teachings. There you will see that Gurdjieff’s understanding of Essence is more like what, in subsequent Michael communities, came to be called “True Personality”. If this were the meaning of Essence in this passage, it could feel “bored and trapped” when False Personality was in control of the life. This interpretation is consonant with the statement that “entrapment in the body and the Chief Feature [a component of False Personality] are Karma for Essence” (17 October 1973). In this interpretation, Essence is some transcendent component of the human experience that can get bored when the immanent component of the human experience is in control. An alternative explanation of this passage, as we will see below, is that the word Essence often refers to the Role, and the Role embodied in the Personality needs to be meaningfully engaged in order to avoid boredom. Therefore, my alternate interpretation of the statement above, and below, is that the Essence as expressed through the Role is what gets bored if it feels trapped in unsatisfactory conditions.

The following series of Q&A exchanges elaborate on the phenomenon of Essence boredom, whatever that word refers to:

Dick: I would like to ask about my son, whom he [Michael] has said was a final Cycle Old Soul, and he is out there tinkering with his car. I guess I'm below him in the Cycles and I can't help him. What can I do to help him?

We are not aware of any problems in Rick. We find no fault with him. He has few Ribbons to burn. He has almost completely returned to his primeval Essence. He is bored a bit.

Dick: But I feel lousy.

The body is tired, the Essence is bored; what would you expect from that combination? We would expect a weariness of the entire psychosomatic apparatus.

Dick: What can I do?

Sleep will help the body. The Essence must pursue ecstasy in its own way or it is bored. [18 September 1973]

Regarding Dick’s son, having seen it all and done it all, there is not much that a person, or an Essence, at the end of the cycle of reincarnation can get excited about. Regarding Dick, whatever Essence meant in this statement, surely it is at the high end of the “psychosomatic apparatus”. At the lower end of the psychosomatic apparatus is the Personality self.

It is possible for both the transcendent (Essence) and the immanent (Personality) poles of the psychosomatic apparatus to experience boredom. Discussion of boredom continued in another session, this time referring to Personality boredom at the immanent end of the human experience:

Dick: Am I correct in assuming that this [lack of perceived love in my life] is why I don't have any energy?

Emotionally, yes. You are also [physically] tired.

Dick: But this also produces boredom.

It does. [22 September 1973]

Apparently, a satisfying romantic relationship mitigates boredom for the Personality.

There are other reasons than lack of a love life for the Personality to feel boredom:

Dick: As I measure and have the ashes of life and see life as a bore, I know I'm not on the path. Progress would be more joyous and pleasurable and there would be a love to toil. I see also that to sit around stoned all day is not the way either. [06 October 1973]

Months later it was revealed that Dick was in the Repression Mode, and this was the cause of his perception that life was a bore.

Sue: Why am I sleeping so much? I go to bed at 7:30 every night.

You are sleeping because you are bored. Boredom is a vicious cycle. It causes sleep, which causes more ennui, which in turn causes a great need for sleep.... You must consciously break the cycle. [22 November 1973, MFM, p. 276]

If you find yourself to be bored, then you should ask what it is that would energize your True Personality and your Essence. Often this can be traced to a dissatisfied Role, because the Role is that component of the Personality that aspires to satisfy Essence. This was stated explicitly in the case of Artisans and Warriors:

Is everyone's Essence bored?

In this society, we would say the majority, yes. To stimulate it, of course, it must be presented with challenges, not struggles. When the Essence has to struggle, it refuses. Struggling is not worth the effort and it knows this. Insoluble problems are good examples of struggles that the [False] Personality loves and the Essence flees from through boredom.

What is Essence challenge?

Spiritual growth, for example. All forms of studious endeavor when undertaken for the sheer joy of the undertaking; some forms of religious pursuit; work that is in Essence [Role]. That is to say, for instance, painting was in Essence for the Old Artisan Raphael and his Essence was not bored.

What is in Essence for Warriors besides fighting?

Many positions involving administrations and leadership. Even supervisory positions in public recreation areas. We know of many Mature and Old Warriors in this country now working as park rangers and their Essences are not bored. [05 June 1974]

In the original Michaelian group transcriptions, sometimes the word Essence refers to Role and sometimes it does not, so one must check the context to make the discernment.

The following Q&A exchange is about plain old Personality boredom, not Essence or Role boredom.

Marty: I would like to ask about Dennis who is staying with us. It was said that I have a Sequence with him to give him shelter. He's been an alcoholic and I feel he can stay while he becomes situated in college, and then I'd like him to leave. Would this compromise the agreement to offer him shelter.

Given this man's history, your decision will give him the time to delay any decisions on his part and, hopefully, by the time the breather is over, you may change your mind and allow him to stay longer. This could, of course, go on for many months, and then he would never have to decide for himself. You have offered him shelter; now this man is bored and depressed but weak and dependent, yes, and wishes a pleasant solution for his boredom. We doubt seriously that he will carry out his desire academically, as this part of his life has been marked by fits and starts. He could be gently prodded toward a more active and independent life. One caution, however, Marty: if he begins to drink again as a result of this forced independence, it is not because of anything you have done or not done; it is because he will choose to drink.

Where does the boredom come from? Many offered an angle: Rationalization for our emotions we do not understand ... the result when one couldn't find others to do what he wanted.

What is the difference between boredom and depression?

We would say that the line is exceedingly thin, almost invisible. Boredom normally comes about when the individual is unable to meld his fantasy with the realities of everyday life, and this includes fantasied expectations of those around him... [03 September 1974]

Elsewhere it is said that frustrated expectations result in anger; that would be the typical reaction of an active personality. Boredom is another response to unrealistic expectations being thwarted; this would be the typical reaction of a passive personality. Unrealistic entertainment media that express adventures that are 'bigger than life' tend to make mundane life seem boring by comparison; they feed the fantasies.

Boredom is a negative emotion:

Liz: How can I get in touch with Intellectual Center?

This will be the most difficult for you and for all others in the Centering you are in, as it involves single-minded concentration and application of non-judgmental logic. Reading very studious works has done it for other students. Continuous study will also do it. The determining factor is the boredom factor. As soon as boredom creeps in, the Emotional Center has crept in too. Boredom is simply not intellectually possible. It is a lower [negative] emotional function. Most of the time, in fact, it is a function of the Emotional Part of Moving Center. [28 September 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Extinguishment" for a discussion of negative emotions, including boredom, which one should eliminate from one's life as part of one's psychotherapeutic path.

By they way, to extinguish boredom one should also extinguish one's Chief Feature and the Negative Poles of one's Overleaves:

Alice: My friend feels great negativity from his wife. I feel he is in the Repression Mode.

In the first place, the lady is not feeling negativity, just boredom, and this is perceived not as a negative emotion, but simply as a lack of emotion, by him. But you are correct in that this man is in the Repression

Mode. With his other Overleaves, he could unleash great talent on an unsuspecting world. Except for the Repression, he has the identical Overleaves of some of this world's great musicians. This man is a Spiritualist in the Intellectual Part of Emotional Center, more Impatient than Stubborn. But this is self-directed and there is much frustration at self for repressing the drive. [05 October 1974]

Perhaps the Fragment will choose Overleaves more wisely in subsequent lifetimes. One of the best hedges against both Personality and Essence boredom is to live one's life in the Positive Poles of one's Overleaves.

At this point in the Work, it is not necessary that you be receiving data. In order to focus, you must merely concentrate and focus your energies. If you are bored with the material being shared, that simply indicates to us that you are coming from an inappropriate Center. The same goes for apprehension over new students or visitors who happen to have strong Overleaves. If you respond with the appropriate Center, the apprehension will fade. [21 February 1975]

The negative Emotion of boredom can be one symptom of a larger pattern of malfunction having to do with Centers. Refer to the chapter "Centering Traps" for more information about responding to life situations from the appropriate Center for that situation.

Concluding Comments on Boredom

I like to put my thoughts in order with the help of a bulleted list.

- The same as with suffering of every kind, boredom is a symptom that there is something wrong with the way you are perceiving or living your life. Therefore, if you find yourself experiencing boredom, do some soul searching, figure out what that wrongness is, and take steps to do something about it.
- The Michaels have provided information about the causes of boredom, so consider them during your soul-searching. For instance, there are the usual suspects: the inappropriate use of Centers; the Negative Poles of Overleaves; the Chief Features; insufficient focus on satisfying the promptings of Role and Essence.
- There is no legitimate escape from boredom via such diversions as mindless entertainment and psychedelics. Don't fool yourself, because boredom cannot be fooled indefinitely; figure out what needs to be done to mitigate boredom.
- Several times the Michaels referred to "Essence boredom" in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. The word Essence is used ambiguously, so one must check the context of each mention. Apparently, boredom is not limited to not doing what your Role wants you to do; it also includes not doing what your soul and Essence planned for the lifetime.
- In MFM, there is one mention of boredom that we do not find in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that have become generally available: "Old souls are likely to drink [alcoholic beverages] from boredom or as a part of depression." [MFM, p. 213]

③ BROTHERHOOD (OCCULT)

Don't get the wrong idea from the title of this chapter. This is not a reference to a family relationship; it refers to an alleged group of spiritually advanced humans who are in a metaphorical 'family', not a physical family. This concept does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

So where did this notion originate? As usual, the internet is my friend that answers questions such as this.

The Occult Brotherhood per Wikipedia

This notion apparently originated in the late 18th Century, and Wikipedia even has an article on it. Underlines in the following quotation are my emphasis; pay particular attention to them (underlines are my emphasis):

INTRODUCTION

The Great White Brotherhood, in belief systems akin to Theosophy and New Age, are said to be perfected beings of great power who spread spiritual teachings through selected humans. The members of the Brotherhood may be known as the Masters of the Ancient Wisdom, the Ascended Masters, the Church Invisible, or simply as the Hierarchy. The first person to talk about them in the West was Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (Theosophy), after she and other people claimed to have received messages from them. These included Helena Roerich, Aleister Crowley, Alice A. Bailey, Guy Ballard, Geraldine Innocente (The Bridge to Freedom), Elizabeth Clare Prophet, Bob Sanders, and Benjamin Creme.

HISTORY

The idea of a secret organization of enlightened mystics, guiding the spiritual development of the human race, was pioneered in the late eighteenth century by Karl von Eckartshausen (1752–1803) in his book The Cloud upon the Sanctuary; Eckartshausen called this body of mystics, who remained active after their physical deaths on earth, the Council of Light. Eckartshausen's proposed communion of living and dead mystics, in turn, drew partially on Christian ideas such as the Communion of the Saints, and partially on previously circulating European ideas about secret societies of enlightened, mystical, or magic adepts typified by the Rosicrucians and the Illuminati.

The Mahatma Letters began publication in 1881 with information purportedly revealed by "Koot Hoomi" to Alfred Percy Sinnett, and were also influential on the early development of the tradition. Koot Hoomi, through Sinnett, revealed that high-ranking members of mystic organizations in India and Tibet were able to maintain regular telepathic contact with one another, and thus were able to communicate to each other, and also to Sinnett, without the need for either written or oral communications, and in a manner similar to the way that spirit mediums claimed to communicate with the spirits of the dead. The letters published by Sinnett, which proposed the controversial doctrine of reincarnation, were said to have been revealed through this means.

Eckartshausen's idea was expanded in the teachings of Helena P. Blavatsky as developed by Charles W. Leadbeater, Alice Bailey, and Helena Roerich. Blavatsky, founder of the Theosophical Society, attributed her teachings to just such a body of adepts; in her 1877 book Isis Unveiled, she called the revealers of her teachings the "Masters of the Hidden Brotherhood" or the "Mahatmas". Blavatsky claimed that she had made physical contact with these adepts' earthly representatives in Tibet; but also, that she continued to receive teachings from them through psychic channels, through her abilities of spirit mediumship.

Ideas about this secret council of sages, under several names, were a widely shared feature of late nineteenth century and early twentieth century esotericism. Arthur Edward Waite, in his 1898 Book of Black Magic and of Pacts, hinted at the existence of a secret group of initiates who dispense truth and wisdom to the worthy. A young Aleister Crowley, reading this, wrote to Waite and was directed to read von Eckartshausen's book. Crowley's search for this secret wisdom eventually led him to become a neophyte in the Hermetic Order of the Golden Dawn, which represented itself to be the visible and earthly outer order of the Great White Brotherhood. Within the Golden Dawn itself, its teachings claimed to be derived from a similar body of initiates which in that tradition were called the Secret Chiefs. ...

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Great_White_Brotherhood< — retrieved 25 December 2021]

Beyond what I quoted, the Wikipedia article has a rather extensive history of the subject; a number of modern esoteric traditions have spoken of it, so if you are curious, by all means refer to that article.

It is known from the original Michaelian group transcriptions that Richard and some other members of the original Michaelian group were at least a little bit familiar with Theosophy and Rosicrucianism (mentioned in the Wikipedia quotation), so those teachings are likely where they read about the Brotherhood.

An internet search on the subject reveals that many occultists and esotericists proclaim that the existence of the Occult Brotherhood can be traced back through the ancient so-called "mystery schools", that the Brothers have been responsible for the appearance of so-called "gods" and "extraterrestrials" as founders of myths and religions, and that the Brotherhood has been present during the entire history of humankind. Allegedly, this is a group of enlightened and spiritually powerful and influential individuals who have always been, and are even now, guiding the development of humanity, on the small scale and on the large scale. Some of these internet sources are referenced in what follows in this chapter. Looking at some of those resources, I was surprised to see how deep this little rabbit hole goes.

Now let's review the other mentions of the Occult Brotherhood in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. There are more than a dozen of them.

Occult Brotherhood per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The first mention of the Occult Brotherhood in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is this Q&A exchange:

Richard: Does the "Occult Brotherhood" still exist?

Yes. The Brotherhood cannot die out; it is far too widespread and the Brothers are too careful. This is the most ancient school.

Refer to the chapter "School" for more information about the Physical Plane as a metaphorical 'school' for evolving souls, and about formal schools that are established for spiritual development, from ancient to modern times.

Edgar: Could we have some information on the Rosicrucians?

Some of the Rosicrucians are bona fide Brothers; some are not. In the neophyte program, there is no screening; the winnowing comes later. The heaviest concentration is now in India rather than the Mid-East, where it formerly was.

Alice: Are the Brothers chosen because of their psychological health and strength?

Usually, they are "chosen" through telepathic communication. This should tell you where they are on the [spiritual] path. [25 December 1973]

Richard introduced the topic without introduction or explanation, so it must have been known to the group. Also, this notion of an Occult Brotherhood did not originate with the Michaels.

Two days after the first mention of the Occult Brotherhood, quoted above, the subject appeared again:

Edgar: Can you discuss energy and the concept of the pyramid?

... At the time of the building of the great pyramids in Egypt, the [Occult] Brotherhood was almost solely concentrated there. They [the pyramids] represent the outward symbol of the inner strength. [27 December 1973]

In the first mention of the Occult Brotherhood, they were said to now be concentrated in India, whereas formerly they were in the Middle East. In this second mention of the Occult Brotherhood, they were said to be concentrated in Egypt in ancient times, which is in the Middle East. Evidently they move around, in order to be at the spiritual 'hot spots' of the planet at different times in history.

The Egyptian pyramids are, from ancient to modern times, a source of wonder, and one of the things that is wondered is what their spiritual purpose was, if any. In other words, they prompt people to contemplate the supernatural, the spiritual, the extraterrestrial. Further on, we see the Michaels make the claim that they were constructed by the Brotherhood using their magical powers; they are a product of the superhuman abilities of Brothers.

Was Christ influenced by the Eleusinian mystery religion?

Not particularly, but [he] was heavily influenced by Socrates and Epicurus, as well as the Alexandrian Brotherhood, which really was a counterpart to the Eleusinian School. [10 January 1974]

Some ancient mystery schools are known to have been real, as they are recorded in ancient credible history books, the Eleusinian mystery school being one of them. You may read about ancient mystery schools here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Greco-Roman_mysteries and elsewhere on the internet. The subject of an Alexandrian school affiliated with the famed Library of Alexandria appeared enough times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that it prompted me to compile a chapter of its own on it in this Study Papers book: "Alexandria".

Barbara: Does this mention of Alexandria in Egypt have anything to do with the "White Brotherhood"?

By all means.... [22 January 1974]

From <https://holyorderofmans.org/advanced-activity/history-of-the-white-brotherhood/>: "A few centuries before the birth of Jesus, the White Brotherhood built a college of the higher sciences at Alexandria, similar to the former religious center they built in Heliopolis centuries earlier as one of the largest and best structures for the preservation of the ancient Egyptian records." No scholarly academic reference was given for this statement.

A few days later, the subject of the Egyptian Brotherhood came up again:

Cheryl: Why build these big pyramids? What was their function?

The pyramids were designed and built by the Occult Brotherhood, not by visitors from outer space. This had to do with a theory of channeling the life force much in the way that we would depict the reunion of the Fragments of ancient Entities. [27 January 1974]

My understanding of this is that the shape of the pyramids is like the shape of the Entity, with the combined power of the entire Entity at the capstone, and it emanates the life force down through successive layers (Side, Greater Cadence, Cadence) to the thousand Fragments at the base. This life force draws the Fragments toward reintegration with the Cadence, then the Greater Cadence, then the Side, then the entire Entity. More is said about this in the chapters "Kindred Souls" and "Casting".

Cheryl: Still, how did they do it? Each stone weighs two tons. How could they do it without modern technical machines?

This is no particular strain for a Brother; their powers were great. [27 January 1974]

The alleged supernatural or extraterrestrial origin of the Egyptian pyramids is, of course, a notion that is widespread in some esoteric communities, but repudiated by modern Egyptologists. Personally, I put this channeling into the unvalidatable category; there is no way to prove (or disprove) the Michaels' assertions here. However, I know someone personally who visited India on a pilgrimage, meeting there a guru whom he saw cause tree limbs to move toward him as if he were a magnet for them. Such supernatural powers even have a name: siddhis:

In Hinduism, Siddhis (Sanskrit: siddhi; fulfillment, accomplishment) are material, paranormal, supernatural, or otherwise magical powers, abilities, and attainments that are the products of yogic advancement through sādhanās such as meditation and yoga. The term ṛddhi (Pali: iddhi, "psychic powers") is often used interchangeably in Buddhism." [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Siddhi> — retrieved 28 December 2021]

Cheryl: Why did they do it?

Initially, the Brotherhood was concerned with the worship of Ra, or the continuing life force. This gradually transformed itself into the Horus-Osiris myth of the renewal of the creative force each year. This brought about great changes in the [Egyptian] civilization then under control of the Brotherhood. [27 January 1974]

Even in modern times, the pyramids are a source of inspiration to tourists and viewers of documentaries. Perhaps their influence is enough to transform lives for the better and the higher, the alleged function of the Occult Brotherhood.

The Occult Brotherhood was a hot topic at about this time in the original Michaelian group. A few days later it resurfaced:

Is this The Brotherhood? I understand Gurdjieff was "conscious" but not [Rodney] Collin, and that Fulton Sheen is a Transcendental Soul.

Call it the "transcendent Brotherhood" if you wish; that describes it.

Gene: Are there many who are alive in the physical today who are in The Brotherhood?

Many are now on the Physical Plane; many watch from other planes.

Cynthia: Are they gathering because of the "new [Infinite Soul] coming"? Is our source [the Michaels] transcendental?

The Transcendental Soul is only such when it manifests on the Physical Plane. Now, we are part of the Mid-Causal body. [03 February 1974]

From this and other descriptions, it seems that the Occult Brotherhood is not in the category of "Transcendental Soul". Rather, they are "Old Souls Transcendent" — see further on.

A question was asked concerning the Kabbalah.

This is the occult component of the Judaic thought. For the most part, it was valid in the beginning and has become somewhat corrupted with time, but there are several Kabbalists who are bona fide [Occult] Brothers. [13 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Kabbalah" in this Study Papers book, and the chapter "Kabbalism" in my book The Synthesis. Evidently, one of the jobs of members of the Occult Brotherhood is to participate, perhaps not always overtly, in esoteric groups and movements, as leaders and exemplars and revealers of occult knowledge.

Dick: Robert Monroe described meeting a mysterious group of entities on the Astral Plane. They apparently function on the Physical Plane, according to Monroe.... What about the mysterious entities that he describes in his book?

We see nothing unusual here in this. Mature Priests [such as Monroe] nightly encounter with the Essences of final-Level Old Souls.

Are the Old Souls aware of this consciously?

Some are. They come by it accidentally. If the Old Soul pursues anything, he normally has some successes. His Essence is restless and curious. He is like having a five year old at a seminar.

Are some of them part of The Brotherhood?

Some of them are [Occult] Brothers, not all. [10 March 1974]

If I am reading this correctly, some final-Level Old Souls are Occult Brothers. This is confirmed by later channeling — see below.

Regarding Keptic, a physician (?) in somebody's book.

This man studied at the museum. Of course, he was touched by the [Occult] Brotherhood. He was aware [of them], but not an initiate. [13 March 1974]

Evidently, Old Souls must be found and recognized and invited and initiated into the Occult Brotherhood by Brothers. The next mentions of the Brotherhood confirms this:

Dick described an encounter with a man in Berkeley several years ago.

These encounters can only come about with two who are on the [spiritual] path. The man in the encounter you describe was more than that, though; he was a[n Occult] Brother. [16 June 1974]

More is said about this mysterious encounter in a session a few days later:

Dick: The man I saw 2 years ago on Telegraph Avenue who is allegedly a member of the Occult Brotherhood — what is his SRG? I'd say he was in Balance so he is not in any Center, an Artisan, Fifth Level Old transcendent [Karma-free] soul in the Passion Mode, no Chief Feature, Spiritualist. Is he part of my Entity?

The only part we would disagree with is Sixth Level Old Soul, transcendent. In one who has achieved Balance, the goal has been reached, that is correct. [23 June 1974]

So, we have finally zeroed in on one of the defining characteristics of an Occult Brother: they are Old Souls “transcendent”, meaning that they are Karma-free, and they have achieved at least the fourth Level of Being (Balanced Man); refer to the chapter “Level of Being” for more information about that.

According to what is said in the final mention, there are levels of immersion in the Occult Brotherhood:

Dick: There was an offer by Michael to weave a tapestry of past lives. Are they ready for that now? Should we ask specific questions?

There is no need to ask specific questions. We would think you would examine your various reasons for evading this particular question; it is an interesting phenomenon.

We have told you before that those of you now on the Physical Plane and others who have lived within the past three decades and even perhaps most of those who lived in the past five decades and all those who will live again in the next two decades, have all lived during what we choose to call the “cardinal points” of these Cycles. In other words, you have lived during the centuries in which the most sweeping changes have occurred: philosophically, spiritually, culturally, and scientifically.

Five of you were present in the immediate area in each instance when the Infinite Soul manifested on this world. Those five knew each other well, as their lives were interwoven at the time. All of you had access to the words then and at the time of the last manifestation [of Jesus as the Infinite Soul].

All of you have been exposed to the Occult Brotherhood in the cradle of its existence, three of you becoming initiates but never Adepts. All of you have been, at one time, associated with the education of youth at a time when there were sweeping philosophical changes. All of you have this in common. You did not listen. We have more. [19 October 1974]

Perhaps the reason that members of the original Michaelian group were especially interested in the Occult Brotherhood is that they had contact with it in previous lives, as stated here. Refer to the chapter “Adept and Master” for a description of those advanced Levels of Being per the Gurdjieff and Michaelian teachings. The original Michaelian group members “blew it” again in this lifetime.

Concluding Comments on the Occult Brotherhood

Yarbro did not mention the Brotherhood in her book Messages from Michael, so the notion did not pass into subsequent Michaelian teachings groups that way. Louise and Leslie Briggs were in the original Michaelian group but had nothing to say about it in the transcriptions of their group that have become available to us. The notion surfaced with the original Michaelian group transcriptions in the mid-1990s, but it has not gained much traction in Michaelian teachings groups since then that I know of. Thus, so far as I know, the notion has been safely ignored, and so far as I can tell, it can continue to be safely ignored. Even though the Michaels said that this was a real thing, I do not see any value in it, as I do in other important or integral components of the Michaelian teachings. There are some things in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that strain credibility, and this channeling about the Occult Brotherhood is one of them. Even though the notion has a long history in the belief systems of numerous occult groups, it might or might not be true; one wonders if it can be validated experientially. In my view, the utilitarian value of the Michaelian teachings is not connected to this particular revelation.

① BUFFERS

The topic of this chapter is yet another one of many that discuss one or another of the components of the Gurdjieffian teachings that were adopted and adapted in the Michaelian teachings during the original Michaelian group, but which did not subsequently find its way into the Michaelian teachings. For an introduction to the general subject of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the involvement of founding original Michaelian group members with it, refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton”.

Even though the Michaels used the term “buffering” on numerous occasions during the original Michaelian group, Yarbro did not mention it in her book about the original Michaelian group, Messages from Michael, perhaps because, near as I can tell, Yarbro was not familiar with Gurdjieff. The Michaels have not used it in subsequent groups so far as I have been able to determine, perhaps because subsequent groups are not familiar with Gurdjieffian teachings. Therefore, the term, and even the concept referred to by the term, has not become common knowledge in the Michaelian teachings community subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Nevertheless, I believe Gurdjieff’s psychological insights are worth discussing, the subject of Buffering being one of them. I also believe that it is worthwhile to make the historical record of the original Michaelian group reasonably complete. Taking into consideration that the word refers to a concept with a specific and special meaning in both the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings, I capitalize it, as one of many jargon words.

Basically and briefly, Buffering is a Gurdjieff term for the phenomenon where the Personality deflects, denies, represses, and compartmentalizes Shocks and Friction that would otherwise Awaken the Sleeping Essence. In psychological parlance, this concept is approximately equivalent to so-called “defense mechanisms”.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that Buffering is a negative to be mitigated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Buffers per the Dictionary

Even though I consider Buffer to be a jargon word in the Michaelian teachings, it is obviously not an invented word; it has a common English definition:

- 1: any of various devices or pieces of material for reducing shock or damage due to contact.
- 2: a means or device used as a cushion against the shock of fluctuations in business or financial activity.
- 3: something that serves as a protective barrier, such as:
 - a: buffer state (neutral governmental entity between two hostile governmental entities);
 - b: a person who shields another, especially from annoying routine matters;
 - c: mediator. [<https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/buffer> — retrieved 21 June 2021]

So let’s see how and where Gurdjieff applied this word to his psychology and philosophy.

Buffers per Gurdjieff

Because Gurdjieff had a lot more to say about this than the Michaels during the original Michaelian group, I quote a number of sources written by Gurdjieffian students. Synonyms for Buffer are underlined.

There is a latent force of meaning hidden within this idea of kundabuffer which, at certain moments, when we pause long enough for it to touch us, can penetrate to another level of our consciousness — to a level where it is able to disturb us. To disturb us in a way we know and intuit that we need to be disturbed [italics in original]. Yet such moments are rare. Why? Because the shock inherent within an objective truth so easily gets deflected, neutralized, by one or another form of buffer — that is, through that unseen predisposition by means of which we are 'protected' from the discomfort of having to deal with what otherwise would be disturbing to our familiar and cozy frame of reference. The various and sundry forms of these buffers are beyond count, but, for our purpose here, two will suffice. One is to inwardly genuflect to the authority of the personage who has communicated the shock, thereby sidestepping its intrinsic awakening force. The other is all too readily to 'agree' with the formulation within which the shock of a newly revealed truth is hidden — on however superficial a level. After all, who of us is not able to generate a virtual litany of absurdities of human behavior? Having thus 'agreed', we are then at liberty to proceed as usual, and thus to escape the thrust of the new revelation. [<https://gurdjiefflegacy.org/40articles/hoyt.htm> — retrieved 21 June 2021]

According to the Fourth Way, a major obstacle to inner unity is that ... we are protected from seeing our contradictions by "buffers". Buffers prevent contradictory or separate things from clashing. Additionally, buffers function in the dark. If one were instead to put the light on, to experience them fully, their power would weaken and one could begin to observe oneself fully. [<https://fourthwaytoday.org/dealing-with-contradictions/> — retrieved 21 June 2021]

Gurdjieff changed the language he used to describe a number of traditional themes, so much so that we don't always recognize them. For example, he used the word buffers to describe the process within us which engages in self-will. Anything which prevents us from seeing what we are — a lie we tell ourselves in order to avoid seeing the truth about what we are — is a part of selfishness, or self-will. One says to oneself, as he explained, "I'm always on time", and thus one gives oneself a lie which allows one to always be late, to behave as selfishly as one wishes, without regard for how it affects others. Every buffer is actually a selfish obstacle to the truth. It relies on our self-indulgence and self-will in order to exist and prosecute its actions. [<https://zenyogagurdjieff.blogspot.com/2014/05/buffers-self-will-and-sin.html> — retrieved 21 June 2021]

How does someone use the [Gurdjieff] work as 'self calming'? By 'blindly' believing that being part of such a teaching guarantees one a meaningful and purposeful existence, a form of propping up one's 'ego' and acquiring a sense of 'identity' etc. Self calming is the action of 'buffers', which keep the various diverse aspects of a being separated from each other. This separation removes the chances for the suffering that can come from the contact and interaction of these different aspects, particularly the contact of 'contradictory' aspects. Self calming does not have to appear as a calming action, and can take any form. For instance, habitual forms of suffering are used as a form of self calming, and these reactions can be anything but calm in their nature and appearance. Self calming is a way to channel the energy of experience into established outlets so as to preserve the current form of functioning.

Self calming doesn't have to make you feel better, in terms of providing a 'positive' feeling. It simply reaffirms the present habitual outlook. Perhaps someone is accustomed to feeling 'apathetic' for example, then self calming works to maintain this etc. The formatory apparatus [a Part of Intellectual Center which "cannot think; it can only recite"] can be seen to be involved in self calming, where experience is immediately formatted into the habitual response and interpretation.

If self calming is the default response to experience then there is no room for a conscious reception of an impression, as the first shock etc. Work with attention and habits is required to enable the co-presence and contact of the various different aspects and 'I's.

As I said, the self calming works to reaffirm the habitual response and interpretation of experience. It stops new experience and impressions from being received and digested. It works to inhibit the experience of contradiction and multiplicity in oneself. People can use the work in the same way, as something that habitually arises in response to experience in such a way as to preserve the given identity and views. Perhaps some friction arises from a sense of purposelessness, the ideas of the work may arise in such a way as to provide some buffer to this friction. Perhaps such friction is simply dismissed as some manifestation of 'false personality' etc. It is labeled in a way that provides some relief through a sense of understanding. This habitual response would be a form of self calming using the ideas of the work as a means.

Self calming appears to be an inherited trait, fostered by our education and social upbringing etc. Buffers serve the purpose of survival and self preservation. As said in [Gurdjieff's book] Beelzebub, it might be thought that man would kill himself if he realized his true purpose and place in the Cosmos. This would be a disaster for the greater scheme, and so man must be preserved from this potential. Hence the [so-called] kundabuffer implantation etc. The arising of conscience can be considered as deadly without the appropriate preparation. Buffers ensure a certain form of survival, but to fulfill man's potential individuals have to work to remove their buffers.

Just as a point on buffers, when there is a degree of contact between the different and contradictory aspects, which buffers usually hinder, one of the first reactions is to attempt to do something in order to 'resolve' the contradiction and friction etc. It is said that at first there is the need to be able to bear such a moment of relative contact without reacting by attempting to change etc. This being mentioned in connection with the need for impressions to be assimilated so as to be remembered and become a more active source for our manifestations. [<https://gurdjieffandbeelzebub.wordpress.com/2019/06/06/buffers-and-self-calming/> — retrieved 21 June 2021]

Another website, <https://gnosticosotericstudyworkaids.blogspot.com/2015/05/what-is-kundabuffer-or-kundartiguador.html>, also has a thorough description of kundabuffer and buffers.

Now that you have the Gurdjieffian perspective on buffers, let's take a look at the Michaelian perspective.

Buffers per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

In only three Q&A exchanges during the original Michaelian group did the subject of Buffers appear. Let's examine them.

Cynthia: Is False Personality something the soul chooses for growth?

Yes, of course. That is valid. Why else vary the locale and choose the families that you do?

Barbara: Do I have the right idea of equating False Personality with Jung's [concept of the] persona?

Dick: False Personality is all that culturally-induced trash.

Someone helpful: It serves a useful purpose and also Buffers the Essence.

False Personality is only a part of this. The total False Personality includes, of course, all of the "shoulds" that you learned in childhood, the various machinations you go through as a result of your goals and those reactions that are solely the result of the Tape Loops provided by the Attitude. [24 February 1974]

These comments mention a couple of phenomena that Buffer the Personality from experiencing Essence, namely "False Personality" and "Tape Loops"; refer to chapters in this Study Papers book on those subjects.

The next Q&A exchange was in the context of the Robert Monroe program to facilitate journeys out of the body, aka astral traveling, wherewith one could gain insights about the nature of reality:

Does this technique make it possible to remember?

You do anyway, but your Buffers knock out the recall.

How does one eliminate Buffers?

If you encounter a situation that would produce guilt in the body, the body will not allow you to remember, or, at least, not with any pleasure. Guilt is in [False] Personality, yes. [10 March 1974]

The Monroe program, as with so many other psychological and spiritual techniques, was aimed at transcending False Personality. If one is to bypass one's Buffers, the first step is be cognizant about the existence of Buffers. Many spiritual paths provide procedures for their minimization. Besides the Monroe program and what the Michaels offered, members also partook of Werner Erhard's EST; there are chapters in this Study Papers book on both Monroe and Erhard.

The third and last mention of Buffers is this:

Sex is only one of these things, and you are not alone in this by any means. There is not one student in this room who is not Buffering the true fears about communal living right now. [21 February 1975]

Living in a commune is one of the best spiritual techniques for making one aware of one's Buffers, and forcing one to confront them and transcend them. Refer to the chapter on "Communal Living" for the whole story.

Defense Mechanism per Psychology

It is not as if the concept of Buffers is limited to spiritual paths such as Gurdjieff and the Michaels; it is actually a well-known concept in psychology, but there it goes by a different name. Underlined words in the following quotation from Wikipedia are synonyms for "defense mechanisms":

In psychoanalytic theory, a defense mechanism is an unconscious psychological operation that functions to protect a person from anxiety-producing thoughts and feelings related to internal conflicts and outer stressors.

Defense mechanisms may result in healthy or unhealthy consequences depending on the circumstances and frequency with which the mechanism is used. Defense mechanisms are psychological strategies brought into play by the unconscious mind to manipulate, deny, or distort reality in order to defend against feelings of anxiety and unacceptable impulses and to maintain one's self-schema or other schemas [aka False Personality]. These processes that manipulate, deny, or distort reality may include the following: repression, or the burying of a painful feeling or thought from one's awareness even though it may resurface in a symbolic form; identification, incorporating an object or thought into oneself; and rationalization, the justification of one's behavior and motivations by substituting "good" acceptable reasons for [in place of] the actual motivations. In psychoanalytic theory, repression is considered the basis for other defense mechanisms.

Healthy people normally use different defense mechanisms throughout life. A defense mechanism becomes pathological only when its persistent use leads to maladaptive behavior such that the physical or mental health of the individual is adversely affected. Among the purposes of ego defense mechanisms is to protect the mind/self/ego from anxiety or social sanctions or to provide a refuge from a situation with which one cannot currently cope. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Defence_mechanism — retrieved 27 August 2021]

If you compare these descriptive words for defense mechanisms with the descriptive words for Buffers you will see many identical and similar words and concepts.

Concluding Comments on Buffers

The concept of Buffers is useful in common psychotherapy as well as the uncommon spiritual path. That is to say, it is salubrious to squarely and honestly face the truth about ourselves and other people and the world that we live in. Do not lie to yourself; let Shocks and Friction do the work of purifying your consciousness. Use psychotherapeutic and spiritual tools to eliminate Buffers.

CASTING

... Chapter 4N, “Casting Concerns” in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart has a lot more to say on this subject...

CAYCE, EDGAR

Regarding channeling. There is actually a good chunk of the original Michaelian group info on Cayce (which I will paste in and discuss below). Cayce has been a compelling force in the psychic world but also, his considerable healing work would have been of interest to the medical people involved in the group. ARE (Association for Research and Enlightenment) is the group in Virginia Beach that maintains his legacy. Cayce is an example of someone who could go into trance and essentially be in contact with the akashic record. He was not bereft of CF in the process, and, I think, often picked up data from other parallels and some things were skewed due to his own belief structure -- because even in a trance state there appears to be filters in place. I would say that the medical channeling was often clearest MOSTLY due to the fact that he did NOT have any kind of medical background. The information was concise and communicated in lay terms, using commonly known items.

You do not need specialty knowledge to channel, whether trance or conscious. What specialty knowledge or broad knowledge base DOES get you, is the ability to ask extremely precise and relevant questions. Something you see in the Ra Material. There Carla Reuckart is trance channeling (and under the influence of LSD in the beginning sessions) to a degree that resonates from the knowledge base of the questioner, Don Elkins, not her own thought. But she was/is very knowledgeable herself in her own way, and also very mystically Christian. And that comes through because her source appears to read her well enough to communicate in terms she will understand.

Below are most of the original Michaelian group refs to Cayce, and they are very interesting:

Comment on the value of her present work done at the "Association for Research and Enlightenment" [Edgar Cayce] clinic, especially their views of dream interpretation.

Some of the work being done there is extremely valuable. We are not impressed with what appears to be a doctrinal bias, but aside from that, yes.

Religious bias?

Not specifically religious, more judgmental. But this pertains to the scientific method of research. The dream work is perhaps now their most valuable study.

What about Edgar Cayce and his predictions that all of California will fall into the Ocean?

This man, along with many others, is an apocalyptic. [Inclined to doomsdaying.]

It has been said that when the messiah comes, there will be an upheaval.

The upheaval will be emotional and spiritual. It will be a cataclysm, you may be sure of that, but not physical.

The information received by the man Edgar [Cayce] in his trances was difficult for him to transmit as it was so contrary to his own belief system. The more rigid and orthodox the person is, the more ambiguous the transmission will be. We would answer specific questions concerning that book.

Is Edgar Cayce correct in his translations [of New Testament book Revelations]?

He is much more succinct than we are.

A spontaneous healing appeared to have occurred with a lady afflicted with numerous physical ailments, including arthritis. What happened here?

What occurred here was a transfer of higher hydrogens [a Gurdjieff concept] by a person well able to transfer. This, incidentally, is what happens when spontaneous healings occur. When you give higher hydrogens, they do produce remarkable phenomena. For instance, the man Edgar Cayce was able to remain in trance for prolonged periods during which the personality was deactivated. He received much high hydrogen during that time and was able to transfer these, but as he never received any in return, his own "Level of Being" never changed and he remained secondary man [Gurdjieff's "Man # 2" — primarily emotional] throughout his life.

Can this lady be healed?

[Though not completely healed,] she could be much better as a result of the transfer. Working with her [over a long period of time] would eventually be more effective. The higher the transfer, the more healing can occur. If the highest attainable level can be reached — that is, higher intellectual center — then healing can be complete. This is how the masters do it, but the transfers from transient higher states are quite effective. All of you could learn this, but until you have balance in being, it will only make you a slave to the process, like the man [Edgar] Cayce. [date]

Now, this last bit is very interesting. Although Phil may need to address the Gurdjieff concepts of higher hydrogens for it to be entirely clear. HOWEVER, note that despite being “deactivated” from personality, and able to transfer higher healing energy, Cayce was unable to utilize them for himself. Also, he remained in personality consciously and not even man #3, let alone #4, and yet was a good psychic channel. (Remember too that Eugene Trout of the original Michaelian group was said to have the ability to channeling healing through touch -- so a non-verbal form.)

This last snip is just rife with good and tantalizing info. We will need to put a whole section on healing together at some point.

But the point I want to make here is that there is a lot more happening than just conscious or trance channeling. There is the center from which it is processed in the channel and the source of higher planes. And make note, we are all ahead of the place Cayce was in his life. Channeling done from balance should never have limits or lead to exhaustion, it should lead to a feedback of joy that energizes. Any exhaustion is a token of the struggle to overcome CF in order to make a connection. And channeling is, I would say, “listening” with an agreement to process a specific teaching. We are mostly used to intellectually centered channels, but there are energy- and emotional-centered channels AND sources.

The Logos moves into Avatars from differing planes depending on the higher centered teaching it wishes to expound. Manifestation is probably the highest form of bringing spiritual information/presence into the world. Advanced channeling, eh? And this:

It has been said that when the messiah comes, there will be an upheaval.

The upheaval will be emotional and spiritual. It will be a cataclysm, you may be sure of that, but not physical. ... is why, for those of us studying the Logos, we understand that we are more effective in emotional center for any work being done at this time of transition. Along with the fact that Michaelian students tend towards relentless intellectual center and in order to reach some balance we will all have to start becoming accustomed to the emotional center.

This is why the warning:

But until you have balance in being, it will only make you a slave to the process...

⑦ CENTER OF GRAVITY

The topic of this chapter is yet another one of many that discuss one or another of the components of the Gurdjieffian teachings that were adopted and adapted in the Michaelian teachings during the original Michaelian group. For an introduction to the general subject of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the involvement of founding original Michaelian group members with it, refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton”.

Even though the Michaels found it expedient to use the term “center of gravity” in appropriate situations, Yarbrow did not mention it in her book about the original Michaelian group, Messages from Michael, [verify] and the Michaels have not used it in subsequent groups so far as I have been able to determine. Therefore, the term, and even the concept referred to by the term, has not become common knowledge in the Michaelian teachings community subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Nevertheless, I believe it is worth discussing, and I believe that it is worthwhile to make the historical record of the original Michaelian group reasonably complete. Because the phrase refers to a concept with a specific meaning in both the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings, I capitalize it, as one of many jargon concepts.

The phrase “center of gravity” appears eight times in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, always in reference to a person’s strongest Center of the seven Centers. That was not the case in the original Gurdjieffian teachings. One reason to have a chapter on it in this Study Papers book is to approach completeness of this compilation of, and exposition on, the original Michaelian group material. Another reason is that it provides an opportunity to introduce how Gurdjieffian students understood Centers as distinct from how Michaelian students have come to understand them, because there are differences.

Center of Gravity per Fourth Way Teachers

Based on a little research, it appears to me that the application of the phrase Center of Gravity has changed over the evolution of Fourth Way teachings, meaning, those derived from Georges Gurdjieff; refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton” to read about the part of the story that is relevant to the Michaelian teachings.

The following quotations provide some indication of how Gurdjieff himself understood the phrase “center of gravity”, not in terms of the Centers, but in terms of concentrated focus on the endeavor of becoming a unified person in terms of being and doing:

Man number four is not born ready-made. He is born one, two, or three, and becomes four only as a result of efforts of a definite character. Man number four is always the product of school work. He can neither be born, nor develop accidentally or as the result of ordinary influences of bringing up, education, and so on. Man number four already stands on a different level to man number one, two, and three; he has a permanent center of gravity which consists in his ideas, in his valuation of the work, and in his relation to the school. In addition his psychic [higher] centers have already begun to be balanced; one center in him cannot have such a preponderance over others as is the case with people of the first three categories. He already begins to know himself and begins to know whither he is going. [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 72]

Right work on oneself begins with the creation of a permanent center of gravity. When a permanent center of gravity has been created everything else begins to be disposed and distributed in subordination to it. The question comes to this: From what and how can a permanent center of gravity be created? And to this may be replied that only a man’s attitude to the work, to school, his valuation of the work, and his realization of the mechanicalness and aimlessness of everything else can create in him a permanent center of gravity. [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 259]

Refer to chapters “Work” and “School” and “Balanced Man” and “Centers, Higher” and “Mechanical Man” for the Michaelian take on those Gurdjieffian notions. The following quotations provide some indication of how Ouspensky understood the phrase “center of gravity”, not in terms of the Centers, but in terms of concentrated focus on the endeavor of becoming a unified person in terms of being and doing:

The idea of center of gravity can be interpreted in many different ways. It is a more or less permanent aim and the realization of the relative importance [hierarchy, priority list] of things in connection with this aim. This means that certain interests become more important than anything else — one acquires a permanent direction, one does not go one day in one direction and another day in another; one goes in one direction and one knows the direction. The stronger your center of gravity, the more you are free from accident. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 91]

The principle of “accident” was another Gurdjieffian notion. People without a Center of Gravity stumble and bumble their way through life. A metaphor for Center of Gravity is that one should have a ‘north star’, by which one ‘navigates’ their journey across the ‘sea’; otherwise they will ‘drift’ with the ‘wind’ and the ‘waves’.

We must realize that all this refers to [Level of] Being. What are the features of our Being? The chief feature of our Being is that we are many. If we want to work on our Being, make it correspond more to our aim, we must try to become one. But this is a very far aim. What does it mean to become one? The first step, which is still very far, is to create a permanent center of gravity...which balances our physical life, but in ourselves we do not have such a balance. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 264]

Permanent center of gravity comes at a certain moment in relation to the work, when one is already sure what one is doing, and sure of the system, and when this becomes more important than anything else, when it occupies the chief place in one’s life. This is the moment when permanent center of gravity is established. But when one is interested in the ideas of the system, and yet at any moment something else may become more important, this means that one has no center of gravity. [P.D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 285]

(At the time of this writing, my Center of Gravity is the writing of my books; after the necessary daily mundane affairs are taken care of, I work on my books.)

Personally, I like the notion of Center of Gravity as Gurdjieff and Ouspensky presented it. It is consistent with the Michaelian teachings as presented in the original Michaelian group, namely that spiritual aspirants do well to focus on the Work to the exclusion of other aspects of mundane life. For instance, refer to the chapter “Commitment”. However, a brief internet search revealed that the above notion of Center of Gravity was extended and applied to one’s primary Center, to which the other six Centers were subordinate. For instance, in the Wikipedia article on the Fourth Way teaching about Centers, I found this:

In the book The Fourth Way, Ouspensky refers to the ‘center of gravity’ as being a center which different people primarily operate from (intellectuals [Intellectual Center], artists [Emotional Center], and sports enthusiasts [Moving Center], for example, might represent each of these centers).”
>[https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Centers_\(Fourth_Way\))< — retrieved 27 February 2023]

When I looked for “Center of Gravity” in the index of Ouspensky’s Fourth Way book, I found no such notion. So, whatever the reality of Gurdjieff’s and Ouspensky’s thinking may be, in the original Michaelian group transcriptions the phrase, Center of Gravity, always refers to one’s primary Centering.

Center of Gravity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Following are the instances where the phrase occurs in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. All of the people who asked about Center of Gravity were familiar with the Gurdjieffian teachings because they were current members or former members of Robert Burton’s Fellowship of Friends.

Ilene: What is my Center of Gravity?

Your Center of Gravity is Emotional. [08 September 1973]

Kathryn: I would like to ask [about] the Center of Gravity, Body Type, Soul Level and Role of the lady I live with now in Pacific Grove. Her name is Ramona.

This is a Mature Priest. This is an Emotionally Centered Lunar-Venusian. The maturity of the soul sometimes modifies physical characteristics. [10 November 1973]

Cheryl: Is there a different Goal in each life?

Yes, usually you do [have a different Goal]. There are seven and you must necessarily repeat them, but how you repeat them in conjunction with the Center of Gravity and the Body Type determines the success you have. [03 December 1973]

Cheryl: I would like to know my Center of Gravity and also what I was doing in the parallel time frame.

Cheryl is at the moment the most nearly Balanced of all, but still primarily Emotionally Centered. [27 December 1973]

Alice: Would it be better for a marriage relationship to have the persons in different Centers of Gravity? I understand that my husband and I are both Intellectually Centered. Is this a source of our problems?

Being in the same Center of Gravity usually makes for an easier relationship rather than a more difficult one.

Your problems are in the difference in Goals [Growth versus Submission]. [20 January 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Overleaves, Interactions” for more discussion of that topic.

Susan: I'd like to ask a mundane question first. What is my Goal and Center of Gravity?

Mostly Lunar, some Venusian, Emotionally Centered. Susan has made the transition from Submission to Growth. [20 January 1974]

The data concerning internal Centers of Gravity presented by these gentlemen [Gurdjieff and Ouspensky] is, of course, valid, as is the information pertaining to the separation of the Earth-bound Personality and the spiritual Essence. Beyond that, we have taken you into another realm ... [08 February 1974]

Betty asked about Centering and what force makes one achieve Balance.

The achievement of Balance is an act of will. The force behind it is the combined energies of the true “Center of Gravity” within you. You always have this energy, but normally you allow it to dissipate unused. When you work toward Balance, you learn to conserve this energy and divert it into the [spiritual] Work. This energy does not run out, by the way. It is part of the neutral universal flow and is infinite. You must learn to tap it, however.

Your Centers of Gravity are now top heavy or off true center. When you go to Balance, it is centered — ergo — Balanced. Not very mystical, but far more practical. [26 November 1974]

Obviously, these uses of the phrase are not as Gurdjieff and Ouspensky described it as quoted above; rather, the phrase always refers to one of the seven Centers.

CENTERS, HIGHER

In the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings, the spiritual path consisted more or less of learning to consistently achieve, by the application of specific techniques, the so-called “higher” Centers. There are chapters such as “The Spiritual Path” and “Spiritual Growth” and “Levels of Being” that discuss this process in general, and there are chapters such as “Concentration and Meditation” and “Fasting” and “Psychedelics” that discuss these practices, but this chapter is dedicated to the description of the goal of these processes and practices.

Higher Centers process “Psychic Energy” (refer to the chapter by that name) whereas the ‘lower’ Centers process physical energy. Correlate with ‘higher’ and ‘lower’ levels of the Physical Plane.

CENTER, MAGNETIC

[[If I can't figure out how to make this idea more relevant to the original Michaelian group/Michaelian teachings, I should delete this chapter.]]

The phrase, "magnetic center", is a Gurdjieff term for that within yourself that draws you to the spiritual path. From <http://www.philosophia.bem-vindo.net/modules/glossary/entry.php?entryID=1161>:

The results of the influences whose source lies outside life collect together within him, he remembers them together, feels them together. They begin to form within him a certain whole.... And after a certain time they form within him a kind of magnetic center, which begins to attract to itself kindred influences and in this manner it grows.

This phrase is only found once in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

It has been said that the Intellectual Part of Emotional Center is the seat of the "magnetic center" for [spiritual] teachings. Is this so?

That is valid. It also produces the top historians and social scientists, most writers and journalists, many war correspondents, anthropologists, and archaeologists. In this [Emotional] Part, the intellect is romanticized. [03 March 1974]

But it is mentioned a number of times in the Gurdjieffian teachings, which is of course where the questioner above got the idea. Following are some quotes about it.

Magnetic Center per Gurdjieff

Ouspensky quotes Gurdjieff at length on this topic:

"The results of the influences whose source lies outside life collect together within him, he remembers them together, feels them together. They begin to form within him a certain whole. He does not give a clear account to himself as to what, how, and why, or if he does give an account to himself, then he explains it wrongly. But the point is not in this, but in the fact that the results of these influences collect together within him, and after a certain time they form within him a kind of magnetic center, which begins to attract to itself kindred influences and in this manner it grows. If the magnetic center receives sufficient nourishment, and if there is no strong resistance on the part of the other sides of a man's personality which are the result of influences created in life, the magnetic center begins to influence a man's orientation, obliging him to turn round and even to move in a certain direction. When the magnetic center attains sufficient force and development, a man already understands the idea of the way and he begins to look for the way. The search for the way may take many years and may lead to nothing. This depends upon conditions, upon circumstances, upon the power of the magnetic center, upon the power and the direction of inner tendencies which are not concerned with this search and which may divert a man at the very moment when the possibility of finding the way appears." [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 200]

Ouspensky continues to quote Gurdjieff on this subject for another few pages.

CETACEANS

According to the Michaels, humans are not the only ensouled animal species on this planet. By “ensouled” I mean an individual Fragment soul, as distinct from “lower” animals that have what the Michaels referred to as a “hive” or “group” soul. It was said that Cetaceans — whales, dolphins, porpoises — also had Fragment souls.

This subject came up several times during the original Michaelian group, and these are documented in the next section.

Cetaceans per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Could you explain hive souls? Were they part of one soul that split?

That is valid. Until the dominant species arose, all were part of the group soul. This accounts for the inability of the lower animals to reason independently. They reason to a certain extent in herd schools and packs where the vibrations are stronger and the energy level higher. Whales have individual souls. Most planets on which Creatures of Reason reside have [both] an aquatic and terrestrial [on land] culture.

Eugene: If two thousand years ago I had a pet cat, could that etheric part of it be in my current lifetime and recognize me?

That happens often.

We discussed whales and someone said they did not think they are Creatures of Reason.

We disagree that the whales are not Creatures of Reason. They simply cannot manipulate their environment to the extent you [humans] can. This is why they are so large; the size gives them a chance [to survive and evolve in spite of the inability to manipulate their environment].

Do we ever incarnate as whales?

No, you would not incarnate as whales. [03 April 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Creatures of Reason” for further information about that distinct stage in the evolution of consciousness, apparently happening on many planets in the universe.

Discussion of whales. Michael previously made the statement that planets had terrestrials (working towards consciousness) and aquatics — which were whales on our planet.

Did the statement on whales include dolphins and porpoises?

Yes it did, all of the cetaceans.

What does an Intellectual Scholar whale do?

He remembers.

What about whales that beach themselves?

They [Scholar whales] pass on to succeeding generations a wealth of information including the fact [that] they are dwindling, which accounts for a radical change in breeding habits.

What about the whales grounding themselves?

Often, they merely sense that life is almost over. If they are too weak to surface, they will often beach themselves.

What about the story of Jonah and the whale in the Bible?

The story, of course, is allegorical and has to do with mutual cooperation.

Do whales go to the Astral Plane between lives?

Whales spend an Astral interval and yes, you may contact them.

Are there Karmic Ribbons between whales and humans?

No.

Do whales have Transcendental Souls or a higher mental body known to them?

No.

Do they have religion?

Of a sort yes, not based upon an authority figure but based on an adoration of the life force.

[Is] Michaelian teachings any whales?

No.

Do they go on as we do to Entity and Tao?

Yes, except you must remember they are relatively free of ambition and greed, which are the two prime movers of civilization. The necessary ingredients are not there for them to require this type of periodic Shock (having the Infinite Soul manifest).

When [they] go to the Causal plane, could they teach humans?

Yes, they can if they choose to.

Dick: Could we get a whale Entity teacher as teacher to us?

This would be possible, yes, perhaps with a more experienced and Emotionally-Centered trance medium [other than Sarah who was Intellectually Centered]. We would point out to you that Warrior whales often attack anything threatening the school. There is always a King in the lead. The Sages do not ever attack. Warrior dolphins have been known to kill sharks much larger than themselves when their mates or progeny were threatened.

Do dolphins and whales communicate with each other?

There are barriers, much the same as your language barriers present.

Are [their] thought patterns the same as all Creatures of Reason?

In Essence, yes, but you must take False Personality into consideration.

Do whales have False Personality?

Yes, they do.

Do they choose their [life] Sequences?

Yes, they do.

Are there Artisan, Sage and Priest killer whales?

Yes.

Dick: Is it possible to verify this whale material?

Some familiarity with the man John Lilly's experiments would help. You could perhaps talk to him. [22 May 1974]

I find it hard to believe that whales are incarnated. Why has there not been contact between the whales and us, and are the whales aware that we are incarnated?

Except for the man John (Lilly) there has been insufficient interest in whether they can communicate. However, there are many interested in the fact that they can be taught to perform acts of underwater demolition. Stands to reason, does it not? Number two: they are aware only of the fact that there is intelligence in humans that reaches beyond the other denizens of their home world.

John Lilly is discussed in the chapter "Bio-computer".

How evolved are they in relation to us? Do they have access to higher Sex Center?

Because they are limited in their ability to manipulate their environment, they are not quite as anxious to become competitive, but they have been around as long as you have, and their evolution is just about even with yours, emotionally and spiritually. It is, of course, not as cluttered with Maya where they are, and they can often contact Essence earlier than humans can, but they do not always do so. Some are sexually evolved; some are not.

The crucial thing here is the question, Is it desirable to establish communication with them? Is there any cosmic reason to share with them?

Communication is, of course, possible. Underwater sonar equipment would be necessary: some refinements, of course, on present equipment. Above water, sounds are reproduced quite effectively. Their eyesight is extremely poor and they do not rely on visual contact in the way you do. Astral contact is also possible.

If whales are as far along as we are, there must be only a few whale Adepts.

That is valid. There are not many. [30 May 1974]

Shirley: Do whales twin?

Yes, all Creatures of Reason twin. [25 June 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Twins — Physical and Spiritual" for more information on that subject.

How will whales reincarnate if they become extinct?

They will not, of course, be able to complete their Cycle if this happens. They will have the choice of choosing the line between terrestrial or aquatic species or finishing the Cycle on another world. There is a difficulty here, as the life they have led so far has not prepared them for life on land here. It would be easier to choose another world.

Have any humans made the transition (from human soul to whale soul)?

Some have, though not here, but on other worlds. The current fight for survival should prove, beyond the shadow of a doubt, the level of intelligence of this species.

Comment: Seems as though they were not smart enough to see that the early whaling ships were a threat and should have knocked them out in the beginning. There is no sanctuary for whales and they choose not to run.

By and large, they choose not to fight, if that is what you mean. They are essentially peaceful and non-aggressive. [19 October 1974]

Concluding Comments on Cetaceans

The distinction between individual souls and group souls has been made outside of the Michaelian teachings, preceding the Michaelian teachings, such as in Theosophy: research and quote from Pearson: Space, Time, and Self

② CHAKRAS

The subject of chakras was mentioned several times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. These mentions, as they relate to correlating them with Centers, are documented with my comments in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart, in Part One “Precursors of the Overleaf System”, in “Chapter 1C — The Seven Chakras”. Some of that information is repeated here and some of it is not repeated here. There are mentions of the chakras in other contexts other than their correlation with Centers, and those are documented and commented on here in this Study Papers book.

Related to the phenomenon of chakras in oriental esoteric physiology is the phenomenon of kundalini. This is also mentioned in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, and these mentions is documented and commented on in the chapter “Kundalini”.

Chakras per Esoteric Physiology

Surely most Michaelian students subsequent to the original Michaelian group are at least somewhat familiar with chakras, but an introduction is provided in this section for those who may not have a thorough understanding. Some relevant quotations have been extracted from the Wikipedia article on chakras, as follows; underlined words and phrases are my emphasis:

Chakras (Sanskrit: ... literally ‘wheel, circle’; Pali: cakka) are various focal points used in a variety of ancient meditation practices, collectively denominated as Tantra, or the esoteric or inner traditions of Hinduism.

The concept is found in the early traditions of Hinduism. Beliefs differ between the Indian religions, with many Buddhist texts consistently mentioning five chakras, while Hindu sources offer six or seven. Early Sanskrit texts speak of them both as meditative visualizations combining flowers and mantras, and as physical entities in the body. Within kundalini yoga, the techniques of breath exercises, visualizations, mudras, bandhas, kriyas, and mantras are focused on manipulating the flow of subtle energy through chakras.

The modern Western chakra system arose from multiple sources, starting in the 1880s, followed by Sir John Woodroffe’s 1919 book The Serpent Power, and Charles W. Leadbeater’s 1927 book The Chakras, which introduced the seven rainbow colors for the chakras. Psychological and other attributes, and a wide range of supposed correspondences with other systems such as alchemy, astrology, gemstones, homeopathy, Kabbalah, and Tarot were added later.

The more common and most studied chakra system incorporates six major chakras along with a seventh center generally not regarded as a chakra. These points are arranged vertically along the axial channel....

The Chakras are traditionally considered meditation aids. The yogi progresses from lower chakras to the highest chakra blossoming in the crown of the head, internalizing the journey of spiritual ascent. In both the Hindu kundalini and Buddhist candali traditions, the chakras are pierced by a dormant energy residing near or in the lowest chakra. In Hindu texts she is known as Kundalini, while in Buddhist texts she is called Candali or Tummo

Kurt Leland, for the Theosophical Society in America, concluded that the western chakra system was produced by an “unintentional collaboration” of many groups of people: esotericists and clairvoyants, often theosophical; Indologists; the scholar of myth, Joseph Campbell; the founders of the Esalen Institute and the psychological tradition of Carl Jung; the color system of Charles W. Leadbeater’s 1927 book The Chakras, treated as traditional lore by some modern Indian yogis; and energy healers such as Barbara Brennan. Leland states that far from being traditional, the two main elements of the modern system, the rainbow colors and the list of qualities, first appeared together only in 1977.

In the 1920s, each of the seven chakras was associated with an endocrine gland, a tradition that has persisted. More recently, the lower six chakras have been linked to both nerve plexuses and glands. The seven rainbow colors were added by Leadbeater in 1927; a variant system in the 1930s proposed six colors plus white. Leadbeater's theory was influenced by Johann Georg Gichtel's 1696 book Theosophia Practica, which mentioned inner force centres.

Psychological and other attributes such as layers of the aura, developmental stages, associated diseases, Aristotelian elements, emotions, and states of consciousness were added still later. A wide range of supposed correspondences such as with alchemical metals, astrological signs and planets, foods, herbs, gemstones, homeopathic remedies, Kabbalistic spheres, musical notes, totem animals, and Tarot cards have also been proposed.

In Anatomy of the Spirit (1996), Caroline Myss described the function of chakras as follows: "Every thought and experience you've ever had in your life gets filtered through these chakra databases. Each event is recorded into your cells...". The chakras are described as being aligned in an ascending column from the base of the spine to the top of the head. New Age practices often associate each chakra with a certain color. In various traditions, chakras are associated with multiple physiological functions, an aspect of consciousness, a classical element, and other distinguishing characteristics; these do not correspond to those used in ancient Indian systems. The chakras are visualized as lotuses or flowers with a different number of petals in every chakra.

The chakras are thought to vitalize the physical body, and to be associated with interactions of a physical, emotional and mental nature. They are considered loci of life energy or prana (which New Age belief equates with shakti, qi in Chinese, ki in Japanese, koach-ha-guf in Hebrew, bios in Greek, and aether in both Greek and English), which is thought to flow among them along pathways called nadi. The function of the chakras is to spin and draw in this energy to keep the spiritual, mental, emotional, and physical health of the body in balance.

Rudolf Steiner considered the chakra system to be dynamic and evolving. He suggested that this system has become different for modern people than it was in ancient times and that it will, in turn, be radically different in future times. Steiner described a sequence of development that begins with the upper chakras and moves down, rather than moving in the opposite direction. He gave suggestions on how to develop the chakras through disciplining thoughts, feelings, and will. According to Florin Lowndes, a "spiritual student" can further develop and deepen or elevate thinking consciousness when taking the step from the "ancient path" of schooling to the "new path" represented by Steiner's The Philosophy of Freedom.

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Chakra>< — retrieved 31 October 2021]

The Wikipedia article is much longer than this extraction. Your favorite internet search engine will find millions of websites that present information on the subject.

Notice that sometimes the chakras are referred to as "centers". From the words underlined in the above quotation, you see that the functions of some chakras are the same as some Centers: Spiritual, Intellectual, Emotional, Physical (Moving). These correlations are tabulated in my book referenced in the opening paragraphs of this chapter, and in the chapter on chakras in my book The Tao of Cosmogony, and in a table in the next section. Notice also from the underlined words that there is a developmental sequence as a component of the chakra system, sequenced either from the bottom up or from the top down.

From the above, and from material left out of this extraction from Wikipedia, we see that teachings about the chakra system have evolved considerably over the millennia, and there is no absolute authority on the subject. This lack of consistency also exists in the original Michaelian group, as we see below.

Chakras per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

Even before the Michaels appeared to the original Michaelian group, when Soledad was one of the sources on tap, the subject of chakras came up:

Dick: In the Don Juan books [of Carlos Castaneda], in the works of faith healers and in the Indian chakras, there seems to be an agreement that there is a place in the lower abdomen, where there is a chakra in the Indian system and a place where the healing can be applied (Mr. A's faith healing system), and in the Don Juan system, the 'will' comes out through a gap in the abdomen, and these are things that I haven't been able to experience, except to read about them and I'd like to know if those particular points are valid.

[Soleal:] The average Creature of Reason does have his gravity center somewhere near the middle of the torso, and to get in touch with that energy source you must first know how you are Centered and what you still have to go through [to become Balanced], because you will want to direct that energy into something positive [such as healing]. [03 July 1973]

This is the first hint in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that there is a relationship between chakras as energy centers in the physical body and the Centers of Personality, of the Overleaf System. A complete correlation of the two systems was revealed about a year later, as we see further on in this chapter.

Refer to the chapter "Creature of Reason" for more information about that subject. In addition to humans, Cetaceans are also Creatures of Reason, so it stands to reason that they also have chakras and Centers.

From the very beginning of the discussion of chakras in the original Michaelian group, they are presented as a sort of 'map' of the spiritual 'path' from low to high states of consciousness, just as we see in the Wikipedia article. There are various methods that light up this path:

Is Transcendental Meditation helpful?

There is a very good form of meditation where you actually meditate upon the chakras and bring the aum up through them. You cannot transmute any energy you are not in touch with, however, so if you suddenly find yourself unable to continue, that is why Camille needs to get in touch with Moving Center and Intellectual Center [lower Centers] before she can think about transmuting [energy to higher Centers and chakras]. Camille could read A.R. Orage and do the exercises. It would help with the detachment [from focus on the physical]. [21 August 1973]

(Orage was a teacher in the tradition of Gurdjieff.) This statement is in keeping with the New Age understanding that a spiritual aspirant can learn to detect and manipulate the condition of the chakras, so as to raise one's consciousness from the physical to the metaphysical.

The first mention of a specific chakra in the original Michaelian group transcriptions was this:

Louise: A psychic told me in treatment that my sex chakra was clear. What does that mean?

We must answer honestly that we're not sure. [17 April 1974]

The Michaels can be excused for not being sure because various teachers of the chakra system locate the sex chakra in various positions on the body: at the perineum, or at the pubic bone, or below the navel. Perhaps this can be explained by the fact that the gonads and other components of the sex organs are at different locations in males as compared to females. The Michaels had their own ideas about where the sex chakra is located; see further on. My own view is that the sexual action chakras is the gonad chakra, and the sexual energy chakra is the so-called "Crown Chakra"; refer to Chapter 4J — "The Action Centers" in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart for the full explication of that correlation. [\[\[Get back to this after writing the chapter on chakras in The Tao of Cosmogony. \]\]](#)

Chakras within auras?

This is another perception. That is of the subtle changes in the wavelengths of different energy sources. [08 May 1974]

In parts of the Wikipedia article on chakras not included in the above quotation, there is reference to the connection or correlation of chakras to so-called "auras" and so-called "subtle bodies". There are chapters on both "Auras" and "Bodies — Subtle" in this Study Papers book. [\[\[tabulate them all here? \]\]](#)

What is the importance of knowing chakras?

It would aid you in releasing specific energy. It would be a visual crutch to help you locate the energy pocket. [15 May 1974]

So far as we know from available transcriptions, during the original Michaelian group the Michaels did not elaborate on this statement. However, some members of the New Age community have established cottage industries regarding chakras, where some people are allegedly able to see chakras, note irregularities if any, and manipulate them toward health by various means, such as meditation and crystals and hand-waving and such.

What we see above is scant information about the chakras. The following lengthy Q&A exchange provides the most thorough elaboration on the subject of chakras that we find in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

Dick: Question regarding "chakras."

The significance probably lies in the fact that so many have become aware of this at all, some not even on the path, or following strange pseudo-paths. These "chakras", of course, correspond to the measurable energy flow from the individual Centers. In other words, the lowest chakra ["root"] corresponds to the output of the Instinctive Center.

Focusing on the word "correspond" here: chakras in physiology are not the same thing as Centers in Personality, but they do correlate. There is disagreement among Michaelian teachings sources about how they correlate. Here we see that the "lowest" chakra, named the "root" chakra in the western esoteric adaptation of the eastern tradition, is correlated with the Instinctive Center. In the Gurdjieffian teachings, the Instinctive Center explicitly had to do with physiology, not Personality as the other Centers do. Refer to Chapter 4F — "The Instinctive Center" in my book A History of the Overleaf System for the full exposition of this correlation. There you will find arguments and evidence that the so-called "Instinctive Center" should be renamed to Impulse Center and correlated with the so-called "Heart Chakra".

Richard: Can they [chakras] be perceived through the "third eye"?

They are normally perceived through the Emotional Center or gut chakra.

The so-called "third-eye" chakra was located at the brow of the forehead. It is properly correlated with the Higher Emotional Center, as documented in two chapters on chakras in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart.

Throughout the original Michaelian group transcriptions, the Michaels expressed a high regard for the perceptivity of the Emotional Center. In occidental chakra teachings, emotional functions were ascribed to the second chakra, located at or below the navel, so the Michaels agree with this. However, in the modern western common vernacular, it is never referred to as the "gut" chakra. Here and below, the common names of the chakras are not given, and this leads me to believe that the channel was not familiar with the common names for the locations of the chakras in the body.

Correspond the Centers and chakras?

Yes, they do. This is what the yogis perceive when they expound on this. In one able to visualize the auras, this becomes easy, for there is a transitory "puff" of color accompanying significant outputs, such as occurs in the digestion of the major meal of the day or in deep meditation.

The gut chakra is [the] Emotional Center; Intellectual Center manifests itself at chest level, and so forth. The Sexual Center can be measured at the level of the thyroid; the Higher Emotional Center at the level of the pineal body; the Higher Intellectual Center at the level of the anterior pituitary. Procreation is handled by the Moving Center in sleeping animals.

For your convenience, the above correlation of chakras and Centers, plus the conclusion of my analysis and synthesis found in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart is shown in the following table:

THE SEVEN CHAKRAS per the ORIGINAL MICHAELIAN GROUP
RANK	NAME	OMG LOCATION	CENTER	HOLC
Seventh	Crown	"pituitary"	Higher Intellectual	Higher Moving
Sixth	Brow	"Pineal", "Third Eye"	Higher Emotional	Higher Emotional
Fifth	Throat	"thyroid"	Sexual	Higher Intellectual
Fourth	Heart	"chest"	Intellectual	Instinctive
Third	Plexus/Navel	"gut"	Emotional	Intellectual
Second	Navel/Spleen	"procreation"	Moving	Emotional
First	Sacral/Groin/Root	"lowest	Instinctive	Moving

My comments on this table are as follows.

- RANK: The first column lists the common rank order sequence universally ascribed to the chakras in various modern sources.
- NAME: The second column lists the common, typical, universal names for the chakras in modern sources, which also reveals their location on the body, from the base of the spine to the top of the head. Notice that there is a difference of opinion in the various sources about the locations of the lower three chakras. This is discussed in my other books.
- OMG LOCATION: The third column lists the location given to the chakra in the body according to the original Michaelian group channeling. Notice that in no case are the common names of the chakras used in the channeling. To me this indicates that the channel might not have been familiar with the common names of the chakras.
- CENTER: The fourth column lists the Center that corresponds to each chakra according to the original Michaelian group channeling. This sequence has a lot of similarities to what I refer to as the “Gurdjieff Sequence” in various parts of this Study Papers book, such as the chapter “Levels of Being”. The channel was familiar with the Gurdjieffian teachings, so it is not surprising that this sequence shows up here. Whether or not it is accurate is another concern that is addressed elsewhere in my books.
- HOLC: The fifth column lists the Centers that correlate with the chakras per my book A History of the Overleaf Chart. Notice that there is only one correspondence of the original Michaelian group channeling with the HOLC presentation on chakras, the sixth chakra. This is another clue — besides the name given to the chakra in the original Michaelian group channeling — that tells us that the channel likely had no understanding of the chakras. These chakras and Centers follow what I refer to as the Natural Sequence; refer to my book by that name.

The Q&A exchanges in this same channeling session continued:

Ram Dass says the spirit body has holes or chakras connecting to the physical body. Normally, people’s holes are “plugged up” and the energy is there but can’t flow. True?

Dick: Michael has stated that sexual energy is the only mobile or available energy.

This [Sexual Center] is the first of the Centers not solely governed by Maya and consequently mobile. The fixed amount of energy is fixed by the organism, not by cosmic shortages. We can give an example of the fixing. It works well. The body has a chore to do that it dislikes. It dwells on the undesirability of the proposed action until it renders the Moving Center inactive and unable to perform its task, normally able to perform such action. The body is simply too exhausted to move, yet twenty minutes later, some happy diversion is offered. Suddenly, the body undergoes a miraculous recovery and actually expends far more Moving energy in the pleasure activity, for instance, tennis, than it would have in the work activity, for instance, shopping for groceries.

This Q&A exchange, as well as the previous one that correlated the Sexual Center with the throat chakra, indicates that the Michaels regarded the Sexual Center as a higher Center and the Moving Center as a lower Center, contrary to what Yarbro did in Messages from Michael. This is discussed at length in Chapter 4H — “The Action Centers”, in A History of the Overleaf Chart.

Eugene: Is this energy measurable?

It is measurable electronically, yes. There is now a photographic technique that can be used to visually record the color changes. (Kirlian photography)

An internet search provides ample information about Kirlian photography. Wikipedia has a summary of its claims and the scientific research on the claims: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kirlian_photography<.

Personally, I have doubts about its applicability to chakra measurements. I suspect that the channel had read about Kirlian photography in the book Psychic Discoveries Behind the Iron Curtain, published in 1970, written by two Americans, Lynn Schroeder and Sheila Ostrander.

Dick: Is there anything useful about this for us to know?

Well, of course, you can use them as a fairly handy yardstick by which to measure your progress toward Balance [of Centers]. You can feel the energy being expended, and after awhile, locate its point of exit [chakra that corresponds to the Center] and then more accurately pinpoint the Center responsible for the output. If it is not the proper Center to handle the particular action then you know that there has been a Leak.

Here again, the chakra system is correlated to spiritual growth in terms of the Centers per Gurdjieff's teaching about achieving Balance in the fourth Level of Being. Refer to the chapters, "Levels of Being" and "Energy and Energy Leaks" in this book. Both Gurdjieff and the Michaels had somewhat to say about the "appropriate" use of Centers: we should respond to situations with the correct Center or chakra.

[Question missing.]

That is valid, and the most common manifestation of enormous outputs of energy in these individuals (intellectual) is tachycardia [rapid heartbeat], at least, that is what they notice the most. Sarah, for instance, notices icy palms and shaky knees under the same circumstances.

Sarah was Intellectually Centered, yet she did not experience heightened energy in the Heart Chakra, its alleged correlate per original Michaelian group channeling.

Trapped part? Weakened part?

[That is] valid, except for the Instinctive Center, which malfunctions only during organic illness.

As stated above, per the Gurdjieffian teachings, the Instinctive Center had to do with physiology, not Personality, and the Michaels apparently went along with that understanding during the original Michaelian group. After the original Michaelian group, in some Michaelian teachings lineages, the Instinctive Center took on a very different meaning: it was the bridge between the lower and higher Centers of Personality.

Dick: Regarding his own chakras?

When you are cogitating as now, there is a brightening of your aura around the chest, but you are not sufficiently aroused by this to create the racing heart.

Per the correlation given previously by the Michaels, the Intellectual Center, the Center that cogitates, was allegedly located at the chest, commonly known as the Heart Chakra. However, according to the common understanding in New Age circles, mental functions were correlated with the Solar Plexus Chakra, as shown in the table.

Dick: Other chakras?

There is now a brightening of the aura also in the region of the Instinctive Center as it digests your dinner. This will only last while the most significant work is being done, not while the contents are being dehydrated [in the large intestine]. This requires little expenditure. The Moving Center is relatively quiet.

A few Q&A exchanges previous to this one correlated the Instinctive Center with the "lowest" chakra, typically placed at or near the coccyx, whereas this answer places it in the digestive system. If one is to take this as accurate, and if there is a reconciliation of the two, it is perhaps that (1) the terminus of the digestive system, the anus, is near the coccyx, or (2) the Instinctive Center was said to refer to physiology throughout the body, of which the digestive system is one important component.

The following is the last mention of Chakras in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

Alice: Give an example of what happens in the Emotionally Centered person.

The Emotionally Centered individuals often complain of "butterflies" in the stomach in times of stress or excitement. Many times, intestinal cramps follow extreme stress; more susceptible to diarrhea and constipation, also. Intellectually Centered souls often cough in moments of stress, clear the throat, etc. [16 June 1974]

To me, this answer looks like more ambiguities and/or contradictions. Previously, the Emotional Center was correlated with the "gut" chakra, and here the digestive system is related to the Emotional Center, so that is not a contradiction. However, the digestive system was also previously related to the Instinctive Center. Perhaps the reconciliation is that it is both. Previously, the Intellectual Center was correlated with the "chest" chakra, but here it would seem to be correlated with the Throat Chakra, although the Sexual Center was previously said to be "measured at the level of the thyroid", which is the Throat Chakra.

Concluding Comments on Chakras

Like all other chapters in this Study Papers book, this chapter on chakras is a mere introduction to the subject. The reader is invited to research it further, in books and internet resources, if they are so inclined.

Like other chapters in this Study Papers book, the subject of this chapter is related to many other subjects covered in other chapters in this book. These other subjects and chapters are noted above where appropriate.

The subject of this chapter is covered in more detail in some of my other books, and these I have noted above where appropriate. Apologies that the information is so scattered, but there is no use repeating it all here; it is too lengthy and too extensive.

Sources that discuss the chakras typically declare that the chakras represent steps of development on one's spiritual path. Only a few of the tools and technologies for discernment and use of the chakras on one's spiritual path of spiritual growth are mentioned in this chapter. Refer to the chapters, "Spiritual Growth" and "Spiritual Path", for more information.

The original Michaelian group transcriptions did not make a clear distinction between the physical energy centers of the body called chakras and the Personality Centers of the Overleaf System. Personally, I prefer to make the distinction.

My conclusion to this chapter is that the chakras and their corresponding Centers were not well understood or well defined or well located during the original Michaelian group. My guess is that the channel was not well informed about chakras. Another one of my claims is that the Gurdjieffian teachings about Centers was primitive and preliminary, so it was also misunderstood in the original Michaelian group. Another one of my claims is that the Michaels did not clear the information about the chakras up during the original Michaelian group, and indeed, my claim is that they were not cleared up until my book A History of the Overleaf Chart.

Just because previous discourses on the chakras were ambiguous and contradictory, that does not mean that the chakra system cannot be fixed. When properly understood, the chakras, and their correspondence with Centers, provide a 'map' of the spiritual 'path' in terms of the universal cosmology revealed by what I refer to as the Natural Sequence. That path is explained in detail in my book The Tao of Relationships: The Chemistry and Alchemy of Service and Intimacy.

CHOICE — DECISION

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “choice” and its derivatives and synonyms in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Issues about choice are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The concept of choice is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Definition of Choice

So what is meant by choice? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Choice per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Alice: I don't feel that I need to know instantly, but I do feel that he could help by telling me what to do now. Is there anything that I can do at this time to help? I want something higher.

[Soleal:] To make the choice, you must have a quiet place. It will be easier for you to hear the voices and sort them out. You need to learn to be happy with your own company. This comes about when you consciously set aside a part of the day for your own meditations. [03 July 1973]

The question was asked concerning the decision to go on in the search for spiritual enlightenment — on to becoming an Adept. What do you do when you get so far and are not too sure you want to continue? We wondered if the Masters picked those in whom the desire for “psychic experiences” was quite strong to become Adepts.

The desire is polar, too. Everything in the universe is, of course. Along with the desire is always the dread. The choice does not become clear to you until you have experienced the desire from another dimension. You must stand and observe the desire from the shadows of dread. Wishes, like everything, have positive and negative poles. There must be attraction and repulsion or nothing exists because no energy is being generated. [12 August 1973]

The choices you make between physical bodies are part of the learning process also. [12 August 1973]

Ellis: I feel that I've been cast into the wind, without direction, without control.

You are free to choose. The rub comes in where False Personality, which is Karma driven, makes most of the choices, in direct opposition to the desires of the Essence.

Richard: Is it possible to go through life without burning the Karma that you had set out to burn in that life or is it inevitable that you burn Karma?

It is inevitable that you play out the [Karmic] role you chose. It is not necessary that you always choose a difficult role.

Alice: Does it sometimes take more than one lifetime to learn the lesson? I mean, he's asking if you choose a role, it's all over with, but I'm asking, might you not have to play it over and over again?

Many times, you have chosen almost identical roles in order to play out a Monad. Only the time and locations were different.

Ellis: At what point do we make our choice?

The choice is made on the Astral level between lives. [08 October 1973]

Concluding Comments on Choice

⑧ COMMITMENT, DEDICATION, DEVOTION

This chapter is the product of a search for the word commitment and its synonyms dedication and devotion in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) commitment issues are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

These words are not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because they have no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; they are not Michaelian jargon words that need a definition apart from their use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that commitment is a positive to be cultivated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as this one in Wikipedia: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Here at the beginning of this chapter I want to make a distinction between bonding and binding. Perhaps you have heard it said that some people have a “fear of commitment” when it comes to romantic relationships. To my way of thinking, this is an aversion to binding, as in “don’t tie me down”, but it need not be an aversion to bonding, as in “true love”. During the original Michaelian group, the Michaels used the words commitment, dedication, and devotion most often in reference to their students creating voluntary, intentional, beneficial bonds (not binds) with the Michaelian teachings. The bottom line of any endeavor or relationship is this: the amount of success one has is directly related to the amount of true love one has for it.

Definitions of Commitment, Dedication, and Devotion

So what is meant by commitment? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

1a: an agreement or pledge to do something in the future; [as in] “a commitment to improve conditions at the prison”; especially: an engagement to assume a financial obligation at a future date

1b: something pledged, [as in] “the commitment of troops to the war”

1c: the state or an instance of being obligated or emotionally impelled; [as in] “a commitment to a cause”
[><https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/commitment>< — retrieved 10 November 2022]

As for the definition of dedication:

1: in religion, an act or rite of dedicating (see dedicate entry 2 sense 1) to a divine being or to a sacred use [as in] “the dedication of the temple”

2: a devoting or setting aside for a particular purpose [as in] “the dedication of funds raised from the bake sale to the class trip”

3: a name and often a message prefixed to a literary, musical, or artistic production in tribute to a person or cause [as in] “mentioned his family in a brief dedication in his novel”

4: self-sacrificing devotion and loyalty [as in] “her dedication to the cause”; “required hard work and dedication”

5: a ceremony to mark the official completion or opening of something (such as a building) [as in] “attended the building’s dedication nearly fifty years ago” [<https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/dedication> — retrieved 19 January 2023]

As for the definition of devotion:

1a: religious fervor : piety

1b: an act of prayer or private worship — usually used in plural [as in] “during his morning devotions”

1c: a religious exercise or practice other than the regular corporate (see corporate sense 2) worship of a congregation

2a: the act of dedicating something to a cause, enterprise, or activity : the act of devoting [as in] “the devotion of a great deal of time and energy”

2b: the fact or state of being ardently dedicated and loyal [as in] “her devotion to the cause” : filial devotion [<https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/devotion> — retrieved 19 January 2023]

As we will see in the remainder of this chapter, the Michaels did not depart much from these dictionary definitions. The word commitment was used far more often than the other two when referring to a student’s interest in, and participation in, the Michaelian teachings.

Commitment, Dedication, Devotion per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide a response. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The question of “devotion” to the spiritual path was on the minds of the founding original Michaelian group members from the very beginning, even before the Michaels appeared. The following is from the second session that has become publicly available; Dick was one of the founding members of the original Michaelian group:

Dick: Okay then, I’ll meditate on the one question.

[Soleal:] Just be patient. You cannot achieve enlightenment by any route in one day or by any method without first making the decision to establish this as the goal for the present lifetime and then making the decision to devote the rest of the life to that pursuit. The devotion must be there, no matter which path you take ultimately. The path can take you through the mainstream of life on your world, or you may eventually decide that you must have the seclusion. A communal setting would offer this in many ways. You need people around by whom you can measure your progress, and this is not bad for you. Self-confidence, and I mean in your own spiritual strength, must be developed. [03 July 1973]

As this chapter develops, we will see numerous factors that influence the level and type of devotion that people are able to muster and apply to their spiritual path. One of the factors is communal living, so refer to the chapter “Communal Living” for a discussion of that.

The first mention of “commitment” to one’s spiritual journey appeared in the sixth session that has become widely available. Tomas was the source, and he mentioned many factors that typically impede a spiritual newbie. Carolyn was one of the founding members of the original Michaelian group:

Carolyn: I have felt the need to express my opinions more lately, and I wonder if this is good. Sometimes I have spouted off.

[Tomas:] Do you understand the source of the negative emotions? If so, then you should examine them carefully and see if you can turn them into something positive. Hostility is never an act of conscious will. The only positive forces are peaceful, loving ones. Carolyn still has a tendency to slip into the patterns or vibrations of the moment. Many sleeping souls provide the necessary shocks to keep her on the right track — constantly examining herself. This is a common failing among neophytes on the true path. There are always many doubts until the integration takes place, and the commitment is made and is irrevocable. Life on the material plane, with all its glamour, continues to lure you back. The glamour is illusion — Maya, if you prefer the more esoteric term. Maya is part of Karma and is present for a very specific purpose. It tests your spiritual growth all the time and is your sole eternal safety checkpoint. When you reach the point in your spiritual growth when you “know” that all hostile feelings and thoughts and words — and even world wars — come from lower Centers in sleeping souls and they are not in control, then you will lose the desire or need to retaliate or spout off. It’s like spouting off to a stone wall for all the good it does you. You gain nothing and lose a great deal. [24 July 1973]

From the beginning of the original Michaelian group to the end, the sources (Soleal, Tomas, Michael) commented on the fact that students will receive benefits from the teaching in proportion to their commitment to not only learning the teaching but also living it. Refer to chapters “Negativity”, “Glamour”, “Maya”, “Awakening from Sleep”, “Shock”, “Karma”, “Growth, Spiritual” for a discussion of the topics mentioned in that answer.

The word also appeared in the first session with the Michaels:

Discussion: Concerning being unpopular because you held unpopular beliefs, pursued teachings, etc.

There will always be unpopularity when unpopular ideas are espoused and expressed. The body does not wish the Essence to be freed. It will fight to keep the Essence asleep. It takes many such fights to strengthen the Essence.

Regarding the reason for committing oneself to a spiritual path, besides the metaphor of “Awakening from Sleep” mentioned above, there is also the metaphor of “Liberation from Prison” mentioned in this passage; refer to the chapters by those names. The point is that, paradoxically, bonding to the process is necessary for liberation:

Comment: That’s why it’s hard to make the commitment while you are scared and while you still care (about going to prison, etc.). I wonder if Timothy Leary cares. Maybe he doesn’t. Maybe his little job in prison is tending the flowers and he may be happy there as Claudio Naranjo is happy in Spain tending his flowers.

You reach the point [in elevated consciousness] where environment on the Physical Plane does not matter any more. You can leave it at will.

Well, if we do astral travel to associate with the spirits more, maybe they won’t let us associate with them after we have made the commitment. You really don’t know whether they will associate with you anyway. That puts you where you don’t care. Take the astral trips first. See if you like it. [12 August 1973]

How far would the original Michaelian group members be willing to go if authorities ever confronted them about their new beliefs? The founding members of the original Michaelian group did not fully understand what they were getting themselves into when they first sought a non-physical teacher, so there was a “fear of the unknown” as well as a fear of disapproval. Refer to the chapter “Fear” for more discussion about that disincentive to commit to a new way of life. There you will read that along with any “desire” there is also a “dread”, and one must make a decision to commit to the change in lifestyle in spite of the dread.

What is an Adept?

An Adept is one who has cleared the mind of all trivia. This is an integrated being who is firmly committed to the path, who is unafraid to leave the Physical Plane for hours at a time, is thoroughly versed in the occult teaching, is aware of Karmic ties and has recall beyond the grave, can materialize both self and objects from borrowed energy sources, is both clairaudient [hearing] and clairvoyant [seeing]. This means non-attachment to both planes and its inhabitants. [21 August 1973]

Becoming an Adept is not a part-time job; refer to the chapter “Adepts and Masters”. There you will read that it was said that some of the original Michaelian group members had the potential to become Adepts. Spoiler alert: none of them ever did, because they never made or found that intensity of commitment.

Throughout this chapter we read that there are all kinds of distractions that keep students from fulfilling whatever level of commitment they may have to learning and living the teaching.

Sarah: Well, Joel is a Saturn and you can’t get to him at all; he is imperturbable.

You have all made strides toward eliminating superfluous material possessions. Don’t fall into the trap of begrudging younger souls their possessions. This is merely transference of identification and equally pervasive. T[he t]eaching is a full time obligation. If you wish to make this commitment, you must resign yourselves to the fact that someone must support the teaching. In order to stay alive, you must eat. We see no virtue in crippling asceticism [at the other end of the wealth–poverty spectrum]. The danger lies in immoderation [at either end of the wealth–poverty spectrum]. [20 October 1973]

That was said in the context of the original Michaelian group members preparing to eventually live communally, which would be a serious commitment indeed; refer to the chapter “Communal Living” for more about that plan and aspiration. Also, refer to the chapters “Identification” and “Asceticism and Austerity” for more discussion of those subjects.

Cheryl: I become irritated when I hear older Souls talking down Young Souls. I hear what they say and it makes me mad.

You can hear the knowledge. Most Young Souls [such as yourself] are unwilling to devote themselves to the life of contemplation that is necessary to cause the words to [come to] fruition. This is an active Cycle, Cheryl, the one in which the most valuable lessons are learned and most of the mistakes are made. It is like any system of learning: the Infant Soul is in kindergarten, the Baby Soul is [in] life’s elementary school, the Young Soul [is] in gymnasium [high school], the Mature Soul [is] in college, and the Old Soul is out in the world. [22 November 1973]

This is not the last time that the Michaels comment on the fact that Soul Age influences the level and type of commitment that people are able to make to a spiritual teaching; see further on.

The opposite of devotion to spiritual matters is the devotion to material matters:

... the materialistic existentialists who deny other dimensions beyond the Physical Plane and devote themselves to the pursuit of Maya. [25 December 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Maya” for more about that. There you will read that the Michaels affirm that the spiritual reality is ultimately more real than the material reality, so students are better off to commit themselves to the pursuit of the greater, higher reality.

At the end of the first calendar year in which the original Michaelian group was meeting, they asked about making a New Year’s Resolution:

At this point in our time, it turned midnight [on New Years Eve]. There was no kissing or screaming, but Richard asked if there was any special message for us for the New Year.

We think that the goals for the coming year would be cohesion, commitment, and commonality of ideation.

We wish you well in this; it is within your grasp. [31 December 1973]

The group had now been meeting for more than half a year, on average 1-1/2 times a week (39 sessions in 26 weeks that we know of). That schedule in itself was a considerable commitment in time and effort. But that is just the beginning of what it takes to forge a cohesive group consciousness. To do so without becoming a cult is Good Work, I might add. Personality cults are very good at extracting commitment from members, which can be likened to predator–prey or parasite–host relationships. Healthy groups of committed people can be likened to symbiotic relationships between organisms; refer to the chapter “Individuality”. There you will read that there is an ideal balance between the benefit of the individual and the benefit of the collective, and both the person and the collective should aspire to find that balance, and track that balance, because it is always shifting.

The more compatible the person and the collective, the easier their devotion to each other:

We wish for you the opportunity to propagate the Logos. How you do it should be as comfortable as possible, so that you can devote yourself best to growth and not to struggle. [22 January 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Logos” for more discussion of the rational intelligent component of the cosmos. Commitment to the Work should not be an onerous burden, imposed from without; the type and intensity of devotion should be chosen by the student, and the collective should aspire to be liberal-minded enough to accommodate differences in levels of commitment among its members.

Cynthia: We just got through with planning for the Town Meeting.

This is planning of a very different sort, but all the rules are applicable. Since this is a planning stage, this means that decisions will be made and you will be left to start the implementation octave with a dedicated core. [03 February 1974]

Cynthia is referencing the planning for a new intentional community in Oregon. She and her husband later moved there and helped it get started. The Michaels said that the so-called “implementation” octave is preceded by the so-called “planning” octave, which is preceded by the so-called “investigation” octave (03 February 1974). People typically do not become fully committed or totally dedicated from the very beginning; they can and do drop out at any stage of an ongoing group project. The implementation stage requires a core of committed individuals.

We discussed the possibility of having a minimum fee to cover the cost of duplicating transcripts of the meetings. We also need a name in order to incorporate. There are many advantages to incorporating. When there is $300 in the treasury, we can incorporate.

We definitely agree that the commitment is necessary, but would see you consider some other than financial for some students. We would see a goods-for-service economy emerging within this group and its extensions. We would have you consider services rendered as an alternative for those who are unable to pay. We agree that this teaching is far from free, but we do not see money necessarily as the price. We would warn you to be extremely cautious in implementing the service angle. For instance, you must make those in Acceptance [in the Negative Pole of –Ingratiation] Photograph themselves in accepting more than they wish from False Personality, or those in Submission submitting to those in Dominance. This would be one way of starting the process of Photographing. We would prefer that you not drop this, as the man Robert [Burton] was wise in this.

Should we send the transcripts out to those who do not participate? Should there be a school within a school for those who come each time?

We would prefer that you assemble the material here given, editorializing if you wish, and present it to all potential students in a palatable form. There are Scholars among you who are up to this task as well as Artisans aplenty who can contribute the imaginative approach. We could see this as one of your major tasks, and we have advised you this before. We would see the core “school” remains small, as otherwise the commitment will never be strong. Now, it is our aim to see you eventually propagate this teaching at large. [08 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter “School Metaphor” for more about that. The original Michaelian group grew over the next year until it became unwieldy. The lower level of commitment of the larger group diluted the energy of the committed people, and the original Michaelian group collapsed back down to a small core group.

The size of the group affects commitment to the goal of the group, but so does the ability of the individuals in the group to become unified in their purpose:

Richard informed us that he had “talked” with Soleal, and that Soleal was willing to be with the group this evening.

[Soleal:] I have no real revelations to offer, just that I am struck again by the tremendous scattering of energies even in this group, due in the most part to the myriad personal agendas that take Intellectual Center and sometimes Emotional Center out of play for long periods of time.

The lady who has prepared the paper has hit upon an important truth when she speaks of diverse goals within a tight partnership such as your culture demands within the custom of marriage, or really I should say, divergent [goals]. The goals of the teaching, and thus of the students, must be unified in order to be effective. The teacher [the Michaels] can only suggest to you the methods if you wish to grow. Right now, the response within the group is almost solely intellectual. There is relatively little emotional commitment to the teaching or to each other, which is really more important. This leads to the haphazardness with which the group goes about its business.

Refer to the chapter “Scattering” for more discussion about that problem, which the Michaels mentioned many times. Obviously, scattering and commitment are inversely related: the more of one the less of the other. One of the meanings and requirements of “commitment” is to focus and concentrate on the task at hand. A person and a group only has so much time and energy at their disposal, so choices must be made, priorities must be established, plans must be made and pursued. Refer to the chapter “Agenda” for more about that factor in the functioning of any group.

Comment: Everything we do should complement the goal of the group. We tend to take on too many things to do. You don’t have to give up everything, but you should pull your life towards the goal.

[Soleal:] I would like to point out to you at this time that many of you are dabblers. You dabble in this and that, tasting all of the fruits, eating of none, and in this light you also dabble in spiritual growth as well. Now, this is all right; there is nothing wrong with this — it incurs little Karma — but on the other hand, it leads nowhere. Also, the concept of Agape requires the actions of a closely-knit group of supportive students in order to come to reality. No one can feel Agape in an ivory tower. It can only be felt when Higher Centers are contacted in the course of close association with others. There is no way to do this alone that I know of. Where the misunderstanding has come about, I think, is where the teacher [the Michaels] has advised you of the dangers of the cloisters and the stifling atmosphere there that retards growth, and has pointed out to you the relative lack of success among those who choose the solitary path. If you wish, we could prepare for you some examples of what works here [on Soleal’s planet]. [18 February 1974]

Refer to chapters “Agape”, “Centers, Higher”, “Solitude, Solitary”. So much of the success of any group depends on the commitment of its members, as stated by the Michaels, but I would like to say that the effectiveness of the group also depends on the characteristics of its members, meaning that the natural ‘chemistry’ of personalities and ‘alchemy’ of souls should be constructive, leading to harmony and intimacy, rather than destructive, leading to conflict and alienation. Not only commitment, but compatibility and companionability are important. This must come naturally; it cannot be forced, even with people who are aware of this factor in “Group Cohesion”; refer to the chapter by that name.

Sarah: I am seeking a way of life within the group, not to become more effective in the milieu.

There is a way, you know, that this teaching can serve the needs of all who seek, and you have it within the original nucleus to perform this service. Those who have the need for intensified personal searches can arrange for this. Those who are not certain of their level of commitment may find that the general session is adequate for them. The smaller sessions are most valuable for the more committed students and definitely should be reserved for that purpose. There is some merriment derived in the general session merely by pursuing some of the less dedicated students’ personal agendas and this will benefit all. We still see the tendency in all of you to expect of the others, and to be disappointed when the anticipated reaction does not come about. This cannot be avoided unless much intensive work is done. We could do this with you and we are always available for this. There is a need for some diversification here now with all of the parts contributing toward a greater whole in the end. We have not suggested that the nucleus of this teaching expand to the point where needs are no longer being served. We are concerned only that you share the knowledge once it has been assimilated and verified. We have a method by which all of you can choose to achieve a modicum of growth on a spiritual plane. Many of you can even use it as a springboard toward becoming an Adept. This is entirely up to you. We will find many vehicles through which we can teach the Logos — this does not present us with a problem. We answer all calls for this teaching. [24 February 1974]

The founding original Michaelian group members were mostly compatible with each other, and they sometimes had meetings apart from the larger group of less committed, less compatible people. When Sarah resumed channeling in the late 1990s, after a hiatus of a dozen years, it became an established practice to have separate “core” group meetings and “study” group meetings.

Dick: I’d like to know if unblocking the emotions as is seen in the Esalen film is a healthy thing. It looks good.

We do not see the necessity for this action within the group, but perhaps an outlet needs to be provided elsewhere. In this, we will not mediate, as this is within the realm of life crises and does not pertain to spiritual growth. This is not to say that these matters do not have to be dealt with; they most certainly do — long before you can even talk about growth — spiritual growth. For the dedicated student and for the Adept requires detachment from the mundane and trivial matters, which are such immoderate energy drains. How can you possibly grow if you are immersed in all this Maya? [24 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Moderation”, where you will read that every individual and every group does well to commit themselves to finding an optimal balance between the legitimate needs of the flesh and the legitimate needs of the spirit. Refer to the chapter “Maya”, where you will read that there are illusory needs in regard to both flesh and spirit, so the commitment should be to eliminate spurious needs.

Besides the difference in level of commitment of students, there is also the difference in level of spiritual growth, and there are differences in what people are interested in. It is almost impossible in a healthy group to get everyone to ‘read the same page at the same time’; some extremely charismatic cult leaders are able to make this happen, but that usually goes awry. Most Michaelian students that I know, even those who have the Michaelian teachings as their primary esoteric source, have secondary and tertiary interests and pursuits outside of the Michaelian teachings, to fill in gaps in the Michaelian teachings, and to satisfy their curiosity.

Before one becomes an Adept, one must first become Balanced, and before one becomes Balanced, one must first commit to the Michaels’ methods for achieving it:

How do you get in touch with Emotional Center if you are not there?

First, you must become solidly Balanced so that there is no backsliding. This [stability] normally does not come about until commitment is made and affirmed. [03 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Crystallization” for a discussion of the notion that people who are operating in the lower Centers tend to be flaky and unstable; crystallization is the opposite of that. A student must have at least enough commitment to the teaching to arrive at Balance, before aspiring to Adept-hood. Even though it does not say so here, I would say that one advantage of group work is that those who are less committed can ‘hitch their wagon' to those who are more stable and committed, until their own psycho-social-spiritual maturity precludes backsliding, which happens at the so-called "Balanced Man" stage; refer to the chapter by that name. Basically and briefly, this is the fourth stage of the septenary of spiritual growth; refer to the chapter "Levels of Being" for more discussion about that.

Almost a year after the original Michaelian group was formed, some original Michaelian group members bemoaned the lack of commitment of other original Michaelian group members to the teaching. This prompted a lengthy reply from the Michaels:

We had a discussion as to where we were going next and if people were satisfied with the large meetings. We were started out on a planning octave, headed for an implementation octave and it is seemingly petering out. There are no tasks in our group, and people pop in and pop out. There is a loose commitment of people and we cannot plan on anything. When one tries to present the material to new people, they have their own thing and want to teach their thing and think this is Satan's work because it has to do with reincarnation.

To spread the Logos, one [of us] saw the opposition coming from Christians. Christ was crucified because he had a new idea.

Dick: I cannot understand mass psychology when it comes to religion.

Sarah: That is the only way I can reach Emotional Center, through a group high.

Dick: Is Michael ready to turn us over to the technology and science Entity, as Susan is working?

If you wish this, it is available. To assign tasks on an individual basis requires wholehearted commitment on the part of the one assigned. These tasks are not easy and often appear distasteful at first glance. The lady Susan is now emotionally strong enough to share her tremendous wealth of psychic emotional power with those who desire this special help. The methods have been outlined for you now within the confines of this teaching, but this teaching is of the sort where the implementation must be self-initiated. In the other teaching [Susan's], individual guidance can be obtained through very lengthy sessions with the source — with the focus upon one individual, where[as] in this type of teaching [Michael's], the focus is on the group as a whole and abounds in generalities. It is possible, nevertheless, to grow within this teaching as it is within the teaching of the man Robert [Burton], but it means much culling of the material and concentration on all the work outlined so far. We do have considerable insight into individual needs, but then, so do you all. You discuss it needlessly and reach the same conclusions using terminology we would not choose, but the meaning is the same. The choice is your strongest barrier to success right now — or to be more explicit, your denial of the fact that the choice rests always with you. We have suggested to you all various methods by which others have achieved spiritual growth. This is all that we are employed to do. If and when you make the choice to follow this path, the protection is there. [14 April 1974]

Gurdjieff was known to assign specific tasks to his students, and the Michaels were willing to do the same, if requested; refer to the chapter "Tasks". If a person makes a commitment to be a student of the teaching, the teacher is saying that they have a commitment to reciprocate in kind: it goes both ways. The Michaels await the choice of their potential students to make the commitment; refer to the chapter "Choice".

Victoria: I'd like to ask about my new friend, Frederick. Is he a Young Sage, Emotional Part of Intellectual Center, in Acceptance, a Jovial in Passion and Arrogance or vanity?

This is a Mid-Cycle Young Sage in the Intellectual Part of Moving Center, a Pragmatist in the Passion mode; yes. Vanity. He feels that Victoria is the most unusual person he has ever met and would probably accept most anything she did, but is not equipped to make a commitment to an esoteric teaching, as he is basically physically [rather than metaphysically] oriented. [17 July 1974]

It is unusual for a person younger than mid-Level Mature Soul Age to be able to make a commitment to an esoteric teaching, because that is the turning point in the reincarnation cycle, where the Fragment changes the direction of their journey, from an orientation toward physicality to an orientation toward spirituality.

If you meet with extremely Old Souls in Exalted [Cardinal] Roles, you are certain to notice that their goals seem no longer earthbound and temporal, and there is a steady increase in otherworldliness in their behavior. Sometimes, this succeeds in setting them completely apart from the mainstream. It is unusual for these Exalted ancients not to seek some type of esoteric teaching. Many devote their entire lives to this pursuit and their capacity for dedication is very great. [01 October 1974]

So, there is the worldliness > otherworldliness spectrum, and this is obviously yet another factor that indicates where one's level of commitment to an esoteric teaching such as the Michaelian teachings might be found. This factor was said to be related to Cardinal Soul Age and Cardinal Role, and I suggest that other Cardinal Overleaves can contribute.

Lyle asked what stops him from submitting to love — growth — what is the barrier there for him to the emotional experience? His SRG is Old Priest, Spiritualist, Arrogance, Emotional Part of Intellectual Center.

First of all, we would like to correct a semantic slip. That is, [the erroneous notion] that “knowledge” is understanding. What has not passed into understanding with you is “input” — nothing more — into the [bio-] computer to be stored. The transformation [from knowledge to understanding] only occurs when the choice has been made — the commitment. The methods you suggest would, of course, be impossible for us to enforce, although we do, of course, recognize the method. In this light, we have suggested to you an alternative method wherein much stripping [of the barriers of Maya and False Personality] would occur and you would all be forced to confront your own and other student’s Personalities. When you commit yourselves finally to a cause, whatever that cause might be — Christianity, occultism, revolution, et cetera, et cetera — there is too much at stake to pull out, and you are forced to confront your blocks and either sink or swim with them. The concept of extended community or family is one environment in which this can come about. The students can sometimes overcome these blocks or barriers rapidly when their livelihood depends upon it. Right now in this cadre, nothing real is at stake. There is nothing to lose if the students are unable to work through their blocks.

The barrier between you and the Emotional Center is one that many in this cadre share; you are not alone. The sacrifices, yes, are necessary in yours and other cases, for only through these “sacrifices” will you be able to have this experience. As it is now, there is no good reason, and your Personality is well aware of it. In many ways, you and other students are much like the Sunday Catholics throughout the world, who do not have the experience [of transforming knowledge into understanding] either, because there is no commitment.

We would see you all examine your short-term goals with relation to this teaching. That is ... what is it you hope to gain from our association? If this includes the possibility of spiritual growth, then we would suggest that you reexamine the steps toward that goal that we have outlined. If you only expect to gain data, then this will surely be a disappointment to you in the long run. Many of you are looking for the experiences you sense the other students are having, but you are unwilling to work for this in the ways we have suggested. You are content to sit back, sigh and say, “Oh, shit.” This is, of course, an option, but one we do not encourage.

How many times have we repeated the steps you must take? Examine the tenets of the world’s great religions and the greatest teachings now extant on this planet. You will find this same advice again and again, perhaps clothed in different semantics, but nevertheless the same ... that upon which Christianity was based, that upon which Judaism has survived for the centuries, the pillars of Islam, the teachings of Siddhartha Gautama, the Tao Teh Ching.

Until this teaching becomes a way of life for you, there will be no experiences for any of you. The only way we know of to experience anything is to live it, whether you be on the Physical, Astral, Causal or the High Plane ... it does not matter. Committing yourselves begins the transformation. The concept of “pilgrimage” in some of the best teachings extant on this planet do a marvelous job of stripping [of False Personality], if the pilgrimage is performed in the proper state of mind.

Now, we are not suggesting that you plunge yourselves into poverty. We would see that you live well so that there is no struggle to survive, for the main reason that if you must struggle to live, you cannot devote the amount of time necessary for spiritual evolution. This is a lifetime commitment. It is not something that you can work on on Saturday night [when the original Michaelian group usually met] and forget about for the rest of the week. You could not keep it tucked away in some dim, dusky, cerebral corridor and only take it out when company comes. [14 December 1974]

That was one of the most intense passages on the subject. Note the word “sacrifice” there. So far as False Personality and Maya are concerned, forgoing their illusory needs and committing to the goals of a spiritual teaching is a painful sacrifice. People should, of course, only commit to a teaching that is obviously further along than they are.

It is the Personality that fears this teaching and what lies beyond. It is the Personality that refuses to commit itself to the path, not the Essence. The Personality is clever in the way that a wild beast is clever: it learns to avoid traps that might lead to its death, which is precisely what happens [ego-death] in a teaching when a student becomes an Adept. [28 December 1974]

So, obviously, unless it is the Essence that makes the commitment, and not the Personality, then student-hood in the Michaelian or any other teaching will not get very far; refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality”. Readers should not concern themselves about their level of commitment to the Michaelian teachings, whether low or high, weak or strong; Essence takes care of that. Subsequent to the original Michaelian group, information was received that the Michaels had Agreements with about one hundred thousand Fragments to be their teacher. It was also said that there was a spectrum of student commitment, in three general classes, which could be described as primary and permanent, middling, and cursory or transitory.

Many of you now feel the loss of energy when the concentration of the group drops because of the intrusion of outside sources. There is no mystery about this, and it will always happen when there are some [people] present in the body who are elsewhere with their minds. This happens often with students who are not firmly committed, and who are attending merely with Intellectual Center or the Intellectual Parts of Centers. [02 January 1975]

This was said at a time when the size of the original Michaelian group had reached its maximum, with a lot of new people attending, just a month and a half before it collapsed. It may be that the Michaels' emphasis on commitment from their students started to alienate people who knew that they could never commit to the Michaelian teaching to that extent.

Ralph: [Regarding] The Essence experience on the Physical Plane and the relation to Roles: If meditation attains Personality-less-ness, is this experience without Role, and is it on the Physical Plane?

We would not describe this experience as being wholly on the Physical Plane as it does indeed transcend the planes and yes, it can happen to you within this lifetime. It is well within the grasp of all of our students; you have only to set it as the transient goal and apply what you now know. The Overleaves affect you only when you are strongly committed to the needs of the Personality. Once it [the needs of the Personality] has been achieved [satisfied], it will no longer be the goal. [02 January 1975]

There is an inverse relationship between commitment to the needs of the Personality and commitment to the needs of the Essence: the more of the one, the less of the other. Commitment to a spiritual teaching is more or less the same as commitment to Essence.

[Soleal:] Only that which your mind has decided [belief system] and your heart has become committed to [value system] can occur [behavior system]. All is possible when you give up the dearly held belief systems and open your being to the new. [11 January 1975]

From this statement and others — as for instance the essential role of Essence in the process of commitment — I gather that there is a trans- or meta-rational component of the process in terms of the Centers. Sure, the mind (Intellectual Center) can decide to commit to a course of action, but unless the “heart” (Centers other than the Intellectual Center) agree and add their weight and impulse, the commitment will fizzle in the long run. This is like the New Year’s Resolution that quickly fails. Refer to the chapter “Belief System” for more about that subject.

Commitment applies not only to a spiritual path, but also to a romantic path:

Other insights into the relationship of Carolyn and Gene?

In this culture, unfortunately, once a firm commitment is made in relationships, the partners often undergo a startling change in their interpersonal relating, to the point that living becomes so strained that they begin looking for the escape route. Of course, this stems from imprinting and the lessons learned insofar as what may be expected in an ideal mate is concerned. You are perhaps more aware of this than most and seek to avoid the “tender trap”. With a committed student, an interpersonal relationship “should” be free from this danger. Ideally, it would be, but the other student at this point in your growth would not satisfy your projected needs.

Now we do not speak entirely against the custom of marriage. It is that we do disapprove of it being a legislative imperative. We would speak of rather personal contractual commitments. This, of course, is an alternative to the more open approach, which we have often recommended for advanced students. This latter works only in the presence of a high level of Balance on the part of all concerned.

Carolyn must begin to look at her short-term goals with this [original Michaelian group] cadre and decide if her commitment is there or if it is on a more personal basis. If it is the latter, then she must discover why and what expectation of hers have led to this. If the former, then the support of the brothers and sisters [in the original Michaelian group] can become adequate during those periods of vacillation.

We have recommended that you not burn bridges. In this case, we would certainly reiterate: leave the door open, because, you see, on many levels you are far more committed to the Work than you understand. The Work has in fact penetrated deeply into your entire life structure, to the point where total separation would be difficult.

Facilitating growth can be a difficult sequence, for it entails far more than simply being a “friend” — in the accepted definition of friendship. The desire to complete the Sequence should not in any way destroy the closeness of an interpersonal relationship based upon a commitment to the work. But until each of you is able to look at your own fears and conflicts in relation to each other, this is a real danger too that you face. [15 January 1975]

Groups of deeply committed students are prone to dislike the presence of students who do not share their depth of commitment. Also, it is a factor of loyalty to help others who will likely be available to reciprocate. Refer to the chapter “Romantic Relationships” for a complete accounting of the saga of Carolyn and Gene in the context of their commitment to themselves versus their commitment to each other versus their commitment to the original Michaelian group versus their commitment to the teaching. The point to be made here is that it is a difficult task to sort out all of the realms of commitment that come up for review.

Comment?

Only that we would be gratified if indeed what has transpired this evening is converted into dynamism and becomes reality. It will, of course, require a high level of commitment, and also trust level of which we speak. But we do not say it cannot be done. Some have chosen already. Perhaps more will choose when they can verify the risk involved is minimal in terms of return. [16 January 1975]

Refer to chapters on “Choice” and “Trust”. I question the type and level of commitment of people who would become Michaelian students based on their calculation of a risk/reward ratio. Subsequent to the original Michaelian group, it was revealed more explicitly that the Michaels have pre-incarnate Agreements with Fragments that they will be in a Teacher/Student Monad. Such students typically Recognize that they have that Agreement with the Michaels, that they belong in the teaching, that they are “lifers”; refer to the chapter “Recognition” for more about that. Those who do not have the intuition that the Michaels are their True Teacher may read the books, may interact with true students, may learn some stuff and experience some stuff, but they eventually move on.

During the original Michaelian group, there were repeated hints that potential Michaelian students would become actual Michaelian students in due time:

We asked for clarification of “visibility.” Most visible are often mostly in False Personality.

Visibility is not necessarily related to Mechanicity. Visibility in the case of a teaching such as this could come from the Essences of committed students, willing to share their space with others. This [original Michaelian group] cadre is by no means all together. If you do succeed to begin to “peddle your wares”, for instance, you will find that many of these still missing will find you. [16 January 1975]

Again we see that valid and long-lasting commitment to the Michaelian teachings comes from Essence, not from Personality. Refer to the chapters “Mechanical Man” and “Personality — True and False”.

Discussion about Artificial Space — False Personality — Karmic debts.

For a moment, look at the physical universe as an enormous stage, and all of the physical things within it as the sets and actors. Then look for a moment at the possibility that Karma, or the system of Karma, may in fact be looked upon as the director of the play of life. Souls experiencing all of life on the Physical Plane never have to seek spiritual growth; they can, and most do, go through the whole cycle [of reincarnation] in the “waking sleep”. The moment that you elect to commit yourself to the [spiritual growth] path, you remove yourself from the list of available actor’s equity. Were it not for Karmic Ribbons, souls would not experience much at all; they certainly would not experience all of life. [08 February 1975]

Refer to chapters “Real Space versus Artificial Space”, “Growth, Spiritual”, “Karma”, and “Planes”. Here again we notice that commitment to the spiritual Path is from Essence and not from Personality. The Personality does not look beyond mere psychotherapy, which is aimed at the mitigation of incompetence and/or unhappiness and/or dysfunctionality. To go beyond the psychotherapeutic path requires the influence of Essence.

It is indeed true that the levels of commitment to the path vary to a great degree within the [original Michaelian group] group. There are those who say, “Yes, I seek spiritual growth; I seek and I am open to input from my brothers”, and yet when that input is received, all kinds of rationalizations appear, such as, “That is his projection”, “That is his perception”, “I do not need to take on his problems”. Why not accept that, as we have said before, there is no helping each other? The tool of Photographing is, of course, valid only when it comes from a space of objectivity, and none of you is objective totally. Although on occasion, all of you touch upon the periphery of objectivity and are able to give valid Photographs to your brothers. [09 February 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Photography" for more about that. The amount of feedback that a student is willing to receive from a fellow student may be an indication of their level of commitment to the Work.

All of you are verifying the difficulty of dealing in the mainstream while in the Work. This will not become easier; it will, in fact, become much more difficult as time goes on. You will wish to devote more and more time to the Work and less to the mainstream.... It has been our experience that students seriously committed to the Work have far fewer expectations of their children, as they themselves are experiencing life and need not experience it vicariously through their children.... [12 February 1975]

That was said in the context of a lengthy discussion about "Communal Living"; refer to the chapter by that name. To commit to communal living was said to be the toughest commitment the original Michaelian group members would ever make. Here again we notice it said that there is an inverse relationship (the more of one the less of the other) between commitment to material pursuits and commitment to spiritual pursuits.

The large group meetings were discontinued later in that month of February 1975. The founding and core group members then committed themselves to a second attempt to disseminate the Michaelian teachings:

In short, we have a teaching ... and with this knowledge comes the fact that we have a task — to become a school which can effectively share this teaching. We seem to be moving into a new phase now, and it will require the commitment and energy of each of us to help this school to be born.

It has been our experience that the most significant progress in the Work is always made by groups of dedicated committed students, together working toward the goal of Agape. This can only be done in any steady sense in a communal setting, in that there must be continuity and there must be Overleaves that are incompatible for the work to be continuous. Most in life choose to live with only those other souls whose Overleaves complement their own. [Dimensions! April 1975]

Refer to chapters "School Metaphor", "Task", "Knowledge:", "Work, The", "Agape", "Communal Living", "Overleaves". So far as we know, the enthusiasm for a new start to the original Michaelian group did not last more than a couple of months, because after June of 1975 there was, so far as we know, a gap in sessions until late 1976. After that, the subject of commitment came up again one more time before the last session:

Joan and Cynthia expressed a feeling of waiting in limbo for "something around the corner." When present commitments are cleared up, something is going to emerge this summer — or so it seems.

The continuing need for spiritual grounding within this [original Michaelian group] group should be recognized by all those here present. All of you have spent a greater portion of this adult life seeking the answers to questions that are consummately spiritual in nature, while the mainstream of life on this planet seeks answers to quite a different set of questions. Does this not bring to mind the strength of your individual commitment? Not to this teaching, perhaps, but definitely to a teaching that seeks to answer those questions concerning the greater purpose of man. When you stop to question your commitment, do you not also question the fact that most do not know that such a commitment is possible and are totally unaware that the choice exists? At least you are all aware that there is a choice, and some are now at the crossroads where the path must be chosen. [10 April 1977]

The last session of the original Michaelian group was in January of 1978. At that time, Sarah Chambers committed herself to a group with a mostly new batch of students ... until about 1983, when she dropped out of the Michaelian teachings for more than a decade.

Concluding Comments on Commitment, Dedication, Devotion

A hit-and-run journey through various spiritual teachings based on the needs of the mere Personality will not get you very far on a spiritual path. If you are okay with that, then far be it from me to advise you otherwise. However, if your heart of hearts, your Essence, feels that you have found your true 'home' in the Michaelian teachings and among Michaelian students, then you will find it to be a welcoming group.

During the original Michaelian group, the concern about varying degrees of commitment to the teaching in prospective and present students was on their minds. At the time, the founding members had an intense interest in spiritual growth, so slackers would be, and were, a drag and a distraction on that focus. Frankly, having once been a cult member, I see the need for a commitment from students as having the potential to become vaguely cultish. In subsequent Michaelian groups, the focus on spiritual growth went on the wane, and the focus on psychotherapy went on the gain. In that new and different environment, an intense and firm commitment to the group project or agenda was not as imperative. The possible exception to this change in focus was the closed Yarbrow group; we do not know for certain if they continued in the cultish direction or not, although they have isolated themselves, which to me seems vaguely cultish, and they dismiss the non-Yarbrow Michaelian groups as “frauds and impostors”, which also seems vaguely cultish to me. During the original Michaelian group, much was said about alienation (refer to the chapter by that name), and cultism does tend to mitigate alienation within a close-knit group that adheres to a uniform belief/value/behavior system. The situation with a shared belief/value/behavior system led by a charismatic figure is that it has its risks and its rewards. The potential risk is that it will devolve into a cultish mentality; the potential reward is that it will foster spiritual growth toward Agape in ways that are not available in groups that are not very intense. Perhaps the Yarbrow group is a bit of both.

Whatever that status may be, my impression is that original Michaelian group members were interested in recruiting new members in a way that subsequent groups have not been. This might be because that is the way things were done back then, including in the Fellowship of Friends that founding original Michaelian group members came out of. To some extent, this recruitment effort continued into the non-Yarbrow groups during the 1980s, what with the means of outreach available to them, namely publishing books and a quarterly magazine. In the late 1990s, in addition to more books, websites were established to evangelize the populace. Getting the word out was not so much about evangelizing recruits as it was about making the teaching available so true students could find it. Somewhere along the line it was realized that students naturally fall in line along a spectrum of commitment, which I read about in one of the Michael Connection magazines published in the 1980s. The “first class” student regards the teaching as primary and permanent, the “second class” student regards the teaching as secondary and temporary, and the “third class” student regards the teaching as interesting in some minor or peripheral way. Realizing this, the first class students are not concerned about the level of commitment of the other classes; they are what they are and they do what they do; “how can we help?” First class students recognize the Michaels as their true teacher, so they readily assimilate into the other first class students.

By far, most occurrences of the words commitment, dedication, devotion in the original Michaelian group transcriptions are found in the context of the willingness, or not, of original Michaelian group members to commit to the Work of the teaching, which was said to be hard work. The words imply that there was resistance coming from somewhere, either internal or external, to the journey. Subsequent to the original Michaelian group, newbie Michaelian students rarely face similar impediments, so what was that all about back then? I see three possible explanations:

1. The Gurdjieffian teachings claimed that waking up to one’s spiritual nature required a lot of effort, the founding original Michaelian group members were familiar with that notion, so it continued with them.
2. Sarah Chambers, the main channel, had a Goal of Dominance, which asks for Submission (commitment, dedication, devotion) of those around, so it may be that the tenor of the channeling was tainted by her Goal.
3. Perhaps the Michaels were saying in effect, “Well okay if you are really serious about your spiritual growth then here is what you will need to do.” Therefore, the Michaels were more stringent with the original Michaelian group members back then; therefore the Michaels were asking more of their students, back then.

Subsequent Michaelian students have not approached the teaching with that type or intensity of commitment in mind. In this way and perhaps for the reasons enumerated above, among others, the whole tenor of the original Michaelian group was different from subsequent groups.

The question ever before the original Michaelian group members was, were they committed enough to continue in the teaching no matter what? Spoiler alert: the original Michaelian group lasted about two years. So now the question for subsequent Michaelian students is, what can we learn from their experience? My suggestion is that these Study Papers on the Original Michaelian Group provide some answers.

⑤ COMMUNAL LIVING

Some of the founding members of the original Michaelian group had been members of another spiritual group that was moving toward communal living at the time, and that group did in fact go that route. That group was the “Fellowship of Friends”, founded and led by Robert Burton since 1970; you can search for it on the internet; it is still active at the time of this writing in 2022. The concept was also popular in the New Age scene in the Bay Area at that time in history; perhaps it still is. As a consequence of this prior familiarity with the concept, the subject of communal living often came up for discussion during the original Michaelian group, starting from its beginning when Tomas and Soleal were the channeled entities, even before the Michaels appeared. You will see below that all three beings had somewhat to say on the subject. Where not noted otherwise, the channeled entity is the Michaels.

Communal Living in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

So far as we know from original Michaelian group transcriptions that have escaped oblivion, Soleal was the first to speak on the subject. Recall that Soleal was a student of the Michaels, an Adept living on another planet. It so happens that communal living was a big thing on Soleal’s planet:

Communal living has been tried here [on planet Earth] on a limited scale. The problem has been with some people not being as productive as others; the system breaks down. Can you comment?

[Soleal:] We [on my planet] force the issue. You object to being told what you like to do. You are bristling about this right now. The people on my world do not object; they would rather be free [of pressure than lazy].

Do you sometimes have problems getting people to work and how do you handle it?

Yes. Peer pressure is exerted ruthlessly. [undated, mid 1973]

There are two things to unpack in these two Q&A exchanges. First of all, productive people do not like to have unproductive people in their midst, those who do not “pull their own weight”, those who do not “do their fair share”; they are regarded as “freeloaders” and “cheats” and “bums” and “parasites on society”. This phenomenon in the humanoid realm is also seen in social animals; it is a natural consequence of survival pressures: everyone must do their tasks if the community is to survive and thrive. That is why peer pressure, both in terms of metaphorical ‘carrots’ and ‘sticks’, are applied in all cooperative cultures. In intimate communes, this imperative for social responsibility is even more pronounced. Second of all, as we will see below, Soleal’s planet is, on average, inhabited by older souls than planet earth is, and to engage in communal living for reasons above and beyond survival is typically an older-soul phenomenon. However, even the older souls in the Michael group were infected with the drive for individuation, the younger-soul ethos, that pervades the zeitgeist of planet Earth, so they “bristled” at the idea of giving up their precious individuality in a commune.

[Soleal:] You cannot achieve enlightenment by any route in one day or by any method without first making the decision to establish this as the goal for the present lifetime, and then making the decision to devote the rest of the life to that pursuit. The devotion must be there, no matter which path you take ultimately. The [spiritual] path can take you through the mainstream of life on your world, or you may eventually decide that you must have the seclusion. A communal setting would offer this in many ways. You need people around by whom you can measure your progress, and this is not bad for you. [03 July 973]

For millennia in many religious traditions, communes in the form of monasteries and ashrams and such, have been an optional component of a focused spiritual path aimed at enlightenment. It is not paradoxical that a communal setting augments and fosters this path by opportunities for both social and spiritual influence from one's peers and from one's betters, and for times of seclusion, in which one can "commune" with one's higher self.

That is all that Soleal had to say on the subject; now let's see what Tomas had to say.

Angie: I have been considering moving into a commune, and I would like to know if it is better to live in a commune, or to live alone.

[Tomas:] I think that the communal life offers a great deal so long as the goals of the commune are those of continued spiritual growth and they do not conflict with what you know to be true. Living alone offers little, and I would not recommend it to anyone. Isolation breeds alienation, and alienation breeds suspicion that leads to jealousy, possessiveness, and greed — the three cardinal stumbling blocks on the path to awareness.

Spiritual development is connected to social development. In all social and spiritual cultures, and especially in communes, people are taught to share and to be fair with other people. However, as we see here and below, it is important to choose your commune wisely, because your spiritual path can either spiral upward or spiral downward, depending on the company you keep.

Carol: Do children count, or are we talking only of adults?

[Tomas:] Children do not provide the necessary interaction. Most people would not permit the child to observe and objectively comment on significant departures [from the path], and most children cannot discern and interpret the acts of the adults around them with clarity. The ability is there, but the child has already learned not to cross the authority figures in its life.

Tomas's statement here can be connected with Soleal's statements above, where "measuring your progress" and "peer pressure" come into play in a communal setting. "Most people" do not allow their interactions with children to promote spiritual growth in these ways, but this seems to be the fault of those adults and not the fault of the children.

[Tomas:] Communal living is an upward step in the evolution of man[kind]. It can only be bad if you are undiscerning in your choice of communes. The ability to get along in the commune depends on your level of growth: the higher the level the easier it will be [for you in the commune] and the easier the decision [to join one, the right one] will be. Monasteries and ashrams are examples of very ancient and successful communes. Few leave, and the [spiritual maturity] level of the group is high. This is not the only kind of commune....

It does not explicitly say so here, but extended family units in Paleolithic times, and tribal villages in Neolithic times, served this social-spiritual purpose before the appearance of civilizations made it expedient for people on a spiritual path to create monasteries and ashrams, where they could develop their own spiritual culture separate from the prevailing mundane culture. Communal living is still an appropriate component of the social-spiritual path for many people.

[Tomas:] There are many communes with both males and females, but this also becomes less important as the [spiritual maturity] level rises. The fact that you still question this should give you a hint about some areas that need work. This won't be instant — nothing worthwhile ever is — but the need for erotic love is Maya too. The need for Agape is real, and this [Agape] is the goal. The other [eros] often gets in the way, and prevents the emergence of Agape, for erotic love is always based on something physical and something fleeting — it will fly before the winds, and illusion — or rather disillusion, which is even worse, since it is malfunctioning illusion — will set in. It is easy for even the partially awakened soul to distinguish. Erotic love, which has a tendency to be fickle, and slips away at the mere hint of an unfulfilled expectation, while Agape has no expectations to begin with — [it] asks nothing in return, and [it] accepts, and [it] is the hallmark. [24 July 1973]

Some religious traditions cloistered the men into Monasteries and cloistered the women into Nunneries as a means to circumvent and suppress the urge to perpetuate the species so that the aspirant is celibate and thus free to pursue the spiritual path. Sexuality is one of those phenomena that must be dealt with in a mature way in any commune or it will degrade the spiritual maturity level of the commune; refer to the chapter on Sexuality for an extensive discussion of that topic, because the subject came up repeatedly during the original Michaelian group. "Free love" was a common theme in the "hippy" community in the Bay Area at the time, and some members of the original Michaelian group were okay with that and some were not (so I have been told by original Michaelian group members, and one can ‘read between the lines’ of the transcriptions). Refer to the chapter, Agape, for a discussion of that topic. Sexuality and Agape are not opposed to each other if one has spiritual maturity and knows what they are doing, as discussed at length in my book The Tao of Relationships: The Chemistry and Alchemy of Service and Intimacy.

Most of the remaining quotations in this chapter are from the Michaels. The following is from the second session in which the Michaels were the source.

Dick: Tomas came through as a hard power, but the group was shaky — Gene and Susan, Carol. Gene is pivotal to the group and feels he may have to drop out. [What is a] viable group?

The viability of the group depends upon the ability of the individuals involved to rise above the trivial circumstances driving them apart. It is within the grasp of each of you to do this. It is in your Karma to seek the path you wish to follow. You have sought it many times before. The closer you become [to each other], the easier it will be for you to recall [past lives]. The ability to define your purpose in this existence [lifetime] will even come to you. The group has one thing the individual cannot tap alone, and that is the collective memory. The ability to see the lesson which is being learned is difficult enough in a group, let alone in solitary. The relationships within this group are ancient. I realize this is a new concept for you to swallow, but in order to progress further, you must come to grips with this.... Your group is not complete by any stretch of the imagination. You have chosen very definite roles for this life. An ancient entity is coming together within this group. That is why you feel powerful emanations from certain members. [17 August 1973]

The above quotation does not mention communal living, but I include it here because the viability of a commune is contingent on similar factors as the viability of an intimate spiritual group such as the original Michaelian group was supposed to become. For instance, it helps considerably if the people involved are kindred and friended souls who have Agreements to pursue their spiritual paths together. If you palpably feel the “energy” of the group and the members of the group, that is a good sign that you truly belong together. In my opinion, one of the most valuable components of the Michaelian teachings, as compared to others, is the emphasis on finding your kindred and friended souls, and doing your spiritual work with them; refer to the chapter “Strangers”.

You have all made strides toward eliminating superfluous material possessions. Don’t fall into the trap of begrudging younger souls their possessions. This is merely transference of Identification, and equally pervasive. [The] teaching is a full time obligation. If you wish to make this commitment, you must resign yourselves to the fact that someone must support the teaching. In order to stay alive, you must eat. We see no virtue in crippling asceticism. The danger lies in immoderation [at the other end of the wealth–poverty spectrum].... False Personality does not want you to have a commune. [20 October 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Identification” for more on that psychological issue. This answer was in response to a discussion about the fact that Robert, the leader of the local Gurdjieff group, received some support from people on welfare. The counsel here is to ignore what others do in their commune that seems wrong to you, and have your own commune that is neither too rich nor too poor, because toward either extreme one is distracted from spiritual growth; refer to the chapter “Asceticism and Austerity”.

Dick: As a child, I was in Essence [while] playing with my toys, watching the dust particles float by in the sunlight, knowing that my father would provide the necessities for me and my mother would cook the food and clean for me. Is Michael saying that the universe will provide for us so that we need not feel hurried (or is it harried)?

We are saying that. Jesus said it also. All of the highest teachers have said this. The harassment is self-produced. The only way you can get off the physical cycle [‘treadmill’] is to rise above this. You cannot bring it here.

Matthew 6:26 — “Look at the birds of the air; they do not sow or reap or store away in barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not much more valuable than they?” [New International Version] More is said further on about the Physical Plane being geared for toiling for survival, unless one takes steps to get off that treadmill and onto a spiritual path of liberation.

The reason I could sit there peacefully was i didn’t have to worry about food. I have provided for my own children. If Essence is Snow White and Red Riding Hood, we have to go into this dependency on Michael or whomever is going to take care of us. Otherwise we have to scurry around to produce what we need. I would be happy to go back into that state, it’s so lovely. Unless you become independently wealthy, you must forage for yourself. To go into Essence completely, there must be trust. As a child, there is no trust, there is knowing that you will be cared for. Something tells the child as he grows older, that this idyllic situation will end and it will be up to him to take care of himself.

The Roles in Essence provide the necessary food, clothing, and shelter without the scurrying. This adult play can be financially rewarding. That is why we have told you that communal living is an upward step in spiritual evolution. This [communal living] allows you to pursue the Role in Essence [which is not so much the case elsewhere]. There will be those who will provide the other necessities.

Every Role has a natural role that it enjoys playing in society and culture. Each Role satisfies Essence by doing what comes naturally to it; it is not really “work/toil/scurry/foraging” when a Role gets to do what it wants. A commune consisting of Michaelian students would tend to organize to take advantage of these Role-ish natural aptitudes and inclinations. Ideally, a commune would have all of the Roles in the same proportion as found in nature. In descending order, that is: Server, Artisan, Warrior, Scholar, Sage, Priest, King.

Geared for toiling, we may carry this into our Essence Role. There's that old fear of insecurity. We have to build fast so that we can paint fast for fear to provide.

If panic sets in, you all have skills that are marketable and can provide fairly steady income. [27 October 1973]

The only commune that I have personal knowledge of (Twin Oaks, Louisa, Virginia) was geared for psychological and social well-being, not spiritual growth. They were mostly self-sustaining in terms of food, via gardening and farming. To make money, they had two commercial enterprises, weaving hammocks and producing tofu. So far as I know, members of the original Michaelian group were not skillful at that sort of thing, so I can see why they might panic at the prospect of communal living.

This School does not need to grow to large proportions in order to teach. It probably will work better with a limited selection of students; people living on a ranch, healing with laying on of hands, and healing of the soul with messages.

Perhaps they would charge for these services. If anyone in the original Michaelian group was a hands-on healer, I do not know about it. Dick was a medical doctor, and Gene was a surgeon, but you cannot do those things well while in a commune, unless you provide your services in a local hospital.

Will this school be rich or poor?

For a while, it will be touch and go — on the poor side. Several in your group need the growth involved in farming, leaving the city and being aware of themselves. Then the school will grow in spurts and become large. It will never become an extremely rich school; it is not necessary. Part of your evolution will be the loss of your ego, which [ego] would like the richness. It is nicer to be rich, greater to be poor. Your [spiritual] growth will come faster. At some time in your growth, you will need only what is around you at the moment, and the materials will no longer be necessary. It is not even so far off as you think, as you are moving in that direction anyway. Most of those in this group are moving away from the material, and this is necessary for their growth and is good. It can lead to great leaps in soul work. [20 November 1973]

The prediction of the original Michaelian group forming a commune never happened, nor has it happened in any subsequent Michaelian teachings group. Physical and spiritual realms are reciprocally related, meaning that as one focuses on one it increases and the other decreases. Per a previous statement, it is not good to be too poor or too rich, if either extreme interferes with focus on the spiritual path.

The integrated Fragments of your Entity, which are a part of the low Astral body, have a tremendous pull on you. It is almost as though they are calling you home. The strength comes from those Fragments that have already integrated and are no longer subjected to Karma. You are a part of this Entity, not separate from it, but there is now a partition between you and those Fragments available, so to speak. It is up to you whether [or not] you can draw upon the conglomerate knowledge. You must understand that you are no longer separated from your integrated Fragments. They are very much a part of you. When the Entity first Fragments and all of it is on the Physical Plane, there is wide separation, then there is progressive integration. All of the Fragments still incarnate have the pull exerted on them by their Astral Fragments. There is no “real” separation, merely a physical barrier that is easily scaled. The whole is the sum of the parts. We [the Michaels] are an Entity-integrated whole. There is no sense of loss, wistfulness, poignancy, or what have you. The loss is perceived only on the Physical Plane. Now we are whole. Before, we were split apart and therefore had less than total. Right now you feel that the loss of the individuality will be felt as pain. This is not true. The individuality is painful, not the integration.

It sounds like individuality is a crutch and not a good thing. That is one reason communal living is good. You become a working unit, and communicate on a mind-to-mind level. [22 November 1973]

Learning to work together intimately in a commune on the Physical Plane is analogous to the reuniting of kindred souls on the Astral Plane. That is why it is important for you to find your kindred souls on the Physical Plane and begin the process of the reintegration of your Entity. One of the most intense ways to accelerate the process of reintegration is to live communally. However, if non-kindred souls attempt intimacy in a commune, as proven on many such attempts, negative intimacy often results rather than positive intimacy. So choose your commune wisely.

Take a look at the problems that bring millions of people to the psychiatric couch each year, and they all boil down to alienation. The greatest advantage of communal living is the elimination of isolation in an opportunity to grow in an environment that is protective and nurturing.

This statement assumes that you live with the people who are right for you. If you live communally with people who are not right for you, then you will not feel protected and nurtured.

If you are concerned about others taking advantage of you, this simply means that much more work is needed in this area by you. Then you must get to a [head-]space where no one else can take advantage of you. You can become invulnerable, particularly if you stop taking a lack of enthusiasm on others' part as a personal slight. You have much work to do in the area of "being", or being able to live one day at a time. How many times have your dire fantasies borne fruit?

We discussed some of the problems each of us saw in living together.

This discussion is a definitely positive step and should be carried further. The solution is not a permanent one, but should give you some idea of what communal living is all about. The pressures of the jobs are in the way, but how can we convince you that you have created the circumstances and are now throwing up additional obstacles. Some of these are valid, but can be solved. You must have a system of prioritizing assignments that can be converted into something viable only if the priorities can be made more realistic: not so many "shoulds" and "have to's", more wants and needs.

Re-frame the problems into opportunities and challenges. In any case, don't just jump thoughtlessly into a communal situation: prepare by thinking through the details as well as the overview.

We had more discussion of how to simplify our lives.

We offer encouragement. The details of the business transactions change from day to day. These details can be worked out in just such a way as you have been discussing. We suggest that you continue to discuss it in the light of liquidation of excess holdings and duplication of energies. For now, this will be an enormous step.

Is there a message for our group for the new year?

We would think that cohesion would be enough a goal to keep you going. There is a very viable structure beginning now with all of you who would be willing to live on a reduced scale in order to free yourselves from Maya. This is what we have endeavored to bring about. Merely the cognizance is a start. The details must be worked out by each of you in a mutually satisfactory manner. Believe it or not, consensus can be reached within this group. Some will take longer than others, but even they will eventually verify. [30 December 1973]

Refer to the chapter "Maya" for more information about the illusory nature of the modern Western socio-cultural milieu that works against communal living. The fact that we live in a democracy, where voting counts and the majority vote prevails, is good practice for planning a commune. However, it takes a very long time to arrive at a consensus when the Occidental culture is geared for individuality rather than collectivism.

Can we pull the group together by having more social life?

We are gratified that our message took root this rapidly. Seems that most groups purported to be on the [spiritual] path have much somberness in common. Perhaps this is why the rate of failure is so alarmingly high. This Teaching should eventually free you from the yoke of collective [socio-cultural] guilt, then the sober affect will be even more inappropriate. Learn joy now and it will not be such a shock then. The culture places the load of guilt right out in front of the child where it must either trip over it or stop short of all understanding. The child eventually shoulders part of this, either willingly or not, and carries it through life, unless it happens to meet with a Teaching that shows it that there is no guilt. This culture is guilty vaguely overtly about all things that seem light and airy. The emphasis is on work, and then possibly you may go on to another better place where you won't have to work so hard — and of course you students realize that this is nonsense. In fact, the load of toil holds you back rather than enhancing your work towards spiritual growth. The emphasis on otherworldliness has become mired in false concepts. [10 January 1974]

The Occidental culture sends mixed messages. On the one hand, the "pursuit of happiness" is written into the American Declaration of Independence, but the nation is also built on the Puritan ethic of hard work: "Idle hands are the devil's workshop". Children are generally expected to grow out of their playfulness and into taking life (too) seriously in adulthood. If they do not, then the society guilt-trips them. Perhaps a healthy "declaration of inter-dependence" is in order; this is not co-dependence, which is a sick relationship.

Part of this [Michael] teaching consists of eliminating the isolation and the duplication of energies. If this is unacceptable, then it is not the teaching for them.

We would say something about therapy at this point. It is within the capabilities of all of you to resolve your life crises and walk the path of spiritual growth. We are attempting to provide for you an environment where this will be more than just possible — it will be a reality. The rejection of this will be a choice that you will make yourself — realize that. There are those in this group who can guide the others in providing such a growing, nurturing environment, but you must choose. You only have a choice; we cannot make it for you. [24 January 1974]

Older souls tend to have innate resources for resolving their own psychological issues without the help of professional counseling psychologists. With help of the Michaels, and with the help of advanced students in the original Michaelian group, people who have psychological issues should be able to improve in a commune.

In order for this group to achieve the cohesion necessary to provide growth, a level of intimacy and trust far exceeding what you now have must be reached. This cannot be achieved through dialogue. Dialogue is False Personality's defense against Emotional Center. [31 January 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Intimacy" and "Trust" and "False Personality" for the Michael's thoughts on those subjects. The Intellectual Center that is encumbered with False Personality tends to rationalize away the legitimate desires that the Emotional Center might have for the support that it would receive in a healthy commune, which is built on the goals of trust and intimacy.

We agree that much work needs to be done by all of you here present toward eliminating all nonessential dialogue. This, of course, may eventually result in your being acutely uncomfortable when you are not with others in the [Michael] teaching. This is only one of the myriad reasons for spiritual communities such as we have suggested. Silence comes much more easily to those who are secure in the love of those around them.

Many spiritual teachings down through the millennia have discouraged trivial chit-chat about mundanities and inanities, as it keeps one down in the Intellectual Center. It goes beyond minimizing small talk in daily life: the function of meditation and concentration (often recommended by the Michaels; see that chapter) is to learn to silence the Intellectual Center "monkey mind", the so-called "roof-brain chatter", thus allowing the attention and focus to rise to higher Centers. It can certainly be uncomfortable to have to self-censor when in the company of non-believers in the Michaelian teachings. It is liberating to be in the company of other Michaelian students, even if it is via an online discussion group.

We are interested in centralizing this teaching and eliminating the most distracting duplications that now occur, preventing most of you from serving to the limits of your ability. [03 February 1974]

"Duplications" represent inefficiencies in the total system that can be minimized if the workload is centralized in a commune. For instance, if many people live in one big house that needs to be taken care of collectively, that is more efficient than those many people living in many houses that need to be taken care of individually. Food preparation is another "duplication" that is made more efficient in a commune.

We ohm'd in a circle and acted out a, "Don't you ever, ever, ever, ever let me catch you brushing that dog's teeth with my toothbrush."

As the group becomes more and more cohesive, many more sharing experiences may take place without the self-consciousness present in more multi-disciplined gatherings. This will create a unique atmosphere in which growth is almost certain to occur. [06 February 1974]

Not only can the workload be minimized, but the fun times can be maximized.

Soleal was the ruler of a planet where communes were common, so he had a lot to say about how that worked:

Soleal was willing to be with the group this evening. (the capital letters are words from Soleal in the transcript.)

[Soleal:] I have no real revelations to offer, just that I am struck again by the tremendous scattering of energies even in this group, due in the most part to the myriad personal agendas that take Intellectual Center and sometimes Emotional Center out of play for long periods of time. The lady who has prepared the paper has hit upon an important truth when she speaks of diverse goals within a tight partnership such as your culture demands within the custom of marriage, or really I should say, divergent [goals]. The goals of the [Michael] teaching, and thus of the students must be unified in order to be effective. The teacher can only suggest to you the methods, if you wish, to grow. Right now the response within the group is almost solely intellectual. There is relatively little emotional commitment to the teaching — or to each other, which is really more important. This leads to the haphazardness with which the group goes about its business.

Communes should be vigilant against “scattering, myriad, diverse, haphazard” goals. Communes should be geared to satisfying the Emotional Center and its desire for the warmth of closeness rather than the Intellectual Center and its desire for coldness of calculation.

Comment: everything we do should complement the goal of the group. We tend to take on too many things to do. You don't have to give up everything, but you should pull your life towards the goal.

[Soleal:] I would like to point out to you at this time that many of you are dabblers. You dabble in this and that, tasting all of the fruits, eating of none, and in this light, you also dabble in spiritual growth as well. Now this is all right; there is nothing wrong with this; it incurs little Karma. But on the other hand, it leads nowhere. Also the concept of Agape requires the actions of a closely-knit group of supportive students in order to come to reality. No one can feel Agape in an ivory tower. It can only be felt when higher [Cardinal] Centers are contacted in the course of close association with others. There is no way to do this alone that I know of. Where the misunderstanding has come about, I think, is where the teacher [the Michaels] has advised you of the dangers of the cloisters and the stifling atmosphere there that retards growth, and has pointed out to you the relative lack of success among those who choose the solitary path. If you wish, we could prepare for you some examples of what works here [on Soleal's planet].

Comment: The solitary way of the mountain-top yogis, nunneries, monkeries, etc.

There are healthy groups where the intimacy is intense enough to foster Agape, and there are healthy communes where the intimacy is healthy enough to foster Agape. Examples of unhealthy communes are authoritarian dogmatic “cloisters” that “stifle” the inmates with repressive and oppressive rules that forbid exploration and experimentation. Compare this quote with the previous one, which talked about scattering of energies, and we come to the notion that there is beneficial discipline and there is detrimental discipline, and the balanced proportion of the two is different for different people.

Comment: When the need manifests, the group will come together. In TFR group (“Time for Reality”), there is much trust in each other. We can be honest and open up.

Comment: Gurdjieff was organized and was not haphazard, and Michael says the only thing valid was the Centers and a life beyond the physical ...

[Soleal:] At great risk of developing some real Friction, I offer this, in part my own, in part the teaching, not yet inseparable. In most of you I see great fears of invasion of very private worlds. This is, of course, in great measure due to a lower level of trust, and also to guilt. Many of you still are not convinced that your very private lifestyle will be acceptable to the others, and you are singularly unwilling to risk finding out. Also, there is a tenacious desire to run from any possible molding of your lives by others. Many of you need to work on this, for this is Personality digging in for a last ditch stand against Essence, which would not permit the molding in the first place. All of you have a set of rigid specifications set by Personality concerning your needs. None of those are valid; only that which comes from Essence is valid. If you are being completely honest with yourselves and others, the need for privacy and aloneness disappears, and is replaced by the feeling of Agape. This is not easy. The teacher [the Michaels] has not said that it is easy, only that it can be obtained. On this world, we are faced daily with the need for continued growth, and spend much time solving those kinds of problems that beset you all. The difference being that we know that it is a workable system, and feel the necessity to keep it alive. It is sometimes difficult and sometimes disheartening, but in the long run, rewarding beyond words.

Comment: We can't sit and listen without applying the words. We have to learn from what's going on. One wanted to discuss things [among] ourselves [rather] than to listen to Soleal, but when it was said that Soleal's time was limited, unlike Michael's, we wanted to hear more of what he had to say.

[Soleal:] I have a finite amount of time. If you wish, I will share with you some of my thoughts on organization. I think that one of the problems with the teacher [the Michaels], and also with me, in accepting your outlines for organization would have to be your reliance to such a great extent upon the money that can be poured into your group, excluding a number of students who can offer far more than a mere medium of exchange (such as money), and consequently, the teacher has vetoed your plans. This is Bad Work to exclude on this base, and also to dwell at such length upon all of the directions as contingencies which might happen. Do you realize that this is as much a fantasy as the idealist's dream. I am not an idealist, but am certainly willing to run a trial-by-error test on anything that seems to be meaningful in the end. If everyone on your world had waited until all of the loose ends were neatly tucked in, no progress ever would have been made. There is such a thing as obstinate realism. We have on this world a vast system of very large communes, so do not tell me that they cannot work. All are on a total goods-for-service basis, and all goods are common property, yet we have all of the emotions, the pride, and certainly the pleasures that you desire. You seem to feel that sharing in some way removes your right to feel justified. That is ridiculous. Some of you are afraid that you will be knocked from your pedestals in a communal system. You are probably right. That will be Good Work, believe me, for it will be the False Personality which will fall. Many times this is with [a] resounding crash, but it always levels out in the end. [Soleal:] The reason this [communal] system has not worked on your world has been for the most part due to your tendency to give up at the first sign of opposition, and to fall backwards to old, safe patterns. It takes a tremendous and diligent organization to keep this system going, and one of the prerequisites which is indispensable is an orderly mind that can detach from the mundane and focus on the long range goals, whatever they may be. In our system [on my planet], the good of many is valued over the good of the individual, and I will admit that you have good, sound cultural mores and a right virtue of your training to regard this as scary. But however frightening it may sound at the outset, the good of the many eventually serves the needs of the individual. The system, in order to work at all, of course, requires, above all, patience and the belief that your individual needs — and notice I did not say “wants” — will be served. The expectation of instant gratification of all wants is consummately absurd, and belongs in childhood.

Whenever absolute rigidity is introduced into a system, it fails. What the teacher would like to see you work on is a flexible but orderly system designed to serve the needs of the entire group, but pliable enough to bend a little when the needs of one are totally disregarded. Even we [on my planet] do not totally disregard a cry for help as long as it is valid. We have many discussions on problem solving, and our Mature Souls are as much [metaphorically adrift] ‘at sea’ as yours. It is just that we are all pulling together rather than against each other. We have a focus for our energies. We have the time to pursue this type of endeavor without the threat of outside interference. It is all right here to lock yourselves away from the others, and there is no condemnation, but some effort is made to discover the cause of that antisocial need, and where needed, help is given. The most prominent cause of suicide on your planet is your respect of the privacy of others. Nothing helps like person-to-person contact. We [on my planet] are a continuous society — you are not. We do not shut down either intellectually or emotionally when night falls. Your level of trust is so low that you must be very selective in those in whom you may confide. That is not the case here. This makes a very great difference. [18 February 1974]

In his book Moral Calculations, Laslo Mero makes the point that, according to the branch of mathematics called “game theory”, the best strategy for winning the game of life is a combination of cooperation and competition, where cooperation between individuals has a slight edge over competition between individuals when it comes to “winning” the game of life. In other words, in all situations, especially in communal living situations, one should look for win-win solutions to problems rather than win-lose solutions.

Cynthia and Nichols, a husband and wife pair, investigated a commune in Oregon, and reported back. Discussion with original Michaelian group members ensued:

Dick: The Town meeting for planning sounds like super Maya to me. It is making Maya what it ought to be.

Cynthia: It is a planning process and one of growth involving the people.

Gene: The meetings are where it is just talk and I want “To be.”

Cynthia: The Town Planning requires a constant dialogue. You have to earn a place in the Town. One without a sense of community cannot just walk into it. So, there’s a need for planning.

Many of you are in search of the golden fleece. This does not hang in a commune more than in Troy. Of course, they will carry their mixed bag of problems with them. The advantage in a closed community of that sort is the opportunity to live the teaching in a supportive atmosphere, and by example spill over on to those around you. This is not to say that you will be heard by any of them. Probably not many of them will respond, but those who do will contribute, and will in turn aid in your own personal growth process by providing the Photographs.

There are chapters on Maya and Photography in this book. Note what the Michaels say here, that communal living is likely not an escape from one’s personal issues, or an escape from a world with which one cannot cope, or an escape from a world in which one is incompetent. Rather, a commune is likely to exacerbate one’s issues. This might be okay if one approaches a commune with high self-awareness, and the commune is willing and able pragmatically, not idealistically, to put up with, and then mitigate, everyone’s psychological issues.

"In Greek mythology, the Golden Fleece is the fleece of the golden-woolled winged ram, Chrysomallos, which was held in Colchis. The fleece is a symbol of authority and kingship. It figures in the tale of the hero Jason and his crew of Argonauts, who set out on a quest for the fleece by order of King Pelias, in order to place Jason rightfully on the throne of Iolcus in Thessaly." [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Golden_Fleece< — retrieved 02 June 2021]

The Michaels made an error when associating the golden fleece with Troy, but as an allusion to a very high idealized goal, it works in the above passage just fine.

We see one advantage in community, and that is the environmental one. We suggest it as a means to an end, where you could, through group effort, free hours of time for individual growth. Perhaps you need not involve yourselves at all with those who are in the awareness movement. We would point out to you that this is a valid starting point for those with ambiguous feelings and the need for an elusive "something better". Many accidentally find this "something better" by going through the awareness processes, and others go on to a spiritual growth process such as the one we would see you involve yourselves in. Many of you came to this because of the Friction in your lives, seeking a method of handling this and still staying above ground emotionally, and toward this end some of you have made much progress. Insights have come to some, but they have chosen to discount these as irrational, mainly because the changes would be immediately painful, and immediate pain is more scary than projected pleasures are worth. [24 February 1974]

The "awareness movement" was a socio-cultural phenomenon that was rampant in the Bay Area of California in the 1970s. Many original Michaelian group members participated in it to one extent or another, such as attending meetings and seminars. Refer to the chapter "EST — Erhard Seminars Training" for an example.

Child-oriented atmospheres are not for all souls. This should be geared toward those [adults] who are in Essence. When rearing children, dormitory-type living quarters for children often produce startling independence and growth in both the parents and the children, but one should not be forced to spend time there unless it is in Essence. [10 July 1974]

The presence of children certainly complicates the function of communes.

Beth: I feel I have known Matt before. I felt good with him five minutes after meeting him.

In fact, you have known each other before [in other lifetimes]. In your group, as in this one, there is an intermingling of familiar Entities and Fragments. This produces a special sort of cohesion that enables the Work to proceed. Those who drop by the wayside usually belong in another Cadre [of Entities]. They do not always know why, but the feeling is just not right and they leave. [14 July 1974]

This Q&A exchange says nothing about communal living, but I include it in this chapter because, if there is one single factor that might help a commune to succeed more than any other factor, perhaps it is that it be populated by kindred and friended souls. I suggest that this knowledge about kindred and friended souls facilitating spiritual growth is one reason that the Michaels revealed the information, and emphasized it.

Someone asked what must we do to become awake.

We have of course outlined to this cadre [the original Michaelian group] the steps that they must take if they are to ever become sufficiently awake to hear the words. We have told them of the highest truth, which is Agape, which is the unqualified acceptance of other creatures as the greater part of self. We have given them the tools for attainment of this state, which are yes, meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. We have endeavored to warn them, or rather apprise them, of the pitfalls they may encounter on the path. We have recommended that they simplify their lives, that they may free the necessary energies for pursuit of this objective. We would give you the same advice. It cannot change. This is as we have said many times, the shortest path of which we are aware. The most penetrating barriers on the Physical Plane are the "I cannot" belief systems that stand in the way of spiritual evolution. The easiest way we know of to break through these barriers is to eliminate the alienation, the frustrating isolation that your culture now imposes. [20 November 1974]

Here again, this Q&A exchange does not explicitly mention communal living, but I include it in this chapter because it is relevant because communal living when done correctly fosters Agape, simplifies life, provides opportunities for spiritual pursuits, mitigates alienation.

The Michaels were on a roll in following series of paragraphs, where they claimed that communal living, or something like it, is one of the best ways to promote the spiritual growth that the original Michaelian group members sought.

Lyle asked what stops him from submitting to love — growth — what is the barrier there for him to the emotional experience?

First of all we would like to correct a semantic slip. That is, [the erroneous notion] that “knowledge” is understanding. What has not passed into understanding with you is “input” — nothing more — into the [bio-] computer to be stored. The transformation [from knowledge to understanding] only occurs when the choice has been made — the commitment. The methods you suggest would of course be impossible for us to enforce, although we do of course recognize the method. In this light we have suggested to you an alternative method wherein much stripping [of the barriers of Maya and False Personality] would occur, and you would all be forced to confront your own and other student’s Personalities. When you commit yourselves finally to a cause, whatever that cause might be — Christianity, occultism, revolution, et cetera, et cetera — there is too much at stake to pull out, and you are forced to confront your blocks, and either sink or swim with them. The concept of extended community or family is one environment in which this can come about. The students can sometimes overcome these blocks or barriers rapidly when their livelihood depends upon it. Right now in this cadre nothing real is at stake. There is nothing to lose if the students are unable to work through their blocks.

The barrier between you and the Emotional Center is one that many in this cadre share — you are not alone. The sacrifices, yes, are necessary in yours and other cases, for only through these “sacrifices” will you be able to have this experience. As it is now, there is no good reason, and your Personality is well aware of it. In many ways you and other students are much like the Sunday Catholics throughout the world, who do not have the experience [of transforming knowledge into understanding] either, because there is no commitment.

If one is serious about one’s spiritual path, then sometimes it is useful to intentionally and deliberately put yourself in a situation that is challenging.

We would see you all examine your short-term goals with relation to this teaching. That is, what is it you hope to gain from our association. If this includes the possibility of spiritual growth, then we would suggest that you reexamine the steps toward that goal that we have outlined. If you only expect to gain data, then this will surely be a disappointment to you in the long run. Many of you are looking for the experiences you sense the other students are having, but you are unwilling to work for this in the ways we have suggested. You are content to sit back, sigh, and say, “oh, shit”. This is of course an option, but one we do not encourage.

How many times have we repeated the steps you must take? Examine the tenets of the world’s great religions and the greatest teachings now extant on this planet. You will find this same advice again and again — perhaps clothed in different semantics, but nevertheless the same — that upon which Christianity was based, that upon which Judaism has survived for the centuries, the pillars of Islam, the teachings of Siddhartha Guatama, the Tao Teh Ching.

Refer to the chapter “Religion” for the Michaels’ thoughts on religion and religions.

Until this teaching becomes a way of life for you, there will be no experiences for any of you. The only way we know of to experience anything is to live it — whether you be on the Physical, Astral, Causal, or the high plane, it does not matter. Committing yourselves begins the transformation [from knowledge to understanding].

The concept of “pilgrimage” in some of the best teachings extant on this planet do a marvelous job of stripping, if the pilgrimage is performed in the proper state of mind. We have suggested to you something even harder in this culture: that of living together. Some of you would much prefer to walk across the desert from Medina to Mecca than even to contemplate living together. This is why it would in the long run be valuable. It is perhaps the hardest task you would ever undertake on the Physical Plane, for everything in your culture mitigates against it. The entire culture is achievement-oriented, and this alone implies alienation and competition. Anti-achievement groups [such as spiritual communes] are frightening, and therefore anti-culture, and to be eliminated. Financial integrity is the watchword of this culture, and therefore fraught with Maya. This can always be easily seen in any culture. That which is held up as the goal of society is the goal of False Personality, and therefore opposed to spiritual growth.

Now, we are not suggesting that you plunge yourselves into poverty. We would see that you live well so that there is no struggle to survive, for the main reason that if you must struggle to live, you cannot devote the amount of time necessary for spiritual evolution. This is a lifetime commitment. It is not something that you can work on on Saturday night [when the original Michaelian group usually met] and forget about for the rest of the week. You could not keep it tucked away in some dim, dusky, cerebral corridor and only take it out when company comes.

We have spoken to you many — no, countless — times about what you and we choose to call a “trust level”. This trust level is of course essential to Agape or a spiritual love. The Personality can never experience this. The Personality cannot trust, therefore cannot love. If this trust level is to develop, it must develop in an environment of almost constant exposure. If Agape is to develop, it must develop in an environment where students observe each other in all facets of life, not just when the students are on their good meeting behavior. It is easy to love most of you during the weekly comings together of this cadre. We doubt that this would hold true twenty-four hours a day without much work. Most of you trust each other only superficially. Not one of you feel the bonds that we would foster in this cadre, but the ability is there, and a start has been made several times. However, when it becomes frightening, it is quickly aborted, and the subject is changed rapidly over to something less scary. We have recently decided that this will no longer be the case, at least where we are concerned. We will no longer go along with the whims, the capriciousness, of various students who do not wish to face their barriers. Perhaps then we should say the winnowing has begun. [14 December 1974]

The energy of this Saturday session continued into the next Saturday session:

Of course, there is a method by which you can override the instinctive behavior patterns that separate you from the truth. We believe it was the man Lewis Carroll who first suggested that you do at least six impossible things before breakfast. Just gradually forcing yourselves to attempt all of these impossible things, such as meditation — and even communal living, which is the most impossible thing of all, since it violates all of the precepts of all the most prestigious barrier groups in this culture. To admit that this might be a viable alternative to some of your struggles would be to give up all of your cherished concepts of how you should suffer. The reason that this concept of communal living has been such a dismal failure when tried on this world is fairly easy to understand when we reflect upon the foregoing. We do not even suggest that you would be able to solve all the problems that would arise, but even a positive discussion would be a step in the right direction. As all previous discussions have revolved around how none of these problems could ever be solved. [21 December 1974]

The energy of this Saturday session continued into the next Saturday session:

The concept of cooperation is so frightening to the personality that it fights this, even on a very limited scale, such as a small commune. The knowledge that concessions would have to be made, and the Personality would have to give into another, keeps even the discussion down on a theoretical level. There are other examples of course, but we use this one simply because it has been thrown out to this group, and you have all had an opportunity to observe and Photograph the various reactions to this concept.

We have spoken to you earlier of fear. The fear of closeness in your culture is quite a phenomenon. Living communally is a frightening thing. It is therefore an experience through which you may learn to move through and beyond fear. Alienation is not synonymous with aloneness. Aloneness is essential for spiritual evolution — aloneness as experienced in the meditative state. You must ultimately stand alone. Alienation is not this spiritual aloneness, but merely a defense mechanism of the False Personality, which wishes to enjoy its illusion of uniqueness. [28 December 1974]

A time comes when merely talking about communal living should cease, and one should just do it.

A question was asked how to go about acquiring property for communal growth.

[Soleal:] Just do it. Enough of you are able to look at this as the way out of the alienation, and a new start toward true growth, so that failure is unlikely. That failure is unlikely anyway with such a preponderance of older souls. [01 February 1975]

In the concluding comments on this chapter, I have some advice about how to start a commune, and it is not as radical a recommendation as Soleal suggested, purchasing a property.

And yet, the original Michaelian group members were not finished talking about starting a commune:

This group engaged in a lengthy discussion of communal living, discipline of small children, the rights of teenagers, and the problem of domestic animals. We then asked the teacher for a comment.

Many thoughts, of course. The whole purpose of bringing you together communally was not to present you with insurmountable situations and more Friction than you can handle. The purpose instead was to bring you together in the Work. The most startling advantage of all would not be apparent until you were well into the venture, and had some experience in dealing with a lack of alienation.

The subject of domestic animals is interesting, in that domesticating animals was one of the first symptoms of growing alienation in this culture many centuries ago — almost, in fact, at the dawn of Creatures of Reason on this world. Once man gives up his need for alienation, he can then, and only then, look at the reasons for his need for substitutes; he uses domesticated animals in lieu of people. They are expendable, relatively cheap, and give away no secrets. (If you are not wearing a cape, how can you conceal a dagger?) If the trust level is high enough, the need for substitutes will diminish. Of course, your needs will continue for a time, until you are willing to look at the basis of the need. Perhaps there will be some things that you will be unwilling to give up, but you should at least look at them, so that you know where the need is. It is, again, not Bad Work at all if it is done consciously and not Mechanically. Many of your needs now are based upon the core beliefs and master Tapes that are stored for use by False Personality. Looking at them collectively will be more valuable again than looking at them individually, just as looking at the core beliefs and master Tapes will be.

These paragraphs refer to several subjects that have chapters in this book: “Friction”, “Work”, “Creature of Reason”, “Trust”, “Good Work — Bad Work”, “Mechanical Man”, “Personality — True and False”, “Bio-computer [Tapes]”.

We would see facilitation of the [spiritual] Work in as many areas as possible. Selling your talents is not beyond reach, but you can also consider projects upon which the entire [original Michaelian group] cadre could be involved, such as the workbook, the greetings, and perhaps even the pamphlets. All of you are verifying the difficulty of dealing in the mainstream while in the Work. This will not become easier — it will, in fact, become much more difficult as time goes on. You will wish to devote more and more time to the Work and less to the mainstream.

Children in this culture are permitted to drain off enormous amounts of usable energy in the form of hostility. This is, of course, to be deplored in the Work. Students must learn to realistically look at the amount of Friction caused by their reactions to the children. Students in a communal situation must learn that, if the responsibility for the Friction becomes communal, it will not be allowed to violate the inner spaces. We have no quarrel with firm, loving disciplinary measures issued by the most competent student. This would eliminate much of the Friction. Looking at the Overleaves should be extensively used in determining who would be most effective in the various Friction-fraught areas.

Of course, children should not be allowed to destroy. If they destroy in childhood, they will destroy later also. As soon as a child has reached the age where he can hear the words, he should be brought into the main body of the teaching. It is absurd to keep children in the dark for as long as they are in this society. They are so much more capable than you dream, and this capability can be exploited in so many ways you would be astonished. If the children are concretely rewarded by being given their fair share of authority, they will more readily accept responsibility. No one in this teaching accepts kindly responsibility without authority, yet [they] suppose that children will. [12 February 1975]

Thaddeus: I am aware of the next step for me and it scares the $#!+ out of me.

You see, taking the next step is different than the previous steps have been. It involves leaving something behind, possibly for the remainder of this life. Also, the communal life would set up many natural rhythms, and you will run from these. We invite only those who truly see themselves as students to take this step. For those who do not, it will be a waste of energy, and only result in needless negativity, for it will be experienced in Artificial Space through the Overleaves [rather than Essence] at a vibratory rate of unbelievable coarseness. Of course, with these conditions, communes will fail each and every time.

Billie: Regarding recurring dreams of living in a commune, can't find children, everyone turning against me, making love and no privacy, et cetera.

These are your very real surface fears symbolically experienced as dreams. Really, they are not even symbolic; they are actually fairly overt for dreams. All of you are facing these fears to some degree. The feeling of losing your children is a common one here; also, the fear of no privacy to do your hidden chores, or to hide all of those slightly tarnished activities that you cannot share with anyone because they are so awful. Sex is only one of these things, and you are not alone in this by any means. There is not one student in this room who is not Buffering the true fears about communal living right now. It is not necessary that you live on a commune. This is a choice that we would see many of you students make as a preference, rather than something that is being forced upon you by an unfeeling, non-human teacher who cannot possibly identify by the way of awesome and anguish of the Physical Plane. Well, we have news for you. All of the Fragments of this Entity were very much alive on the Physical Plane for thousands and thousands of years, and we, as an Entity, have experienced all of life. The choice is yours, dear students. We have asked that you consider this as a growth potential. We will not experience a feeling of failure [if you don't do this]. We will merely go on to the data-giving phase until it begins to wear thin with even the most tenacious intellectual among you. [21 February 1975]

This was the last meeting of the large group before that phase of the original Michaelian group ended, and only the core group members met occasionally thereafter. However, discussion of communal living did not cease among the core group members:

Liz read a statement received in trance to the effect that a "force" had come into being that would attempt to lead us back into "A influence."

"A Influence" is a Gurdjieff term — meaning: physical only, lacking the spiritual input.

The first that comes to mind is the search for land. We would suggest that you call at least a six-month moratorium on this, as the way you are now going about it could result only in financial disaster for several who are not in the place to weather this storm. During this period of time, serious students could begin to work on consolidating existing households and begin to live together in what is now available.

More is said about "baby steps" toward communal living in my collection of comments at the end of this chapter.

Creating a Frictionless commune will not help anyone's growth. It is the Friction that produces the shocks for growth. Jumping from one well-feathered nest into another produces no Friction. Second, we would recommend that as many of you as can possibly do it, make the trip to the property belonging to the man, Yorgos, [leader of a Gurdjieff/Ouspensky commune] simply to experience what one truly needs to live, and [experience] an environment in which growth can occur. Then, during the next six months, consider this environment and what [Negative Poles of] Overleaves reject it.

Exclusivity for the sole purpose of avoiding Friction is Bad Work and should not be sanctioned, especially by advanced students. There is an awesome order to the cosmos. Yes, we agree with that, but there is no evidence of preordination in all of that order. In other words, we cannot, at this moment, predict who will or won't accept the Work. No one of the new people has Overleaves that would make them unsuitable for the Work. Many are deeper into the Instinctive Center — in fact, almost Trapped there. We also agree with that, but this should be exploited and not run from as though it might contaminate your higher states. None of you is unable to combat this [Instinctive Center] "bullshit" should you chose to do so. Excluding a source of valuable Friction is just another excuse, the same as looking for the ideal land package that will gratify all the [Negative Pole of the] Instinctive Centers involved [with their desire for physical comfort]. Instinctive Centers [dependence on creature comforts] must be rendered unappealing or you will lose the Work. None of you is capable of activating the Sexual Center at will, so you may as well stop worrying about that one too. All [the Centers] you need be concerned with at this time are the three Centers of Work [Moving, Emotional, Intellectual — which need to become Balanced]. It is also true that no Work can be done by any Student until this is understood on more levels than the intellectual. [15 April 1975]

These statements are per the Gurdjieffian understanding of Instinctive Center as referring to physiology, not to the later understanding of Instinctive Center as referring to a personality trait. The understanding of the Sexual Center has also evolved over the course of the evolution of the Michaelian teachings, starting from mere sexuality and ending at energetic excitation in general. Refer to chapters on Centers in this and my other books for more information.

The final comment that I include in this chapter, relevant the subject of communal living but not explicitly mentioned, came nearly two years later:

Dick felt that he wanted to become a Sage [Role], and he felt that this was possible, to change from one Role to another. There was much discussion on a variety of subjects and this was the response:

That state which Dick describes is of course that which this Entity chooses to call Agape. That is, "love". This state cannot be achieved romantically by the Overleaves. In no way can the Personality abandon itself for even one moment. The ego never relaxes its vigil. It is anti-ego to even consider this, for after all, that is when the devil, or as we choose to refer to it, the mass societal ego, can rush in and influence. We have expressed before the frustrations encountered when one tries to reach this state alone. Aloneness is the single most important obstacle to reaching that state of perfection or rapture called Agape, or love. We have stressed friendship as a preliminary stepping stone — not the superficial friendship of the Overleaves, but the sometimes harsh and unremitting friendship of those in your own pathway who will Photograph your Overleaves in both their Negative and Positive Poles, and this must be an almost constant phenomenon or it will not be successful.

Closeness physically with another compatible Fragment can sometimes produce an environment suitable for spiritual evolution, primarily because if there is considerable honesty, and therefore trust, between those involved, the vigil can be relaxed. Positive Poling is required for this relaxation to occur, and in most physical relationships there is too much Negative Poling. For instance, spiritual evolution cannot occur in the presence of jealousy, envy, or greed. As long as the Chief Feature rules you, there will be no change. Perhaps you may wish to look at the way the Chief Feature rules each of you in this room. [30 September 1977]

Comments on Communal Living

Following are some general comments that supplement what the Michaels had to say on the subject of communal living.

- Historically, communes do not have a good track record for success in achieving their presumptive and idealistic goal of spiritual growth — at least not per the original intention. By that I mean that the spiritual growth happens via negative intimacy (trials and tribulations) rather than positive intimacy. Not that there is anything wrong with that. I had a commune-like experience in a fundamentalist pseudo-quasi Christian cult during my youth, and it was an intensely instructive experience that I do not at all regret. What worked about it was that there was a charismatic leader, and we shared a belief system, value system, and behavior system, and we had a collective goal that subsumed and superseded and transcended individual differences (preparing for the Second Coming). What did not work about it was that there was a series of scandals that caused the trust in the leadership to dissolve, and the faith in the belief system to break down (Jesus Christ did not return on schedule).
- The upshot of the communal experience is that oftentimes everyone's psychological issues is exposed by the intensity and the intimacy of the living arrangement, so people do become "enlightened", but only if they can deal effectively in mitigating the darkness that is revealed in their hearts and souls. If not, then disillusionment and disappointment will result when idealistic expectations about the supposed gloriosity of communal life goes unfulfilled, when the commune did not do what it was "supposed" to do. In my view, a commune is supposed to reveal people's psychological issues in an environment where that can be dealt with in a supportive environment, unlike normal life in society where we hide our own psychological issues just as everyone else does theirs.
- Communal living is mostly a late Level Mature Soul phenomenon, so there are a lot of issues being worked out in terms of bringing to the surface the psychological issues left over from Younger soul incarnations. Old Souls tend to be less collectivistic and more individualistic than Mature Souls, so they are not so attracted to communal living as a lifestyle. They are also less likely to follow a charismatic leader who offers and proffers some idealistic, glorious, utopian scheme.
- One typical problem is that communes are often led by charismatic personalities of the King and/or Priest and/or Sage persuasion, and if they are not truly enlightened masters, then the temptation and the tendency for the commune to devolve into a cult of personality is almost irresistible. Such leaders attract a certain type of follower, namely a follower who has co-dependency issues. There are healthy, and there are unhealthy, guru-accolyte relationships. One advantage that the original Michaelian group had was that their charismatic leader was the Michaels themselves.
- During the entire two years that the original Michaelian group convened, realistically and pragmatically, it was always too soon to seriously consider starting a commune. The group needed to stabilize, a tremendous amount of spiritual work needed to be done, and a tremendous amount of physical preparation needed to happen. Considering the people and the circumstances, it was always a goofy idea, which they got from the Fellowship of Friends, and which had big ideas.
- In my opinion, the way to start a Michaelian teachings commune is by taking 'baby steps'. One of the main problems of starting a commune seems to be to jump into the detailed planning for a big and complicated commune. This provides enormous logistical problems; there are many working parts that need to get sorted out among many people who might not know each other very well. Oftentimes a charismatic leader likes to do it this way. This is often where communes have gone awry, historically speaking. Forget that. I suggest that there is a better chance for success if there is no charismatic leader. Rather, personally, if I were so inclined, I would look for a situation where there are a number of level-headed, realistic, pragmatic, competent people, all of whom see the numerous advantages of communal living. Perhaps one should first get just two people to live together amicably in one house, or maybe two couples. Once that configuration is stabilized in mature spirituality, then perhaps add another individual or couple. Rinse and repeat. An alternative to living in one house is to live in the same apartment complex, and add people as units become available. This allows for as much alone time mixed with as much group time as people are comfortable with; one can deal with the inevitable Friction in digestible doses. Once the personalities and relationships are stabilized, the group can graduate to more commune-like living and working arrangements, complete with gardening and some money-making endeavor. If everyone's vision is in alignment with the Life Plans of all involved and not some idealistic delusions, then things will all work out.

- Typically, successful communes interface with the surrounding community in healthy and profitable ways. Some communes go astray because they have some pathology in their ideology or functionality that is not addressed and mitigated, but that only gets worse because the commune is isolated or insulated from corrective sources. That is why healthy interaction with the surrounding community is valuable.
- To me, it seems extraordinarily unlikely that Michaelian teachings students will ever get their act together enough with enough people to even begin to start a commune. It seems more likely to me that some individual Michaelian students, or maybe a few, will be interested in joining an existing spiritually-oriented commune that has a belief, value, and behavior system that is compatible with the Michaelian teachings. Internet resources for finding existing successful and healthy communes are surely available.

⑧ COMMUNICATION

Perhaps you have heard the lament, “What we’ve got here is a failure to communicate”. In the 1967 Paul Newman movie classic, that memorable line is used by the captain of the chain gang to justify beating Cool Hand Luke. It is a component of the human condition that other people have minds of their own, and it is often difficult to get those other people to understand us, and this is not just the case with people who speak different languages. As it so happens, the Michaels had somewhat to say on the subject of communication during the original Michaelian group. Their recommendations do not including beating other people to get your point across; things are more subtle than that.

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “communication” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) communication issues are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

The word communication is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

In this chapter, and in some other chapters in this Study Papers book, we see that the Michaels were concerned about accuracy of communication. For instance, in the “Bias” chapter we see that the Michaels were concerned that their teaching be conveyed accurately through the channels. For instance, in the “Energy and Energy Leaks” chapter we see that the Michaels were concerned that their students communicate with each other through the proper Centers. In another chapter, “Communal Living”, we see that one of the functions of a commune should be to enhance the quality of communication as the members got to know each other better, and trust each other more. In this chapter, we see that the Michaels were concerned that students communicate accurately with each other by verbal and non-verbal means.

Definition of Communication

Whenever possible, I rely on Wikipedia to provide a definition and description of a term:

The word “communication” has its root in the Latin verb “communicare”, which means “to share” or “to make common”. Communication is usually understood as the transmission of information. In this regard, a message is conveyed from a sender to a receiver using some form of medium, such as sound, paper, bodily movements, or electricity. In a different sense, the term “communication” can also refer just to the message that is being communicated or to the field of inquiry studying such transmissions. There is a lot of disagreement concerning the precise characterization of communication and various scholars have raised doubts that any single definition can capture the term accurately. These difficulties come from the fact that the term is applied to diverse phenomena in different contexts, often with slightly different meanings. The issue of the right definition affects the research process on many levels. This includes issues like which empirical phenomena are observed, how they are categorized, which hypotheses and laws are formulated as well as how systematic theories based on these steps are articulated. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Communication> — retrieved 28 March 2023]

Personally, I like the meaning given, “to make common”, because if a message sent is not received and the meaning is not understood, then there has been no communication. The Michaels agree with that notion, as we see in the next section.

Communication in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. On the other hand, this is a subject that benefits by division into subcategories. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Q&A exchanges are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Channeling Communication

It is not easy for non-physical beings to communicate accurately with physical beings. Somewhat was said about this in the chapter “Bias”, but more is said about it here. The first mention of communication in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is this one, about a month before the Michaels appeared:

Sue: Can we hear more about planes?

[Tomas:] You understand that this is an extensive subject. The time [element] in planes is presently misunderstood. The planes are different levels, as in ladders, though your time concepts are being misinterpreted.... This is unclear because you cannot see above you.... This is difficult to communicate through Carolyn as she lacks the words and understanding. [17 July 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Planes” for more information about that subject mentioned in this quotation.

One of the confounding issues that beset all attempts to communicate is that sometimes the vocabularies of the sender and/or the receiver are inadequate to accurately convey the intended meaning. Communication is especially difficult when the two people do not speak the same language. Symbolic languages have been invented, such as those for logic and mathematics, in attempts to convey concepts that are too exacting and/or too abstruse for normal conversation, but here also both sender and receiver must have the relevant expertise.

Of course, communication is also especially difficult when the sender and receiver are on different planes of reality connected by an intermediary, as is the case with a non-physical entity communicating through a channel to an audience. Altered states of consciousness pose lesser but similar problems. For instance, Near Death Experiencers and psychedelic drug psychonauts often declare that there are no words that adequately convey the meaning of their experiences because they are so far outside of our physical reality: they are “ineffable”, so when they try to tell us non-experiencers they must ‘translate’ as best they can with whatever similar concepts they can think of.

In the next session a few days later, the subject of communication with higher planes resurfaced:

Alice: How can I raise myself to the higher — through meditation?

[Tomas:] You are right. Meditation is the door by which you can enter the higher plane and communicate with those waiting to help. Fasting and occasional solitude and silence prepare you for a more meaningful experience. There are many excellent places giving instruction. Maybe this would open the door for you, Alice. The need for personal guidance varies with the individual. [24 July 1973]

Refer to the chapters “Meditation and Concentration” and “Silence, The” and “Solitude” and “Fasting” for more about those methods to enhance communication with transcendent realms of consciousness. With those methods, one learns to listen for, and listen to, non-physical beings, as well as one’s own inner–higher self.

The Michaels initiated communication with the original Michaelian group at the 12 August 1973 session, but the general subject of communication did not emerge for four more months:

Jack: I would like to know how long the Ouija board has been used and what other forms of communication can be used.

We communicate in many ways with many people. We have not been in a physical body for almost fifteen hundred years.

Jack: Okay, and how long has the Ouija been used and what other means of communication are possible?

We have communicated this way [Ouija board] for approximately one hundred years. We communicate directly with all those [of our] students who have mastered the skill of Astral [Plane] travel. We are willing to use hypnosis for induction of trances, but trans-mediums who can go into trances spontaneously are easier to work with. There are different kinds of mediums. [13 December 1973]

All kinds of things affect the quality and quantity of communication, and the manner or method of channeling is not excluded. Following this session, there were several sessions with occasional mentions of communication between entities on higher planes and people; these mentions are not relevant to my purpose for this chapter.

There is a caveat regarding communication with beings on higher planes:

We have told you many times that communication with the higher planes should not be used as a parlor game, and in the light of the questioning one, we would reiterate this advice. There are denizens of the low Astral [sub-]Planes who are no more admirable in death than they were in life. [27 March 1974]

This could be construed as a recommendation that young adults not “play” with an Ouija board. Because they are unlikely to be serious about a spiritual path, they will likely attract unserious discarnate beings. The founding members of the original Michaelian group were serious about their spiritual path, and they attracted like-minded beings to communicate with.

Communication Across Lifetimes

Previously communication from one Plane to another via channeling was discussed. In addition to that, communication is not limited to people at the same space/time location:

Ray: What is the criteria whether a [Karmic] Ribbon is formed or not?

If you communicated all of your expectations, the other soul understood all the options and took action on that basis, then a Ribbon probably [doesn't?] exists. Most interpersonal crises revolve around unfulfilled expectations and do not involve Karma of a substantial sort. Neglect of very young children constitutes Karma; breaking engagements does not. [20 February 1974]

Karma can be framed in terms of ‘communication’ between two people. Karma creates a ‘ribbon’ that spans lifetimes, and demands an ‘answer’; refer to the chapter “Karma” for more discussion of that subject. Maybe I am misunderstanding something, but it makes more sense to me that a Karmic Ribbon is probably not created if thorough and accurate communication of expectations is sent and received; the next sentence in the quotation says that. In true communication, there is no misinformation or disinformation intended at the sending end of the transfer, and there is no misinterpretation or misunderstanding at the receiving end of the transfer. True communication is a metaphorical ‘two-way street’, and mis-communication happens when the sender or receiver does not send or receive the meaning of the communication accurately; Karma is a lot like that.

This Q&A thread about Karma continued as follows:

Cynthia: It is the teachings of Jesus, complete forgiveness, accepting it even if you do not know what for.

You must somehow [one way or another] petition for this [forgiveness], otherwise, there is no communication.

Cynthia: Can Karma be worked out when the other party to the Ribbon is not around?

It is doubtful that anyone not on the (spiritual) path would be able to do this, Cynthia.

Nichols: If I have a falling out with someone, and can see and can accept the reality and forgive him but he does not accept me, is there Karma still there?

Then the communication has been incomplete and you may still find yourself facing the business end of a shotgun. One needs only to be aware that there is a Ribbon, but for full understanding and acknowledgment, both must know. [20 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Forgiveness” for the complete discussion. ‘Communication’ or interaction regarding the forgiveness of Karma is also a metaphorical ‘two-way street’ — both parties have to be in conscious agreement that it is no longer necessary to play out the Karmic drama, meaning that they both have learned what was needed to be learned by the event. The mutual canceling or forgiveness of a Karmic debt is indeed a very deep form of ‘communication’.

Non-verbal Communication

The subject of non-verbal communication first came up in the original Michaelian group even before the Michaels showed up, and it proved to be an interesting topic thereafter:

Dick: Was I using the Don Juan teaching incorrectly when I injured my back? Was it through wrong thinking?

[Tomas:] This is a correct assumption, Dick. The use of the information wrongly was communicated through his body because his body was aware of the error before his intellect. [17 July 1973]

Communication does not just happen verbally, via the transfer of concepts from mind to mind via mouths and ears. I see two interpretations of what this answer might mean by “communicated through his body”. First, in my experience, it is often the case that the (subconscious mind of the) body knows things that the conscious mind does not, and one can learn to discern this by reading the “body language” of other people. Of course, one can also become aware of one’s own body language, and thereby pick up on clues that it might provide to your conscious mind, because the body is full of pre-conscious information. You may add to what you already know about this phenomenon by reading this: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Body_language<. Second, there is communication beyond the visual discernment of your own, or another person’s, body language. People who are viscerally sensitive to what I refer to as the “body energy” of other people can learn to pay attention to subtle sensations in their own body, and thereby ‘read’ the energy in the “aura” of the physical body of another person who is in close proximity. I suspect that we are typically more subconsciously aware of these types of non-verbal communication than we ever become consciously aware of.

Awareness of the body is non-verbal communication on one level; telepathy could be considered to be another type or level of non-verbal communication:

Richard: I had a whole evening one time, on grass [Marijuana] meditation, on mind-to-mind [telepathic] communication — that this is the way to communicate with people: You don’t apologize, you don’t bother to explain everything; you just go back and forth with direct statements. You don’t get emotionally involved — you are dealing on a higher level.

Sarah: Well, the other person has to be communicating on that level also. Otherwise, I can see it deteriorating really fast.

Dick: I think that the way you eventually get there is by chipping away at it the way we’re doing. One of our big things, for three years [1970, 1971, 1972 in the Gurdjieff group], was to rid ourselves of anger and hostility, either dumping it or accepting it, but somehow just saying that you want to get rid of it doesn’t get rid of it. There was no method suggested there that seemed workable. [02 October 1973]

The different “levels” of communication can be correlated with the Centers when ranked per the Natural Sequence. From ‘lower’ to ‘higher’ “levels” these are: Moving > Emotional > Intellectual > Instinctive > Higher Intellectual > Higher Emotional > Higher Moving — refer to the chapter “Levels of Being” for more about that ranking. Body Language happens in the Moving Center, verbal communication happens in the Intellectual Center, telepathy happens in the Higher Intellectual Center, where the Negative Pole was actually named as such. Refer to the chapter “Telepathy” for more about mind-to-mind communication, which is extra-ordinary. This “Communication” chapter is not about that. Rather, in this chapter, the Michaels suggest “workable methods” for enhancing communication of the more accessible and ordinary type; refer to a subsection further on.

Richard: That is one reason communal living is good. You become a working unit and communicate on a mind-to-mind level. [22 November 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Communal Living” for more discussion about that subject. The more time that compatible people spend together, the better their communication tends to become, and that potentially leads to telepathy; communal living can provide a positive feedback for that. It does not say so here, but I suggest that the contrary is also true: incompatible people have negative feedback, and that leads to the extinction of meaningful communication.

“Communication” does not involve words only; there are other types of interpersonal exchange, including sexual “intercourse”:

Dick: My perception is that sex and sexual relationships are the major impediment on this plane to staying on the path. If we are going to have a medical clinic and grow, it is essential to deal with this problem.

Your perception, of course, is completely valid. This is the reason why most Adepts eventually refrain from entering into such relationships. Some, but only relatively few, have been able to continue to engage in a physical sexual relationship while evolving spiritually. The reason for this should be fairly obvious when you stop and realize that sexuality of the physical sort pertains to the Physical Plane. This does not exist on the other planes; it is supplanted by more open communication. Persons who are hostile and aggressive enough to inflict pain or death upon other persons are always found to be sexually uptight in some way. Sexually satiated persons are normally passive, but this is only true when the mind accepts the sexual act in the same frame as the body does. As long as there is conflict in the mind, there is not complete satisfaction and aggression results. [29 November 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” for a thorough discussion of what more the Michaels have to say about that subject. Sexual intercourse provides communication in two Centers: sexual action in the Moving Center, and sexual energy in the Higher Moving Center. Regarding both kinds of exchange, sexual intercourse is a type of non-verbal communication, but so are music and art, which they say elsewhere are types of “open communication” preferred on the Astral Plane. Near Death Experiencers tell us that meaning is conveyed from being to being telepathically. My book The Tao of Relationships: The Chemistry and Alchemy of Service and Intimacy discusses ‘energy’ exchanges in all of the Centers.

A couple of weeks later this came through:

Tina: What is the purpose of learning all these [Overleaf] labels? I dislike labels.

It is only important if you wish to make The Synthesis. We agree, verbal communication is a poor excuse for the sum of communication. However, until one of you break through with telepathy, this will have to do. This study [of the Overleaf System] enables you to have insights to the motivation of certain activities that could conceivably be perceived by you as hostile or undesirable, and prohibit the understanding necessary for Agape to take place. It will also enable you to aid those who seek your counsel. [13 December 1973]

The Michaels referred to their teaching as “The Synthesis”; refer to the chapter by that name. As we see in this chapter, types of communication other than verbal-mental “telepathy” are mentioned in various passages. For instance, there is the sight of another person’s body language, there is the palpable sensation of aura energy transfers, and there is meaningful physical touch during massage. There is also “communication” via so-called “psychic energy”, as we see in the next mention of communication:

Sue: Why are we [telepathically] communicating so much between the two of us (Carolyn and Sue)?

Sue’s tremendous psychic energy is having its effect on you.

Carolyn: Does my psychic energy influence it?

That is valid, but she [Sue] is a vortex of energy. This accounts for the high level of psychic or extra-verbal communication. You too have a fairly high level of psychic energy. To activate this, you need the permission of the receiver. Carolyn also needs the assurance that her receiver is willing. [17 January 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Psychic Energy” for more information. Briefly, the concept of “energy” is of a “force” with “momentum” that conveys an “effect” aka “influence” from one “thing” to some other “thing”. “Psychic” energy is the metaphysical counterpart to “physical” energy, and it acts the same way in its own realm: psychic energy operates in the mind realm; it ‘moves’ and is ‘moved’ or ‘changed’ or ‘rearranged’. Thus, human “communication” conveys ‘energy’ (as meaningful information) between the minds of two individuals.

We held a group discussion of experiences and impressions during the weekend we spent together. Many of us experienced verification of Soleal, Emotional Center experiences, and a cohesiveness of the group. We then asked Michael for a comment about the weekend the group had spent together, specifically about trust.

We would hope that those of you who were exposed to the verification of the presence of our other student [Soleal] and who were exposed simultaneously to the joy of communication without the need for subterfuge and verbiage, would attempt within the next few months to perfect, or at least awaken, these skills within yourselves. This is perhaps the most exciting breakthrough that this cadre has yet experienced....

The reason for the psychic Photograph should be fairly clear at this time. It is primarily a warm-up exercise, leading to nonverbal communication. Many students who are also teachers err in trying to speed up this process and, for that reason, the desired communication does not take place. The telepathic silence is anything but silent, but students cannot be shielding if this is to come about. If you first learn to express your feelings to one another without shame or guilt or any of the other myriad barriers, then you open the door to silence. Only then can you be truly comfortable without the chatter. Chattering is usually just another shield so the Personality does not have to be honest. You see, the Essence cannot lie; therefore, the Personality cannot tell the truth. It can only lie. This is an important point to remember, since the chattering emanates from the Personality. The Essence does communicate. There is no need for mindless silence in the path toward Balance, but it might as well be truthful communication, and until you can knock away the barriers, this cannot come about. The Personality will always be around to conveniently lie in order to satisfy the Goal. If this Goal happens to be Acceptance, for instance, think of how much energy is lost. [12 November 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Silence, The” for more about attuning and communing with other people in Centers other than the Intellectual, such that mindless chatter becomes counterproductive to better and deeper communication. Refer to the chapter “Emotional Center” for more discussion of non-verbal communication. Unfortunately, verbal communication is often used to convey misinformation and disinformation, or just to fill the silence with thoughtless “chatter”. Refer to chapters “Balanced Man”, “Barriers”, “Essence and Personality”, “Photography”, and “Telepathy” for discussions of those subjects mentioned in this passage.

Barriers to Communication

Translation problems with communication between planes and lifetimes is difficult and problematic, but there are also translation problems with communication between ensouled species on the Physical Plane:

Do dolphins and whales communicate with each other?

There are barriers, much the same as your language barriers present. [22 May 1974]

I find it hard to believe that whales are incarnated. Why has there not been contact between the whales and us, and are the whales aware that we are incarnated?

Except for the man John (Lilly) there has been insufficient interest in whether they can communicate.

The crucial thing here is the question, Is it desirable to establish communication with them? Is there any cosmic reason to share with them?

Communication is, of course, possible.... [30 May 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Cetaceans” for more information about that subject.

Phyllis: Do animals laugh?

Laughter is limited to Creatures of Reason. They alone feel the need to communicate the fact that they are either pleased or awfully nervous to those around them. Other animals do occasionally indicate their nervousness by coughing, stamping, etc., but not laughing. We see the need to laugh as genuine in Creatures of Reason who so depend upon verbal communication, and where in some societies displeasure just might result in violence. [19 June 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Creatures of Reason”. Laughing is a communication from the Emotional Center as words are a communication primarily from the Intellectual Center. Different Centers obviously have different types of communication, so miscommunication happens when ‘wires’ of communication get ‘crossed’, such as when the Intellectual Center gets misinterpreted by the Emotional Center, or vice versa.

Another communication barrier is that between the “living” (those in the Physical Plane interval) and the “dead” (those in the Astral Plane interval):

Delia: If reincarnated with a loved one, will we communicate with them again?

There are so many strands that bond you together, that it is truly unlikely that one who is genuinely loved will not be with you again in the future as well as in the past.

Are these actions on the Physical Plane?

Of course, you are free to communicate with whomever you please on the Astral interval, but often the need to dissipates once the understanding of certain actions becomes clear. Many souls are at a loss to explain many phenomena on the Physical Plane, such as the suicide of a lover, and hope to have this explained to them. Then, once they are again unencumbered by the physical, they understand the reasons, and [they] shed guilt, and the need to interrogate leaves.

Delia: If there are no guilt feelings, can you see the aura?

Once the initial period of adjustment has taken place, yes. You may often communicate, but only because on the Physical Plane [you] have this need. There is seldom a need in an Astral being to set the score right, as they understand that this can come later. Understand that the Personality used in the present reincarnation, dies with the body, and any communication would be with the Essence, and thus alien.

Louise: I would like to ask about my dream where my mother, who is dead, came as a light.

Unfortunately or fortunately, whichever the case may be, most of these “visitations” by the newly dead or recently dead are wishes or dreams in which the lost loved one absolves one of any guilt feelings, or merely says a proper good bye. It is rare for a soul less than fifty years into the Astral Cycle to be in any position to communicate. The exception to this, of course, are those who die suddenly or violently and who often try desperately to cling to the Physical Plane. [03 July 1974]

According to the accounts of many ghost stories and dreams, the desire to communicate across the veil of “death” goes both ways.

Richard: Is the primary frequency for the group the third harmonic of 17 cycle spike wave?

Richard was an Artisan by Role and an engineer by occupation, hence the propensity for nerdiness.

There is much static in this group, owing to the different levels as students. [29 October 1974]

In the science and engineering of so-called “information theory” — which concerns itself with the quantity and the quality of communication — there is the notion of ‘signal versus noise’. The “static” mentioned in this quote is like what one hears on a radio station that is not perfectly tuned, or like the ‘snow’ that one sees on a television screen where the station is not perfectly tuned. People at different levels of studenthood are like different people who are attuned to different radio stations or different television channels, each having their different ‘frequency’.

As one can reasonably expect, there is a lot of ‘noise’ or miscommunication between students on the Physical Plane:

... it is merely sad that communication on the Physical Plane is so bad, particularly between those bound together by strong legal ties rather than Essence ties, that the need for freedom cannot be expressed. [09 January 1975]

People who are kindred or friended souls tend to communicate with each other more effectively and efficiently than those who do not have a history with each other in past lifetimes or in transcendent realms. That particular answer was said to a person who was in an unhappy marriage. Unhappy marriages typically result when communication is bad in terms of verbal and non-verbal realms. When a marriage is healthy, various forms of communication are typically good. Marriage counselors emphatically declare that good communication is necessary for a healthy marriage, and that there is only so much that can be done to improve communication that does not come easily and naturally to a couple. A subsequent section discusses how Overleaves affect communication.

Mechanical Man, or man asleep, does not communicate, at least not if one is to posit communication as a two-way street. [Dimensions! April 1975]

Refer to the chapters “Mechanical Man” and “Awakening from Sleep” for more about those references in this passage. Monologue is not nearly as effective in communication as dialogue. But then, two people talking at each other, rather than with each other, is not real communication either. Real communication requires that both parties listen carefully to, not only what the other person is saying, but surmise why the other person is saying it.

Enhancing Communication

Communication is said to be a good thing, so how are we to augment and improve it?

Unfulfilled expectations are the sole cause of anger. We know of none other. When you stop expecting, there will be no anger.

Dick: There is a delicate line between that and going to ‘sleep’. Lots of things in life depend on expectations.

You must communicate your needs and wants to those around you. Unless you are telepathic, you must do it verbally. Then you must leave them with an option; you must make that option known to them. The alternatives, with all of the ramifications, must be understood, as well as the motivation of their acceptance or refusal. When there is complete understanding, there will be no disagreement. You have all heard this before, and we must emphasize it because it is the secret to effective communication, which will banish the specter of unfulfilled expectations. [02 October 1973]

Refer to chapters “Expectation” and “Motivation” and “Understanding”. Refer to the chapter “Awakening from Sleep” for more about that metaphor for the lack of awareness common to non-spiritual people; this is a lack of awareness that inhibits meaningful communication. If I had to choose one quotation in this chapter as the most important, this would be it. It is so clear and concise that I don’t know what to say that would add to it, other than that people should think through stuff and thoroughly and clearly sort themselves out first before they initiate communication. This passage is the main reason that I decided to research and write this chapter. Yarbrow also included it in her book Messages from Michael (1979) on pages 58-59.

The Michaels have other recommendations for “effective communication”:

Billie: Is there some way I might communicate more with my older son, Jason.

The rent [break] in the trust must be repaired first. Let him know that you will not judge. You must also let him know that you will respect confidences thus exposed. This is a fragile Mature Soul who perceives you as a fluctuating source of security because of your own inner conflicts. [01 November 1973]

Three facilitators of effective and efficient communication were delivered in this answer. Refer to the chapter "Trust" for more discussion of one of the factors. "Respecting confidences" is, of course, necessary to establish and maintain trust between the communicators; refer to the chapter "Secrets and Secrecy" for more about that. Refer to internet web pages on so-called "non-violent communication" for a thorough discussion about being non-judgmental and non-aggressive and non-abusive toward the person you are communicating with. For instance, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nonviolent_Communication is a good place to start.

Question regarding small groups.

... Trust, as you have said, implies communication and awareness, and they are inseparable.... [27 March 1974]

That trust exists implies that there has been good communication and high awareness. This means that communication and awareness fosters trust, and vice versa: the more trust, the better the communication and awareness will be. Refer to the chapter "Trust" for a discussion of that phenomenon. Basically and briefly, trust is built between two people who repeatedly interact and thereby converge on a stable common ground, whereas distrust (via lack of communication and awareness) moves people apart. The size of the interacting group has a bearing on this: the smaller the group, the better is the communication, the less scattered is the awareness, and the easier and quicker is the building of trust. Furthermore, recall that one cannot communicate accurately if one is not consciously aware of one's motivations and expectations, as noted previously. The subject of awareness is discussed in the chapters "Self-observation" and "Self-remembering".

I feel isolated from people. Is it related to sex or Overleaves or what? How can I approach this problem?

... Incidentally, the silence [of isolation] can be a marvelous experience, but there must be agreement and positive communication within the silence. Nothing is quite so destructive as a hostile, angry silence. [27 March 1974]

Perhaps this "angry silence" is referring to the "silent treatment" or the "cold shoulder", which is a so-called "passive-aggressive" method of communication. This form of communication is not straightforward and honest and trustworthy; it is not the right way to "communicate your needs and wants to those around you" as discussed previously. However, refer to the chapter "Silence, The" for discussion about an intentional practice of silence, which can have spiritual implications when done with those of a like mindset. If you prefer some isolation more than you do communication with other people, then let The Silence be to establish better communication with your own inner self, such as unexplored aspects of self, or your own so-called "Higher Self"; refer to the chapter by that name, and the chapters "Intuition" and "Insight".

Elizabeth: Comment on ladies meeting?

Elizabeth, there was much scattering as you know, but this can be controlled with practice. The need to exchange communication at times overrides the quality of that communication. This can be so effective if carried out in the direction of the Work. It would be an ideal time to exchange those insights that are individually unique in origin and yet universally relevant. [24 September 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Scattering" for more discussion about that subject. In my experience, one of the most distracting things about undisciplined and unfocused group meetings is that everyone wants to add their 'two cents', no matter how peripheral it is to the subject. These are people who enjoy the social-emotional exchange for its own sake, in distinction to the kind of people who value the quality of the content of the mental information being exchanged. In the emotional scenario, the discussion looks more like an exploding bush than it looks like a thread. Consequently, no subject ever gets a thorough treatment. It might help to keep people 'on track' if a respected individual is appointed to 'shepherd the flock' to help people stay on the 'trail' of the subject. Some groups pass a "talking stick" around from person to person, and only that person who has the stick can talk. In that scenario, there are no interruptions, and comments tend to be much more focused on the subject. Perhaps you have heard of "Robert's Rules" for task-oriented formal meetings: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Robert's_Rules_of_Order.

There is a time and a place for ebullient social-emotional exchange, such as in a party, and there is a time for deeply thoughtful exchange, if that is the reason for convening the gathering:

Discussion about maintaining silence while working on a project, maybe on a weekend thing, with one day of silence.

That, too, would be a valuable experience for all of you, but we would suggest a creative silence rather than a strained one. One day set aside to work on an important project of your choosing in silence, but together, using other than verbiage to communicate your needs. Writing “bullshit” on little pieces of paper does not differ from saying it out loud. This is not silence the way we mean it. [21 December 1974]

The suggestion from the Michaels here seems to be that it is Good Work to intentionally expand one’s repertoire of communication skills into non-verbal means and methods by silencing the verbal means of communication. Apparently, the point is to become sensitive to the exchange of information via Centers other than the Intellectual Center. Telepathy, for instance, a phenomenon that is mentioned repeatedly in this context, is said to be from the Higher Intellectual Center.

All relationships, including group gatherings, need healthy communication:

It is, again, merely a sad commentary on the Physical Plane that communication is so poor. It is hoped that with this [original Michaelian group] cadre, for instance, a trust level will be developed where these conflicts will fade away. When the trust level is such that one student could say to another, “I wish you would die and leave me alone,” that statement will be totally unnecessary, as the other student will already know to give the necessary space. This can only be gained by the highest of trust levels, and comes through hard work.... [09 January 1975]

Add that to some previous statements about trust being an essential component of good communication. Refer to the chapter “Trust”.

Effect of Overleaves on Communication

In an answer in a previous section, the Mature Soul Age is mentioned as a factor that affects the quality and quantity of communication. The Overleaf factor show up in numerous Q&A exchanges on this subject. The reason for this is obvious: the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System because understanding it facilitates communication between people with different personalities, and good communication is one of those things that leads to Agape, the ultimate goal of the Michaelian teachings. Obviously, the more similar the array of Overleaves of two people, the easier their communication, and the more dissimilar the array of Overleaves of two people, the harder their communication. In my experience, the closeness, or not, in Soul Age is the most important single facilitator of easy communication of anything else on the Overleaf Chart, because Soul Age determines a person’s fundamental worldview, perceptions, and perspective.

The contribution that close Soul Age makes to communication came up in this session:

Carolyn and Howard commented that they frequently have the same thought at the same time, and wondered who was the sender and who was the receiver.

There are strong vibrations between Mature and Older Souls. The position of the planets could be marked while this is going on strongest. You could experiment with it. Meditation assists it. If you do not like it, you can stop it, but would lose the growth. Many people work at this for a long time and don’t achieve this communication. It is a gift. Howard is a good transmitter; Carolyn is a good receiver. [20 November 1973]

If any two people want to intentionally and mutually enhance their communication, the Michaels suggest experimentation and meditation as means and methods; refer to the chapter “Meditation and Concentration”.

Dick wondered why Dr. Paauw seemed so competent, yet he is a Baby Soul and an Artisan.

... Personal relationships require communication, and it is difficult for this particular entity to express himself to others. He cannot communicate well with lowers, people not physicians, and thus the expression, Baby Soul. He expresses his artistic qualities in the operating room, behind closed doors, not from open doors or from his heart in emotional situations. [20 November 1973]

Again we have a comment about how Soul Age affects the quality and quantity of communication, the younger the Soul Age, the worse the quality. Here we see how another Overleaf category, Role, affects the quality and quantity of communication. Here and elsewhere it was said that Artisans tend to be non-verbal. On the other hand, Sages, the opposite of Artisans on the Expression Axis, tend to be overly verbal.

Emotional communication is the subject of the next mention of the word:

Mallory: I am confused about my tearfulness and energy leaks, and wonder where this recent tearfulness in me is coming from.

Comment: If the tears are coming from a positive place, and there is love and communication, they probably are not an energy leak. If they are coming without a pattern, they are probably an energy leak. [24 February 1974]

The person who made that comment might have seen the connection between love and communication and energy that I also see. My expanded definition of “communication” includes intimate (“loving”) “energy exchanges” of various types between two people, including but not limited to verbal communication. My book

The Tao of Relationships describes seven archetypal loving energy exchanges, or 'communications', so to speak, correlated with the seven Centers. I named these seven types of communications as Behavioral, Affective, Mental, Systemic, Mystical, Spiritual, and Cosmic. Recall that it is in the Centers that we process our life experiences, and from which we communicate to others what we have processed.

Abdullah stated that he felt blocked to perception or to 'spirit communications'.

He is blocked by very much the same way in which Sarah is blocked. The need to satisfy the intellectual curiosity often takes precedence over all spiritual desires. The [intellectual curiosity] mode here is powerful[ly] augmented by the need to Dominate, especially in Intellectual Center. This one [Abdullah] must capitalize on the Attitude [Spiritualist] if he is to hear this Teaching, which is not at variance with what he now believes. [10 September 1974]

Both Abdullah and Sarah were Scholars with a Goal of Dominance. On other occasions the Michaels commented that Intellectual Center can be an impediment to their students regarding hearing the spiritual component of their teaching; refer to the chapter "Emotional Center" for more about that. (I am a Scholar-cast Artisan, a Spiritualist, so I am 'in the same boat'. It appears that my interest in, and approach to, the Michaelian teachings is driven more by a general scientific and philosophical curiosity than it is by a desire for spiritual growth or enlightenment, and I am okay with that.)

Speaking of communication via the Emotional Center:

Louise: We visited, on Saturday, a friend who soon will leave her home and go to a rest home. Sunday, I felt depressed and ill. Any connection with [the] lady?

Some are able to communicate their despair more lucidly than others. This lady is an example. She was able to let you, Louise, know the depth of her despondency.

Louise: Which Center lets this sensitivity in?

Plus much early training in sympathy. [24 September 1974]

Having spent many hours with Louise, I can affirm that she was a sensitive, caring person. Despondent people do not usually have the energy to communicate their despondency. People who have a strong Higher Emotional Center are especially sensitive to the moods of other people, and this is why I prefer to call it the Sympathy Center, with a Positive Pole named +Empathy and a Negative Pole named -Sensitivity. This comment reinforces a teaching of Gurdjieff and of the Michaels mentioned above, namely that communication is most accurate if it occurs from same-Center-to-same-Center of one person to another; otherwise, there is confusion and misunderstanding.

The Overleaf System of personality traits should assist accurate communication between people who know it well, but it is a temporary crutch on the long-term story arc of one's spiritual path:

This desire to do away with [Overleaf] labeling is not at all bad, and in its more positive stance approaches Zen Buddhism. Labeling for this [original Michaelian group] cadre is now only an expedient of communication. At a later point, we would hope to be able to dispense with this. Right now, it is easier this way and more understandable. [14 December 1974]

There are advantages and disadvantages, in a spiritual teaching, to having a special vocabulary of jargon words that refer to complicated, specialized, or unusual concepts. One advantage is group cohesion in a belief system that is better than what was had before, and the students can communicate with each other efficiently using the jargon, but at some point it becomes better to do without the jargon, and perhaps without the belief system that underlies the jargon. This signals a movement to Centers above and beyond communication in the Intellectual Center and other lower Centers, to communication in the higher Centers.

We would have to say that this man's Chief Feature stands in the way of any communication with other than his own subconscious storehouse of knowledge. [31 January 1975]

Add this to some previous statements about Overleaves affecting the quantity and the quality of communication between people.

A subsequent session mentioned again the role that Overleaves play in the realm of communication:

The group fragmented into lengthy discussions on Photographing other students, handling negativity in the moment rather than brooding about it until it blew up beyond the ridiculous. Much negativity was given to the group to look at.

The student David has stressed the importance of communicating through the Centers and not the [other] Overleaves, and that cannot be stressed enough. When you Photograph another student with your Overleaves, it will always — and we repeat — always, be from a negative space, where the Overleaves abrade. When you give a Photograph from the Centers, it will almost always be valid. You must, and we repeat, must, learn to Photograph from the Centers and not from the [other] Overleaves. Forget what the verbalized issue happens to be — it is always a lie — and determine where the true issue lies. Learn to Photograph the real issue in Real Space. The ideal Photograph at that time (speaking to Sarah about her conflict with another student) would have been, “I understand that you have much pain and I have compassion.” [12 February 1975]

Refer to the chapters “Photography” and “Real Space versus Artificial Space” for more about those aspects of communication. In one of my previous comments, I noted that communication should be between the same Center in both communicators, because if the communication is between different Centers, there is distortion and misunderstanding. Part Four of my book The Tao of Personality is about how the Overleaves interact with each other, for good as well as for bad. If people understood that book and applied the understanding, there would be less misunderstanding in communicating through the Overleaves in addition to the Centers.

Inner turmoil — the anger at oneself — always results from unreasonable expectations that at least one Overleaf has of the others, and since there is virtually no communication between the Poles [Axes?] of Overleaves — the “many I’s” — then these expectations are only clear to a few of the Overleaves, while the others are in the dark. There again, the leak is downward and results in the same pattern. Yes, this is the same as Inner Considering. [Dimensions! April 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Considering — Internal and External” for more about those concepts borrowed from the Gurdjieffian teaching. Internal Considering is when people are in angst about what other people think about them. If I understand this passage correctly, it hints that a person’s own Overleaves do not communicate well with each other, and this creates “inner turmoil” and the “Many I’s”, also of the Gurdjieffian Teaching; refer to the chapter by that name. There you will read that Gurdjieff’s many I’s are called sub-personalities by psychologists.

Dick mentioned that Cynthia seemed to be repressing her emotion.

Yes, it is [true], but then this society is a verbal one and she must communicate. It is not as repressed as many. The increase of gastrointestinal ulcerations among females is related precisely to the same factors as in males: Emotionally Centered males as well as Emotionally Centered females are now being shamed into being accepting of Intellectual and Moving Centered goals. Once again, civilization has succeeded in ‘throwing out the baby with the bath water’. [21 March 1977]

That was yet another mention of the importance of communicating from and between the proper Center for the situation at hand.

The final Q&A exchange in the original Michaelian group transcriptions has more to say about how the Overleaf of Roles communicate:

Richard: Why did someone I know agree to support me in a non-verbal, movie-making communication project?

Your question should not be “why” but “how” does this other [person] outside of self know that the need is there? You send out strong signals of this need in all directions and it is there for the picking. There are those who would fill this need. He is sincere but perplexed by a surge of unexpected emotion around a relative stranger. He is reacting to the need without real knowing where that may lead him because his Overleaves do permit much risk-taking.

Richard: Does he understand what it is I want to communicate?

He would understand but is not absorbed. Artists [Artisans] have a marked tendency to seek this form of communication, of course, more so than the other Roles; although Kings and Warriors also see the possibilities, but more in the sense of control than of inter-relating. In other words, the Artisan seeks to communicate non-verbally because he finds other forms of communication incomplete and unsatisfactory. The Warrior and King often see nonverbal communication as a means to control others. [21 October 1977]

As an Artisan, I can confirm that auditory verbal communication seems inadequate — Sages on the other side of the Expression Axis from Artisans are better at that — but I would add that written verbal communication is much more to my liking, because I can craft my writing such that it becomes more complete and satisfactory. Warriors and Kings, on the Action Axis, influence the behavior of other people by exuding impressive or imposing ‘vibes’. I have noticed that Servers and Priests, on the Inspiration Axis, communicate via radiating healing energy that can be sensed by receptive people.

Concluding Comments on Communication

For some reason, in this and some other chapters, demarcating paragraphs with bullet points enhances my ability to communicate my summary of the chapter.

- To my way of thinking, communication is a ‘two-way street’, where meaning is transferred back and forth between two people; refer to the chapter “Dialogue” for more about that concept. Basically and briefly, in my book, talking at someone is not true communication because the message might not be received, so I prefer to note that talking with someone is true communication, because meaning is shuttled repeatedly between two or more people until confirmation of transferred meaning is achieved. This reminds me of a joke: If a man expresses an opinion in the forest, and his wife is not there to hear it, is he still wrong? Seriously, I say no, because no meaningful “communication” has taken place.
- Effective and efficient communication is dependent on proximity in what I call “meaning time/space”. The closer that two people are in this time/space, the better the communication, and the farther away that two people are in this time/space, the worse the communication. This notion is similar to the so-called “inverse square law”, where the strength of gravity ‘sensed’ by two masses decreases by a mathematical formula as the distance between them increases.
- By effective and efficient communication, I mean that meaning is sent and received accurately. For example, if a person standing right next to you in physical space/time talks to you in mathematical jargon about quantum physics, and you are not conversant in either of those realms of knowledge, then you are not in proximity in “meaning time/space”; you might as well be on the other side of the ‘universe’ of this particular time/space for all of the understanding or meaning that is conveyed.
- In terms of the Overleaf System, or any other personality typology, the more similar the personality arrays of two people, the better the communication, because this provides some basis for closer proximity in “meaning time/space”. My suggestion is that one of the reasons that the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System is so that we could learn to work around personality differences, and approach Agape thereby, “Agape” in this context meaning increasing proximity leading to fusion in “meaning time/space”.
- Picture two people as one circle overlapping another circle, and the overlap area is where they inhabit the same meaning time/space. When two people meet each other for the first time, and they want to get to know each other, they typically communicate until they find what they have in common, and that, of course, is their overlapping “meaning time/space”. If that goes well, they may continue to get to know each other beyond the perimeter of the overlap; that is where Agape lives. If the overlap is too small — meaning, the attempts to communicate are too ineffective and too inefficient to be ‘worth’ the ‘expense’ in time and energy — then further attempts to communicate tend to self-extinguish.
- In the science of so-called “information theory”, there is the concept of “signal versus noise”. One may read about this at https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Information_theory. I quote: “Information theory studies the transmission, processing, extraction, and utilization of information. Abstractly, information can be thought of as the resolution of uncertainty. In the case of communication of information over a noisy channel, this abstract concept was formalized in 1948 by Claude Shannon in a paper entitled A Mathematical Theory of Communication, in which information is thought of as a set of possible messages, and the goal is to send these messages over a noisy channel, and to have the receiver reconstruct the message with low probability of error, in spite of the channel noise. Shannon’s main result, the noisy-channel coding theorem showed that, in the limit of many channel uses, the rate of information that is asymptotically achievable is equal to the channel capacity, a quantity dependent merely on the statistics of the channel over which the messages are sent.” [retrieved 23 March 2023] Think carefully and thoroughly about what was said there and you will see how it applies to this chapter without me explaining it to you, except I will say this:
- One could almost say that the entirety of human interaction could be formulated and quantified in terms of how much signal versus how much noise governs their interactions, meaning: how well do they understand each other; how efficient and how effective are their transactions. Between any two people there are impediments to accurate and thorough communication. In addition to personality differences as mentioned above, there are possible language barriers, cultural barriers, knowledge database barriers, intelligence barriers, belief/value/behavioral system barriers, and so on ad infinitum. Refer to the chapter “Barriers and Blocks” for more discussion of these and other factors that affect the effectiveness and efficiency of meaningful communication.

- In addition to such barriers, the intentions of the sender and the receiver are important. That is to say, are the two people acting in “good faith”? Or are they intentionally communicating misinformation or disinformation. Or is one or the other of the parties encumbered with stupidity and/or ignorance and/or foolishness to such an extent that attempts to communicate self-extinguish.
- One personality factor not mentioned in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, and which does not have a clear representation in the Overleaf System, has to do with introverts versus extroverts: the former have far less need to communicate with others than the latter. It can be said that introverts prefers to have a rich inner communication (between modular components within themselves), whereas extroverts prefers to have a rich outer communication (with numerous others). Numerous internet resources on this topic are available, such as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Extraversion_and_introversion.
- Whether one is an introvert or an extrovert, and whether one is focused inwardly or outwardly, may I suggest that effective and efficient communication is enhanced if one learns to really listen to what is being said, as in pay attention, and don't interrupt. When I did an internet search for the phrase “deep listening”, the search engine came up with this: <https://www.mindful.org/deep-listening/>, and there were many other hits.
- In other chapters, starting with “Tao”, we have reviewed the theology or cosmology of so-called “Dual Aspect Monism”, known in the Michaelian teachings as “Monads”. This ontology has been framed in various metaphors, such as “Fragmentation and Reintegration” and “Waking from Sleep” and “Forgetting and Remembering” and “Liberation and Imprisonment” and “Lost and Found”. In this chapter, the metaphor of communication and miscommunication was reviewed, but really, that and the others are all just different ways of looking at the same fundamental phenomenon, namely that the Tao is experiencing itself as if it were not itself, meaning that Tao has ‘forgotten’ Itself and Tao is ‘asleep’ to Itself and Tao is alienated from Itself. Thus, the cosmos consists of parts of Tao learning to better communicate with other parts of Itself. In terms of the concept of communication, signal versus noise, existence and experience is all just one huge ‘misunderstanding’, and we humans are playing our part in mitigating the misunderstanding when we attempt to meaningfully communicate with ourselves and with others, ever more effectively and efficiently.

② COMPLEXITY VERSUS SIMPLICITY

This chapter consists of an analysis and a synthesis of the Q&A exchanges in the session transcriptions of the original Michaelian group that contain these two words. One might find it surprising to see that these words were used so often that they deserve a chapter full of explanations about the concept, but here we are. Perhaps one might be surprised because the subject has not been emphasized in subsequent Michaelian teachings groups to the extent that it was in the original Michaelian group. Thus, this is another one of those chapters where I regard it as significant and important to re-introduce and discuss a lost or neglected topic.

The idea that human life is typically filled with too much complexity for our own good is not exclusive to the Michaelian teachings; it appears in many if not most other spiritual teachings. I do not know of a single one that recommends we fill our lives with all of the distractions that are available to us on the Physical Plane. Rather, the recommendation to all seekers is to minimize the distractions of physical life and maximize the focus on the spiritual life. The Michaelian teachings tends to recommend that students at least have a life that balances the two, to be neither a physical ascetic nor be spiritually deprived.

Complexity/Simplicity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. On the other hand, this is a subject that benefits by division into subcategories. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Q&A exchanges are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The concept of complexity versus simplicity as it relates to the spiritual path came up in the very first session in which the Michaels appeared. This fact alone speaks to the importance of this subject.

The primordial force was energy, not mass. Think about that when you are hung up on cause and effect. The more primitive one is energy. Does it not seem that all seeking the least complex will return to the energy from whence they came? Complexity is the antithesis of what the spirit seeks. The body represents the epitome of complexity. That is why the spirit is again and again attracted to it, until the partially awakened Essence catches a glimpse beyond the "veil". [12 August 1973]

Complexity is like a veil that obscures the primordial simplicity. (Refer to the chapter "Veil" for the exposition on that concept in the Michaelian teachings and elsewhere.) However, notice what it says here, that the spirit is repeatedly attracted to the complexity of life in the physical body because it knows that the way to simplicity is through complexity, not around it. Hence, multiple reincarnations are required; there is no shortcut or bypass on the way back to the simplicity of its origin; one must experience and understand the complexity on the path back to increasing simplicity at successively higher levels of integration.

What is merely hinted at in this answer is that, ultimately, with complexity/simplicity we are talking about one of the fundamental features of the structure of the cosmos in space/time (physics) and time/space (psyche). This is discussed in my books The Tao of Cosmology and The Tao of Cosmogony.

There are some physics phenomena mentioned in this passage. The quest for simplicity applies to science as well as to the spiritual path. Scientists intuitively understand that the complexity that we are embedded within arises out of a fundamental simplicity, so the impetus of the scientific endeavor is to find that foundational, primordial, primitive simplicity.

I can't see what part the Personality has to do with Karma. I think that's put in by culture.

It [False Personality and culture] is just more complex Maya. You see, it really is infinite. [12 August 1973]

Per the chapter “Personality and Essence” we see that when the word Personality appears alone, it is often meant in the Gurdjieffian understanding as the opponent of Essence. This Gurdjieffian usage evolved, during the original Michaelian group and later, into the contrast of False Personality and True Personality, and Essence was relegated to something beyond True Personality. Thus, this passage means that False Personality and culture tends to complexify Maya, which is in contrast to the simplicity of Essence, which was stated earlier in the first session with the Michaels. Refer to the chapter “Maya” for more information about that component of the Michaelian teachings.

In this same first Michael session, it was realized that the complexity/simplicity dichotomy is a particular type of Monad:

Discussion: Concerning Monads (sacred/profane, profound/superficial, the yin and yang duality, infinite complexity/infinite simplicity).
[12 August 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Monads” for a thorough discussion of that subject. Basically, in the Michaelian teachings, a Monad consists of three things: Ordinal, Cardinal, and Neutral, where Ordinal and Cardinal have a reciprocal relationship with each other — the more of one the less of the other, and vice versa. The reciprocal relationship of complexity and simplicity is obvious. The Natural Sequence septenary has this Monadic structure build in: the beginning is simple, things get more complex during the first three steps, the middle is the most complex, then things get more simple during the last three steps.

The reciprocal relationship of physicality/spirituality was noted above in terms of their complexity/simplicity ratio, but there are other realms in which the complexity/simplicity principle applies:

Dick: I would like to have a medical session some night, but right now, I'd like to move on to something else. I'd like to bring up the subject of "heaviness" that I find reading all these esoteric books and Hindu books. So far, in these systems, I've found so little of the ordinary type of joy. I'd like to buy a toy boat, just lie in the bathtub and putt around.

You would probably benefit much more from that activity than from reading fifty philosophical texts. These are nothing more than another Old Soul expounding on half-acquired enlightenment. Enlightenment is not ponderous. As I said before, as growth progresses, the soul seeks simplicity. This is one good way to discern whether a particular piece of literature will be of any help to you. If it is merely an exercise in vocabulary and rhetoric, then abandon it. Some very wordy material comes from Young Souls. Be wary of this in selecting reading material. [26 August 1973]

To this I would say, start where you are, which is probably mired in complexity due to Young Soul dominance of the cultural and social milieu, and move toward simplicity. The Michaels themselves started the original Michaelian group with a rather complex teaching that is intellectually challenging, but the long-range purpose of the information was to provide a tool that can cut through the complex crap that the members were encumbered with. In the long run, having a mastery of the Overleaf System provides a simple, but not simplistic, understanding of where people are coming from, which simplifies relationships. One of these Study Papers is on “Enlightenment”.

I happen to like philosophical texts that are not exercises in vocabulary and rhetoric, so may I suggest that, when it comes to philosophy, the complexity/simplicity Monad be approached in the manner that the Michaels recommend with other Monads: alternate between the poles of the Monad until you come to the synthesis, which is that our lives are both complicated and simple, and we should experience out the complexity mentioned in the previous Q&A exchange. In my opinion, some philosophy has the same goal as some science (and the Michaels’ Teaching), namely, that their goal is to get to the simplicity that underlies the complexity. A thorough appreciation of good philosophy can help, whereas bad philosophy complexifies the underlying simplicity.

Dick: Is this why, when you see an Infant or Baby Soul, you see simplicity there? It is just one Fragment? And then with Old Souls, you sense a complexity and then in between, you see mixtures. Is this because the Fragments are unified [into their soul groups] all along the line, beginning with the Infant Souls?

That is valid to a point.

Dick: Yeah, that's what I was saying, because all along the line [of Soul Age] you seem to see more complexity. [08 October 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Composites” for a discussion of one of the sources of complexification that happens during the story arc of reincarnation, from most primitive to most advanced. The basic notion is that as the soul develops, it becomes more complex in terms of the quantity of past lives and the quantity of kindred souls that provide influence. This is a different thing from the recommendation found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, that one should simplify one's lifestyle if one chooses to trod the spiritual path.

Besides the Soul Age story arc where the complexity of the person increases, there is another story arc where simplicity increases, and that is the spiritual path arc. We see this in various sessions, noted above, and below:

The only positive energy we know of is that which we have elected to call "Agape". Other sources may be either neutral or negative. The high states [of spiritual evolution] are free of the complexity found in the lower states. This should explain the purity of the energy flow. The lower states, being more complex, require more complex emotions to feed upon and be fed upon. [05 October 1974]

Putting this statement together with previous (and following) statements, we see that spiritual growth (which is not the same thing as Soul Age) moves one toward simplicity, whereas physical evolution runs counter to this and moves toward complexity. This is what one would expect from the reciprocal relationship of physicality and spirituality: the more of one the less of the other, and vice versa.

Are the Golden Tablets of the Mormons valid as being left there by God or whatever?

This entire [religious] body is founded upon man's [humanity's] eternal gullibility. This is, of course, another beautiful example of man's efforts to complexify the natural order. It was not enough to have myths limited to the Middle East; they had to expand to this continent. [19 October 1973]

From this answer I gather that religions that complexify the natural order are suspect. (One of the purposes of my work is to demonstrate the simplicity of the Michaelian teachings as derived from First Principles, which are simple.)

The most thorough exposition on the complexity/simplicity Monad found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is the following message.

Short business meeting regarding incorporation. Narra [a lawyer] indicated the need for officers, and we elected Dick president, Joan secretary, Cheryl treasurer. A quorum was present. We discussed and shared possible names for the group: "Spiritual Community", "Associated Souls", "Church of the Path Seeker", "All Souls Spiritual", "Pan-Universal Spiritual Sanctuary".

Man's place in the universe should, of course, have become a little more apparent to you since we opened the discussion on complexity.

As we have intimated before, the Tao is the epitome of simplicity and, therefore, the simplicity toward which we all strive in our return to the primeval. Therefore, the Physical Plane, with its enormous complexity, offers by far the most challenge and also the most barriers to spiritual liberation.

Man, or rather, "Mechanical Man", must then cut through the Glamour and allurements of the Physical Plane in order to see the light of truth. Nowhere else is this as difficult, for on the Physical Plane, all is Glamour and all is complex, even compared to the Astral Plane, which to the high planes can seem quite complex.

Man must strive uphill in the battle to free the Essence. By "man", of course, we refer to all Creatures of Reason. For in all languages we know of, there is a word meaning "man". This uphill battle is growth-producing and also provides the strength to persevere through the several Cycles spent on the Physical Plane. The lessons learned on the Physical Plane are necessarily [psychologically] painful just because they are so complex. With simplification, there is analgesia [less pain]. On this world, there have been significant cultural and religious barriers to growth. On other worlds, there have been hostile natural environments and threats from without to contend with.

Man must meet with a cosmic teaching in order to look behind the barriers. Psychology will not do it for you: for, if the psychologist is a Mechanical Man himself, he also has adaptive behavior taking place, and he cannot look behind your barriers or very well allow you to, either. It would be too scary for him — he would then also have to look behind his own barriers. The broad purpose of the Physical Plane, of course, is then to cut through the first layer of complexity.

"Solid" is very much like 'ponderous' to us. The weighty philosophical battles, battles waged by Mechanical Man, are his attempts to solidify even thought and make it more complex. He must first come to the point that he can verify for himself the tenuousness of that which stands between him and the pan-dimensional universe, and the path toward simplicity and therefore perfection. [22 October 1974]

No explanatory comments come to mind for the above; it stands on its own rather well. However, the passage is full of terms that have chapters of their own in this Study Papers book: "Liberation", "Mechanical Man", "Creature of Reason", "Planes", "Glamour", "Tao", "Essence and Personality", "Spiritual Growth".

... Mechanical Man's desire to complexity.... [12 November 1974]

The above brief mention of complexity is only included to make the record complete.

Much discussion ensued about “boss”, “partner”, “servant”. Our perception of it and how David sees it. Other similar triads were brought to mind — parent, sibling, child, etc.

All of these “triads” are, of course, valid in describing the various combinations of interactions of the Personality, but you must not overlook the fact that there is an “over-truth” that supersedes all of these. That is the truth of the Essence, or truth as the liberated Essence perceives it, which is far less complex than any truth that is perceived by the entrapped Essence, and the key is in the simplicity with which the truth is perceived. The more verbiage needed to explain a truth, the more deeply entrapped that truth has to be. Many fine-sounding psychological words having five or more syllables have been coined to describe obnoxious behavior stemming from harsh Overleaves. These are all true, of course, and they all say the same thing to one from this vantage point: they are the entrapped Essence working overtime to produce a truth. [07 December 1974]

The above is another one of many comments on the complexity of Personality versus the simplicity of Essence. It is also another instance where the Michaels decry the fact that it is necessary to use words to describe a phenomenon, for this can make something that is simple seem complex. One thing, among many things, that I appreciate about the Michaels as they came through the Ouija board in the original Michaelian group is that their verbal delivery was generally succinct and straight to the point.

This problem is described using other words in another passage:

The dictates of this culture are severe and stern. We doubt that it is much fun for anyone. This is not necessarily true of the entire Physical Plane. Although the Physical Plane is by nature solid, ponderous, and complex, you make it even more so by trying to analyze these behavior patterns in terms other than instinct. [21 December 1974]

This is one paragraph in a lengthy screed about instinctive behavior, which can be described in words, but words tend to make a simple mindless impulsive phenomenon seem more complex than it really is.

Another lengthy screed on the subject of complexity occurred a few days later. Here again, the problem is with humans who try to explain the inexplicable, such as instinctive behavior, with the complexification that results from the use of words:

Abdullah: Will you speak to us some words of wisdom?

The words we speak, the words we would speak, would not be individually directed, but rather directed to the group at large. You see, this individuality that Mechanical Man seeks is but another example of his never-ending quest for complexity. The soul is tranquil now, so you see, it can be achieved.

Speaking of the depth of the trance, there was at this point a sharp noise in the background!

This soul has an observing, curious mind, and all distractions within this room cause a vortex of energy flow. Reason: man has always endeavored through the creation of chaos or of a chaotic system (they’re one in the same) to create the illusion of complexity that exists on the Physical Plane. This illusion of complexity, that which we choose to call “false order”, by its very chaotic nature creates order of a sort easily incorporated into the belief systems of those who are limited to it. The concept of a physical God was created out of this very chaos — the necessity to solidify. The solidification of the cosmos — in an ironic sense, is true, of course, since there is no such thing as nothing — no-thing — but the solidification of the cosmos is man’s first step toward explaining away those unexplainable phenomena with which he is confronted when he first confronts the physical universe. He must, of course, reduce it to the smallest possible limits....

Ralph: Going toward simplicity, is there anything more simple than the Tao?

More simple, no. The Tao, you see, is the absence of complexity....

There is a name for the notion that God is empty of characteristics, and that is “apophatic theology”. It is the opposite of “cataphatic theology”, which is the notion that God is full of all characteristics. Refer to the chapter “Tao” for more discussion about that.

Ralph: You have told us about man’s habitual rendering complex — the way he complicates things. If we have moments of knowledge and love, it seems difficult to maintain them in this culture. Can you comment on this?

These moments are moments of utter simplicity. Of course, it is difficult to maintain in this state, in the false order, the complicated chaos that this and other cultures like it have created. As we have said before, to explain away the unexplainable, man must create for himself the answer to all those questions, those imponderables for which there is no proof. Man, in order to be satisfied, must define, within the limits of his belief system, all those phenomena that he observes. In moments when the Essence breaks through the barriers, the true order — the natural order — becomes perceivable. Man takes the simplest activity and renders it complex by analyzing, examining, granting it priority, granting it precedence. We should not limit this simply to man. This is common to Creatures of Reason throughout the Physical Plane. This is not unique to that which you call man. Man takes the simplest function and renders it complex in order to give an illusion of importance to his life.

Ralph: Is The Synthesis simpler than the systems that man erects?

In its most evolved form, yes. In words suitable for communication with the members of this enclave, it becomes complex. Again, Creatures of Reason take the simplest activity and render it complex through symbols. The Synthesis is not complex. The Synthesis seeks integration, simplicity. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence through expressions of individuality, isolation, alienation. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence by assigning themselves a role, even a negative one, if that be the case, of subrogation, taking the responsibility from themselves, assigning that responsibility to a higher power, conveniently beyond the five physical senses and, therefore, unarguable, unprovable, unassailable, safe, comfortable, complex.... [26 December 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Synthesis, The”. This is the name that the Michaels gave to their teaching. As distinct from plants and animals, Creature of Reason have a strong Intellectual Center, and that Center needs to “explain” things in terms of other things. This function tends to make those things seem more complex than they actually are in themselves. In short: don’t overthink stuff.

Cynthia made the statement that she was apprehensive about the meeting because she had a ridiculous fear that the teacher [Michael] would get mad at her for not going to work with Peter.

Never will we urge. That is not within the scope of this teaching. Only will we present the alternatives. You must realize that our neutrality extends far beyond what you can possibly imagine. Our strength lies in our ability to perceive the diverging tracks ... or choices, if you prefer. In each instance, there will be a choice that can be made simply out of Personality and will usually work in the world, and there is also a choice that can be made from Essence, which will instinctively “feel” right and will result in positive upward mobility. Your difficulties lie in your inability to choose the Essence route, as it always seems the more difficult, when in reality, it is the more simple. But society has complexified to the point where you see any attempt at simplification as unbelievably complex. This is paradoxical, of course, and is the one barrier in the way of any true attempt at civilization. If you doubt this, look at the definition of the word “sometime”. In most instances, those hearing this teaching will fasten on that precept that holds the most immediate appeal.... [21 November 1976]

I have run out of words to say about this subject. Except:

Concluding Comments on Complexity/Simplicity

It helps to have a source of understanding from higher and simpler realms, such as the Michaels, to guide us out of the bewildering and stifling complexity of life as a human on the Physical Plane.

This subject is somewhat related to the subject discussed in the “Asceticism and Austerity” chapter, which has to do with lifestyle, as distinct from thinking style, which is mostly the focus in this chapter. In both cases, it boils down to: keep your life simple.

① COMPOSITES

In the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group — and nowhere else since then that I know of — it is recorded that the Michaels told people in the group that their minds were inhabited by multiple Fragments of their Entity. It was said that the older their soul, and the more Fragments of their Entity that had “cycled off” (having no more need to reincarnate), then the more Fragments shared the physical body, providing inspiration and guidance. There was said to be a “dominant thread”, and then there were all these other subordinate “threads” of these discarnate souls that contributed to the total personality. These multiple inhabitants of an incarnation were called “composites”.

The discussion of this phenomenon in the original Michaelian group transcriptions was quite lengthy; it is not repeated here. However, the discussion has been thoroughly analyzed and synthesized in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart, in Chapter 4M, “The Seven Soul Ages”, in the section “To Understand Composites”. The idea does not seem to be a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, and it has not resurfaced in channeling subsequent to the original Michaelian group, so far as I know. Nevertheless, check it out if it seems interesting to you.

⑦ CONSCIENCE

This chapter is the product of a search for the concept of conscience in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) The subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 2) Issues of conscience are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word conscience is not capitalized in this chapter and other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they enlighten their conscience, not with the moral or ethical guidelines provided by their parental or socio-cultural or political milieu, but by intuition about the right thing to do in whatever situation or circumstance they find themselves in.

Definition of Conscience

So what is meant by conscience? The introduction to the Wikipedia article on the subject reads thus:

Conscience is a cognitive process that elicits emotion and rational associations based on an individual's moral philosophy or value system. Conscience stands in contrast to elicited emotion or thought due to associations based on immediate sensory perceptions and reflexive responses, as in sympathetic central nervous system responses. In common terms, conscience is often described as leading to feelings of remorse when a person commits an act that conflicts with their moral values. The extent to which conscience informs moral judgment before an action and whether such moral judgments are or should be based on reason has occasioned debate through much of modern history between theories of basics in ethic of human life in juxtaposition to the theories of romanticism and other reactionary movements after the end of the Middle Ages.

Religious views of conscience usually see it as linked to a morality inherent in all humans, to a beneficent universe and/or to divinity. The diverse ritualistic, mythical, doctrinal, legal, institutional, and material features of religion may not necessarily cohere with experiential, emotive, spiritual, or contemplative considerations about the origin and operation of conscience. [Contrary to the religious view,] Common secular or scientific views regard the capacity for conscience as probably genetically determined, with its subject probably learned or imprinted as part of a culture.

Commonly used metaphors for conscience include the “voice within”, the “inner light”, or even Socrates’ reliance on what the Greeks called his “daimōnic sign”, an averting ... inner voice heard only when he was about to make a mistake. Conscience, as is detailed in sections below, is a concept in national and international law, is increasingly conceived of as applying to the world as a whole, has motivated numerous notable acts for the public good and been the subject of many prominent examples of literature, music and film.

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Conscience>< — retrieved 26 January 2023]

Thereafter followed a lengthy discussion of the religious view, the secular view, and the philosophical view of the subject. Reading it helped me to have a more informed conscience, and then pay more attention to it.

Conscience per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The following is the only time that the word "conscience" appeared in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group that have become widely available:

JeanP: What do Edmund's migraines mean?

These aches have their origin in tension, part of which is job-related, part of which is rooted in a basic inability to disappoint those whom he senses are counting on him. This man still needs to feel completely free to refuse, in clear conscience, that which he intuits as a wrong move. [24 September 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Intuition" for the story about that word. Both conscience and intuition warn us away from doing the "wrong" thing in a particular situation and prompt us toward doing the "right" thing in a particular situation.

Some of the founding members of the original Michaelian group had been involved in a local Gurdjieffian teachings group, wherein the charismatic guru Gurdjieff used the metaphor of a 'steward' for the role or function of conscience. One of those founding original Michaelian group members mentioned this metaphor, as follows:

Dick: Later, you develop Deputy Steward and finally the Steward that keeps Personality in line — on the straight and narrow. [06 October 1973]

In Gurdjieff's teachings, Deputy Steward was a name for "impartial observer." From Discovering Gurdjieff by Dorothy Philpotts:

Conscience has been called by Mr. Gurdjieff the voice of the Steward. The Steward speaks to us in a quiet voice, which we cannot hear amid the vociferous clamor of the many I's, each proclaiming some petty interest or desire, or even some idle fancy.

Refer to the chapter "Steward" for more about that. Refer to the chapter "Personality — True and False" for more about the notion that False Personality, among other things, consists of many so-called "sub-personalities", which Gurdjieff referred to as the many "I's". One of the goals of the Gurdjieffian teachings was to assemble and reconcile these many sub-personalities into a unified consciousness. One step along the way was for the spiritual aspirant to learn to hear and heed the Deputy Steward, and then grow further until the spiritual aspirant learned to hear and heed the Steward, the totally enlightened conscience. The Michaels during the original Michaelian group endorsed this notion.

Concluding Comments on Conscience

Although the word "conscience" was only found once in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, there are other words and concepts in the Michaelian teachings that take its place: "intuition" is one, "insight" is another, and the "promptings" of "Essence" is yet another. From their familiarity with Gurdjieffian teachings, the founding original Michaelian group members got the metaphor of the "Steward" as conscience, but this has not found its way into subsequent Michaelian discourse.

Refer to the chapter "Punishment" for a discussion of the issue of moral/ethical absolutism versus moral/ethical relativism.

CONSCIOUSNESS — SUBJECTIVE AND OBJECTIVE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “consciousness” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions, and other words with a similar meaning. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Briefly and basically, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

So what is meant by consciousness? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

The word “consciousness” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that trust issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology, the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

Subjective and Objective Consciousness per Gurdjieff

Subjective and Objective Consciousness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Consciousness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Consciousness

② CONSIDERING — INTERNAL AND EXTERNAL

The topic of this chapter is yet another one of many that discuss one or another of the components of the Gurdjieffian teachings that were adopted and adapted in the Michaelian teachings during the original Michaelian group, but which did not subsequently find its way into the Michaelian teachings. For an introduction to the general subject of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the involvement of founding original Michaelian group members with it, refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton”.

Even though the Michaels used the term “considering” on numerous occasions during the original Michaelian group, Yarbrow did not mention it in her book about the original Michaelian group, Messages from Michael, perhaps because, near as I can tell, Yarbrow was not familiar with Gurdjieff. The Michaels have not used it in subsequent groups so far as I have been able to determine, perhaps because subsequent groups are not familiar with Gurdjieffian teachings. Therefore, the term, and even the concept referred to by the term, has not become common knowledge in the Michaelian teachings community subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Nevertheless, I believe Gurdjieff’s psychological insights are worth discussing, the subject of Considering being one of them. I also believe that it is worthwhile to make the historical record of the original Michaelian group reasonably complete. Taking into consideration that the word refers to a concept with a specific and special meaning in both the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings, I capitalize it, as one of many jargon words.

Per the title of this chapter, notice also that there are two types of Considering, Internal and External, sometimes also called Inner and Outer; the two types are contrasted to each other. Furthermore, sometimes Considering is also called Consideration.

So, let us first take a look at what Gurdjieff meant by Considering, and then we will examine the instances where it was mentioned in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group.

Considering per Gurdjieff

Briefly, Inner Considering is the Gurdjieff term for when you care too much about what other people think of you, or do not think of you, rather than act out of your own integrity with your true self. In other words, you internalize others to your own detriment. Briefly, External Considering is the Gurdjieff term for when you intentionally put yourself in the place of the other person, and see things from their point of view, and from the point of view of the context of the situation as a whole. In the psychotherapeutic and spiritual-path component of the Gurdjieffian teachings and of the Michaelian teachings, the aim is to minimize Internal Considering and maximize External Considering.

These seem similar in that in both forms of Consideration you do take other people into account, but the trick is to learn to distinguish the two, and to do so without self-deception regarding what is going on.

The following is a lengthy passage where Ouspensky quotes Gurdjieff. It is longer than the original Michaelian group mentions actually, but it is important if one is to understand the concepts as the original Michaelian group members understood it, which they did, probably from having read this very passage, as well as others; underlines are my emphasis:

[INTERNAL CONSIDERING]

“There are several different kinds of ‘considering’. On the most prevalent occasions a man is identified with what others think about him, how they treat him, what attitude they show towards him. He always thinks that people do not value him enough, are not sufficiently polite and courteous. All this torments him, makes him think and suspect and lose an immense amount of energy on guesswork, on suppositions, develops in him a distrustful and hostile attitude towards people. How somebody looked at him, what somebody thought of him, what somebody said of him — all this acquires for him an immense significance.

There are chapters in this Study Papers book on “Identification” and “Energy” (with a section on “Leaks”) — these are yet other jargon words in the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings.

“And he ‘considers’ not only separate persons but society and historically constituted conditions. Everything that displeases such a man seems to him to be unjust, illegal, wrong, and illogical. And the point of departure for his judgment is always that these things can and should be changed. ‘Injustice’ is one of the words in which very often considering hides itself. When a man has convinced himself that he is indignant with some injustice, then for him to stop considering would mean ‘reconciling himself to injustice’.

There are people who are able to consider not only injustice or the failure of others to value them enough but who are able to consider for example the weather. This seems ridiculous but it is a fact. People are able to consider climate, heat, cold, snow, rain; they can be irritated by the weather, be indignant and angry with it. A man can take everything in such a personal way as though everything in the world had been specially arranged in order to give him pleasure or on the contrary to cause him inconvenience or unpleasantness.

“All this and much else besides is merely a form of identification. Such considering is wholly based upon ‘requirements’. A man inwardly ‘requires’ that everyone should see what a remarkable man he is and that they should constantly give expression to their respect, esteem, and admiration for him, for his intellect, his beauty, his cleverness, his wit, his presence of mind, his originality, and all his other qualities. Requirements in their turn are based on a completely fantastic notion about themselves such as very often occurs with people of very modest appearance. Various writers, actors, musicians, artists, and politicians, for instance, are almost without exception sick people. And what are they suffering from? First of all from an extraordinary opinion of themselves, then from requirements, and then from considering, that is, being ready and prepared beforehand to take offense at lack of understanding and lack of appreciation.

“There is still another form of considering which can take a great deal of energy from a man. This form starts with a man beginning to think that he is not considering another person enough, that this other person is offended with him for not considering him sufficiently. And he begins to think himself that perhaps he does not think enough about this other, does not pay him enough attention, does not give way to him enough. All this is simply weakness. People are afraid of one another. But this can lead very far. I have seen many such cases. In this way a man can finally lose his balance, if at any time he had any, and begin to perform entirely senseless actions. He gets angry with himself and feels that it is stupid, and he cannot stop, whereas in such cases the whole point is precisely ‘not to consider’.

“It is the same case, only perhaps worse, when a man considers that in his opinion he ‘ought’ to do something when as a matter of fact he ought not to do so at all. ‘Ought’ and ‘ought not’ is also a difficult subject, that is, difficult to understand when a man really ‘ought’ and when he ‘ought not’. This can be approached only from the point of view of ‘aim’. When a man has an aim he ‘ought’ to do only what leads towards his aim and he ‘ought not’ to do anything that hinders him from going towards his aim.

“As I have already said, people very often think that if they begin to struggle with considering within themselves it will make them ‘insincere’ and they are afraid of this because they think that in this event they will be losing something, losing a part of themselves. In this case the same thing takes place as in attempts to struggle against the outward expression of unpleasant emotions. The sole difference is that in one case a man struggles with the outward expression of emotions and in the other case with an inner manifestation of perhaps the same emotions.

“This fear of losing sincerity is of course self-deception, one of those formulas of lying upon which human weaknesses are based. Man cannot help identifying and considering inwardly and he cannot help expressing his unpleasant emotions, simply because he is weak. Identifying, considering, the expressing of unpleasant emotions, are manifestations of his weakness, his impotence, his inability to control himself. But not wishing to acknowledge this weakness to himself, he calls it ‘sincerity’ or ‘honesty’ and he tells himself that he does not want to struggle against sincerity, whereas in fact he is unable to struggle against his weaknesses.

“Sincerity and honesty are in reality something quite different. What a man calls ‘sincerity’ in this case is in reality simply being unwilling to restrain himself. And deep down inside him a man is aware of this. But he lies to himself when he says that he does not want to lose sincerity.

“So far I have spoken of internal considering. It would be possible to bring forward many more examples. But you must do this yourselves, that is, you must seek these examples in your observations of yourselves and of others.

Another brief injunction against inner considering is the phrase “neither insisting nor resisting” reality as it is, if the impulse to insist or resist comes from the lower self rather than from the higher self.

[EXTERNAL CONSIDERING]

“The opposite of internal considering, and what is in part a means of fighting against it, is external considering. External considering is based upon an entirely different relationship towards people than internal considering. It is adaptation towards people, to their understanding, to their requirements. By considering externally a man does that which makes life easy for other people and for himself. External considering requires a knowledge of men, an understanding of their tastes, habits, and prejudices.

“At the same time external considering requires a great power over oneself, a great control over oneself. Very often a man desires sincerely to express or somehow or other show to another man what he really thinks of him or feels about him. And if he is a weak man he will of course give way to this desire and afterwards justify himself and say that he did not want to lie, did not want to pretend, he wanted to be sincere. Then he convinces himself that it was the other man’s fault. He really wanted to consider him, even to give way to him, not to quarrel, and so on. But the other man did not at all want to consider him so that nothing could be done with him.

“It very often happens that a man begins with a blessing and ends with a curse. He begins by deciding not to consider and afterwards blames other people for not considering him. This is an example of how external considering passes into internal considering. But if a man really remembers himself he understands that another man is a machine just as he is himself. And then he will enter into his position, he will put himself in his place, and he will be really able to understand and feel what another man thinks and feels. If he can do this his work becomes easier for him. But if he approaches a man with his own requirements nothing except new internal considering can ever be obtained from it.

Refer to the chapter on “Self-remembering” and the chapter on “Mechanical Man” in this Study Papers book.

“Right external considering is very important in the Work. It often happens that people who understand very well the necessity of external considering in life do not understand the necessity of external considering in the Work; they decide that just because they are in the Work they have the right not to consider. Whereas in reality, in the Work, that is, for a man’s own successful work, ten times more external considering is necessary than in life, because only external considering on his part shows his valuation of the Work and his understanding of the Work; and success in the Work is always proportional to the valuation and understanding of it.” [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, pp. 151-154, quoting Gurdjieff — downloaded from this website: >https://www.satrakshita.com/internal_considering.htm<.]

In that last paragraph, I capitalized the word Work because it is yet another one of those jargon words, as it refers to the focus required to maintain one’s spiritual path.

An internet search will reveal many other descriptions of Gurdjieff’s notion of internal and external considering. For instance, there is this: ><http://fourthwayschool.org/considerouter3.html>< and there is this: ><http://fourthwayschool.org/considerinner5.html>< and ><https://fourthwaytoday.org/external-considering-school-work/>< and ><https://www.ultimate-quest.org/external-consideration/>< and ><https://www.ultimate-quest.org/external-considering-continued/><.

Considering per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

As you will see if/when you read the chapter titled “Gurdjieff — Ouspensky — Collin — Burton” in this Study Papers book, that several founding members of the original Michaelian group had for a while previously been members of a local “Fourth Way” Gurdjieff/Ouspensky study group; there they learned about Considering. That includes the people quoted in this chapter who ask questions and received answers about Considering: Dick, Richard, and Kathryn. Therefore, it is not surprising that the first appearance of the concept of Considering happened about a month after the Michaels became the source of channeled information, their first communication being on 12 August 1973.

Dick: Let’s see, what about Dr. Simon? He has penetrating eyes with much energy behind them, and much Inner Consideration. Is he a Young or Baby Soul?

Simon is a Mature Soul with problems. [18 September 1973]

The Michaels had launched into the teaching about Soul Ages just weeks before, but Dick already perceived that, typically, the older the soul, the less Inner Consideration they do; hence Dick’s guesstimate that Dr. Simon was a younger soul. Gurdjieff did not teach reincarnation, so he did not teach about Soul Age, so he only understood Consideration as a component of his psychotherapy/spiritual Work. Mitigating Internal Consideration happens both as the soul ages in the course of reincarnation and as the Personality yields to Essence during a lifetime of Working on oneself.

Richard: I would like to somehow recapture the tranquility I found at [our retreat to Lake] Tahoe. I would like to spend tomorrow meditating, and next week meditating and reflecting. How can I best do this?

Cease Inner Consideration of the effects of your actions on others. You are doing nothing wrong. We find no fault with your plan. [22 September 1973]

Richard had the Goal of Acceptance (revealed six months later), which, as we will see further on, is especially prone to do Inner Considering.

Kathryn: Why did Robert Burton say that Joy was an Old Soul?

He is seeing the child [Joy] who is carrying the father's attitudes. The man Robert is still entitled to err occasionally. He does not often, but remember that Inner Consideration is one of the last [negative] things to go. Sarah does not like to tell people that they are Young Souls either, but we are stronger than Sarah and she is beginning to realize that. Robert, too. [10 November 1973]

Kathryn, Dick's daughter, was a member of Robert Burton's "Fourth Way" group. She was involved with it into the 21st Century. The Michaels claimed that Burton was a candidate for the Transcendental Soul (see below), who was almost ready for the manifestation at that time, hence near to extinguishing Inner Consideration. However, he neither extinguished Inner Considering nor manifested the Transcendental Soul. Rather, Burton, by some accounts, devolved into being a scandalous cult leader. As his group grew, Burton accrued power and money, and those things make Inner Consideration all the harder to extinguish.

Phyllis: Should you then change to please others?

We did not say this, but why should you change to please others?

Comment: That is what is called "inner considering" — when you are wondering what the other person is thinking of you for saying what you did or whatever. [27 February 1974]

Obviously, this is a concise description of Inner Considering as it was understood in the original Michaelian group.

Dick: Robert's group is also [like ours] a "C" [cosmic] influence group. How can this be?

The conflict will be resolved when this man experiences the manifestation of the Transcendental Soul. He is right in saying that Internal Consideration is the last to go and this is a phenomenon of this.

Dick: Internal Consideration is the only single thing that operates continuously.

This insight is essentially valid.

Those in Dominance [Goal] do the least Internal Considering; those in Acceptance [Goal], [do] the most. Those in Growth [Goal] fluctuate depending on the environment.

How about [Inner Considering by] those in [the Goal of] Rejection?

[They do] Inner Considering of a very negative sort. There is some, of course, but you are right: not much.

[There is] very little, also, in [the Goal of] Retardation. [03 March 1974]

Generally speaking, one's Personality, True and False, affects how much Inner versus how much Outer Consideration one does, and also what sort of Inner Consideration. The Gurdjieff quotation above cataloged various forms.

Trust, as you have said, implies communication and awareness, and they are inseparable. Trust is solely based upon intuition and cannot be logical. Logic will fail you every time in matters of trust. Also, the person who trusts must be less vulnerable [to Internal Consideration]. Yes, otherwise, he would be torn apart most of the time. Trust contains elements of toughness that comes only with practice, and concerns a lack of Internal Consideration [caring what other people think of you] — a "let the chips fall [where they may]" attitude. Trust is most difficult for souls in Acceptance, Submission, and Rejection. [20 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Trust" for more information about that subject. If trying to 'figure people out', by logic or other means, is driven by Internal Consideration, that is not Good Work.

Dick: [My daughter] Kathryn has been eliminating the word "love," as Machines are not capable of love. Maybe you Externally Consider others. Could you comment on love and External Considering?

They are synonymous. We see no difference. The “Machine” can do neither, but it is possible for you students to do both, with Work. [10 July 1974]

Obviously, this is a key passage for understanding External Consideration, equating it with “love”. Refer to the chapter on “Love”, the chapter on “School”, and the chapter on “Work” in this Study Papers book.

Kathryn was a member of Robert Burton’s Fourth Way group for decades, starting when her parents did in 1970 or 1971; she did not leave the group when her parents did, in 1972. Thus, she was aware of Gurdjieff’s terms, Internal and External Considering.

Discussion about Overleaves — positive and negative sides. Acceptance seems to be Richard’s strongest, maybe Shirley’s strongest, Joan’s? She wonders about it.

The Acceptance [Goal] combined with the Caution Mode have been, in the past, your primary stumbling block, and until six months [ago] would have been obvious as your prominent Overleaves. Now, the Acceptance commands the forefront as you have attempted Work with your Caution [Mode] and have managed to throw caution to the winds in several instances. By doing so, you have almost rendered this Overleaf neutral and workable. The Acceptance [Goal] can be quite positive, yes, but it must come from what you have learned to call “External Consideration” and not from the Personality’s “Internal Consideration”. When the manifestation comes from Personality, it can be very negative in terms of the energy drain to you.

Joan: It seems like I’ve given up Acceptance and not given up the Caution. Like “less caution about saying no.”

Please don’t misunderstand us. Acceptance is not a negative Goal. It is a powerful, Exalted [Cardinal] Goal and can be particularly useful in the realm of External Consideration. [01 October 1974]

This was a few months before the revelation of the Positive and Negative Poles. One can point to the Goal of Acceptance and see that the Positive Pole, +Agape, is a succinct example of External Considering, and the Negative Pole, –Ingratiation, is a succinct example of Internal Considering. Indeed, one could look at the Positive and Negative Poles of all of the Overleaf traits and see shades of Internal and External Considering.

Nothing will make the gift of higher expression come as easily as will acts of, yes, “External Consideration” — the ability a student has to look beyond his own needs to the true needs of another student to express his Essence. [12 February 1975]

There is another succinct definition of External Consideration. The trick, of course, is to be spiritually mature enough to discern the right course of action when it comes to self and other.

Many here tonight understand the principle involved in choosing not to lock into the other’s bad spaces and to choose to present a neutral facade at these times. This requires a conscious act of will, and this is what we wish you all to strive for. No, we would disagree, there is no positive anger or dread, or any of those things, but the [Negative Poles of] Overleaves can always manage to justify any of these at the drop of a hat. What we have consistently warned against is the repression of hostility, which is a vicious form of Inner Considering. This does lead to “sickness” of a sort, and it is the choice that we wish to see in you. The exercising of will — that is now the goal. As long as you are reacting negatively, there is an Overleaf [in the Negative Pole] in control. When you react positively, [from the Positive Poles of your Overleaves,] then the Essence may be poking through the snow bank.

Inner turmoil — the anger at oneself — always results from unreasonable expectations that at least one Overleaf has of the others, and since there is virtually no communication between the Poles of Overleaves — the “many I’s” — then these expectations are only clear to a few of the Overleaves, while the others are in the dark. There again, the [energy] Leak is downward and results in the same pattern. Yes, this is the same as Inner Considering. [Dimensions! — April 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Energy and Energy Leaks” for more information about one of the negative consequences of Inner Considering: you disempower yourself; you give your power away.

These two paragraphs are further evidence that Inner Considering is one of the functions of the Negative Poles of Overleaves. Conversely, Outer Considering is one of the functions of the Positive Poles of the Overleaves.

Concluding Comments on Considering

1. The Michaels endorsed the Gurdjieffian understanding of the psychological phenomena of Considering, but this Gurdjieffian concept appears to have totally fallen off the radar of the Michaelian teachings. There was one mention of Considering in MFM, but it adds nothing to this discussion. There was one mention of Considering in Michael Speaks: The Legacy of Susan Briggs, but it adds nothing to this discussion. Beyond those instances, I have found nothing in subsequent Michaelian teachings sources. This is not unexpected, considering that few if any Michaelian students have made the transition from a Gurdjieff group to the Michaelian teachings.

2. I am not familiar enough with modern psychotherapy to know if there is a corresponding concept therein, but <https://www.psychologytoday.com/us/blog/the-literary-mind/202011/why-do-we-take-things-personally-and-how-do-we-stop> appeared in Psychology Today magazine. The point of that article was to point out that too many people, or too often, we tend to “take things personally” — this is another manifestation of “Inner Considering”. To that article I would add that, if you find yourself doing Internal Considering by taking something personally, you can neutralize that by intentionally doing External Considering: get out of your own head and your own little world, figure out where the other person is ‘coming from’, and appreciate other points of view in general.
3. Passive, introverted people are prone to Inner Considering and find Outer Considering difficult to master. Active, extroverted people are not nearly as susceptible to Inner Considering, but the part of Outer Considering that they find difficult is letting go of their self-absorption and egocentricity long enough or empathetically enough to metaphorically ‘put themselves in some else’s shoes’.
4. Unless one is a hermit in a cave, who has neither contact with people or the world in general, Considering seems to be an unavoidable part of life.
5. One of the goals of psychotherapy and spirituality is to minimize Internal Considering and maximize External Considering. The former is de-energizing and the latter is empowering.

CONTROL

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “control” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Control issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “control” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Control

So what is meant by control? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Control per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Control

① CREATURE OF REASON

This phrase, Creature of Reason (CoR), occurs several times in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. So far as I have been able to determine, it was not borrowed from the Gurdjieffian teachings, as so many other concepts were. Nor did an internet search on the phrase yield a definite source from which the Michaels might have borrowed because it was familiar to original Michaelian group members. Nevertheless, we can know what it means because the Michaels provided a definition, and we can also infer or deduce its meaning from the context in which the phrase is found.

Basically, the descriptions in the original Michaelian group transcriptions indicate that:

- A CoR is a “fragment”-ensouled biological entity as distinct from a “group”-ensouled biological entity.
- A CoR is also distinct from non-physical, aka “spirit”-bodied conscious entities of various kinds.
- Not only humans but also cetaceans are designated as Creatures of Reason, because they also are fragment-ensouled, not group-ensouled, entities.
- Not only this planet earth, but also other planets are allegedly inhabited by Creatures of Reason, often with a terrestrial CoR and an aquatic CoR as on earth.
- The CoR is a distinct level or stage in a hierarchy/spectrum of living beings. There are levels/stages below/before the CoR stage, and there are levels/stages above/after the CoR stage of biological evolution.
- The CoR is just one line of evolutionary development among several other lines of evolutionary development.
- Being at a distinct stage in the hierarchy/spectrum, a CoR has a distinct set of challenges and opportunities, which the Michaels tell their students about.

Each of these bullet points is described and explained in this chapter.

Because a CoR has a special meaning as used by the Michaels, I capitalize it, along with many other jargon terms found in the Michaelian teachings, and discussed in this Study Papers book.

In the next three sections we will take a look at the concept in general, and then we will take a look at the Michaelian teachings specifically.

Creatures of Reason in Philosophy

Doing an internet search, the closest that I came to a predecessor for this Michaelian phrase is this quotation:

“Homo sapiens, the only creature endowed with reason, is also the only creature to pin its existence on things unreasonable.” — Henri Bergson

Other possible meanings of the phrase can be gleaned from an academic paper that I found with an internet search. It says:

HAVING REASON AND BEING RATIONAL: According to a traditional philosophical view, dating back to Aristotle and shared by Emmanuel Kant and many others, what makes human beings different from the other animals is that human beings are “rational” or have “reason”. The plausibility of this claim depends, of course, on what it is taken to mean. Both colloquially and in academia, the terms “reason” and “rational” are used in many different ways. “Reason” may be used to denote sanity, as when people say that a mentally deranged person has “lost his reason”. “Rational” may be used to mean orderly and intelligible, or in accordance with causal laws, as when people say they believe that the world is a “rational place”. “Reasoning” may be taken to describe the activity of working out what to do or believe by thinking, in which case “reason” is simply the capacity to do that. [Christine M. Korsgaard, Rationality; it can be downloaded from the internet here: ><https://www.people.fas.harvard.edu/~korsgaard/CMK.Rationality.pdf>< — retrieved 18 June 2021]

This PDF article is 21 pages long, but the brief abstract quoted above is enough to get my point across, namely that fragment-ensouled beings are dominated by the existence of a strong “Intellectual Center” — to use the Michaelian term for rational function — that is far more highly developed than that of any of the other animals on this planet except cetaceans.

In terms of the development of consciousness in life over time, the Creature of Reason is a level/stage in that evolution; there are levels and stages before and after the level/stage of the CoR. Furthermore, the CoR line of development is just one out of several lines of development, lines that can be graphed as ‘parallel’ to the CoR line. The next two sections cover the levels and lines of development, and notes the location of CoR among them.

Levels of Evolution

In order to appreciate what the Michaels say in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, quoted below, regarding Creatures of Reason, it is useful to ‘zoom out’, so to speak, and get a sense of where Creatures of Reason fit in the cosmic scheme of things. The idea is that there is a developmental hierarchy in the process of evolution, and the hierarchy occurs in somewhat distinct levels or stages. This time structure is discussed at great length in my book The Tao of Cosmogony, so I will only touch on it briefly here.

A careful reading of the original Michaelian group transcriptions reveals that the Creature of Reason is a distinct level or stage in the biological evolution of the vehicle of incarnation. For instance, we will see below that the “Creature of Reason” is distinct from the “Creature of Non-reason” that lives at a lower/earlier level, and that distinction is determined by the type of ensoulment; the Creature of Non-reason has a “group” soul and the Creature of Reason has a “fragment” soul. Fragment-ensoulment allegedly happens when a Creature of Non-reason has evolved enough physical brain to support it.

And then there is much discussion in the original Michaelian group transcriptions about the processes of human living that prompt various lines of development within the Creature-of-Reason level; refer to next section.

And then, after soul evolution in the physical body is completed, there is the evolution of consciousness in non-physical bodies within planes beyond the Physical Plane level. Thus, there are levels after levels after levels in the hierarchy of evolution, ad eternum.

This notion that the cosmos is structured hierarchically in time and space has deep historical roots in psychology, the natural sciences, philosophy, and theology; this concept goes by the name “great chain of being”; Wikipedia even has an article on it:

The great chain of being is a hierarchical structure of all matter and life, thought by medieval Christianity to have been decreed by God. The chain begins with God and descends through angels, humans, animals, and plants, to minerals. The Great Chain of Being (Latin: scala naturae, “Ladder of Being”) is a concept derived from Plato, Aristotle (in his Historia Animalium), Plotinus, and Proclus. Further developed during the Middle Ages, it reached full expression in early modern Neoplatonism.

The Chain of Being hierarchy has God at the top, above angels, which like him are entirely spirit, without material bodies, and hence unchangeable. Beneath them are humans [aka Creatures of Reason], consisting both of spirit and matter; they can change and die, and are thus essentially impermanent. Lower still are animals and plants. At the bottom are the mineral materials of the earth itself; they consist only of matter. Thus, the higher the being is in the chain, the more attributes it has, including all the attributes of the beings below it. The minerals are, in the medieval mind, a possible exception to the immutability of the material beings in the chain, as alchemy promised to turn lower elements like lead into those higher up the chain, like silver or gold.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Great_chain_of_being< — retrieved 25 July 2021]

The Wikipedia article continues with a description and history of the concept. This so-called “great chain of being” (GCB) is relevant to the Michaelian teachings because the Michaels subscribe to the concept, as we see in this chapter and other chapters of this Study Papers book. Therefore, readers are invited to read in full the Wikipedia article to inform themselves of the concept, and take note of similarities to the cosmological schema of the Michaelian teachings.

Not everyone is satisfied with the metaphor of the Great Chain of Being; Ken Wilber, for instance, prefers the metaphor of the Great Nest of Being:

Ken Wilber's reframing of the Great Chain of Being to more accurately reflect what the premodern sages themselves originally meant: each expanding "link" in the Great Chain transcends and includes its juniors, and is therefore actually a Great "Nest" of Being. In Integral Theory, the Great Nest of Being is not a Platonic given but the result of evolutionary Kosmic habits. [<https://integrallife.com/glossary/great-nest-of-being/> — retrieved 17 October 2021]

See also <https://cac.org/the-great-nest-of-being-2018-02-14/> for a fuller description and explanation of the Great Nest of Being (GNB). In what follows, there are occasional abbreviations of my conflation of these two metaphors into the GC/NB.

In the original Michaelian group transcriptions, there are hints in the description of Creatures of Reason that the CoR is a level in the GCB/GNB. If my surmise is correct, then these levels can be correlated with features of what I refer to as the Canonical Septenary. The Canonical Septenary follows what I refer to as the Natural Sequence. The basic idea of the Canonical Septenary is that the seven planes of the cosmos (the largest/longest septenary), which are described in the Michaelian teachings and elsewhere, can be subdivided and subdivided and so on to smaller septenaries in terms of level in space and stage in time. Each level/stage within each septenary recapitulates the corresponding level/stage in all of the other septenaries. Many of these septenaries are documented in the Michaelian teachings as it has developed over the decades, starting during the original Michaelian group. Some of these septenaries are tabulated in the next section because they are different lines of development that are mentioned in the context of the CoR.

Lines of Evolution

Whether imaged metaphorically as a chain or as a nest, we will see below that there are hierarchies of various kinds — aka "lines" — in the cosmos from smallest to largest (in terms of space) and from oldest to newest (in terms of time). We will see below that the Creature of Reason is one of the levels of a hierarchy, in one of the lines of development. What makes the parsing of the information on Creatures of Reason tricky is that there are several developmental lines that correlate with each other because they all follow the Canonical Septenary, the Natural Sequence, and they not only correlate with each other but they also influence each other. That is to say, development happening on one of the lines has an effect on one's development on other lines.

The following table shows the septenaries that are mentioned in this chapter and that correlate with the CoR. It is worth studying this table before you move on, because it will make it easier to understand this chapter and other chapters in this Study Papers book.

CREATURE of REASON in CONTEXT — LEVELS and LINES of DEVELOPMENT
MONADIC	ORDINAL			NEUTRAL	CARDINAL
AXIAL	ACTION	INSPIRATION	EXPRESSION	ASSIMILATION	EXPRESSION	INSPIRATION	ACTION
PROCESS	Termination	Involution	Analysis	Combination	Synthesis	Evolution	Origination
BIOLOGY	Reptilian Creature	Mammalian Creature	Creature of Reason	I wonder if biological and spiritual evolution over thousands and millions of years will produce physical creatures that would be placed in categories above and beyond the Creature of Reason.
CULTURE	Hunter-Gatherer	Agriculture	Civilization	Information	Philosophy	Spirituality	Utopia
SOUL AGE	Infant	Child	Young	Mature	Senior	Elder	Ancient
LIFE-STAGE	Infancy	Childhood	Youth	Middle Age	Seniority	Elderhood	Decrepitude
LEVEL OF BEING	Man #1 Physical	Man #2 Emotional	Man #3 Mental	Man #4 Balanced	Man #5 Conscious	Man #6 Adept	Man #7 Master
CHAKRA	Gonadic	Navel	Plexus	Heart	Throat	Brow	Crown
CENTER	Moving	Emotional	Intellectual	Instinctive	Hi'r Intellectual	Hi'r Emotional	Hi'r Moving

Comments on this table are as follows:

- MONADIC: The first row shows the so-called “Monadic” Attributes of the Canonical Septenary, the Natural Sequence. These were known to the original Michaelian group. Refer to Chapter 2B, “Attributes of Overleaves”, in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart.
- AXIAL: The second row shows the so-called “Axial” Attributes of the Canonical Septenary. These were not known to the original Michaelian group so far as we know, but they were revealed by Quinn Yarbro in her book Messages from Michael. Combining the Monadic and Axial Attributes yields the so-called “Septenarian” Attributes. From left to right, these are shown in the sequence of the Canonical Septenary.
- PROCESS: The third row shows the one-word names that I have chosen to provide the barest of descriptions of the meaning of the Septenarian Attributes. For example, Ordinal Expression = the Analysis Process. Creatures of Reason primarily function in Ordinal Expression, aka the Analysis Process. In fact, the third level of all lines of development listed in this table, which are experienced by the CoR, are all aspects of the Ordinal Expression, aka Analysis, Process. This level is all about the formation and expression of an egotistical, individualistic “self-will”, a crystallized and discreet identity.
- The remaining rows of this table show various septenaries in shorter and shorter instantiations of the Canonical Septenary. The Great Chain/Nest of Being is fractalic, as noted in the previous section.
- BIOLOGY: The longest line of the Canonical Septenary that is shown in this table is the one that contains the so-called “Creature of Reason” level. In this schema, the CoR level is the third level in the biological evolution of the animal Kingdom. In the original Michaelian group transcriptions quoted below, the level that preceded Creatures of Reason was referred to as “Creatures of No-reason”. As explained in the chapter on “The Triune Brain” in my book The Tao of Cosmogony, which discusses an aspect of biological evolution, Creatures of No-reason can be divided very broadly into reptilians and mammals, which are shown in this table to the left of the CoR stage. If there are levels of biological evolution, whether by nature or by supernature, to the right of Creatures of Reason in this table, that is too transhumanish and science-fictionish for me to endorse with confidence; refer to a section near the end of this chapter.

- CULTURE: The fifth row shows the next shorter line of development discussed in this chapter in context with the CoR. These are the names of socio-cultural levels of human CoR development that happen over the course of time spans from paleolithic to neolithic to historical to modern times. Humankind appears to be making the transition between Level 3 “Civilization” and Level 4 “information” at the same time in history that it is making the transition from Young Soul dominance to Mature Soul dominance; see next row of the table. Thus, Soul Age development drives Culture development to a large extent. The Michaels (04 September 1973) referred to the time when Old Souls predominate in human culture as “Philosophical”, so I include that in the table. Above and beyond that are so-called “Spiritual” and “Utopian” cultures, whose existence is speculated and named by myself.
- SOUL AGE: The sixth row shows the next shorter line of development discussed in this chapter in context with the CoR. Evidence from channeling indicates that souls typically develop along this line more quickly than human culture in general, so this line is nested within the Culture line. These are names that I have chosen for the Soul Ages described in the Michaelian teachings and elsewhere; for the full story, refer to Chapter 4M, “The Seven Soul Ages” in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart. This particular septenary was mentioned in context with the CoR in the original Michaelian group transcriptions quoted in this chapter. Notice that the Young Soul Age correlates with the Creature of Reason level.
- LIFE-STAGE: The seventh rows shows the next shorter line of development discussed in this chapter in context with the CoR. The seven Milestones happen within a full lifetime from birth to death. So far as I know, they were not revealed in the original Michaelian group — they were revealed in Messages from Michael — but there is one apparent reference to Milestones in one of the Q&A exchanges that discussed the CoR, so that is why I include it in this table. For more information, refer to Chapter 4Q, “Life-Stages” in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart.
- LEVEL OF BEING: The eighth row shows the next shorter line of development discussed in this chapter in context with the CoR. If this phrase is unfamiliar to you, refer to the chapter by that name. Briefly, this is Gurdjieff’s name for levels of spiritual development, another line of development nested within the Creature of Reason line of development. Unlike Soul Age, which takes many lifetimes to span the entire septenary, one can develop along this line within a single lifetime. There is one passage in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that hint that the Creature-of-Reason level of biological evolution correlates with the levels of spiritual development as given by Gurdjieff. Therefore I show it in this table.
- CHAKRA: The CoR was correlated with an abdominal chakra in one of the original Michaelian group Q&A exchanges, so it is appropriate to make the correlation in this table, namely that the Solar Plexus Chakra correlates with the Creature of Reason. In esoteric literature, the chakras are often presented as a distinct line of development, in that successively higher chakras are allegedly activated by the rise of kundalini energy from the bottom of the spine to the top. This can happen very quickly, so this is the shortest line of development shown in this table. Refer to chapters on chakras in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart for the explanation of the correlation of chakras with other septenarian lines of development in this table.
- CENTER: The last row shows the names of the Centers as they were given in the original Michaelian group. The Centers are not a line of development per se, but they have been correlated with various lines of development, as shown in this table. The descriptions of the Creature of Reason in the original Michaelian group transcriptions make it obvious that it correlates with the Intellectual Center.

A Creature of Reason, such as you or me, can be at very different levels in these various lines of development.

In this chapter, we focus on three links of the Great Chain/Nest of Being with respect to humanoid evolution: the animal link (Creatures of Non-reason), the human link (Creatures of Reason), and the super-human link. One might say that much of the Michaelian teachings is focused on these three links in the GC/NB.

With that background information in mind, let’s now take a look at the mentions of the CoR phrase in the original Michaelian group transcriptions.

Creatures of Reason in the Original Michaelian Group

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The first mention of Creatures of Reason was via Soleal — an Adept living on another planet — who preceded the appearance of the Michaels. (The passage also indicates that we do not have all of the sessions of the original Michaelian group transcriptions.) My guess is that Soleal borrowed the phrase from the Michaels because he was a Student of the Michaels, and when the Michaels themselves appeared to the original Michaelian group, they used the phrase.

You have said [in a previous session] that you think it is absurd that “Creatures of Reason” have hang-ups about sex.

[Soleal:] Why have a hang-up about something like breathing? [undated session, mid 1973]

For months after this first mention, there was no definition of the phrase, so my comments on the early Q&A exchanges might seem like a stretch, but the rationale for my comments will become clearer as this chapter develops. Basically, what we find is that the “Creature of Reason” is a level in biological evolution, but there are correlates of it in other developmental lines — such as Culture and Soul Age and Level of Being — and all of them follow the Natural Sequence, as shown in the table above.

Further on we see that the Michaels often contrast the characteristics of Creatures of Reason with the characteristics of Creatures of No-reason — the non-human (and non-cetacean) animals. It is generally true that Creatures of No-reason do not have hang-ups about breathing or sexuality. However, I regard Soleal’s answer as incomplete, because copulation is not like breathing, except for Creatures of No-reason. Yes, breathing and copulation are both bodily functions, but for Creatures of Reason the consequences for self and for other are much more significant for copulation than they are for breathing; the higher level of self-awareness that comes with being a Creature of Reason adds issues and challenges that Creatures of No-reason do not have.

Beyond that understanding of this Q&A exchange, another conclusion from an examination of the totality of the original Michaelian group transcriptions is that a person whose Centers are integrated and Balanced via a spiritual path does not regard either breathing or sexuality as “absurd”, and that is the position of maturity from which Soleal regards sex; refer to the chapter on “Sexuality” for the explanation that the human Expression Centers and the Inspiration Centers often interfere with the healthy and unencumbered sexual expression in the Action Centers.

The following Q&A exchange is from the first dated original Michaelian group session that has become generally available. It mentions the Chakra line of development.

Dick: In the [Carlos Castaneda] Don Juan books, in the works of faith healers and in the Indian chakras, there seems to be an agreement that there is a place in the lower abdomen, where there is a chakra in the Indian system and a place where the healing can be applied (Mr. A’s faith healing system), and in the Don Juan system, the “will” comes out through a gap in the abdomen, and these are things that I haven’t been able to experience, except to read about them, and I’d like to know if those particular points are valid.

[Soleal:] The average Creature of Reason does have his Gravity Center [chakra] somewhere near the middle of the torso, and to get in touch with that energy source you must first know how you are Centered and what you still have to go through [to become Balanced in the Heart Chakra], because you will want to [learn to] direct that energy into something positive [such as healing]. [03 July 1973]

This answer needs some parsing in order to understand it fully and correctly. Basically, this passage says that a Creature of Reason does well to develop along the Chakra line, starting with the lower chakras and developing into the higher chakras. It is my understanding that the Solar Plexus Chakra (“somewhere near the middle of the torso”) corresponds to the Intellectual Center — refer to the chapters on the chakras in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart. Typically, in the esoteric literature, the fourth chakra, the Heart Chakra, is the chakra of healing, but to properly use the energy of that chakra, the lower chakras, including the Solar Plexus Chakra, must be healthy. More is said about the Center/Chakra line of development in the chapter “Balanced Man”.

The next mention of Creatures of Reason came later in the same session, and it follows logically from what I said in my comment to the previous mention. The previous passage apparently referred to the dominant chakra of the average Creature of Reason; the following passage refers to Centers that above-average Creatures of Reason can aspire to achieve:

Dick: You know, in a way, it seems that he [Soleal] is speaking on a higher plane than we are. We're asking questions on one level and he's answering them on a higher level. The principles are there. It seems to me that what we need now is the how and not the principles. I've heard the principles in the Bible and from Robert [Burton]. It seems that if a teacher is going to come and be useful to us, he's got to tell us the how also.

Sarah: Can you tell us the how?

[Soleal:] To get to higher [Cardinal] Centers, do what Jesus did: fasting, meditation, and agonizing self-appraisal. Exercise the body, learn to love unselfishly. This is hard to do, but it can be achieved by [first] intellectually apprehending the fact that no other Creature [of Reason] owes you anything, and then materially obtaining what you need through your own resources. Emotional acceptance will only come about when the expectations [of entitlement] have ceased. Jesus had no aspirations of his students. In fact, he knew that he would fail the most dismally in his mission to those closest to him; yet, he persisted in his efforts. For his own growth, it was more important to express the higher good than it was that those around him absorb it. Many did absorb — many more now than then. Even if you feel that good efforts are being wasted, continue. Positive energy is never wasted; somebody always absorbs it. [03 July 1973]

To me this means that one of the major levels within the Creature-of-Reason level of biological evolution is when one “intellectually apprehend that no other Creature owes you anything, materially”. In other words, in that level you become a mature, independent, self-sufficient being in terms of thoughts and beliefs. Per the previous Q&A exchange, the “average CoR” has his “Gravity Center” in the Solar Plexus Chakra, which corresponds to the Intellectual Center. Think of this as the Level of Reason. This is the level before we “learn to love unselfishly” in what may be thought of as the Level of Intuition. And beyond that are the levels that correspond to the Cardinal Centers, which I now designate as the Level of Philosophy (Higher Intellectual Center), the Level of Spirituality (Higher Emotional Center), and the Level of Utopia (Higher Moving Center). Those levels are discussed in the chapter “Adepts and Masters”. More is said about the Center/Chakra line of development in the chapter “Balanced Man”.

In the chronological narrative of this chapter, the source shifts from Soleal to the Michaels henceforth, and the information gets expanded into other lines within the Creature-of-Reason level in the GC/NB, one line being Soul Age:

The tape recorder was turned off for a moment, but a question was asked about all of us being Old Souls.

The Exalted [Cardinal] Cycles [Soul Ages] are sparsely populated; Sarah is right about the bell curve. The majority of all Creatures of Reason are Young and Mature right now because of the closeness of the manifestation of the high Mental [Plane] body [the Infinite Soul]. [26 August 1973]

The Creatures-of-Reason level of the GCB is subject to reincarnation and resultant soul evolution through the Soul Ages. As pointed out above, the Creature-of-Reason level refers to the third step in the biological evolution septenary, and it corresponds to the Intellect Center, which is the third step in the Centers septenary when arranged per the Canonical Septenary, aka the Natural Sequence. Here and now it is appropriate to point out that the Creature-of-Reason stage corresponds to the Young Soul Age.

Soul Age is one line of development separate from the CoR line. The next mention of Creatures of Reason in the original Michaelian group transcriptions mentions another line, the Culture line:

Question about homosexuality.

This unfortunate syndrome is almost always culturally induced. Most of the time it is a form of rebellion, either by an Emotionally Centered male, usually either an Artisan or a Sage, or an Intellectually Centered female, usually either a Scholar or a Priest. This culture frustrates the inclinations of both — or we should say, all — of these Roles, and the squelching is done in childhood. The job is usually quite thorough.

One other form of mixed gender conflicts arise with the children of the above who do not have a clear-cut picture of the “roles” that society expects them to play. They go out into the world unequipped to play the proper role, and [so they] ‘play it by ear’. Sometimes, this results in the gender conflict. Ideally, one should be able to express love for others regardless of the genital assignment without fear of castigation. [To do] this is quite an upward step in the evolution of Creatures of Reason. Don’t expect it to happen in this lifetime. [14 December 1973]

In America, this acceptance of homosexuality, this “upward step in the evolution of Creatures of Reason”, happened rather suddenly a few decades later with the federal legalization of gay marriage. Contrary to the prophecy, it happened within the lifetime of some members of the original Michaelian group. Sarah Chambers became a gay rights activist a decade after this session, in the early days of the AIDS epidemic, but she was not one of those who lived to see the legalization of gay marriage. The acceptance of homosexuality in a culture is a much smaller step in cultural evolution than the seven major stages shown in the table above. However, I would say that the small shift in culture is a component in the big shift in culture, from Young Soul dominance to Mature Soul dominance, which was mentioned in the previous Q&A exchange.

The Creature of No-reason has not yet been named as such in the original Michaelian group transcriptions (see further on), but the next occurrence of the CoR in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is a description of the difference between a Creature of Reason and a Creature of No-reason:

We would say a few words on a subject that has not been broached. We feel that you need to know about [it], and perhaps it will give rise to some questions.

When the life cycle is thrown in motion on any given world [inanimate → animate], it is left alone for many centuries to evolve unmolested and undisturbed. When a dominant species finally stabilizes, we begin to monitor this species. When the animal becomes sufficiently domesticated and is taught basic survival techniques, Infant Souls are cast [into incarnation, not as Fragments]. The dinosaur did not emerge as the dominant species; instead, a carnivore, a mammalian upright ape did. The Infant Souls were not initially cast [into incarnation] until the dominant Creature [of No-reason] had evolved into one where the cerebral capacity was sufficient for learning [as a Creature of Reason is]. [24 January 1974]

This and other original Michaelian group transcriptions imply that ensoulment by an individual Fragment of what had been a Creature of No-reason is the beginning of the Creature-of-Reason stage of development. The brain of a Creature of No-reason must evolve to a certain quantity and quality or it is not suitable to interface with a “fragment” soul, which is different from what the Michaels elsewhere referred to as a “hive” soul: “Physical animals have etheric and astral vehicles; they have a hive soul, as in bees.” — 21 August 1973. Hive souls are not sufficient to produce Creatures of Reason, as fragment souls are. Refer to the chapter “En soulment” for more information.

Further on in this original Michaelian group session, there is some more clarification on the demarcation of Creatures of No-reason and Creatures of Reason:

Edgar: Our soul has been said to have always been in existence. Would this be equivalent to Genesis where we were thrown out of Paradise — into the world?

That is valid.

Edgar: The second chapter of Genesis tells of God making a body out of earth [and breathing life/soul into it].

This Chapter II [of Genesis] explains the immersion of the soul in the body of the dominant creature, yes. [24 January 1974]

Edgar was confused, but so is Genesis, derived as it was from at least two legendary traditions, and these myths are subject to various interpretations. According to the Genesis account, Adam and Eve being cast out of the Garden of Eden (perhaps equivalent to Astral Plane spiritual souls incarnating in material bodies on the Physical Plane) came somewhat later than Adam (representing humankind) receiving the breath of life (perhaps equivalent to ensoulment of the dominant species). Anyway, stories get garbled and understanding them is iffy.

So much for that original Michaelian group session, but the subject of hive souls was elaborated upon a couple of months later:

Could you explain hive souls? Were they part of one soul that split?

That is valid. Until the dominant species arose, all were part of the group [aka “hive”] soul. This accounts for the inability of the lower animals to reason independently. They reason to a certain extent in herd schools and packs where the vibrations are stronger and the energy level higher. Whales have individual souls. Most planets on which Creatures of Reason reside have [both] an aquatic [in water] and terrestrial [on land] culture.

We discussed whales and someone said they did not think they are Creatures of Reason.

We disagree that the whales are not Creatures of Reason. They simply cannot manipulate their environment to the extent you [humans] can. This is why they are so large; the size gives them a chance [to survive and evolve in spite of the inability to manipulate their environment]. [03 April 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Cetaceans” for further discussion of their status as ensouled animals. Also, refer to the chapter “Biocomputer” for more discussion of John Lilly and his notion that cetaceans are Creatures of Reason, although Lilly [probably] did not use that term.

More was also said about CoR on planets other than earth:

What does the comment about the populated galaxy mean?

We are not aware of crossovers between this galaxy and others. The intergalactic medium has not been penetrated in this area. Not because it is not possible; simply because it is not truly desirable. Contact with Creatures of Reason from other galaxies is, of course, possible on the Astral Plane. [08 May 1974]

This is a hint that the Creature-of-Reason level of biological evolution is pervasive throughout the physical universe. Soleal, for instance, although reptilian in appearance, lives on another planet, yet he is apparently experiencing the same sentient, sapient, humanoid, Creature-of-Reason level in biological evolution. That there are humanoid Creatures of Reason on other planets is not just a convenient trope for science fiction stories.

More was also said about cetaceans as CoR:

Do dolphins and whales communicate with each other?

There are barriers, much the same as your language barriers present.

Are [their] thought patterns the same as all Creatures of Reason?

In Essence, yes, but you must take False Personality into consideration.

Do whales have False Personality?

Yes, they do.

Do they choose their [life] Sequences?

Yes, they do. [22 May 1974]

Linguists look for features (“thought patterns”) common to all languages and find that the encoding is different but such things as syntax and parts (nouns, verbs, etc.) exist in all of them. This is because language is a function of “reason” in the broad sense of that term, and the world that words describe is also “reasonable”.

Let’s move on to the next appearance of CoR in the original Michaelian group transcriptions:

Phyllis: Do animals laugh?

Laughter is limited to Creatures of Reason. They alone feel the need to communicate the fact that they are either pleased or awfully nervous to those around them. Other animals do occasionally indicate their nervousness by coughing, stamping, etc., but not laughing. We see the need to laugh as genuine in Creatures of Reason who so depend upon verbal communication, and where in some societies displeasure just might result in violence. [19 June 1974]

It would seem that this lack of laughter applies to Creatures higher than Creatures of Reason as well as to Creatures of Non-reason and lower. However, I tend to believe that humor of some sort exists in higher Creatures.

But I digress. Let’s move on to another original Michaelian group session.

Shirley: Do whales twin?

Yes, all Creatures of Reason twin. [25 June 1974]

Twinning, of bodies and souls, was a topic of interest at that time in the original Michaelian group sessions. Refer to the chapter “Twins” to read the study paper on that subject.

Louise: One almost has to have lived before to have a fear of it [death].

This fear, Louise, is only shared by other ensouled beings [aka Creatures of Reason]. By the way, your insight is valid.

Dick, recalling vividly some of your own countless deaths would strengthen your belief [in the afterlife]. This [contra afterlife] anti belief was literally pounded into you at the age when you were storing your most profound philosophies on the nature of physical things. This is why it has been so difficult to shake. There are [developmental] stages through which all Creatures of Reason pass, at which time certain selective bodies of information can be much more permanently imprinted than at any other stage. [01 October 1974]

These “stages through which all Creatures of Reason pass” are perhaps the so-called “Milestones”, aka “Internal Monads”, that were not revealed during the original Michaelian group but which Quinn Yarbrow revealed in Messages from Michael, pages 217 and 218. For a thorough examination, refer to the Part titled “Developmental Psychology” in my book The Tao of Cosmogony. This psychological development is different from the cultural evolution of Creatures of Reason mentioned previously, where homosexuality becomes acceptable.

Is there any connection between the spread of the Teaching and the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel?

Essentially, yes. This phrase was originally used metaphorically describing the lost civilizations known but gone in the Euphrates Valley. All of these had, to their intellectual limits, access to the Teaching passed to them, of course, in the tongue of the times, but substantially the same. The truth of this, of course, became lost in legend.

In the beginning [ensoulment] of Creatures of Reason on this world, this had a very literal meaning, as early man did form tribes, becoming nomadic as the food supply steadily decreased. Man [humans] became dispersed throughout the world, some even crossing the Bering Straits on this continent, and these souls, of course, were physically lost to the other tribes. [19 October 1974]

If the above statement added anything significant to our understanding of Creatures of Reason, I have not discerned it; I include it just to provide a complete record from the original Michaelian group transcriptions. We learn more from the next Q&A exchange that mentions the CoR. Two lines of development that bear on the development of the CoR during a lifetime, Soul Age and Culture, are mentioned in this passage:

Man must strive uphill in the battle to free the Essence. By “man,” of course, we refer to all Creatures of Reason. For in all languages we know of, there is a word meaning “man” [in the sense of human as distinct from other animal species]. This uphill battle is growth-producing and also provides the strength to persevere through the several [Soul Age] Cycles spent on the Physical Plane. The lessons learned on the Physical Plane are necessarily [psychologically] painful just because they are so complex. With simplification, there is analgesia [less pain]. On this world, there have been significant cultural and religious barriers to growth. On other worlds, there have been hostile natural environments and threats from without to contend with. [22 October 1974]

This is another statement that the Creature-of-Reason level is a distinct link in the GC/NB, with its particular internal and external challenges. Refer to the chapter named “Complexity and Simplicity” for further discussion of this factor in the Soul Age Cycle of Creatures of Reason.

The lengthiest exposition in the original Michaelian group transcriptions on Creatures of Reason is as follows.

James asked the purpose behind extraterrestrial exploration.

Their purposes are legion. Some worlds are crowded. Some care only for exploration. Others, such as the world where our student (Soleal) lives, care only for spiritual growth. There is much curiosity throughout this galaxy — curiosity such as the kind that Creatures of Reason on this world exhibit when they try to break from the prison of this world.

Exploration has always appealed to Creatures of Reason. As soon as they learned to conquer their native environment and subdue it sufficiently to insure long-range survival, their thoughts automatically turned to the stars. As their technological might increased, their horizons broadened. We believe that the man Bertrand Russell hit upon a basic truth when he described the “utter terror of cosmic loneliness” that man feels when he contemplates the cosmos. Man is not alone in this; all Creatures of Reason experience it; it is part of the evolutionary process on the Physical Plane and cannot be avoided. Our student [Soleal] feels that this [visit of his to earth], perhaps, will result in a cultural, as well as spiritual exchange, leading to much spiritual growth on both worlds. This remains to be seen.

Creatures of Reason, of course, retain the knowledge of the pan-dimensional universe within their Essences, and at a far deeper level than most are in contact, and resent the limitations placed upon them by the Physical Plane — the ultimate speed limit, the ultimate this and that — impedes their progress, and eventually they rebel against this, and literally burst from their finite prison into the pan-dimensional universe.

Apparently, curiosity originates with Creatures of Reason, not earlier in cosmic evolution. Curiosity is an Intellectual Center phenomenon, not the Emotional Center or the Moving Center. I would venture the guess that curiosity continues beyond the Creature-of-Reason stage of cosmic evolution. I also see in this passage a hint that, in the near or distant future, the Creature of Reason on planet Earth might “burst from their finite prison into the pan-dimensional universe”, this being a level of the CoR that is beyond the third level of biological evolution that we humans are familiar with. The so-called “Transhumanist” philosophers speculate about such stuff; see further on. Various UFO phenomena also hint at such stuff, but I will not go into detail about that because it is so iffy.

James heard from another medium that some aliens have been able to program all individuals on this planet and monitor them, so that if our race is destroying the balance in this part of the universe, they (the aliens) will destroy us, not allowing us to do it.

Unfortunately, we would classify this as altruistic wishful thinking. In fact, the destruction of the planet, however premature, would not throw the universe out of harmony. Premature destruction of the star itself would, but minutely so. There is, or rather are, [extraterrestrial] races with this capability, but none with this clouded thinking. This would be a devastating Karmic Ribbon, which no Creature of Reason would knowingly take upon himself. The capability for this is, of course, well within the reach of your own scientists. [20 November 1974]

It does not say so here, but I venture to say that Creatures of No-reason do not incur Karmic Ribbons when they interfere with the life of another Creature of No-reason. It may be that Karma is limited to the Creature-of-Reason stage of cosmic evolution; before that stage one is too limited in awareness to learn via Karma as the Michaels define it (refer to the chapter “Karma”), whereas after that stage one is not so limited in awareness that learning via Karma is required. Thus, being a Creature of Reason is an awkward stage in cosmic evolution.

In the next mention of Creatures of Reason, we see the first mention of “Creatures of No-reason”. Whereas the contrast was merely implied in previous passages, now it is made explicit:

When souls are first Cast into a dominant [animal] species, some, or rather many, of the instinctive drives of the Creatures of No-reason still remain embedded with the Bio-computer. The Personality makes no attempt to override these instinctive behavior patterns, and fights against the intrusion of any outside source. This suggests that they can be overridden.

Refer to the chapter “Bio-computer” for more information about that.

Before souls were Cast [into incarnation], the Creatures of No-reason from which you [Creatures of Reason] have ascended were largely governed by fear, and their lives were taken up in many ceaseless battles for survival. This is no longer necessary on this world and yet it goes on ceaselessly in spite of this. There are few large carnivores roaming the city streets and yet most behave as though there are. The battle for survival is but another [Bio-computer] Tape Loop that plays on and on, even to the point of starving large portions of the culture, while the others waste and hoard. This only provides for the realism in the drama, for this is no longer necessary at all.

Creatures of Reason have it all over their fellow [animal] inhabitants, as they alone are able to experience awe and delight. But the Creatures of Reason in this culture seldom allow themselves this luxury. They instead find devious methods of avoiding these experiences. The denial of pleasure and the pursuit of pain is high on your list of priority, and it should be clear now why this is true, but there is no reason for it other than the instinctive memories. This is the strongest reason we know of for working on the separation from your Personality and allowing the Essence to free itself. [21 December 1974]

In the original Michaelian group transcriptions, the word “Cast” is used in two senses. One is the “Fragmentation” of Tao into groups of “Kindred Souls”; there are chapters on these subjects in this Study Papers book. Two is the beginning of the ensoulment of the dominant animal species on a planet. Other than this chapter, there is not enough discussion of the latter sense of Casting in the original Michaelian group transcriptions to have a chapter on it in this Study Papers book; the above is about the extent of it.

In the paragraphs quoted above we clearly see the progression from the level of biological evolution called Creatures of No-reason, to the level called Creatures of Reason, when the dominant species is ensouled. There is a stage within the CoR stage when Essence dominates Personality, but this is not the same as some speculative transhumanist stage beyond the CoR stage.

Because of similarities of descriptions, I see a correspondence of this “Creature” progression to Gurdjieff’s ideas on spiritual growth, which he referred to as “Levels of Being”; this Study Papers book has a chapter on that. There we find that the progression is from Man Number One and Man Number Two — which can be characterized as irrational and therefore correlated with Creatures of No-reason — to Man Number Three, which can be characterized as Rational Man and which can be correlated with the Creature-of-Reason stage of biological evolution. Beyond that is Man Number Four, aka Balanced Man, where one separates from Personality and lives in Essence; refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality” for more about that.

The underlined words in the following original Michaelian group transcriptions are descriptive words for the Creature-of-Reason stage of biological evolution. Previous transcriptions did not have very many such descriptive words.

Ralph: You have told us about man's habitual rendering complex — the way he complicates things. If we have moments of knowledge and love, it seems difficult to maintain them in this culture. Can you comment on this?

These moments are moments of utter simplicity. Of course, it is difficult to maintain in this state, in the false order, the complicated chaos that this and other cultures like it have created. As we have said before, to explain away the unexplainable, man must create for himself the answer to all those questions, those imponderables for which there is no proof. Man, in order to be satisfied, must define, within the limits of his belief system, all those phenomena that he observes. In moments when the Essence breaks through the barriers, the true order — the natural order — becomes perceivable. Man takes the simplest activity and renders it complex by analyzing, examining, granting it priority, granting it precedence. We should not limit this simply to man [humans]. This is common to Creatures of Reason throughout the Physical Plane. This is not unique to that which you call man. Man takes the simplest function and renders it complex in order to give an illusion of importance to his life.

This is another passage where it appears that the Creature of Reason correlates with the Analysis Process in general and the Intellectual Center in specific.

Ralph: Is The Synthesis simpler than the systems that man erects?

In its most evolved form, yes. In words suitable for communication with the members of this enclave, it becomes complex. Again, Creatures of Reason take the simplest activity and render it complex through symbols. The Synthesis is not complex. The Synthesis seeks integration, simplicity. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence through expressions of individuality, isolation, alienation. Creatures of Reason seek to justify their existence by assigning themselves a role, even a negative one, if that be the case, of subrogation, taking the responsibility from themselves, assigning that responsibility to a higher power, conveniently beyond the five physical senses and, therefore, unarguable, unprovable, unassailable, safe, comfortable, complex. [26 December 1974]

The Michaels referred to their Teaching as “The Synthesis”. Refer to the chapter on “Synthesis” for a thorough description and explanation of what they meant by that. The teaching about the Creatures-of-Reason level in the evolution of life is just one very small component of The Synthesis.

I underlined the words “complex, symbols, individuality, isolation, alienation” because they are synonyms for the Ordinal Expression Analysis Process, the third Process in the Septenary of seven Processes. In my mind, this confirms the point made previously that the Creature-of-Reason level in the story arc of the evolution of life is an aspect of that Process; there are levels before and there are levels after the Creature-of-Reason level.

A couple of weeks later, more was said on the subject of the CoR. This one mentions another line of development, namely the Level-of-Being line:

[Soleal:] You as a group do have a very low profile and are almost invisible, one of the reasons being that you do not trust your Level of Being at all, and there is ample reason for this mistrust. Yogis are extremely visible and have a high profile. The energy wasted in concealment could just as easily be consumed in more meaningful ways. Many of you are even apologetic in your acceptance of this Teaching. You apologize all the time for embracing such irrational beliefs such as reincarnation and the like — the mere fact that you are now sitting here reflecting on the fact that you might well be crazy sets you apart from the Creatures of Non-reason or from the unensouled universe. On what laurels rests your doubts? What audacity gives you the right to question the awe and the majesty?

The sun sets on our world quite regularly, also. How can you observe the sunset and not feel the awe? And feeling the awe, how can you call yourself a Non-reasoning Creature and merely a happy accident of time and space? — Which is exactly what you do each time you deny the existence of soul. The Emotional Center cannot deny the existence of the soul. It is too close to the source, and for that reason many of you run and hide each time the Emotional Center threatens to rear its ugly head — you even run from each other. Can you ever call each other “brother” when you fear each other so much? [11 January 1975]

“Reflecting” is a function of the Intellectual Center, which correlates with the Creature-of-Reason level of biological evolution. In this passage, some more challenges that are exclusive to the CoR level are mentioned, and so does the following Q&A exchange:

How can one tell whether one is in a Negative Pole of an appropriate Center, or if one is in the wrong Center entirely?

— Study Papers page 322 —

Whatever portion of a Center provides an entrapment for the soul who is still a victim of his Overleaves becomes the Negative Pole of that Center. All Creatures of Reason have this in common — you [personally and individually] are not alone. This is, for many, a no-exit situation and becomes Wrong Work, but still not wholly inappropriate, as in the example given. It is still an emotional reaction to an emotional situation or a sexual reaction to a sexual situation. We would call it unSchooled rather than inappropriate. It is not inappropriate, for instance, for your children in this culture to giggle at salacious pictures and this is an appropriate reaction from an unSchooled Center. [25 January 1974]

Unlike Creatures of Reason, Creatures of No-reason do not have problems with being in the inappropriate or unSchooled Center for the situation at hand, or being in the Negative Pole of a Center. By the way, there is a chapter “Good Work — Bad Work” in this Study Papers book.

More challenges of the CoR level are given in the next appearance of the phrase:

You can allow yourselves to be overwhelmed by the responsibility that you undertake. For instance, you can go under the load of responsibility that you feel for your children. On the other hand, you can come to regard these same children as Creatures of Reason and relate to them in a reasonable, amiable fashion. The same goes for all of your other interpersonal relationships. [08 February 1975]

The answer quoted above was part of a discussion about communal living. The statement about the way to relate to children appears to be an allusion to previous descriptions of Creatures of Reason: they tend to be independent, self-contained, self-sufficient, self-directed, and self-motivated. Even children can be, and should be, responsible individuals who are capable of fending for themselves as early as reasonable; therefore they are better off if their parents are not hovering over them all of the time. There are what modern psychologists call unhealthy “co-dependent” relationships that some parents have with their children, and that adults have with their intimate partners or families. In the above quotation, the Michaels recommend against co-dependent relationships wherever they are found. The point I want to make, in addition to the point that the Michaels made, is that one should develop from being an unhealthy Creature of Reason to being a healthy Creature of Reason: independent, self-contained, self-sufficient, self-directed, self-motivated.

The following answer was also in the context of a discussion about communal living:

The subject of domestic animals [dogs and cats] is interesting, in that domesticating animals was one of the first symptoms of growing alienation in this culture many centuries ago — almost, in fact, at the dawn [ensoulment of hominins] of Creatures of Reason on this world. Once man gives up his need for alienation, he can then, and only then, look at the reasons for his need for substitutes; he uses domesticated animals in lieu of people. They are expendable, relatively cheap, and give away no secrets. (If you are not wearing a cape, how can you conceal a dagger?) [12 February 1975]

If the notion of Creature of Reason is like other features of the Michaelian teachings, then I would name the Positive Pole as +Independence or +Individuality and the Negative Pole as –Alienation or –Isolation. Frankly, it is easier for many people to be intimate with a domestic pet than it is to be intimate with family members, but I suggest that the point that the Michaels want to make here is that using pets as a substitute for healthy and mature interactions with domestic partners does not lead to psychological or spiritual development toward the higher and healthier levels of being a Creature of Reason.

Following is the last mention of Creatures of Reason in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that have become available:

We know of no way to accurately describe what you call a “time system” except to remind you that this change you are experiencing has been set out by Creatures of Reason as a forward time system. It is important to remember that “evolutionary cycles” never exactly duplicate themselves, so you must think of them as a forward linear spiral and not simply the circular motion of a rotating point on a plane, and thus a “time plane” is not a flat sheet of paper in analogy, but resembles the flight of an auger bit with the referenced beginning points intersecting as a flat infinite plane projected radially from the center line of the shaft. [Dimensions! June 1975]

How appropriate that this last comment on the subject of this chapter should describe, albeit clumsily, the fractallicity principle of the Great Chain of Being. That is, each developmental septenarian cycle is like a 360° turn of a helix, where each cycle is similar to the previous cycles and the following cycles, but functions at a different time scale, one within the other. That is, the longest developmental time cycle contains the second longest cycle, and so on to the shortest time cycle. The table at the beginning of this chapter shows some developmental septenarian cycles at time scales that are shorter than the time cycle that includes Creatures of Reason as its third stage.

Now that we are finished with the original Michaelian group transcriptions, three more sections are expedient to properly wrap up this chapter.

Post Original Michaelian Group

Subsequent to the original Michaelian group, Sarah Chambers served as the primary channel in two other group gatherings. Among both of those, I found only one Q&A exchange where Creatures of Reason were mentioned:

[Question not recorded, but obviously about her ex-boyfriend, George.]

That relationship, Elizabeth, was not Wrong Work. It was a shifting of goals, both spiritual and physical, that ended it then. This was a natural Vectoring of events, and because it caused a realization crisis in you, it was rather Good Work. Loving is not owning, and that is why most humans and other Creatures of Reason fail in their life relationships. All Fragments on the Physical Plane long for the Tao, and for that reason they seek permanence in their relationships, something that ironically is not often possible. Love, as the unconditional Agape of the Masters, is of course possible, but permanent love on the Physical Plane is difficult because of the artificial barriers.... Fragments on the Physical Plane experience an almost cosmic loneliness that is caused when they are thrown [Cast] from the Tao. The thrust is sudden, and the Fragments take the entire physical cycle to recover. The movement toward reuniting with the Entity is a long and slow process, and when Students finally understand this as the goal, they often rush to speed it up. This is not possible in many Students because there are Life Tasks that they must complete. The transition is never easy, but Students have it easier than Fragments adrift, for they do have the advantage of a Teacher. [16 January 1983]

From this statement, and from other statements, it is obvious that the phrase, Creature of Reason, was invented and used to cover a distinct level of biological evolution that applies to more than humans; it applies to cetaceans on this planet, and to biological entities on other planets that are experiencing the same level as humans.

Mainstream Paleoanthropology

The Michaels declared that the transition from Creatures of No-reason to Creatures of Reason happened at the time of the ensoulment of the hominid species in prehistoric times. So far as we know, during the original Michaelian group the Michaels did not state when this happened, and subsequent to the original Michaelian group, various dates have been given [verify], if I recall correctly.

Wikipedia discusses the transition between pre-modern hominins and modern hominins in an article quoted below. Because of the scarcity of archaeological evidence, and because of the diversity of the interpretations of the scarce evidence and the definition of “modern behavior”, anthropologists differ in their opinions as to when the transition occurred. Some of the relevant information is as quoted below; it is a lengthy quotation because this subject is interesting to me.

THEORIES AND MODELS

Late Upper Paleolithic Model or “Upper Paleolithic Revolution”

The Late Upper Paleolithic Model, or Upper Paleolithic Revolution, refers to the idea that, though anatomically modern humans [Cro Magnon] first appear around 150,000 years ago (as was once believed), they were not cognitively or behaviorally “modern” until around 50,000 years ago, leading to their expansion out of Africa and into Europe and Asia. These authors note that traits used as a metric for behavioral modernity do not appear as a package until around 40–50,000 years ago. Klein (1995) specifically describes evidence of fishing, bone shaped as a tool, hearths, significant artifact diversity, and elaborate graves are all absent before this point. According to these authors, art only becomes common beyond this switching point, signifying a change from archaic to modern humans. Most researchers argue that a neurological or genetic change, perhaps one enabling complex language, such as FOXP2, caused this revolutionary change in humans.

Perhaps the Michaels would agree with this date and with this description of the revolutionary cognitive leap that happens at ensoulment. Or perhaps not. They would certainly say that the cognitive leap happened due to ensoulment, but I wonder what they would say about a concomitant and perhaps contributory genetic mutation. In another quotation, it will be pointed out that ritual burials, cave art, and inventions are indicators of a qualitative, not just quantitative, leap in cognitive capacity at a transition in hominin evolution.

Alternative models

Contrasted with this view of a spontaneous leap in cognition among ancient humans, some authors like Alison S. Brooks, primarily working in African archaeology, point to the gradual accumulation of “modern” behaviors, starting well before the 50,000 year benchmark of the Upper Paleolithic Revolution models. Howiesons Poort, Blombos, and other South African archaeological sites, for example, show evidence of marine resource acquisition, trade, the making of bone tools, blade and microlith technology, and abstract ornamentation at least by 80,000 years ago. Given evidence from Africa and the Middle East, a variety of hypotheses have been put forth to describe an earlier, gradual transition from simple to more complex human behavior. Some authors have pushed back the appearance of fully modern behavior to around 80,000 years ago or earlier in order to incorporate the South African data.

Others focus on the slow accumulation of different technologies and behaviors across time. These researchers describe how anatomically modern humans could have been cognitively the same and what we define as behavioral modernity is just the result of thousands of years of cultural adaptation and learning. D’Errico and others have looked at Neanderthal culture, rather than early human behavior exclusively, for clues into behavioral modernity. Noting that Neanderthal assemblages often portray traits similar to those listed for modern human behavior, researchers stress that the foundations for behavioral modernity may in fact lie deeper in our hominin ancestors. If both modern humans [Cro Magnon] and Neanderthals express abstract art and complex tools then “modern human behavior” cannot be a derived trait for our species. They argue that the original “human revolution” theory reflects a profound Eurocentric bias. Recent archaeological evidence, they argue, proves that humans evolving in Africa some 300,000 or even 400,000 years ago were already becoming cognitively and behaviourally “modern”. These features include blade and microlithic technology, bone tools, increased geographic range, specialized hunting, the use of aquatic resources, long distance trade, systematic processing and use of pigment, and art and decoration. These items do not occur suddenly together as predicted by the “human revolution” model, but at sites that are widely separated in space and time. This suggests a gradual assembling of the package of modern human behaviors in Africa, and its later export to other regions of the Old World.

Between these extremes is the view — currently supported by archaeologists Chris Henshilwood, Curtis Marean, Ian Watts and others — that there was indeed some kind of ‘human revolution’ but that it occurred in Africa and spanned tens of thousands of years. The term “revolution” in this context would mean not a sudden [genetic] mutation but a historical [cultural] development along the lines of “the industrial revolution” or “the Neolithic revolution”. In other words, it was a relatively accelerated process, too rapid for ordinary Darwinian “descent with modification” yet too gradual to be attributed to a single genetic or other sudden event. These archaeologists point in particular to the relatively explosive emergence of ochre crayons and shell necklaces apparently used for cosmetic purposes. These archaeologists see symbolic organization of human social life as the key transition in modern human evolution. Recently discovered at sites such as Blombos Cave and Pinnacle Point, South Africa, pierced shells, pigments and other striking signs of personal ornamentation have been dated within a time-window of 70,000–160,000 years ago in the African Middle Stone Age, suggesting that the emergence of Homo sapiens coincided, after all, with the transition to modern cognition and behavior. While viewing the emergence of language as a ‘revolutionary’ development, this school of thought generally attributes it to cumulative social, cognitive, and cultural evolutionary processes as opposed to a single genetic mutation.

A further view, taken by archaeologists such as Francesco D’Errico and João Zilhão, is a multi-species perspective arguing that evidence for symbolic culture in the form of utilized pigments and pierced shells are also found in Neanderthal sites, independently of any “modern” human influence.

Cultural evolutionary models may also shed light on why although evidence of behavioral modernity exists before 50,000 years ago it is not expressed consistently until that point. With small population sizes, human groups would have been affected by demographic and cultural evolutionary forces that may not have allowed for complex cultural traits. According to some authors, until population density became significantly high complex traits could not have been maintained effectively. Some genetic evidence supports a dramatic increase in population size before human migration out of Africa. High local extinction rates within a population also can significantly decrease the amount of diversity in neutral cultural traits, regardless of cognitive ability.

Highly speculatively, bicameral mind theory [Julian Jaynes: The Origin of Consciousness in the Breakdown of the Bicameral Mind] argues for an additional, and cultural rather than genetic, shift from selfless to self-perceiving forms of human cognition and behavior very late in human history, in the Bronze Age. This is based on a literary analysis of Bronze Age texts which claims to show the first appearances of the concept of self around this time, replacing the voices of gods as the primary form of recorded human cognition. This non-mainstream theory is not widely accepted but does receive serious academic interest from time to time. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Behavioral_modernity — retrieved 01 September 2021]

As I said, the archaeological evidence is too scanty and the interpretation of it is too iffy to come to a definite conclusion about the time of the transition from animal-like to human-like consciousness. The ensoulment itself need not have been sudden, and it need not have happened in all of the hominin species at the time of the first ensoulment; that could account for the appearance of modernity and spread of modernity via ensoulment, but the same could be said for the appearance and spread of genetic mutations that may have accompanied the transition from animal-like to human-like consciousness.

One bit of evidence, mentioned above and elaborated below, that supports the Michaelian ensoulment proposal is that archaeologists have found that dead bodies began to be buried with “grave goods” at some point in the evolution of the homo species, which indicates a belief in an afterlife. This phenomenon is distinct from mere cognitive development:

Paleolithic religions are a set of spiritual beliefs thought to have appeared during the Paleolithic time period. Paleoanthropologists Andre Leroi-Gourhan and Annette Michelson believe religious behavior emerged by the Upper Paleolithic, before 30,000 years ago at the latest, but behavioral patterns such as burial rites that one might characterize as religious — or as ancestral to religious behavior — reach back into the Middle Paleolithic, as early as 300,000 years ago, coinciding with the first appearance of Homo neanderthalensis and possibly Homo naledi. Religious behavior is one of the hallmarks of behavioral modernity. There are several theories as to the moment when this modernity emerged. One theory links these innovations to a cultural revolution among the early modern humans, which coincided with their arrival to Europe 40,000 years ago. A variant of this model sees behavioral modernity as occurring gradually, beginning with the Middle Stone Age. According to a third theory, characteristics that define behavioral modernity are not unique to the homo sapiens, but arose over a long period of time, among different human types, including neanderthals. It has even been postulated that homo erectus had some form of language and symbolism.... Graves are the clearest signs of spiritual behavior, as it shows delineation between the world of the living and the world of the dead. Most often, archaeologists will seek to find some form of grave goods, pigment use, or other forms of symbolic behavior to differentiate from burials motivated by other reasons, such as hygiene.... Based on the grave goods found beside the deceased, upper paleolithic burials are undoubtedly evidence of spirituality and religiousness. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Paleolithic_religion — retrieved 03 September 2021]

There might never be a scientific consensus on the reason or reasons for the so-called “cognitive revolution” or the spiritual afterlife consciousness in ancient humans, or on the time when it happened. One thing we can say with near certainty is that scientists agree — because it is self-evident and has been throughout history — that there is a distinct qualitative difference between humans and non-human animals in the modern world. The nature and cause of the difference is, of course, disputed between believers in a supernatural soul and non-believers in a supernatural soul. For various reasons, these days there is an effort in some elements of the culture to narrow this gap in terms of quantitative measurements, but in my view, there is still the qualitative difference between Creatures of No-reason and Creatures of Reason that might not be bridgeable by genetic and cultural mutations alone.

Transhumanism

That there is the level of Creatures of No-reason and the level of Creature of Reason implies that there might be levels above and beyond the Creature-of-Reason level. Furthermore, it is apparent that the description of the Creature-of-Reason level is similar enough to the third level in other septenaries in the Great Chain/Nest of Being that one can speculate on levels above and beyond the Creature-of-Reason level. There is no explicit naming of, nor description of, such a level or levels in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, but there are speculations by so-called “transhumanists”, who say that biological evolution will get hijacked in the not-too-distant future: humans will intentionally augment humans via genetic engineering and other technologies, pre- and/or post-natal. What could transhumanism possibly mean in terms of biological evolution in the future of humanity? Wikipedia has a lengthy article on this subject:

><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Transhumanism><. It is full of speculation about the future of humanity in terms of technology and physicality. For instance, humans could be enhanced with an embedded or attached computer. For instance, the human body could be enhanced by genetic manipulation.

And not just transhumanist philosophers, but some science fiction authors are wont to speculate about the qualities and characteristics of humans in the distant future. [specifics?] They also speculate about humanoid races on other planets who are far more evolutionarily advanced than humans on Terra, and not just in terms of technology, but in terms of qualities and characteristics that are above and beyond current humanity. [specifics?]

Although the Michaels used the phrase “Creatures of Reason” to refer to a level in the biological evolution of the species lineage that led to humans, there is also a spiritual component to that evolution, namely a type of ensoulment with an individual fragment soul, not a species hive soul in animals as before. The Creature of Non-reason is said to be inhabited by the so-called “hive soul”, and the Creature of Reason is said to be inhabited by the so-called “fragment soul”, starting tens or hundreds of thousands of years ago. In the far distant future of humanity, will there be a level beyond the Creature-of-Reason level? Would that level of humanity require some other type of ensoulment, such as the Transcendental type or the Infinite type of ensoulment? — to use Michaelian terminology. If the Michaels have anything to say about a level that transcends the Creature-of-Reason level, I do not know about it, and I am disinclined to speculate about its nature, unlike transhumanists and science fiction writers.

Concluding Comments on Creatures of Reason

It always helps me to get my thoughts in order if I arrange them in a numbered list that follows some logical sequence.

- Other than in Messages from Michael (pages 52–53, 55, 60–61, and 83), which is based on channeling from the original Michaelian group, a search of published materials written subsequent to the original Michaelian group did not reveal any references to Creatures of Reason. The fact that it is not mentioned beyond the original Michaelian group does not mean, to me at least, that it is unimportant; it means to me that it is important to include it in a chapter in this Study Papers book, lest it be lost to Michaelian students henceforth.
- This subject has been interesting to me since 1972. At that time, I was a member of a fundamentalist quasi-Christian cult, and so was a fellow by the name of Robert Lawrence Kuhn, PhD. His PhD was in neuroscience. His research at the time indicated that the human brain is not that much different anatomically from the primate brain, yet its output is so qualitatively different that a physical explanation is ruled out; therefore “soul”. (Kuhn is not as certain about this now as he was then; refer to his YouTube channel, Closer to Truth.) Eight years later I read Messages from Michael, and I saw the same explanation for the qualitative difference between Creatures of No-reason and Creatures of Reason.
- The Michaels specifically mention a level of biological evolution that they refer to as the Creatures of No-reason/Non-reason, and they mention a level above and beyond that, which they referred to as the Creatures of Reason. So far as I know, they do not mention a level higher than Creature of Reason, but I wonder if such a level or levels exists, because there is so much speculation about “super” humans in technological traditions, science fiction traditions, philosophical traditions, and religious traditions.
- These levels of biological development are reminiscent of other kinds of development, specifically levels of the Canonical Septenary such as Chakras, Levels of Being, Milestones, Soul Ages, and Cultures. I refer to this as the “fractalicity principle”: the pattern is repeated all up and down the Great Chain of Being. This principle is discussed at length in my book The Tao of Cosmogony.
- Throughout the comments above, I made the point that being a Creature of Reason makes life a lot more difficult than being a Creature of Non-Reason, a mere animal.
- There are enough clues within the descriptions of Creatures of Reason to correlate it with the Intellectual Center more than any other Center or any other component of the Michaelian cosmology.

CRIME

This chapter is the product of a search for the word crime and its derivatives and synonyms in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) criminality is unavoidable; it is pervasive in human psychology and sociology — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word crime is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

leadin?

Definition of Crime

So what is meant by template? The online Merriam Webster online dictionary definition is:

My usual go-to source for definitions and descriptions and explanations, Wikipedia, says this (underlined words are my emphasis):

Crime per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is a subject that benefits by division into subsections. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

Concluding Comments on Crime

⑥ CRUTCHES

This chapter is the product of a search for the word crutch in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) The temporary use of crutches is expedient; it is pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word crutch is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that crutches have both is a negative and a positive use. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Crutch

So what is meant by “crutch”? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

1a: support typically fitting under the armpit for use by the disabled in walking.

1b: a source or means of support or assistance that is relied on heavily or excessively; e.g. “They refuse to take any pills. They don’t want to use drugs as a crutch.” — Maya Pines; e.g. “Even many atheists would agree that believing that God cares about you or that your life is part of a cosmic plan can be a powerful source of hope (or, to put it pejoratively, a crutch).” — Virginia Postrel

[><https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/crutch>< — retrieved 15 October 2022]

The first definition is literal and the second definition is metaphorical. In this chapter, only the instances of the metaphorical use of the word are discussed.

Crutches per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first appearance of the word was in the second session in which the Michaels were the source:

Dick: Question about marijuana.

Crutches are very necessary at your level. He (Tomas) was merely pointing out to you where the crutches are, not saying you no longer need the crutches. [17 August 1973]

Before the Michaels revealed themselves to the original Michaelian group, the Astral personality that called itself Tomas was a source of information. He recommended that certain original Michaelian group members would be helped in their spiritual aspirations by using marijuana. Crutches are typically only useful during a healing process. After that, they should be discarded, or they actually become a hindrance to further progress. According to the Michaels, psychedelics were in the category of a crutch that was a temporary aid to 'ambulation' on one's spiritual 'path'; refer to the chapter "Psychedelics" for more discussion about that topic.

Dick: It sounds like individuality is a crutch and not a good thing. [22 November 1973]

Spiritual growth typically starts out as ego-centric psychotherapeutic self-improvement, but in the long run, a spiritual aspirant should graduate to a socio-centric focus on the "greater good", with Agape as the ultimate goal. The former is a necessary step; one must get oneself fixed before one can presume to know what is benevolent and beneficent for others in one's orbit. Refer to the chapters "Agape" and "Ego" for more information about those components of the Michaelian teachings.

Gene: My body seems to be changing lately. I would like some verification of this and any comments.

The Essence is more in control now, Gene, and therefore is directing somewhat against the desires of the Personality. This has resulted in a beginning of aversion for certain crutches. More will go as growth progresses. [13 February 1974]

The specific crutches are not mentioned, but generally speaking, it can be said that Personality needs temporary crutches whereas Essence does not. As one grows out of Personality and more into Essence, metaphorical crutches can and should be discarded, because they actually become counterproductive to further progress, just as actual crutches do when the body is no longer lame. Refer to the chapter "Essence and Personality" for more discussion of those contraries.

Dick: I believe that personal agendas are important to learn about our own internal world. Tomas wanted to get on with the Teaching and forget personal agendas. I've fought against therapy and encounter groups. We function well enough as we are, but we cannot go on to spiritual growth. Ordinary therapy deals with personality alone, and the processes are usually formulated by Mature Souls for Young Souls. Is there an ultimate therapy where we can know ourselves ??????

Yes. We would agree with that, indeed. There is a form of ultimate therapy — a clearing house for the Essence where the final cobwebs can be swept away and the clarity can shine through. Yes, also the crutch of the Personality, the one most frequently employed in situations where the Essence might come crashing through, is a most effective barrier. [19 March 1974]

This statement reinforces what I said previously about psychedelics used for psychotherapeutic purposes being a temporary expedient that the Personality can make use of on the way to living without crutches, when one is functioning from contact with Essence.

Dick discussed a machine Dr. Bryan has that is a photo-machine, like a stroboscope, which puts people into hypnosis quite rapidly. They watch lines like brain waves (which are rapid and they just see a flash) and go under hypnosis and then can be cured rapidly. Is this a valuable machine for the group to use?

We would consider such an experiment as extremely Good Work for this group. Whether or not it is one hundred percent effective will again depend upon you, but this is a quite foolproof method.

Refer to the chapter "Good Work, Bad Work" for the complete discussion of that Michaelian concept. There is a time when crutches are Good Work, but if they are effective then it should eventually become Bad Work to continue with them.

Could we adjust the machine to put a person into theta brain waves — it puts people into delta [brain waves] now — and be of more help that way?

Any competent electronics technician could alter a machine to produce this frequency, and yes, for the most part it would produce extraordinary imagery.

What is the point of imagery, a learning process?

That is one, certainly, but this process also opens the door to heightened [past life] memory experience.

Is it helpful to use this [device] as a rule? [Or] a crutch?

Yes, but sooner or later, you may discard this crutch. [08 March 1974]

Some spiritual practices should never be discarded, but some should be temporary. Technological devices for altering one's consciousness fall into the latter category. When one has learned what one needs to learn from the device, then one should discard it. Another relevant comment here is that introspective insights and subjective experiences are more effective and efficient in terms of enlightenment than having the Michaels tell you something. In that sense, the intellectual and conceptual components of the Michaelian teachings are a crutch that can be discarded when one has contact with one's own higher self or Essence. There should come a time when Michaelian students have matured enough that they no longer feel the need to consult a channel, looking for yet more and more information; refer to the chapter "Intuition" for more discussion about that. Basically and briefly, the Michaels sometimes chided original Michaelian group members for running to a channel for answers to their personal questions when it would be better if they learned to access their own intuitive faculty for insights and epiphanies. The bottom line is that channeling can be added to the list of crutches that can be discarded when one has matured enough, and is able to ambulate their own psyche toward enlightenment.

Dick: No. That is just the way it is. I need more passion. It seems that Robert [Burton] was in a Power Mode, and he was extremely patient. He attracted people by his Level of Being. If one is to be a spreader of the Logos, one has to be a high person, probably in an Exalted Role [Sage, Priest, King]. It bugs me to be told to bring new people, then they pop in and out. To spread the Logos as Robert does, you must have a Level of Being to attract people. You must be integrated [#5] and mysterious [#6].

You almost have to have some type of mystery, yes — we agree with that. Most people do seek a teaching, and this includes organized religion that introduces some intrigue into their lives. The Teaching, thereby, becomes exciting. Many do it with gimmicks; others with what you call charisma. It only works because it provides that special hint of the mysterious realm beyond the five senses to which you as the teacher have access, and that they can someday hope to glimpse. We are not opposed to this as long as the teacher does not begin to believe in his own magic. [14 April 1974]

So, enticement to raise one's Level of Being might start out with charisma and mystery, but it cannot stay there.

Dick: Our material on what to do is not specific. Could Michael recommend ways of changing our Overleaves?

The primary difficulty in altering the Overleaves is in the initial recognition and the constant verification, which must precede the true desire to alter. When this has been accomplished, then the process of anticipation can begin. We can compare it with recognizing that you were about to say the forbidden word and substituting a suitable synonym (the "get, I, very, really and, a lot" exercises). This was, of course, a crutch, but hopefully, a temporary one that could be discarded when the process becomes inculcated. Therapeutic processes can speed up the alteration where the pattern is not clear. However, this group can work toward that point where the psychic Photography is so finely tuned that the eventual breakthrough can come within the present structure. Many times, the meditation does serve as a precursor of insightful concentration. This is why it is so valuable. We find no fault with crutches so long as they are given up when you are no longer lame. [10 May 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Overleaves, Changing", "Recognition", "Validation and Verification", "Photography", "Meditation and Concentration" for more information about those subjects. Many spiritual "exercises" are temporary expedients; these can be discontinued when the lesson is learned to such an extent that the more mature belief, value, or behavior that is fostered by the exercise becomes automatic. This is the nature of all learning processes: you learn stuff and then you move on to new stuff to learn.

What is the importance of knowing chakras?

It would aid you in releasing specific energy. It would be a visual crutch to help you locate the energy pocket. [15 May 1974]

We could elevate this statement into a general principle, namely that spiritual teachings should present students with ideas about phenomena that they might not otherwise notice on their own; this new, higher information ambulates them forward on their spiritual path. Oftentimes these spiritual teachings are structured, the chakras system being one of those; it is like of map that shows students where they are in the stages of their spiritual path. Refer to the chapter "Chakras" for more information about that subject.

Richard: As I understand it, the aura green has to do with healing. Is there something along that line that I should be pursuing that I am not now doing?

Green does indicate strong drives to serve, yes, and most of those who choose healing and are successful do have this. You have within you the ability, but not the scope or knowledge, but could conceivably attain this. It would be much work, but perhaps far more rewarding than what you are doing now. You could certainly work miracles in the design of certain electronic crutches.

(Last week we discussed biofeedback machines for inducing a hypnotic state where positive suggestions could supplant old, negative ones — devices to tune you into your Essence.) [15 May 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Auras” for more information about that subject. Richard was an Artisan, and Artisans are typically good with technological devices. His occupation was that of an engineer, which is not a waste of Essence for Artisans, though the healing arts would have been more fulfilling for Richard. However, here again we see that technologies are said to be crutches.

Do we have musical instruments on the Astral Plane?

No. On the other hand, you can hear the music without the crutch on the Astral Plane. It is there. [22 May 1974]

Evidently, a Fragment on the Astral Plane can generate and transmit music from one’s emotions, without the intermediary of a musical instrument. Refer to the chapter “Planes” for more about that subject. Each Plane beyond the Physical Plane is more abstract than the one before. One wonders what other devices and instruments that are necessary on the Physical Plane are not necessary on the Astral Plane.

Question about William and overuse of [the] drug PCP.

This man needs to know that those experiences can be had without [psychotropic] drugs, of course. Yes, he is pretty dependent upon this fairly dangerous crutch now — the Essence enjoys the temporary liberation, yes. [05 June 1974]

This passage reinforces what was said previously, namely that psychedelics are a temporary crutch. They can release one from the clutches of Personality and into the arms of Essence, but this crutch should be discarded when it has done its job.

Dick: Question regarding the speeding up of spiritual growth.

There is some validity in the statement that the Personality and Essence must eventually “battle it out,” at least if progress is to be made on the Physical Plane, and this does not happen when entities [marijuana] that knock Personality out of the box are used, but those [psychedelic] crutches do a valuable service in that they allow you to glimpse the goal and make an intelligent decision about its worthiness as a full-time pursuit. [12 June 1974]

Psychedelics are designated as a crutch in the original Michaelian group transcriptions more than any other crutch.

Ralph: I have the impression that within our group, the articulation of the teachings emphasizes the static, the intellectual, and the hierarchical. Is this primarily a distortion arising from my biases or the group’s or the language’s? Or is this an accurate transmission of the teachings? Please comment.

In the beginning of this group, the primary concern was in the development of the belief system in the language necessary to explain it to each other and to oneself. This is a necessary step in the formation of any group, but in most, becomes a barrier toward further growth, and eventually becomes the belief system itself. In this group, there has been evolution of a sort that now points toward continuance in growth. The possibility still exists, however, that you will continue to concern yourselves with the intellectual hierarchical aspects and neglect the spiritual, yes, but you do not have to. You can put this belief system to the acid test and see if it works. Until you do this, yes, you are still trapped in the beginning stages. This is where most of the other belief systems remained throughout their existence, including the world’s great religions. The concern remained hierarchical and primarily intellectual and never got off the ground spiritually. You are right, of course, you are trading one belief system for another; but there is a unity here that has not been before, and there is a trend toward integration that you are capable of verifying implicit within the system. [19 October 1974]

That passage did not contain the word “crutch”, but it could have. The Michaels presented an elaborate belief system that they regarded as useful for the beginning stages of their students’ understanding of a spiritual path, but this preliminary introduction was intended to be a temporary expedient. A belief system should ultimately lead one to authentic spirituality, which has to do with a subjective experience of transcendence, where belief systems as such are obsolete. If one perceives the Michaelian teachings only or primarily as a belief system, value system, and behavior system, then one has missed the point of the Michaelian teachings, which is to lead one to experiences of transcendent states of consciousness, aka Agape.

Moving Centered souls generally respond to a form of meditation that gives them something active to do when they are ascending to the mindless state, such as reciting a mantram. Emotionally Centered souls respond to emotionally-laden crutches, such as flickering candle flames, roses and other blossoms, etc. Intellectually

Centered souls generally respond to the techniques recommended by the man Chogyam (Trungpa). [28 December 1974]

In that passage, “crutches” are equated with “techniques”. There should come a time on one’s spiritual journey when one transitions from “doing” to “being”; at that time, the crutches and techniques that got one to the transition become obsolete.

During the Crusades, Liz feels that she was with Saladin, who was Rick [in this life]. She saw him transform into Saladin.

[Soleal:] Then, why do you doubt your insights — if you see the transformation? Or, is it that you do not trust the space you are in when the transformation comes? There is no reason why you should doubt this particular insight. Verification from me is quite a crutch and it is still necessary for most of you. The teacher [Michael] hounds you over and over again to learn to trust your insights. It is more than simple belief that all of your neat “head stuff” is springing from the foundation of knowledge. It is the ability to separate the wheat from the chaff — to determine at that instant how much of your own Personality and its attendant longings come into play, and how much is genuine insight. I must tell you that the need to follow my own particular goal, or my “task” if you will, becomes imperative, and I know that the time is at hand. I, too, must make a choice the same as you, and there comes a time when I can no longer stall for time. [11 January 1975]

Refer to the chapters “Validation and Verification”, “Trust”, and “Intuition” for more discussion of the notion that as you grow spiritually, you will have less inclination to use a channel as a crutch for Validation and Verification; you will know how to listen to your own internal guidance system.

Is this referring to a literal or a symbolic altar?

[Soleal:] It can be either. Where is your symbolic altar if you do not have that quiet space? As long as it does not become a crutch, the material altar serves those brothers who do not have the altar of the soul. You see, it is possible to transfer the psychic energy to your brothers, but there must not be agendas in your way or the flow will be scattered, and you will not be able to transmute the collective energy into the higher expression. Those troubled among you will simply feed on the energy flow. [16 February 1975]

During the early phases of one’s spiritual journey, it might be useful to have physical reminders of spiritual matters, such as an altar, but in the later phases the physical reminders become unnecessary. I would add that at some point, physical reminders can perhaps become “idolatrous”, an ‘idol’ being defined as any substitute for the real deal. In the context of this chapter, a ‘crutch’ becomes an ‘idol’ when it has outlasted its utility for spiritual growth.

The syntax of an intelligent source does not meet with instant approval from another intelligent source. To grip onto the wide range of influxes and nuances is difficult work, and therefore bogs down communication links.

We would prefer to deal in a very natural syntax that is unhindered by supposed cordons that operate for those only who are given to seeking a primary crutch such as the physical body, [which] is so accustomed to [operating] through the five senses where psychic dimensions are not accounted for. [13 April 1975]

Here again we see physical stuff being used as a crutch for spiritual ‘stuff’. The physical body is rightly understood as a vehicle for spiritual growth, but if one limits the body’s perceptivity to the five senses (the links between physical body and physical environment) and ignores its “psychic dimensions”, then one is not using the ‘crutch’ of one’s embodiment correctly or fully. I am reminded of a Biblical phrase where the physical body is regarded as the ‘temple’ of the “Holy Spirit” (aka “Essence” in Michaelese). This being the case, we do well to learn to pay attention to extrasensory or supernatural “influxes and nuances” in the “communication links” between the body and the spiritual environment, even though this is “difficult work”.

Concluding Comments on Crutches

Crutches are defined as temporary expedients that assist one’s spiritual ‘ambulation’ in the early phases of one’s ‘journey’, but that become unnecessary after the consciousness is ‘healed’ in the later phases.

Specific crutches that are mentioned in the original Michaelian group are these: psychedelics; individuality (ego-centricity); psychotherapy; technologies, devices, and instruments; belief systems and other maps of the spiritual path; going to channels rather than relying on and validating one’s own intuitions; physical reminders or substitutes for actual transcendent spiritual experiences.

Even the Overleaf System is a crutch; it is something that you use to learn to tolerate people, to understand people, to appreciate people, to Agape people. Once the toleration, understanding, and appreciation are inculcated into the subconscious mind to such an extent that they have become automatic, then you no longer need the crutch; refer to the chapter “Overleaves, Changing”, where we see that the Michaels said just that.

⑥ CRYSTALLIZATION

The topic of this chapter is yet another one of many that discuss one or another of the components of the Gurdjieffian teachings that were adopted and adapted in the Michaelian teachings during the original Michaelian group, but which did not subsequently find its way into the Michaelian teachings. For an introduction to the general subject of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the involvement of founding original Michaelian group members with it, refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton”.

Even though the Michaels used the term Crystallization on numerous occasions during the original Michaelian group, Yarbro did not mention it in her book about the original Michaelian group, Messages from Michael, perhaps because, near as I can tell, Yarbro was not familiar with Gurdjieff. The Michaels have not used it in subsequent groups so far as I have been able to determine, perhaps because subsequent groups are not familiar with Gurdjieffian teachings. Therefore, the term, and even the concept referred to by the term, has not become common knowledge in the Michaelian teachings community subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Nevertheless, I believe Gurdjieff’s psychological insights are worth discussing, the subject of Crystallization being one of them. I also believe that it is worthwhile to make the historical record of the original Michaelian group reasonably complete. Taking into consideration that the word refers to a concept with a specific and special meaning in both the Gurdjieffian teachings and in the Michaelian teachings, I capitalize it, as one of many jargon words.

Definition of Crystallization

So what is meant by crystallization? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

- 1: to cause to form crystals or assume crystalline form
- 2: to cause to take a definite form, as in “He tried to crystallize his thoughts.”

Obviously, the first definition is literal, and the second definition is metaphorical. So what could this physical process have to do with the Michaelian teachings? Answer: it is a metaphor for a process in spiritual development.

Crystallization per Gurdjieff

The founding members of the original Michaelian group had been part of a local group that was focused on the Gurdjieffian teachings. Here is what Gurdjieff said about crystallization:

Fusion, inner unity, is obtained by means of ‘friction’, by the struggle between ‘yes’ and ‘no’ in man. If a man lives without inner struggle, if everything happens in him without opposition, if he goes wherever he is drawn or wherever the wind blows, he will remain such as he is. But if a struggle begins in him, and particularly if there is a definite line in this struggle, then gradually, permanent traits begin to form themselves, he begins to ‘crystallize’. But crystallization is possible on a right foundation and it is possible on a wrong foundation. ‘Friction’, the struggle between ‘yes’ and ‘no’, can easily take place on a wrong foundation. For instance, a fanatical belief in some or other idea, or the ‘fear of sin’, can evoke a terribly intense struggle between ‘yes’ and ‘no’, and a man may crystallize on these foundations. But this would be a wrong, incomplete crystallization. Such a man will not possess the possibility of further development. In order to make further development possible he must be melted down again, and this can be accomplished only through terrible suffering. [Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 32]

Resources available on the internet will give you a much fuller picture, but this is sufficient for my purposes in this chapter.

Crystallization per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Keep in mind what Gurdjieff said about crystallization as you read the first occurrence of the word in the original Michaelian group transcriptions.

Dick: I seem to have come on a realization that I've undergone crystallization in Personality, and that is why everything is so fixed and seemingly unchangeable. I'm under constant internal attack by Personality, and that is why I can't seem to listen to any new information and transform it into anything worthwhile. I was hoping for a miracle that would change things. Also, grass [marijuana] will do it, but it just does it temporarily. That's why I can't seem to react to or feel any new possibilities.

The fixed rigid Personality is rather like a mountain of granite. Chipping away relentlessly is the sole solution. Depression is the external manifestation of the internal struggle. Depression, by the way, is one of the only neurotic manifestations left to the Old Soul; even Jesus felt it. Each of you spent many years building the facade. Do you really feel that you should be able to discard this quite casually with hardly a whimper? We think not. Progress is being made in quite concrete ways. [02 October 1973]

“Fixed, rigid, granite, concrete” are suitable synonyms for crystallization. In Dick's case, he felt that he was crystallizing on a wrong foundation, Personality, rather than a good foundation, Essence. The Michaels indicated, just as Gurdjieff did, that one must first demolish the wrong foundation before one can begin to build a new edifice on a right foundation, and then crystallize that. Refer to chapters “Health — Physical and Mental”, “Psychedelics”, and “Essence and Personality” for further discussion of concepts mentioned in that passage.

Dick: How does the Adept, occult master correlate to the #4, #5 and #6 man of Gurdjieff?

They are not precisely the same, although the Adept is usually crystallized number four. The occult Master has use of Higher Centers at will. It merely means that this soul is in Balance with no danger of backsliding. [03 March 1974]

Gurdjieff's notion of Man Numbers are discussed in the chapters “Adept and Master”, “Balanced Man”, and “Levels of Being”. Basically and briefly, an Adept is the same as Man #5, which is a step above a Man #4, one who is so crystallized as a Balanced Man that “there is no danger of backsliding”.

Gene could easily crystallize in truth-telling, and that would be all right for Gene.... [15 April 1975]

When one no longer even experiences what many people regard as a temptation to do the wrong thing, then one has “crystallized” in doing the right thing; refer to the chapter “Temptation”.

Concluding Comments on Crystallization

This is not a long chapter, but I do not regard it as an unimportant chapter. The problem, as I see it, is that the concept of crystallization is yet another one of those concepts that has not made the transition from the Gurdjieffian teachings to the Michaelian teachings communities subsequent to the original Michaelian group. One point that I would like to emphasize is that one should not be wishy-washy in one's commitment to their spiritual development. Another point is to learn one's lessons on their spiritual path firmly and completely, otherwise, one will not develop, and one could even backslide.

CULTURE

We are all born into a ready-made social world of other human beings, a social world that is complete with a built-in belief system, value system, and behavior system. As we grow up, the question that we all confront is, how well does our true self fit into this ready-made world? In the Michaelian teachings, this confrontation is known as that between True Personality and False Personality, which you can read about in the chapter “Personality — True and False”. In this chapter “Culture”, we are going to review the mentions of a certain component of potential False Personality, found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, namely that of the influence that culture has on True Personality.

[[look for acculturation and imprinting and other such synonyms]]

Definition of Culture

My go-to resource for the definition of culture is not a dictionary, but the Wikipedia article to culture:

Culture is an umbrella term which encompasses the social behavior and norms found in human societies, as well as the knowledge, beliefs, arts, laws, customs, capabilities, and habits of the individuals in these groups. Humans acquire culture through the learning processes of enculturation and socialization, which is shown by the diversity of cultures across societies. A cultural norm codifies acceptable conduct in society; it serves as a guideline for behavior, dress, language, and demeanor in a situation, which serves as a template for expectations in a social group. Accepting only a monoculture in a social group can bear risks, just as a single species can wither in the face of environmental change, for lack of functional responses to the change. Thus in military culture, valor is counted a typical behavior for an individual and duty, honor, and loyalty to the social group are counted as virtues or functional responses in the continuum of conflict. In the practice of religion, analogous attributes can be identified in a social group. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Culture> — retrieved 12 January 2022]

A very lengthy article followed. Readers of this chapter would find it useful to read the entire article, so as to help them to realize how pervasive a culture is, and how invisible it tends to be for those who grow up in a culture. It will increase one’s self-awareness and other-awareness, which is essential if one is to become free of cultural constraints that inhibit one’s true nature.

Speaking of nature, there is a long-running controversy in the scientific community about the relative strength of influences between one’s innate identity and one’s cultural identity.

Nature versus Nurture

Throughout the following analysis and synthesis of the original Michaelian group transcription on the subject of culture, the question arises repeatedly: what is it about the feedback loop between the personality that one is born with versus the personality that one acquires? This is known as the “nature versus nurture” question. As one may have come to expect, Wikipedia has an article about it:

Nature versus nurture is a long-standing debate in biology about the balance between two competing factors which determine fate: environment (nurture) and genetics (nature). The alliterative expression “nature and nurture” in English has been in use since at least the Elizabethan period and goes back to medieval French.

The complementary combination of the two concepts is an ancient concept (Greek: ἀπό φύσεως καὶ εὐτροφίας). Nature is what people think of as pre-wiring and is influenced by genetic inheritance and other biological factors. Nurture is generally taken as the influence of external factors after conception, e.g. the product of exposure, experience, and learning on an individual.

The phrase in its modern sense was popularized by the Victorian polymath Francis Galton, the modern founder of eugenics and behavioral genetics when he was discussing the influence of heredity and environment on social advancement. Galton was influenced by On the Origin of Species written by his half-cousin, the evolutionist Charles Darwin.

The view that humans acquire all or almost all their behavioral traits from “nurture” was termed tabula rasa (‘blank tablet, slate’) by John Locke in 1690. A blank slate view (sometimes termed blank-slatism) in human developmental psychology, which assumes that human behavioral traits develop almost exclusively from environmental influences, was widely held during much of the 20th century. The debate between “blank-slate” denial of the influence of heritability, and the view admitting both environmental and heritable traits, has often been cast in terms of nature versus nurture. These two conflicting approaches to human development were at the core of an ideological dispute over research agendas throughout the second half of the 20th century. As both “nature” and “nurture” factors were found to contribute substantially, often in an inextricable manner, such views were seen as naive or outdated by most scholars of human development by the 21st-century.

The strong dichotomy of nature versus nurture has thus been claimed to have limited relevance in some fields of research. Close feedback loops have been found in which nature and nurture influence one another constantly, as seen in self-domestication. In ecology and behavioral genetics, researchers think nurture has an essential influence on nature. Similarly in other fields, the dividing line between an inherited and an acquired trait becomes unclear, as in epigenetics or fetal development.

It is recommended that students read the lengthy article that followed this introduction. The bottom line is this statement:

In the twentieth century, studies of twins separated at birth helped provide better insight into the debate about nature versus nurture. Identical twins who are reared apart from birth had the same chance of being as similar in behavioral and psychological traits as twins who were raised together. It is increasingly understood that environmental effects are mostly random, rather than systematic effects of parenting or culture.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Nature_versus_nurture< — retrieved 13 January 2022]

What none of these scientific investigations take into consideration is the spiritual inheritance: what the soul brings with it to the incarnation. In the Michaelian teachings, the physical genetic inheritance itself is said to be chosen by the soul for the incarnation, including the choice of culture, and other circumstances, into which the person is born. This is why it is important to conform to one’s nature rather than to conform to one’s nurture, if and only if the nurture contradicts one’s nature. The Michaels said this over and over again.

Culture per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The first reference to culture appeared in a session before the Michaels first appeared to the original Michaelian group. This was in regard to Soleal, the Adept from another planet:

Dick: I would like to ask him, how he can most help us in our spiritual growth?

[Soleal:] Interchange of cultural values.

Dick: Do our cultural values have any value for Soleal?

Interest only.

Dick: Do his cultural values have something more for us than interest only?

I think so. You will have to verify that for yourself.

Dick: Well, knowing virtually only our own culture, it’s hard to know the right questions to ask.

Sarah: I think he means “cultural” in the wider sense, because we’ve been asking him questions about the political and economic systems.

I think you might profit by a few lessons in how to avoid aggressive actions. [03 July 1973]

Being from another planet, Soleal would likely have some interesting insights about the various cultures of humans on Earth. Later on during the original Michaelian group, there was talk of Soleal visiting earth in the flesh, not just in the spirit of channeling, but that never happened. If the UFO people ever do show themselves openly, the culture shock will be powerful, far more than the culture shock we experience when we visit some other country.

Sarah: There have been all kinds of books written about the cultural shock of being contacted by an alien civilization. Astronomers have spent hours and hours writing these long-winded papers about this cultural shock. [02 October 1973]

Notice that this comment was three months after the previous one. At the time of this writing in 2022, we are still waiting for this culture-shock event.

Alice: So does that mean that I am a catalyst?

[Soleal:] Zealots make the finest catalysts. You are not a zealot, but you can act as a calming force on those around you. There is peace and serenity in your Essence too. This could be the major part of growth for you, to get in touch with those fine elements. It is difficult to do this in a system that rewards competition. That usually leads to the more aggressive elements of the false, culturally induced, personality. Love is the only force that you can apply in a positive situation consciously. [03 July 1973]

In the original Michaelian group transcriptions, this is the first explicit connection of False Personality to cultural influences, but it is not the last.

Dick: Love and sex seem like separate things – but when they're pulling together, it seems like a stronger force is generated than either by itself. It seems like the only kind of energy that I have experienced to date that might be the kind of energy that you need for actual evolution.

[Soleal:] Sexual energy, when used to express higher Centers, can be incredibly strong. When the energy is relegated downward, it results in an energy leak. That is sometimes why you want to sleep after physical union. You fed lower Centers — sometimes the Moving Center and the Essence is exhausted, so the body goes to sleep to free the Essence. When you use Emotional Center to express Moving [Center] needs, don't you feel the leak? So, if you feel that, just stretch your mind. Right now, you are all using Emotional Centers to satisfy Moving [Center] needs and this is a result that is culturally induced — that you feel something uplifting each time you have a physical union. That is absurd! It just is not possible. The body is not capable of experiencing ecstasy. Only the Essence can experience ecstasy. The body does not even come close with its sensual pleasures. [03 July 1973]

Public culture can even influence private sexual behavior. Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” for more about that.

In the first session in which the Michaels appeared, the subject of culture appeared:

[False] Personality is just another defense the body employs with the help of the other bodies around it.

I can't see what part the [False] Personality has to do with Karma; I think that's put in by culture.

It [culture] is just more complex Maya. You see, it really is infinite. [12 August 1973]

Following the Gurdjieffian teachings, the Michaelian teachings at this early stage did not always make a clear distinction between what later became known as True Personality versus False Personality; back then, the Personality was always false because it was contrasted with Essence, which later became known as the True Personality and the word Essence was applied to that which is beyond Personality: refer to the chapters “Essence and Personality” and “Personality — True and False”. The point extracted from this passage is that culture is one of the contributors to False Personality if the culture is contrary to True Personality. Another point to be made here is that the ancient traditions, and the modern cultural adaptation of the traditions, do indeed present a different view of Karma than the Michaels do; refer to the chapter “Karma”.

The Baby Soul views its own sexuality with a vague uneasiness, and if the culture fosters such, will think of it as somehow shameful. [late August 1973]

The inherent attitude of an individual toward sexuality can be very different from the cultural attitude toward sexuality — and every other aspect of life. In the case of individuals and cultures, the greater the congruence of the two the more comfortable the individual is with the culture, and the more comfortable the culture is with the individual. So called “peer pressure” is a very strong factor among humans; Wikipedia has articles on it: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Peer_pressure< and ><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Conformity><.

Let it be known that intellect is not a factor in any of these Cycles. Intellect is a product of culture, and even firstborns and Infant Souls can be taught to read, write and compute arithmetically. [late August 1973]

The intelligence–learnedness spectrum can be represented graphically on a different axis than the Soul Age axis. In other words, the lines representing those spectra are mostly orthogonal to each other, with very little if any correlation between the two. I have known Infant Souls who had college degrees; they were plenty bright on the intelligence line but plenty shallow on the Soul Age line.

It has happened that the presence of the Transcendental Soul alone was enough to provoke the needed spiritual, philosophical, or cultural revolution [so that an Infinite Soul manifestation is not necessary]. [late August 1973]

Because cultures consist of many individuals, it is much more difficult to change them. Sometimes cultural traditions are so inhibiting of progress, that it takes the manifestation of a Transcendental Soul and Infinite Soul to change them.

Christopher: Where on the wheel of reincarnation is the enlightened youth culture of today, such as Richard Alpert and Alan Watts? Are they Older Souls?

[Alan] Watts is [an Older Soul]; [Richard] Alpert is not. [08 September 1973]

The cultural revolution in America in the 1960s was apparently prompted by both Mature and Old Souls. This particular historical phenomenon can be generalized to the notion that the influential personalities who comprise the avant guard (leading edge) of any culture are of a higher/older Soul Age than the manifested average Soul Age of the culture. Beyond that phenomenon, Transcendental and Infinite Souls are harbingers of radical social, cultural, economic, and political change.

Ellis: Well, I am also sensitive about those things that work for me, and being from the old country [Greece], I sometimes have reservations about some of the things that may work for other people in this culture.

This culture notwithstanding, you must verify the efficacy of the method yourself.

Dick: Transcendental Meditation comes from India anyway and not from this culture. [18 September 1973]

Here again we see that it is easier to go along with the 'flow' of the cultural milieu than it is to go against the cultural 'grain' (to mix metaphors). It is up to each of us to explore and experiment until we find what works for us as individuals, regardless of cultural influences.

Dick: Am I dealing with some form of the Oedipal complex?

First of all, the Oedipal myth is culturally induced and does not have that much influence at your level [Soul Age]. [22 September 1973]

Some cultural phenomenon that is significant at some time or place in history or geography, is not necessarily significant in all times in history or places in geography. Another factor is that one's Soul Age has an effect on how susceptible one is to the influences of the culture; the older the soul, the less susceptible.

Dick: Could we have a statement on race.

There are scholars in all races. Some cultures place great emphasis on intellectual pursuits. Testing these cultures would result in a preponderance of intellectually-oriented youngsters. Some cultures are concerned primarily with survival in a hostile world. [27 September 1973]

"As the twig is bent, so grows the tree." So the saying goes, but not all twigs are born with the same potential. There is nature and there is nurture, and both contribute to the final product. Whatever and wherever one's genetic inheritance may incline one to pursue, that gets modified by cultural pressures.

Dick: I just want to know if my previous observation about aggressive Body Types was correct.

Essentially [yes]. This culture is hypocritical toward aggression. The culture pretends to decry aggression, yet teaches it to the young. Confusion results and many grow up believing that all aggressive tendencies are somehow not nice. Others grow up in an atmosphere of aggressive abandon. Most are confused about their own internal passive/aggressive ratio.

Gene: Now, will you repeat the question?

Dick: I am just saying that there are a good many variations within each Body Type. They are just not all the same.

Most deviations are culturally induced. [02 October 1973]

What I get from this is reinforcement of what it said elsewhere: whatever one is born with gets modified by cultural influences; culture can minimize or maximize one's genetic inheritance, including Body Type. The results are often confusing when the nurture does not match the nature.

Dick: In my practice, I see so few people that I can relate to. They are happy to see me, I guess, but there I [low] income.

Vallejo [California] is a Moving-Centered community populated heavily by Baby Souls. There is racial unrest and much strife. The average IQ there is 90. Intelligence means different things to different cultures. Some cultures stress survival; others stress scholastics. Thereby hangs their criteria for measuring intelligence.

Because IQ tests allegedly measure book smarts rather than "street" smarts (or other kinds of smarts), standardized IQ tests obviously have cultural biases.

Dick: We take heredity as the main cause of intelligence and some from environment.

Dick, the medical doctor, was aware of the nature-versus-nurture debate.

Alice: How about brain deficiency? How does that fit with Karma?

Genetically determined deficiencies do exist. They are not particularly distributed. In other words, there is a bad gene, but this [American] culture has never stressed intellectual pursuits and never will. There are no superior

Oriental genes, but this culture has always stressed knowledge, and a certain amount of this is inculcated in the culture so deeply that it has become hereditary in a very obscure fashion. It is immeasurable, but pervasive. Some of you were Black in previous lives and some Blacks have been White. In them, there are racial memories that cause them to seek outside of their culture. [06 October 1973]

One wonders if this “obscure heredity” is a foreshadowing of what has become known as “epigenetics”, which did not become a thing among biologists until the 1990s: ><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Epigenetics><.

Edgar: May we have the definition of Scholar?

We have given this but we will repeat. This is an intermediate Role where reason and logic are the foundations upon which life is built. We did not say that Scholars were emotionally bereft, just a little more discreet about displaying. Edgar and Ellis were both born into emotional cultural environments, and both display more emotionality than the average Scholar, but still do not approach the sheer emotional extravagance of other Roles such as Priests and Sages. [15 November 1973]

Evidently being born into an emotional or unemotional culture can skew the expression, or not, of emotionally.

Question about homosexuality.

This unfortunate syndrome is almost always culturally induced. Most of the time it is a form of rebellion, either by an Emotionally Centered male, usually either an Artisan or a Sage, or an Intellectually Centered female, usually either a Scholar or a Priest. This [American] culture frustrates the inclinations of both — or we should say, all — of these Roles, and the squelching is done in childhood. The job is usually quite thorough.

One other form of mixed gender conflicts arise with the children of the above who do not have a clear-cut picture of the “roles” that society expects them to play. They go out into the world unequipped to play the proper role, and [so they] play it by ear. Sometimes, this results in the gender conflict. Ideally, one should be able to express love for others regardless of the genital assignment without fear of castigation. This is quite an upward step in the evolution of Creatures of Reason. Don’t expect it to happen in this lifetime. [14 December 1973]

In America, the general cultural acceptance of homosexuality, this “upward step in the evolution of Creatures of Reason”, happened rather suddenly a few decades later with the federal legalization of gay marriage. Contrary to the prophecy, it happened within the lifetime of some members of the original Michaelian group. Sarah became a gay rights activist a decade after this session, in the early days of the AIDS epidemic, but she was not one of those who lived to see the legalization.

We feel that this culture is amiss in not giving permission. Sometimes you must go and ask for it. The permission is symbolic, but sometimes in this culture, it must almost be literal. If marijuana was on sale at all corner stores, few would smoke it — at any rate, no more than smoke it now and a few would quit. [16 December 1973]

There are conservative cultures and there are liberal cultures. The typical progression over time, in regard to culture and Soul Age, is from conservative to liberal. Marijuana is now for sale at stores — that’s cultural progress.

Norma: Is our energy self-generated? Are we born with a certain amount of energy and it regenerates?

The body can be thought of as the vehicle or the conductor. The Essence becomes the source of attraction and, as [spiritual] growth occurs, can draw upon an infinite power source. However, the average soul uses a very small, a very finite, amount of the energy available during a given physical interval. Most of you are somewhat sluggish due to cultural inducements, and rarely draw upon much energy.

Edgar: Can you discuss energy and the concept of the pyramid?

What we just discussed is the pyramidal effect, or the channeling of the energies from the wide dispersion at the base to the narrow flow at the top. The theory behind the pyramid is, of course, symbolic. However, many cannot work without a concrete physical model representing the symbols. This is not Bad Work, necessarily, but you should learn to be a bit more abstract. The literalness of your culture is an obstacle to true spiritual growth. [27 December 1973]

These were other statements that nurture can influence nature in an adverse way.

One of those present did not see obesity as the result of a Rejection Goal.

Obesity results from sexual conflicts, the Goal of Rejection, or cultural diet (pasta and spaghetti). [03 January 1974]

Byron: From reading the last notes, I see only three reasons for obesity. I can eliminate the cultural diet and I'm not in Rejection, so it must be a sexual conflict?

You are a victim of your cultural dietary extravagance. We see some sex conflict but not enough to put on the pounds. [10 January 1974]

This is off-topic, but my impression is that cultural dietary extravagance may have been more of a cause of obesity at the time of the original Michaelian group, but now one of the biggest contributors to the so-called "obesity epidemic" is eating highly-processed junk food.

Comment: It seems that Robert has lost more than he has who have stayed with him. There's no talking, you aren't supposed to show emotions and you have to be so careful ...

This teaching should eventually free you from the yoke of collective guilt, then the sober affect will be even more inappropriate. Learn joy now and it will not be such a shock then.

Could you enlarge on that comment?

The culture places the load of guilt right out in front of the child where it must either trip over it or stop short of all understanding. The child eventually shoulders part of this, either willingly or not, and carries it through life, unless it happens to meet with a teaching that shows it that there is no guilt. This culture is guilty, vaguely [and] overtly, about all things that seem light and airy. The emphasis is on work, and then possibly you may go on to another better place where you won't have to work so hard. And, of course, you students realize that this is nonsense. In fact, the load of toil holds you back rather than enhancing your work towards spiritual growth. Several of you have verified this for yourselves.

The emphasis on other-worldliness has become mired in false concepts. We would point out to you the attitudes of the ancient Greek civilization centered in Athens toward sexuality, for instance. Sex was just not a "heavy" subject to them. Consequently, they enjoyed it a whole lot more. They did not analyze. We point out to you that Sophocles lived during a later period than we are now discussing. By that time, the endless analyses had begun. For instance, in ancient Athens, women and men only felt "cheated upon" if the partner dallied with someone they could not love also; then they felt outraged. It was considered a complement if your husband or wife really loved your best friend in this way. [10 January 1974]

Such things as the acceptable work/play ratio and the guilt/innocence ratio are typical of cultures.

The question of divorce is a tragic one only in your culture, as relatively little thought is given to the suitability of the pair-bonding initially. [20 January 1974]

Concluding Comments on Culture

As we see in this chapter, the Michaels provided a teaching to the original Michaelian group members that was, of course, appropriate for "older" souls: Mid-Level Mature and higher/older. One component of the story arc for souls after the turning point of Mid-Level Mature is to ascend out of Physical Plane entanglements. Because of that, this teaching — that acculturation best be mitigated and minimized — was important for their spiritual path, to improve their contact with Essence. Thus, to outgrow acculturation is important for older souls, but one wonders if this would necessarily be the case with younger souls. Nothing is said specifically about this in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, but for souls younger than the Mid-Level Mature turning point, one component of the story arc is to descend into Physical Plane entanglements. Therefore, my surmise is that it might generally be better for younger souls to be immersed in their culture, on the premise that this can provide major catalyst for their psychological development and expansion.

There are other concerns about whether acculturation or anti-acculturation is appropriate for any particular individual. For instance, how comfortable one feels in the culture in which they were born/and or migrated to, depends a lot on their Soul Age. That is, people tend to feel the most at home if their cultural milieu is dominated by people of the same Soul Age; the greater the difference between the ambient culture age and the individual Soul Age, the more uncomfortable the individual is. People very naturally gravitate toward social groups that manifest a similar belief, value, and behavior system, and this is largely determined by their Soul Age: “Birds of a feather flock together” and all that.

It really is up to every individual to discern how much cultural comfort versus how much cultural discomfort is optimal for their well-being. Acculturation to the ambient norm is not such a good thing if it prevents the individual from learning the lessons that are appropriate for their Soul Age. That leads to the accumulation of False Personality. Acculturation might not be such a bad thing for an individual if the ambient culture is a step ahead of the Soul Age of that individual. That is, an Infant Soul can learn a lot about social morality if it grows up in a family or a tribe or a nation that is dominated by a Baby Soul belief/value/behavior system.

Perhaps you have heard of “culture shock”. This is when you visit some other some other country and are surprised and/or dismayed to see how they do things there and consider it totally normal and appropriate. This makes you realize that they are in a so-called “cultural trance”; it is as if they are hypnotized by the culture in which they live. The value of this, of course, is if it makes you realize that you are also in a cultural trance – to the extent that it has inculcated a belief/value/behavior system that is of False Personality rather than True Personality, and beyond True Personality is Essence.

DEATH AND DYING

The title of this chapter was chosen to be the same as the name of a rather famous book written by a rather famous person, Elisabeth Kubler-Ross. She attended one of the original Michaelian group sessions, in early 1975. Quotations from that session are found near the end of this chapter.

In a spiritual teaching that has reincarnation as one of its primary tenets, of course the subject of death would be a primary part of that teaching.

Dick saw a transcendental [sic] soul on television — Archbishop Fulton Sheen, a very opinionated and arrogant man — he spoke of death. Richard commented that he loses much energy around the experience of a patient dying.

Well, unfortunately, in this culture, death has long been associated with punishment, and this spills over onto the family and those in attendance. In cultures accepting the teachings of reincarnation, even this occasionally happens, especially in those that espouse reincarnation to a lower order [animal]. If you regard death as “bad”, then naturally you are going to lose energy when this “bad” happens. Also, if you project expectations of healing upon the patient and his attendants, you are going to feel a sense of failure when you do not fulfill these expectations. Yes, you can go to great and heroic lengths to prolong the physical life, but often to the great discomfort of both the patient and his family. Often, the death of someone who has been painfully ill for a long period of time comes as a distinct relief to the members of his family, even though they would be unable to verbalize it. Sometimes you can do them a disservice by prolonging agony that they must suffer vicariously. If healing is to take place, it will be far more dramatic than mere analgesia [pain reduction], and these are those cases in which you may put your skills to the task. But in cases where there is no healing possible, the most you can offer is comfort, and usually this would be better directed toward those to be left behind. Many very ill persons have an acute awareness of their impending death, and the opportunity to discuss this is many times more valuable than any useless last drastic treatment. We would hope to see in the future more counseling directed toward those who will be left with a life to live, after the death has occurred. Many times during a long illness, these persons need the most help, certainly more than one who has died. We wish we could graphically illustrate the awareness that a dying person feels. We feel that it would put your fears to rest. Many times, this awareness even becomes an intense longing toward the last. You all know where the line can be drawn between a case in which there can be a healing and the case in which there will be imminent death. Leveling with those involved when this line is drawn, can be therapeutic for both the physician and the patient. The guilt, of course, stems from the concept of death as a punishment. After all, you are sending this soul to meet his fate and are, therefore, responsible. This is quite a burden and we are not surprised that this produces fatigue. It need not be that way, but you yourself must begin to look upon the physical life as merely a transitory thing, and not to be mourned. In the Older Souls, this becomes far easier, as almost all of them will accept some concept of perpetuation. With the Younger Souls, this may require more skill, but still can be smoothly handled by one with strength of convictions.

Yes, we do see much Arrogance in the man Fulton. This is a final Level Old Soul transcendent [karma-free] and not a manifestation of a Transcendental Soul; there is a difference. [14 December 1974]

Can it be seen in a patient's eyes when they are going to die soon or in their aura?

Interestingly enough, there is also a thermal change in the aura that is measurable as it changes from its usual color to black. But yes, many good students can see this in the eyes just as clearly as they can see the Overleaves. The lady was aware of the positive thought forms. [14 September 1975]

Elisabeth Kubler-Ross has had a feeling that her husband will die this next winter and that she needs this for her growth — being alone — and she yet feels guilty about the feeling. Did she create this feeling of his impending death?

Unfortunately, what the Essence wishes often conflicts with what society has told the Personality that it is “nice” to wish. For instance, it is certainly not nice that a burdensome relative should die and thereby free the Essence for its work. There is a better than average chance that this man's life on the Physical plane will come to an end within the next several months, but yes, Elisabeth, it is merely sad that communication on the Physical plane is so bad, particularly between those bound together by strong legal ties rather than Essence ties, that the need for freedom cannot be expressed. Of course, it is not possible for you to hasten something like this without an overt action on your part, so the amount of guilt is inappropriate, to say the least. It is not an unusual wish for one who is involved in the work of the Essence. It is, again, merely a sad commentary on the Physical plane that communication is so poor. It is hoped that with this Cadre, for instance, a trust level will be developed where these conflicts will fade away. When the trust level is such that one student could say to another, "I wish you would die and leave me alone," that statement will be totally unnecessary, as the other student will already know to give the necessary space. This can only be gained by the highest of trust levels, and comes through hard work. We digress from the focus on Elisabeth, but this is a question pertinent to you all, and Elisabeth is a definite integral part of this Cadre's functioning. Knowing her is no accident, please believe us. [09 January 1975]

④ DIALOGUE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word dialogue in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

The word dialogue is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. In the next section, you will see that the Michaels use the word with both a negative and positive connotation. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypassing. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

It might be a little surprising how often this word dialogue shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

Definition of Dialogue

So what is meant by dialogue?

Dialogue (sometimes spelled dialog in American English) is a written or spoken conversational exchange between two or more people, and a literary and theatrical form that depicts such an exchange. As a philosophical or didactic device, it is chiefly associated in the West with the Socratic dialogue as developed by Plato, but antecedents are also found in other traditions including Indian literature. The term dialogue stems from the Greek διάλογος (dialogos, conversation); its roots are διά (dia: through) and λόγος (logos: speech, reason). The first extant author who uses the term is Plato, in whose works it is closely associated with the art of dialectic. Latin took over the word as dialogus. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dialogue> — 25 July 2022]

More will be said about Socratic and dialectic dialogue in the concluding comments to this chapter. Dialogue can be contrasted with the word “monologue”, which is the case where one person talks at another person or persons, rather than with others as a back-and-forth exchange of conversation. The Wikipedia article does more than hint at the notion that there is an elevated function of dialogue: it can be much more than people merely yammering and chattering with each other about inane and mundane matters. As we will see, the Michaels were aware of an elevated and exalted use of dialogue, as a “creative” endeavor.

Dialogue per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Q&A exchanges are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first person to raise a question about dialogue was Mallory. She was in training to become a counseling psychologist. She was also a Warrior, and we Michaelian students know that Warriors are notorious for their preference for terse, pithy, focused, purposeful, no-nonsense communication:

Mallory: I feel there are quick subject changes and that the subject is not explored enough.

We would certainly hope that this teaching would evolve into much more than continuous dialogue. The foundation for this has been given. Even the dialogue with us is excessive. There is not time given over to reflection and searching. Valid insights from students should be accepted. If they are invalid, they will feel wrong and you will know this without confirming this [with us]. [31 January 1974]

Some alternatives to shallow and meandering and unfocused dialogue were suggested here: “exploration” of a subject in depth and breadth, “reflection” on the implications of what is said and discovered in the exploration, “searching” for the ramifications of what is said and discovered in the exploration, sharing “insights” about what is said and discovered in the exploration. This Study Papers book and my other books are certainly examples of the fulfillment of these recommended improvements to the quality of the dialogue about the Michaelian teachings.

Ray: [Question lost.]

In order for this group to achieve the cohesion necessary to provide [spiritual] growth, a level of intimacy and trust far exceeding what you now have must be reached. This cannot be achieved through dialogue. Dialogue is False Personality’s defense against Emotional Center. [31 January 1974]

Refer to chapters “Intimacy” and “Trust” and “Personality — True and False” and “Emotional Center” for more discussion on those concepts mentioned in this passage. Verbal dialogue is an exchange between Intellectual Centers, which is where most members of the original Michaelian group were stuck, so the Michaels often encouraged them to learn to ‘communicate’ via ‘dialogue’ in other Centers, such as Emotional Center in this case. These other Centers are discussed in other chapters on the Centers. The point to be noted and emphasized here is that intimacy and trust should be developed and experienced via exchanges in the entire lineup of all seven Centers, not just in the Intellectual Center (and not just in the Emotional Center). My book The Tao of Relationships has somewhat to say about dialogue, aka “energy exchanges”, between all Centers. In that book, I discuss what I poetically refer to as “attuning and communing”; this is the mindful process of intentionally and actively ‘listening’ for non-verbal ‘dialogue’.

Ray: This is the first time I feel the group is into something meaningful. The energy feels different. To get in touch with real feelings is frightening and is unattainable to this in a group.

Ellis: We can’t reach each other through dialogue or what I call “aboutism.” When someone brings up something deeply personal, the group as a whole makes the whole thing personal. I hear the pain, and then we go on to the next person’s pain. [31 January 1974]

“Personal pain” comes from the lower Centers, so I can see why Ellis would object to excessive sharing of that negative stuff, whether the personal pain be in body, in emotions, or in thoughts. However, if “creative” dialogue (see below) could sublimate through and beyond the “impersonal” Center (Impulse) to the experiences of the “transpersonal” ‘higher’ Centers (Concept, Sympathy, Excitation), then that would be Good Work, because that is where meaning and energy and intimacy and trust exist and function.

May I suggest that “energy” is a suitable generic term that can be used to refer to the “intimacy” and “trust” that is experienced when exchanges are made between the non-verbal Centers. Words, aka “aboutism”, merely provide symbolic representations for energy — they are not the exchange of energy itself. Because of the inadequacy, ambiguity, and varying interpretations of words, verbal dialogue in the Intellectual Center often increases misunderstanding, rather than decreases it. Therefore, we do well to learn to communicate energy through the non-verbal Centers on our way to greater intimacy and trust.

Dick: In our first teaching, Robert’s emphasis was on being more silent. In Gurdjieff’s system, it was stated that everything you said was a lie and so we had to be very careful with words.

We agree that much work needs to be done by all of you here present toward eliminating all non-essential dialogue. This, of course, may eventually result in your being acutely uncomfortable when you are not with others in the teaching. This is only one of the myriad reasons for spiritual communities such as we have suggested. Silence comes much more easily to those who are secure in the love of those around them. [03 February 1974]

It is ironic that Gurdjieff said via words that all communication via words was “lying”. (Recall the famous ancient Greek paradox “All Cretans are liars”, said by a Cretan.) I would amend or clarify this by saying (with words!) that verbal communication is almost always inadequate and inaccurate; it is inferior to energy exchanges in other Centers, as noted previously. However, when words are all you have to exchange, “be very careful” with them. It can be uncomfortable to have to self-censor when in the company of people who are not Michaelian students. It is liberating to be in the company of other Michaelian students. This is because miscommunication is minimized when people share a belief/value/behavior system, such as the Michaelian teachings, in a “spiritual community”, even if it is via an online discussion group. Dialogue in all Centers is maximized when Michaelian students actually live together; refer to the chapter “Communal Living” for a discussion of the advantages and disadvantages of that environment. The point about “being more silent” is that doing so makes you search for and become sensitive to the alternative means and methods of exchange of energy in the non-verbal Centers. The next Q&A exchange says precisely that:

Richard: Gandhi said you should express yourself in the least number of words without embellishment.

We see much value in periods of silence; they are unsurpassed door openers. Right now, however, you are not together enough to dispense with the dialogue, so we have not suggested it. If you will work doggedly for a weekend together, we will probably suggest it. [03 March 1974]

Elsewhere Gandhi was said to be a Transcendental Soul, so I would say that his example and his advice have a transcendent value. By closing the door on verbal dialogue you open the door to other, and better, types of dialogue, namely the non-verbal kind. Next time you are in a social situation, notice how much (shallow and superficial) dialogue takes place in the Intellectual Center, and also notice how little (deep and meaningful) energy exchange takes place in other Centers. Consider how much work it would take to change this habitual pattern in this culture. Consider how scary it would be to even suggest a departure from verbal dialogue even among your friends. Reflect on those (few?) times when, somehow, there was an exchange of energy in other Centers, and recall how meaningful this was. Note that there are “encounter groups” that are focused on breaking out of entrapment in mere verbal dialogue. Many original Michaelian group members partook of one such seminar, namely “EST”; refer to the chapter by that name. There you will read that the EST process was very intense, because this is what is required to get many people out of habitual and thoughtless verbal exchange and into other types of energy exchange.

The following passage is the main reason that I included this chapter on dialogue:

Much of this man’s [Robert’s] work on himself has been with the creative silence, and he is not yet satisfied with the results of this, and dialogue is unsatisfactory as a result of this work. We would point out to you that the reverse is true of our student Soleal. Since he was steeped in the silence, his work is now with the creative dialogue. Both are Good Work by excellent students. Both are needed, for that is what Balance is all about. [16 February 1975]

Elsewhere Robert Burton, a student of the Gurdjieffian teachings, was said to be moving toward transcendence, and the “creative silence” was one of his methods. Obviously, there is more to “silence” than merely refraining from talking; refer to the chapter “Silence, The” for more discussion about the “creative” silence as taught by Gurdjieff and by the Michaels. There you will read that it involves actively listening for inspiration. And then refer to the chapter “Telepathy” for more discussion about a type of verbal communication that is not spoken out loud; telepathy is verbal dialogue in the Higher Intellectual Center, as distinct from the usual verbal dialogue in the Intellectual Center.

So, from the above Q&A exchanges we see that there is unnecessary dialogue and there is “creative” dialogue. More is said about the latter in the following section.

Concluding Comments on Dialogue

I feel that this chapter deserves to be less brief, so I am going to multiply the words, and expand the subject of dialogue to include related but larger concepts.

Almost the entirety of the original Michaelian group transcriptions is a record of the Q&A dialogue between original Michaelian group members and the Michaels (and Tomas and Soleal). This is therefore an example of the use of dialogue as a “didactic” methodology; meaning, this is how teachers and students typically interact; refer to the chapter named “School”.

The word “dialogue” was used only a few times in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group. In most instances, the Michaels denigrated the way that most people dialogue, as unnecessary “small talk” or “chit chat”, to the exclusion of better and ‘higher’ forms of communication, such as telepathy. It is a common situation in many spiritual teachings that serious spiritual aspirants are rarely interested in, or good at, mindless blathering. Only in the last appearance of the word dialogue in the original Michaelian group transcriptions did the Michaels use the phrase, “creative dialogue”, because dialogue could and should be used to transcend the function of mere idle conversation about the inane and mundane affairs of daily life. So what might the Michaels have meant by “creative dialogue”?

Wikipedia has an article on dialogue, and it discusses how dialogue, from the beginning of its appearance in the Greek language, has been elevated to an art form by Plato and subsequent philosophers. I would like to focus on three philosophers who expanded the concept of dialogue into a general principle; they all lived in the Twentieth Century.

Habermas Dialogue

German philosopher Juergen Habermas had somewhat to say about dialogue being more than the hierarchical “didactic” type — as dialogue from teacher to student — namely, what he referred to as “egalitarian dialogue”: this is communication between equals (rather than unequals as in didactic dialogue) as a method to generate meaning in people’s lives:

Jürgen Habermas considers his major contribution to be the development of the concept and theory of communicative reason or communicative rationality, which distinguishes itself from the rationalist tradition, by locating rationality in structures of interpersonal linguistic communication rather than in the structure of the cosmos. This social theory advances the goals of human emancipation, while maintaining an inclusive universalist moral framework. This framework rests on the argument called universal pragmatics — that all speech acts have an inherent telos (the Greek word for “purpose”) — the goal of mutual understanding, and that human beings possess the communicative competence to bring about such understanding. Habermas built the framework out of the speech-act philosophy of Ludwig Wittgenstein, J. L. Austin, and John Searle, the sociological theory of the interactional constitution of mind and self of George Herbert Mead, the theories of moral development of Jean Piaget and Lawrence Kohlberg, and the discourse ethics of his Frankfurt colleague and fellow student Karl-Otto Apel. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jürgen_Habermas — retrieved 30 July 2022]

For Habermas, dialogue is not just about the transfer of information in terms of a belief system hierarchy; it is also about the transfer of transformation in terms of a value system hierarchy. This notion is discussed in another Wikipedia article:

Habermas (2004a, 2004b) has stressed the need to recover the lifeworld from its systemic colonization by the “steering media” of power, law, and bureaucratization. The systemic decolonization is a way of reinventing democracy in public spaces and institutions and for recovering meaning. Habermas’ concept of lifeworld refers to the everyday contexts where people relate to each other and create meaning and structures to organize themselves. In Habermas’ view, and also from a dialogic learning perspective, subjects create meaning through intersubjectivity or the interaction among subjects engaged in egalitarian dialogue. Any person can engage in such meaning making dialogue because humans have epistemological curiosity, which when expressed in egalitarian dialogue can criticize and end with what Freire (2001) called the bureaucratizing of the mind, an invisible power of alienating domestication. Such debureaucratization process can be seen in Dialogic Musical Gatherings (CONFAPEA, 2005), where people develop their epistemological curiosity listening to classical music and later engaging in a dialogue about the instruments that were playing, about the composer, his life and his position in a historical context, the style of the music listened to and its relationship with the cultural claims of each participant belonging to the Music Gathering, etc. In this process, meaning is created and recovered because music escapes the system and goes back to people’s lifeworld tearing down the walls of cultural elitism. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Egalitarian_dialogue — retrieved 30 July 2022]

So, besides verbal communication as creative dialogue for maintaining and reinventing democracy, Habermas says that music and other arts should be forms of creative non-verbal dialogue; refer to the chapter named “Music”.

Buberian Dialogue

Another German philosopher has somewhat to say about what could be called “creative dialogue”:

Martin Buber assigns dialogue a pivotal position in his theology. His most influential work is titled I and Thou. Buber cherishes and promotes dialogue not as some purposive attempt to reach conclusions or express mere points of view, but as the very prerequisite of authentic relationship between man and man, and between man and God. Buber’s thought centers on “true dialogue”, which is characterized by openness, honesty, and mutual commitment. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dialogue>< — retrieved 28 July 2022]

Following is the blurb for the book Martin Buber’s Dialogue: Discovering Who We Really Are, authored by Kenneth Paul Kramer and published in 2019:

Martin Buber, one of the twentieth century’s most distinguished and creative thinkers, famously argued that the fundamental fact of human existence is person with person, and that practicing genuine dialogue is necessary for anyone who wishes to become authentically human. This book seeks to unleash and reassemble the core elements for practicing dialogue — turning and addressing, and then listening and responding. Despite what many say, the innermost growth of the self does not come in relation to one’s self. Rather, attaining one’s authentic human existence (one’s innate self-realization) emerges again and again through genuine dialogue, through “participatory consciousness.” We become authentically human in and through our relationships with others. Here’s the point — instead of having dialogues, human beings mutually become dialogue with others. Individual human beings in dialogue with one another become memorable mutualities found nowhere else, opening out into the world. [<https://www.amazon.com/Martin-Bubers-Dialogue-Discovering-Really/dp/153266575X>< — retrieved 27 June 2022]

Buber was aware that “true” dialogue should transcend mere verbal communication; ultimately, it should be a spiritual experience. A Buberian scholar and Michaelian student explained to me that Buber’s notion is that true dialogue is more about each participant discovering who they really are in their innermost being than it is about discovering who the other participant is in their outer being. This makes sense, because it is easier to arrive at intimacy with oneself than it is to arrive at intimacy with another person. And, of course, intimacy primarily with oneself facilitates intimacy secondarily with other people.

Bohmian Dialogue

A physicist with an inclination to mysticism had somewhat to say about what could be called “creative dialogue”:

The physicist David Bohm originated a related form of dialogue where a group of people talk together in order to explore their assumptions of thinking, meaning, communication, and social effects. This group consists of ten to thirty people who meet for a few hours regularly or a few continuous days. In a Bohm dialogue, dialoguers agree to leave behind debate tactics that attempt to convince and, instead, talk from their own experience on subjects that are improvised on the spot. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dialogue>< — retrieved 28 July 2022]

In other words, dialogue should not be a divisive and destructive debate of words, it should be a constructive and unitive exchanges of energy about personal experiences, which exchanges typically involve Centers other than the Intellectual Center.

Dialectic = Monads

Dialogue is typically conducted between individuals — selves and other selves — as a means to grow in grace and knowledge, but it is also a subset of a larger conceptual framework that often goes by the name “dialectic”, which is the name for the interaction of self and environment, aka an agent in an arena. That is a word that might not be familiar to many readers, so let’s have a look at what Wikipedia has to say:

Dialectic (Greek: διαλεκτική, dialektikḗ; related to dialogue; German: Dialektik), also known as the dialectical method, is a discourse [or dialogue] between two or more people holding different points of view about a subject but wishing to establish the truth through reasoned argumentation. Dialectic resembles debate, but the concept excludes subjective elements such as emotional appeal and the modern pejorative sense of rhetoric. Dialectic may thus be contrasted with both the eristic, which refers to argument that aims to successfully dispute another's argument (rather than searching for truth), and the didactic method, wherein one side of the conversation teaches the other. Dialectic is alternatively known as minor logic, as opposed to major logic or critique. Within Hegelianism, the word dialectic has the specialized meaning of a contradiction between ideas that serves as the determining factor in their relationship.... Dialectic tends to imply a process of evolution and so does not naturally fit within classical logics, but was given some formalism in the twentieth century. The emphasis on process is particularly marked in Hegelian dialectic, and even more so in Marxist dialectical logic, which tried to account for the evolution of ideas over longer time periods in the real world.

In my understanding, dialogue and dialectic are instantiations of a universal general principle, namely that something new arises out of all interactions; interactions are creative, not static. In the common parlance, this is somewhat like a 'positive feedback loop', which is where there is enhancement and transformation. In the Michaelian teachings, this is referred to as "Monads"; refer to the chapter by that name. Basically and briefly, Cardinal plus Ordinal experiences produced a Neutral state at a 'higher' level or a 'later' stage in the progression of one's being and doing. (The triad of Thesis > Antithesis > Synthesis appears in the Gurdjieffian teachings as "The Law of Three" (refer to the chapter by that name) and in the Gurdjieffian teachings as the rise in "Level of Being" (refer to the chapter by that name).

In the following quotation, if you substitute Cardinal for "thesis", substitute Ordinal for "antithesis", and substitute Neutral for "synthesis" you will have some idea of how philosophers understand Monads::

In classical philosophy, dialectic... is a form of reasoning based upon dialogue of arguments and counter-arguments, advocating propositions (theses) and counter-propositions (antitheses). The outcome of such a dialectic might be the refutation of a relevant proposition, or of a synthesis, or a combination of the opposing assertions, or a qualitative improvement of the dialogue.

Perhaps you have heard of that triad, Thesis > Antithesis > Synthesis. If there was only Thesis and Antithesis, there would be unending struggle and no progress. Here again we see that the function of dialogue and dialectic — when understood in their philosophical sense — should not be to argue interminably; rather, they should be "creative": to develop and evolve beyond what one was before, to transcend into even higher levels and later stages on the journey of becoming. This was stated explicitly in the Wikipedia article as follows:

There is another interpretation of dialectic, suggested in [Plato's] The Republic, as a procedure that is both discursive and intuitive. In Platonism and Neoplatonism, dialectic assumes an ontological and metaphysical role in that it becomes the process whereby the intellect passes from sensibles to intelligibles, rising from Idea to Idea until it finally grasps the supreme Idea, the First Principle which is the origin of all. The philosopher is consequently a "dialectician". In this sense, dialectic is a process of enquiry that does away with hypotheses up to the First Principle (Republic, VII, 533 c-d). It slowly embraces the multiplicity in unity. Simon Blackburn writes that the dialectic in this sense is used to understand "the total process of enlightenment, whereby the philosopher is educated so as to achieve knowledge of the supreme good, the Form of the Good".

[><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dialectic>< — retrieved 30 July 2022]

Thus the notion of dialogue expands into the notion of dialectic, and those notions expand into the notion of Monads, a term in the Michaelian teachings, and the completion of Monads is the path of enlightenment; refer to the chapter "Enlightenment" for more about that.

DIMENSIONALITY AND AXES

This chapter is the product of a search for the words dimension and axis in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) _____ issues are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it/them.

The word dimension is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. However, Axis is capitalized.

Definition of Dimension

So what is meant by template? The online Merriam Webster online dictionary definition is:

My usual go-to source for definitions and descriptions and explanations, Wikipedia, says this (underlined words are my emphasis):

Dimensions per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is a subject that benefits by division into subsections. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

Axes per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

These words, “Axis” and “Axes”, are used numerous times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, referring to the certain Attributes of the Overleaf System. Recall that the Axis Attributes are named Action, Inspiration, Expression, and Assimilation. Recall that three of the Axis Attributes have Cardinal and Ordinal Poles, such that there is Cardinal and Ordinal Action, Cardinal and Ordinal Inspiration, Cardinal and Ordinal Expression. Recall that Assimilation is Neutral: it does not have Polarity. This section is about Axis Polarities. The information herein is important because it introduces an additional type of Axis Polarity, not generally recognized by Michaelian students.

These two words, Axis and Axes, first showed up in the original Michaelian group transcriptions in early 1975. Yarbro was not a member of the original Michaelian group, but she did have possession of these transcripts. However, she never used these terms in her published books. Louise and Leslie Briggs, members of the original Michaelian group in 1974 and 1975, also had possession of the transcripts, and they used the Axis terminology in their channeling sessions in the early 1980s. From the Briggs group the terms passed into the wider Michaelian community via a couple of its members, José Stevens and JP Van Hulle — they wrote books that used these terms. Other channels who were friends of Stevens and Van Hulle in the Bay Area also learned about Axes. Finally, Shepherd Hoodwin, borrowing from the Stevens and Van Hulle books, also used these terms in his book The Journey of Your Soul. Thus, the terminology has become familiar to Michaelian teachings students in general. We will see below that these terms are used to refer to phenomena in the Michaels' cosmology that have to do with a specific type of Polarity in the structure of the Overleaf System.

The first appearance of the terminology is found in the following Q&A exchange. For context, note that this is shortly after the Positive and Negative Poles of the Overleaves were introduced and discussed in late 1974 and early 1975.

We asked for an SRG on ER — Perseveration, Self-destruction, Late Young Scholar, a Skeptic?

What you see here are Overleaves in conflict, and you are right that this man is currently transitioning the cycles [from Young to Mature]. He is a Seventh Level Young Scholar. The most horrendous conflict lies in the Goal–Mode Axis, that of Growth [Goal] against, yes, Perseveration [Mode]. This has held him back from acknowledging understanding that has come about in his studies. This is a Skeptic, yes, but his Chief Feature is not Self-destruction — that is far too strong. The man is basically Impatient, but appears on a self-destructive bent now to you, primarily because of his steadfast refusal to listen to the inner call. [SJC, 09 January 1975]

Here is mention of the Polarity between two Overleaf categories: “the Goal–Mode Axis”. My book The Tao of Personality, identifies Goal as the Ordinal Pole and Mode as the Cardinal Pole on the Action Axis of the Overleaf categories. The book also identifies Attitude as the Ordinal Pole and Center as the Cardinal Pole on the Expression Axis. The book also identifies Chief Feature as the Ordinal Pole and Role as the Cardinal Pole on the Inspiration Axis. Finally, it identifies Age/Level as the Neutral Overleaf category, completing this Septenary. Thus, the Law of Seven applies to the Overleaf categories. Thus, the forty-nine Overleaves when shown in a grid of boxes on a Chart have a symmetry of Attributes on both the horizontal and vertical axes of the Chart.

There is another mention of the Goal–Mode Axis in a subsequent session. Although the phrase is not used, the principle applies:

Do you now have the feeling for the fact that in most souls not acquainted with a teaching that the Mode stands forever as a barrier between the Positive and Negative Poles of the Goal? No matter how exalted that Goal may be, this principle stands between all Modes and Goals. We would say so, yes. [SJC, 16 January 1975]

A similar conflict on the Goal–Mode Action Axis was mentioned in MF, page 110, where Growth Goal and Repression Mode create internal struggles in a Personality. Similar statements can be made about the Inspiration (Chief Feature and Role) and Expression (Attitude and Center) Axes of Overleaf categories. Because of these Axis polarities, Overleaves can abrade internally (with oneself) as well as externally (with other people). All such situations and many more are covered in Part Four of my Tao of Personality book.

In addition to the Axes of Overleaf categories (Goal versus Mode, Chief Feature versus Role, Attitude versus Center), there is the Axis of complementary Overleaves. This type is rather better known to Michaelian teachings students because it is obvious from the oppositeness of the names of the Overleaves: Acceptance versus Rejection Goals, Passion versus Repression Modes, Realist versus Cynic Attitudes, and so on. This phenomenon is hinted at in some passages from the original Michaelian group:

... we would sometimes applaud a little Skepticism on the part of this cadre's Idealists. [SJC, 25 January 1975]

Bill: Should I [who have a Goal of Acceptance] be [concerned about what other people think or feel]?

[Soleal:] It would be better for [spiritual] growth if you were not [concerned]. Rejection comes from negative spaces and who cares? I can do without false affection [–Ingratiation] given from bad spaces, and so can you if you are rejected, and it will have nothing to do with your spaces, only the one doing the rejection. Unless you fall so far from the [+Agape] path that you commit some unsociable act, that is highly unlikely given your Overleaves. [Old Priest, Acceptance, Observation, Spiritualist, Intellectual, Impatience.] Those souls with their Mode in Passion–Repression Axis tend to be more cyclic [bipolar] than any others, but depression is not limited to this Axis. I can remember slipping down [from Power Mode] into an extremely Cautious [Mode] space not long ago myself, and for a few hours it was a damned good retreat. [SJC, 01 February 1975]

I'd like to ask about the Negative Pole of Acceptance (Rejection). [SJC, 01 February 1975]

So here we see another type of Axis, different from the previous type, that exists between Ordinal and Cardinal Overleaves within the same Overleaf category. The questioner had a Goal of Acceptance, on the other side of the Expression Axis from the Goal of Rejection. Similar problems can be created by Overleaves in opposition on the Action Axis, such as Realist versus Cynic Attitudes, or Spiritualist versus Stoic Attitudes. Typically there is friction between two people who are on the opposite sides of any kind of Axis, especially when the Negative Poles are involved.

Mentioned for the first time in the original Michaelian group is what came to be called “sliding” in the post-original Michaelian group Michaelian teachings. However, two other words were used above for this phenomenon: a) there was the “cyclic” swing between the Passion Mode and the Repression Mode on the Inspiration Axis; b) there was the “slipping” from Power Mode to Caution Mode on the Expression Axis. One can use this phenomenon consciously to mitigate Negative Pole manifestations, as explained in The Michael Handbook (1986), page 286. It is also explained in MMFM (1986) page 211, under the name “hands-across”.

A couple of weeks later, the same subject came up again:

Dick stated that he was surprised by his painting ability, that years ago he could not paint that well. He seems to be improving all the time. He wonders if he has been given the gift of higher expression by the teacher, or wonders if the energy of the group has anything to do with this.

The gift of higher expression is there, but you are wrong about the source. You see, when the action occurs in Real Space and is work of the Essence, then it always takes place at the most Positive Pole of the Axis. When you paint now, you not only have moments of Passion [Mode], but hours. This can be sustained now because you also see the results, not from [your usual] Repression [Mode], but from Passion... [S/JC, 12 February 1975]

Dick was in the Repression Mode, which is on the Ordinal side of an Inspiration Axis, so the Cardinal Pole of the same Axis is the Passion Mode. This is the same type of Axis as mentioned in the preceding passage.

In the following passage taken from the same session, there is another mention of the rub between opposite Polarities on an Axis:

At this point, many felt the presence of Soleal, and asked him if he wished to speak.

[Soleal:] The teacher [Michael] has only begun to stress the importance of polarity to you now and the use of the most positive [Cardinal] pole of the Axes for the [spiritual] Work. But it is simply astonishing to me the progress that has been made here. I would be the first to admit that I did not think that it would be possible, given the orientation of your world. It is true that whole worlds are victims also of their Overleaves, and often this serves to prevent any upward swing for many centuries — more like millennia for the most part. Ours is an [Ordinal] Intellectually Centered world, but there is more yin than yang, thus the cold cerebration has been modified by the feminine essence. Yours is a [Ordinal] Moving Centered world, with far more yang [masculine] than yin [feminine]. But what is seen now is what we can only call the vibration of potential — in other words, the chance for change — and this is being manifested primarily in the youth of your society. They no longer feel duty-bound to cling to the primary Mode manifested by your world, that of [Ordinal] Perseveration [Mode], and are now moving into the upward spiral [into Cardinal Aggression Mode]. [S/JC, 12 February 1975]

This statement was made at a time in the Michaelian teachings when it was said that a person could change their Overleaves. Soleal here seems to be recommending that a person with an Ordinal Overleaf make efforts to switch to a Cardinal Overleaf. In subsequent Michaelian groups, starting with Messages from Michael in 1979, this idea was changed to getting out of the Negative Pole and into the Positive Pole of whatever Overleaf one may have. The existence of Positive and Negative Poles of the Overleaves had just been revealed in the preceding couple of months, and they did not appear on an Overleaf Chart until the next month, March. The rub between Overleaves on the opposite Pole of an Axis is of course exacerbated by Negative Poles.

The members of the original Michaelian group did not get very far into an understanding of Polarity. The original Michaelian group collapsed down to a core group about two weeks after that session, unable to surmount the conflicts within their own Overleaves and conflicts with other people’s Overleaves, particularly Negative Poles of Overleaves. The understanding of the beneficial uses of Polarities blossomed in subsequent Michaelian groups, and was recorded in Michaelian teachings books for our continued benefit.

The subject of Polarity in the Overleaf System is examined in considerable detail in other of my books, The Tao of Personality and The Tao of Relationships.

Be that as it may, before we move on, I want to introduce the reader to a proposed explanation for the selection of that term, Axis, by the Michaels. This will be brief.

I suggest that, like the terms, Ordinal and Cardinal, "Axis" is an allusion to mathematics. Mathematicians have a way of graphically illustrating physics phenomena, such as motions, as vectors or paths on a three dimensional grid, with a horizontal "x" axis, a vertical "y" axis that is perpendicular to the "x" axis, and a "z" axis that is perpendicular to both the "x" and "y" axes. (This is called the Cartesian coordinate system, named after the French mathematician who developed it, René Descartes; you can read more about that here: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Cartesian_coordinate_system<.) Typically, this is shown with the "x" axis as a one-dimensional line going left and right; the "y" axis is shown as a line going up and down, crossing the "x" axis at the "origin" and perpendicular to it; thus the "y" axis defines a two-dimensional plane when added to the "x" axis; the "z" axis is shown as a line that crosses the origin perpendicular to the "x" and "y" axes, thus defining a three-dimensional object in space. The way to show three dimensionality on a two-dimensional sheet is typically done per the graphic above. When the axes are used to show numbers, the origin is usually set at zero. In that case, notice that there are "positive" (+1, +2, +3 ... > infinity) and "negative" (-1, -2, -3 ... > minus infinity) directions. If the origin point is set to the number 1, then the "positive" or Cardinal direction shows whole numbers (2, 3, 4 ... > infinity) and the "negative" or Ordinal direction shows fractions (1/2, 1/3, 1/4 ... > zero). In terms of the OLS, this latter scheme, where the origin point is set to the number 1, makes more sense. One reason I say this is that the Cardinal planes are holistic or unitary, as are whole numbers, whereas the Ordinal planes are fragmentary, as in fractions or pieces of unity.

The above paragraph is an introduction to the analogous meaning of Positive/Cardinal and Negative/Ordinal on my version of the Overleaf Chart; the three Axes are One-dimensional Action, Two-dimensional Inspiration, and Three-dimensional Expression. You can think of the "origin" on the Cartesian coordinate system, when set to 1, as the Neutral Assimilation Process/Aspect; this is my preferred way to relate the Cartesian coordinate system to the Overleaf Chart.

The following table is another way of showing how the Cartesian coordinate system is analogous to the structure and features of the Overleaf Chart. It does not suit my purpose in this History book to explain all of this table here; that happens in my book The Tao of Personality. This table serves as a teaser for that book, which contains a thorough explanation of the structure and meaning of the OLS, an explanation of how the OLS is the product of a logical, mathematical, and physics algorithm. Compare this table with Table 2Bb above and you will see some of the same words used by the Michaels as synonyms for Ordinal and Cardinal.

Table 2Bc — PROCESS/ASPECT SYSTEM and TIME/SPACE GEOMETRY
AXIAL	ACTION		INSPIRATION		EXPRESSION		ASSIMILATION
CARTESIAN	"X"		"X" + "Y"		"X" + "Y" + "Z"		ORIGIN
DIMENSION	ONE-DIMENSIONAL (1-D)		TWO-DIMENSIONAL (2-D)		THREE-DIMENSIONAL (3-D)		PAN-DIMEN. (P-D)
MOTION	TRANSLATION		VIBRATION		ROTATION		SCALAR
MONADIC	-ORDINAL-	+CARDINAL+	-ORDINAL-	+CARDINAL+	-ORDINAL-	+CARDINAL+	=NEUTRAL=
DIRECTIONALITY	BACKWARD	FORWARD	DOWNWARD	UPWARD	OUTWARD	INWARD	HYPHER-COMPLEX
PROCESS/TIME	TERMINATION	ORIGINATION	INVOLUTION	EVOLUTION	ANALYSIS	SYNTHESIS	COMBINATION
ASPECT/SPACE	GOAL	MODE	SHADOW	ROLE	ATTITUDE	CENTER	WORLDVIEW

Comments on this table are as follows:

- AXIAL: The first row shows the names of the Axial Attributes. These were not known to the original Michaelian group; they were first revealed in MFM.
- CARTESIAN: The second row shows the way that mathematicians designate three mutually-perpendicular “axes” in the Cartesian coordinate system. The meaning of the three “Axes” shown in the first row is precisely an allusion to this mathematical system.
- DIMENSIONALITY: The third row shows another way to understand the relationship of the Axial Attributes shown in the first row and the Cartesian coordinate system shown in the second row.
- MOTION: The fourth row shows the type of motion in objective space/time that correlates with the items in the three rows higher than the fourth row. The Axial Attributes are actually “motions” in subjective time-space that correlate to these objective motions in space/time.
- MONADIC: The fifth row shows the Monadic Attributes. Add the Axial Attributes and we have the Septenarian Attributes.
- DIRECTIONALITY: The sixth row shows the directions of the Cartesian coordinates in the graph, but with a little thought, one should see that they are a metaphor for the characteristics of the Monadic Attributes.
- PROCESS/TIME: The seventh row shows the names of the Processes, aka functions of time.
- ASPECTS/SPACE: The eighth row shows the names of the Aspects, aka functions of space. Each personality Trait is at the intersection of a Process and an Aspect, so each Trait is a type of “motion” in subjective time-space, even as the Cartesian coordinate system is used to graph motion in objective space/time. The point is that subjective and objective domains are joined by mathematics.

Concluding Comments on Dimensions and Axes

⑥ DISCIPLINE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word discipline in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Discipline issues are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels regard self-discipline as positive to be cultivated until one has arrived at full maturity. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypassing. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

The word discipline is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

It might be a little surprising how often this word discipline shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that, if they are serious about spiritual growth, then they will need to understand the role of discipline in regard to spiritual practices. That includes externally-imposed discipline as well as internally-imposed discipline. The ultimate goal is to arrive at a unity of form and function where discipline is no longer useful.

Definition of Discipline

So, what is meant by discipline? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

- 1a: control gained by enforcing obedience or order
 - 1b: orderly or prescribed conduct or pattern of behavior
 - 1c: self-control
 - 2: punishment
 - 3: training that corrects, molds, or perfects the mental faculties or moral character
 - 4: a field of study
 - 5: a rule or system of rules governing conduct or activity
- [><https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/discipline>< — retrieved 30 September 2022]

The only definition in that list that the following discussion does not cover is punishment. (“Punishment” is covered in a chapter by that name.) In addition to the dictionary definition, I would define discipline as whatever it takes to not follow ‘the path of least resistance’, to not be lazy and aimless as one travels one’s spiritual journey.

The words discipline and disciple have the same etymological root. Therefore, as Michaelian students, we are all disciples of the Michaels, and our commitment to the study (and living) of their teaching is therefore an acknowledgment of our need for discipline in our discipleship; refer to the chapters “Study” and “School Metaphor” for more discussion about that. There are few schools that operate without discipline in the sense that order must be maintained in the classroom, there are rules to follow in the didactic process, and there are lessons that one must complete on the way to graduation. This chapter is somewhat about adherence to the Michaelian curriculum; the Michaelian teachings is a voluntary discipline and we Michaelian students are a voluntary discipleship. May I suggest that readers of these study papers voluntarily apply some discipline to finish them all, even if not every one of them seems like fun, as watching a great movie or reading a great novel might be unmitigated fun. My claim is that for you to do so would be for your own good in the long run, whether or not you believe it now.

Discipline per Ouspensky

If you know anything about spiritual teachings other than the Michaelian teachings, you know that they are not only and merely about the acquisition of knowledge of spiritual matters; they are also about the application of that knowledge toward spiritual growth using spiritual practices. They typically acknowledge that discipline about doing the practices is desirable, perhaps even necessary to be effective and efficient. The founding members of the original Michaelian group had prior involvement with the Gurdjieffian teachings, which happens to be full of spiritual disciplines. Let’s see what that teaching has to say about this subject, from a disciple of Gurdjieff named Peter Ouspensky. The following quotations are extracted from his book The Fourth Way. It is likely that founding original Michaelian group members were familiar with this book and its contents, because it was first published in 1957, and then again in 1971. Underlined words are my emphasis, so please pay special attention to them as they are especially relevant to the discussion that follows. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the quotation.

One can only enter a school when one has already lost, or is prepared to lose, at least a certain amount of self-will. Self-will is the chief obstacle to entering a school, because a school means not only learning but also discipline. And some people may find discipline boring, or unnecessary. [p. 95]

Can one be disciplined to school life without being disciplined to ordinary conventions?

School discipline is based on [spiritual] understanding — it is quite different [from societal institutions].

Isn’t there a danger of taking discipline as escape from responsibility?

Then one will fail. [p. 96]

Is self-imposed discipline good or must it be school discipline?

Discipline is good if it is discipline. But if it is just an arbitrary invention, then it can give no result. The most important aspect of discipline is not expressing negative emotions and not indulging in negative emotions. Mechanical tasks cannot give any result, but if you catch yourself at a moment of negative emotion and stop it — this is discipline. [p. 256] Control of more than one center can only be obtained if you put yourself under some other will, because your own will is insufficient, and this is why school discipline and school exercises are necessary. [p. 258]

Isn’t there a sort of organization to help people to work?

One of the most important things in the work is the understanding of discipline. If one understands this idea of discipline, one finds the possibility to work against self-will. If one does not understand it, one will think one works, but in reality one will not work, because it will only be self-will.... Without understanding school discipline one cannot have inner discipline. There are people who could do good work and who fail because they lack discipline. Yet change of Being is possible only with school-work and school discipline. For a certain period of time one must have it [applied by a school-master], and then, later [when one has attained a high Level of Being], one can Work by oneself. Discipline is connected with rules. Rules are the conditions on which people are accepted and given knowledge in a school. Keeping these rules or conditions is their first payment, and the first test. One of the most important things in every kind of school is the idea of rules. If there are no rules, there is no school. Not even an imitation school can exist without rules. [p. 286]

Emotional development needs discipline. Nothing develops the emotional center so much as giving up self-will.... All the ways need discipline. This explains why one cannot work by oneself. One cannot create discipline by oneself. If one understands this work, then discipline takes the form that one does not decide for oneself but works according to instructions. It takes a long time to acquire Will, but self-will has to be conquered first. In the meantime another will is necessary, the will of the school, of the organization [and the greater good]. [p. 288]

The following section elaborates on most of the points made by Ouspensky.

Discipline per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first occurrence of the word discipline is this, a couple of months after the first appearance of the Michaels:

Dick: Robert [Burton] was a Saturn [Body Type] and he could impose discipline. Even if I received power from a power place, it is just not my bag. I just don't know how we would work our commune. [20 October 1973]

That comment hints at the potential desirability of having a benevolent taskmaster (not a cruel slave-driver) exercise discipline in a group, whether the group builds physical edifices or spiritual communes. Robert Burton was the leader of the local Fourth Way group that the founding members of the original Michaelian group had been affiliated with. Burton was a King, a Role that by nature provides leadership for groups of people. Leadership can include discipline, but enforcement of the discipline is usually delegated to Warriors, the other Role on the Action Axis. Dick was regarded as a leader in the original Michaelian group, but he was a mere Artisan, a Role not known for its leadership proclivities and abilities, so naturally he would defer to a King if one showed up. The original Michaelian group was always on the lookout for an incarnate King to potentially lead them in ways that the discarnate King-Warrior Entity (the Michaels) could not. Recall that Kings, Priests, and Sages are the Cardinal Roles, the Roles that have leadership capabilities and propensities of one sort or another built in. Note that the modern Michaelian teachings still lacks an incarnate King leadership. If channels are to be considered as leaders, then there are some Sages, and a Priest if you include Varda Hasselmann of the Die Quelle contingent. There would be advantages if a King were to show up, but the disadvantage would be the potential to be led astray by a strong personality that was not fully enlightened. Rumor has it that, over the decades since its founding with great promise in 1970, Robert Burton, an alleged candidate for a manifestation of a Transcendental Soul, has made his commune into an abusive personality cult, complete with the usual political, financial, and sexual scandals.

Ellis: The answers [given by the Michaels] at first seem limited and shallow until you read the information the next day or the next week; they don't sink in until tomorrow. Last week or so, I felt hung-up in mid space about what is happening. The first feeling was one of letting go. I dislike discipline and still I feel I ought to let go. I feel suspended in between — reaching for something. I want to be free. What is happening?

You are making an agonizing inner comparison of what you have come to know as familiar and what you are now beginning to see as "real". This means a decision must be made as to whether you go on pursuing the unknown or let it ride this time around and try again another time. The letting go [of the familiar] is an arduous process, we realize that. We do not have advice for you on this; it is solely up to you.

Ellis: I feel hung up in suspended animation. I resent the discipline I may have to put upon myself. (A line was lost there from the tape-turning).

The discipline is different but no more strenuous than that to which you have been exposed this whole lifetime. [23 October 1973]

Perhaps most people are like Ellis in that they do not like discipline, either self-imposed discipline or discipline imposed by others. However, most people realize that there is a proper place for discipline, and so they accept it where they deem that the end goal is worth the expenditure of effort that it takes to get there. In this sense, “the end justifies the means”. The essence of the problem seems to be the difference between short-term or short-sighted thinking and its opposite, long-term and far-sighted thinking. Most children in school accept the discipline of classroom and classwork that the adults have imposed on them; they realize that the discipline is for their own good in the long run. Now as adults we should be open to receiving disciplined guidance from those that we acknowledge as our teachers and leaders.

On the other hand, if one “resents” the discipline, then that might signal that, 1) some unwelcome or unqualified disciplinarian is imposing their beliefs, values, or behaviors on one, or 2) it turns out that one has not selected a respectable disciplinarian, or 3) one is not properly motivated within oneself, or 4) it might signal that some other means and method should be applied. Oftentimes there is a process of aligning ends with means via an “agonizing inner comparison”, such that whatever discipline is needed is not found to be too “strenuous”. In that case, the cost/benefit or risk/reward ratio makes the whole thing “worth it”, even if the effort is great. People write inspiring motivational stories about heroic characters, those who exercise heroic discipline, those who overcome great adversities.

On yet another hand, at yet a deeper level of analysis, it is a deep philosophical question to ask, How often does following “the path of least resistance” without applying any internal discipline or accepting any external discipline lead to the best or optimal result? So far as we know, plants and animals do not ask this question; they “go with the flow” in every case; the time horizon of their planning is very limited. It is we humans who ask the question, and I suspect that one of the reasons is that we have numerous sub- and super-personalities that are all vying for control of our journey. That is why I suggest that one should come to a consensus within oneself such that no “strenuous” discipline is required; there is no need for one part of the personal self to ‘ride herd’ on another part of oneself.

Beside the distinction between self-applied internal discipline and other-applied external discipline, one could divide the concept of discipline into two kinds, the negative kind and the positive kind. If one part of you has to persuade or coerce another part of you to do something, then you are doing discipline in the Negative Pole, and you need to figure out how to do discipline in the Positive Pole. I am reminded of the Goal of Stagnation, aka Flow, aka Equilibrium. The Negative Pole of –Inertia is resistant to internal or external discipline, whereas the Positive Pole of +Suspension is not resistant to internal or external discipline that actively seeks to ‘right the ship’, so to speak. If one can see within oneself that the result of discipline is for one’s own good in the long run, then that will result in a resentmentless and strenuousnessless discipline, whether it be self-imposed or other-imposed.

In the next occurrence of the word, the Michaels referred to other-imposed discipline in the group context:

Pam doesn’t come to our meetings, but feels she is still a part of the group.

The problem of discipline is common on your plane. When someone does not come to many meetings, they should not consider themselves a part of the group. It is necessary to contribute something to a whole being in order to call it whole. Many parts make this whole of the group and if a part is missing, it is necessary to replace it before going on. Rules are sometimes necessary in order for your plane to accomplish the use of will. It is sometimes necessary to exercise will and set a goal of being on time, being present. There are also times when it is necessary for a member to miss many nights in a row because of the strange occurrences that come up. These are usually planned by a much higher source and these people should not be castigated, but rather deserve a reward. Somehow, your group will need to differentiate between the two types of absenteeism, also lateness to meetings. Try to plan one meeting discussing the type of rules needed, whatever they are, then go from there. It is now time for some discipline. [20 November 1973]

Even as individuals consist of parts that are not always in agreement and this makes discipline expedient, so groups are made up of individuals that are not always in agreement and this makes discipline expedient. The Michaels were not of the “anything goes” mindset, either for individuals or for groups. I perceive two types of discipline being discussed there, both having to do with establishing rules and sticking to them. First, everyone should have their own personal priority list, their value system hierarchy, their rules; they should decide what is important to themselves. Within that context, the amount of discipline one is willing to exercise, or effort one is willing to apply, is an indication of the amount of commitment one has to a cause; refer to the chapter “Commitment” for more information about that. That passage also spoke of a type of discipline where one is willing to sacrifice oneself for the greater good, in this case for the good of a group of which one considers oneself a member. Both of these are instances where singleness of function and purpose should make negative discipline unnecessary and make positive discipline welcomed. As part of that singularity and solidarity in your value system, don't join groups that you do not wholeheartedly support, or you will resent what seems like a burden, or a loss of personal integrity.

Discipline is not necessarily a problem per se; the problem is that one needs to feel right about the discipline, and that can be accomplished by making either internal or external adjustments to arrive at a unitary mindset regarding the learning procedure at hand. When unity of purpose and function is achieved, then whatever discipline is applied is of the positive type.

Billie: I would like to know Michael's opinion of bioenergetics.

We, on the whole, approve of this in the hands of a spiritually-evolved therapist.... You could learn this discipline yourselves and practice. [29 November 1973]

Learning of any kind sometimes, but not always, requires some discipline, or perhaps we would prefer the word "practice", as in "practice makes perfect". Not everything that we might deem to be worth pursuing comes effortlessly and easily; not everything that we might deem to be worth doing is always fun.

Sarah: One of the first criteria for a new student is whether they can accept that there are planes above the physical.

This should almost be your first question to new students. (Next,) whether or not they are willing to accept the necessary discipline needed to grow spiritually. Also, it would help to know what they expect from such a group experience and their definition of spiritual growth.

Nichols: There could be checkpoints and people would be able to make a decision whether to go on or not.

Dick: They might also need to know that this is an intellectual teaching of discipline.

Mallory: What is meant by "intellectual teaching"?

Answer: To translate what you have learned intellectually as knowledge into what you do — (being). It's 'turning water into wine'.

This is, of course, our teaching also. The discipline, of course, includes going toward Balance through concentration, meditation, and other conscious[ness]-raising techniques. Also, the understanding and ultimate complete acceptance of all others, leading to the spiritual Agape, which is the doorway to true consciousness. [03 February 1974]

Refer to chapters "Knowledge", "Balanced Man", "Meditation and Concentration", and "Agape" for further discussion of terms found in that passage. There are two motivators for spiritual growth, a negative motivation and a positive motivation, metaphorically called the 'stick' and the 'carrot'. In the context of this chapter, one type of 'stick' is psychological problems, where the person is looking for an escape from unhappiness, and some discipline is often required to achieve that purpose. In the context of this chapter, one type of 'carrot' is the desire for enlightenment, an aspiration for joy, and some discipline if often required to achieve that purpose. There is a spectrum from psychotherapy at the negative pole to spirituality at the positive pole. Typically, people start out on their spiritual path motivated by the negative pole, the 'stick', but if the psychotherapy is successful, then they can graduate to the positive pole, the 'carrot', and continue to learn through joy. In the real world, discipline, whether applied by self or other, is usually a mixture of stick and carrot; it is not purely one or the other. Spiritual growth happens whether one applies discipline or not, but intentional acceleration usually requires discipline, according to many spiritual traditions, including the Michaelian teachings.

Learning through fun is mentioned in the next passage in which the word discipline occurs. Notice that it also mentions "cohesion", the unity of function and purpose:

We also ohm'd in a circle and acted out a, "Don't you ever, ever, EVER, EVER let me catch you brushing that dog's teeth with my toothbrush ..."

As the group becomes more and more cohesive, many more sharing experiences may take place without the self-consciousness present in more multi-disciplined gatherings. This will create a unique atmosphere in which growth is almost certain to occur.

Cynthia: I'm missing the discipline ... time limits ... no smoking ... Needs for levity and social activity. [06 February 1974]

As stated previously, the natural evolution of the spiritual path has discipline (the 'stick') in the early phases and develops toward fun (the 'carrot') in the later phases. On the journey, it is Good Work to alternate between fun and discipline on a spiritual path in a group setting; both result in social bonding, and that results in a cohesive unitary group. There is lack of balance and moderation in discipline-only or fun-only gatherings. Apparently, part of discipline is knowing when to regulate or be regulated versus when to be spontaneous and have fun; a balanced life is not just one or the other.

By the way, Cynthia was a Sage, and Sages are not generally attracted to or good at exercising discipline: if it isn't fun, they are not interested. Warriors thrive on serious discipline, Scholars also:

... He needs more than anything to meditate in a scholarly way, in a disciplined way....

(From Ted): Have I had an experience with intellectual meditation?

Ted has been, in his second most recent lifetime, a Benedictine monk who was the scholar for his order. He led his order in the discipline of meditation at a very high plane. [13 August 1974]

My surmise is that the Action Roles and the Neutral Role (King, Warrior, Scholar) are the most favorable to and amenable to discipline, whereas the Inspiration and Expression Roles, not so much.

The spiritual expression to the Essence is, of course, quite powerful and taps into the universal flow. The physical expression of the Personality, which sustains the body, is in comparison quite weak and can be overpowered and the body killed, if one is not careful. Yes, it can be harnessed and used effectively. The best check-point we know of is the fact that the student not ready to harness this [Essence power] is seldom willing to use the time necessary to produce good result at will. It takes someone close to Balance to accept the discipline necessary to effectively use these [telepathic and intuitive] senses. When we tell a student that he is capable, that does not always mean that that student is either willing or ready — just capable. The man Thaddeus has at the moment an excellent start, and if he is willing to accept the discipline, he can do this without any problems. Those who tap into the spiritual expression, letting go of the physical expression without the conditioning, often go “mad” or die. [29 October 1974]

Essence is “tapped into the flow” and does not need discipline; it is the Personality that needs discipline in order to accelerate spiritual development faster than what is automatic about the process, up to the point that Essence takes over. Refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality for the whole story.

... it will require a discipline he is not willing to observe.... [29 October 1974]

Different people have different relationships with the whole discipline thing, on a spectrum. My guess is that this personality factor is not amenable to very much change. In other words, one either has an inherent predisposition to accept and apply discipline or one does not.

However, all is not lost: if one is not disciplined by nature, then one can at least volunteer to accept its imposition by those who are disciplined by nature:

We had a meeting with Michael after Soleal was here.

Remember this creature [Soleal] was raised in silence. It is difficult still for him to speak, even in his own milieu. They do not speak on his world. His teacher, when he was quite young, forced the silence as a discipline. [10 November 1974]

If one does not have an inborn disciplined nature, then one can have discipline enforced by a benevolent taskmaster; there is nothing wrong with that, apparently. As quoted above, Ouspensky said that there is generally a time, especially in the beginning of one's spiritual journey, where it is appropriate to give up self-will and substitute the will of a spiritually-mature teacher.

Discussion regarding the good vibes we felt at Leslie's and Beverly's party involving music and movement. Should we try more of this sort of thing? Moving Center — is it possible to experience this by observation?

We have no quarrel with the plans to introduce the principles of disciplined movement within this cadre. [02 January 1975]

This passage hints at one definition of discipline. Dancing is a form of “disciplined” movement, just as music is a form of “disciplined” sound. In other words, “discipline” means that stuff is made to not happen randomly or spontaneously — there are constraints, there are rules. By the way, Leslie was a Warrior and Beverly (Lesley's partner) was a Scholar. By the way, Gurdjieff was keen on the spiritual benefits of disciplined movement; he elevated Sufi dancing to new heights.

The final choice to allow the Infinite Soul to displace and manifest is not an easy one, especially for a highly exalted soul who is enjoying some measure of success on the Physical Plane. That the man John [the Baptist] was able to impart to his student [Jesus] was the discipline necessary to allow him to let go at the proper moment. [02 January 1975]

This is another instance or example of the more mature person (John) helping a less mature person (Jesus) to do the right thing in the application of discipline. As Jesus was a “student”, aka disciple, of John, so Jesus was a disciple who yielded his self-will to the will of the Infinite Soul.

The connection between discipline and discipleship, teachers and students, the learned and the learners, which has been stated previously shows up again in the next passage.

All of you come to this teaching from a myriad of disciplines, beliefs, philosophies, and et cetera.... We are with many of you now. We hope you continue the discipline of meditation, as it is one of the doorways that we seek. [11 January 1975]

Here again I see a hint of a definition, namely that “disciplines” are structured activities; they are not freewheeling spontaneous activities.

This group engaged in a lengthy discussion of communal living, discipline of small children, the rights of teenagers, and the problem of domestic animals. We then asked the Teacher for a comment. [12 February 1975]

We talked about communes. Sarah feels that the discipline of children would be the biggest problem. [21 February 1977]

Child-rearing involves more than just setting an example for your kids, and feeding, clothing, and housing them, or letting them run wild; it involves teaching, training, socializing, and setting rules of dos and don'ts for them. Perhaps it would be useful to regard the Michaels as our discarnate parents, who know what is good for us.

Discipline must occur on all three levels [lower Centers] if it is to be effective. It cannot merely be the discipline imposed by Intellectual Center. It must also involve shutting down the artifact and experiencing Emotional Center as a barometer. It must involve Moving Center as the acting out Center and not as the Thinking Center. [15 April 1975]

That passage confirms what is said elsewhere: it is the lower self, the lower Centers, the Personality, that needs discipline. It is interesting to me that this passage lists the Centers in the same sequence as Rational Emotive Behavior Therapy: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rational_emotive_behavior_therapy<. The notion of that psychotherapy is that the Intellectual Center should ‘discipline’ (rule over) the Emotional Center and the Moving Center. But what disciplines the Intellectual Center? REBT does not have a good answer, but according to numerous original Michaelian group passages, that would be the higher self, the higher Centers, the Essence — and it could also include disciplinarians who are more mature than the disciple.

Dear students, it is not easy. Please believe us. We never intended to delude you for one moment into thinking that what we bring is easy. It is long and steep, this path you have asked to walk. It requires discipline. It requires agonizing reappraisal. It requires all that you can possibly give in this life. It requires you, the sum total of what you call your self. Then and only then, when this is thrown into the ring, can the Work begin. It must become a twenty-four hour agreement with us and with yourselves. This agreement must be renewed each time the path becomes obscured by life crises. [Dimensions! April 1975]

You will not read or hear about discipline in the modern Michaelian teachings; we have wimped out. They were asking for it in the original Michaelian group, and the Michaels gave them what they wanted. My impression is that Michaelian students subsequent to the original Michaelian group are not usually as interested in augmenting their spiritual growth with “disciplines” as the members of the original Michaelian group were. Rather, they are mostly content with acquiring the knowledge that the Michael's provide. Not that there is anything wrong with that; it does enhance one's ‘journey’ through life to have an accurate ‘map’ of the ‘territory’. However, there is a stronger level of commitment to the journey, above and beyond mere consumption of information. Numerous study papers in this book provide knowledge about those disciplines, including information that is not found in other Michaelian publications.

[Richard Chambers:] The Fellowship of Souls is a group of people who have willingly embarked upon the journey. We utilize many methods and disciplines, taking from each the essence that is relevant, and that produces growth. By studying the teachings of many who have traveled the path before us, we learn to validate the Universal Truths and apply them in our lives. By using various disciplines of meditation and concentration, we learn to reach deep within to the source of all knowledge — and we learn that All lies within, awaiting our moment of awakening. [Spring 1975]

During the entirety of the original Michaelian group, one of their aspirations was to form a commune; refer to the chapter “Communal Living” for the whole story. Obviously, it did not happen then, but if some Michaelian students ever did create a commune, then the whole matter of discipline would need to be squarely faced.

Concluding Comments on Discipline

Connecting discipline to discipleship, let's look at the school metaphor: There is a time when one is a child in school and must be subject to school discipline if one is to learn what is being offered by one's teachers. I would liken this to our youth in spiritual matters, when we are still functioning in the lower Centers, or shall we say in the lower Levels of Being, or in Personality. There is a time when we are mature, adult-like in spiritual matters, when we are functioning in the higher Centers, or shall we say in higher Levels of Being, or in Essence. In the higher Centers, Levels, Essence, we apply discipline to ourselves, and to others who are less evolved. Historically, the problem with spiritual schools has been that a self-appointed guru might not be as enlightened as he/she thinks he/she is, so distortions and abuses occur when any acolytes offer their discipleship to the discipline of the guru.

⑦ DOGMA

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “dogma” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Dogmatism is pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “dogma” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter overlaps somewhat with the chapters “Belief” and “Belief System” and “Judgment” and “Knowledge as Gnosis”.

Definition of Dogma and Dogmatism

So what is meant by dogma? As usual, I refer to Wikipedia for an answer, not the answer:

Dogma in the broad sense is any belief held unquestioningly and with undefended certainty. It may be in the form of an official system of principles or doctrines of a religion, such as Roman Catholicism, Judaism, or Protestantism, as well as the positions of a philosopher or of a philosophical school such as Stoicism. It may also be found in political belief systems, such as communism, progressivism, liberalism, and conservatism.

In the pejorative sense, dogma refers to enforced decisions, such as those of aggressive political interests or authorities. More generally, it is applied to some strong belief which its adherents are not willing to discuss rationally. This attitude is named as a dogmatic one, or as dogmatism, and is often used to refer to matters related to religion, but is not limited to theistic attitudes alone and is often used with respect to political or philosophical dogmas.

The word dogma was adopted in the 17th century from Latin: dogma, derived from the Ancient Greek: romanized: dogma, literally “opinion, belief, judgment” from the Ancient Greek: romanized: dokēi, literally “it seems that...”. The plural is based on the Latin: dogmata, though dogmas may be more commonly used in English. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dogma> — retrieved 07 February 2023]

The article continues with a discussion of dogmatism in philosophy and religion. What is not mentioned is that scientists, not science per se, can also get stuck in some dogma or other, and refuse to learn. This is such a common human trait, and no one is immune, not even scientists who proclaim that they are open to any and all facts. One point of this chapter is to point out that, generally speaking, dogmatism is not regarded as a good epistemic stance as one goes through life, whether focused on the physical or focused on the spiritual. In terms of the Overleaf System, the name of the Negative Pole of the Pragmatist Attitude was originally revealed to be –Dogma, and it refers to a person who is opinionated rather than +Practical, the Positive Pole. A practical person is concerned about whatever works, regardless of a belief system or an ideology or a preconceived notion.

Dogma per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The subject of dogma appeared very soon after the Michaels first appeared to the original Michaelian group in mid-August of 1973:

The Synthesis is perceived in the final Cycle, and Old Souls seldom cling to dogma. The Transcendental Soul perceives The Synthesis and teaches it as such — will not espouse popular dogma, and does not affiliate with organized religion. [late August 1973]

Refer to the chapter "Synthesis, The" for the documentation that the Michaels referred to their teaching by that name. The fancy name for not clinging to dogma is "epistemic humility". These people subscribe to the notion that, "the more you know, the more you know that you don't know". The converse of this is that people who do not know very much believe that they know a lot. Socrates famously said that he was wise because he knew that he did not know anything. Scientists will tell you that nothing is ever proven for certain. Various cultures espouse "popular dogmas" that are pervasive in their culture; refer to the chapter "Culture" for more about that. Therefore, dogmatism is never warranted. One of the features of organized religions is that typically they are full of dogmas.

Seems I have one foot in religion and one foot in science, and they do not fit together. Could you comment, please?

There is no conflict. Religion is from the Emotional Center; science must be approached through Intellect[ual Center]. If there is Balance, there will be no conflict. Understanding scientific principles is a way to Higher Intellectual [Center] energy, just as feeling religion is the way to Higher Emotional Center. It [the notion that there is conflict between religion and science] is dogma that comes from False Personality and has no place in this discussion. [mid-September 1973]

Founding members of the original Michaelian group were well-educated professionals in scientific matters, but they also had spiritual inclinations. The point to be made here is that the two methods of inquiry are complementary, and that they are not mutually exclusive; they overlap. Neither spirituality nor science separately have all the answers, and even both spirituality and science combined do not have all the answers because there are probably no final answers, but they both aspire to the same ultimate Truth. Refer to the chapter "Balanced Man" for a thorough discussion of the proper use of Centers.

The realistic appraisal of our limited human condition is that dogmatism is unwarranted in both scientific and religious domains, no matter how much we believe we know about anything and everything. Scientism is the notion that objective scientific investigations can approach the whole truth, and some people are biased to prefer that. "Dogmas of the church" (see below) have typically arisen from "revelations", subjective experiences prompted by, or pointing to, some alleged transcendent source. By their own admission, religions typically originate in an alleged experience of inspiration or revelation, rather than in an objective scientific discovery. Some people with a spiritual bias put greater trust in such revelatory experiences than they do in objective scientific investigations, but my bias is to say that this is not a good idea. However, I would also say that channeling and shamanism can sometimes supplement and complement the discoveries of scientific inquiry. One should not be credulous about either spirituality or science, but, as stated above, maintain "epistemic" humility: don't be dogmatic or credulous about either one, and view both as approaches to a better understanding of the world as a whole.

Gene: I saw recently an old friend whom I hadn't seen for several years. He's a parapsychologist and mystic. He seemed just as dogmatic as ever. He says that any teaching that says that people change sexes in their different lifetimes is pure bilge, because if we knew something of the origin of creation and the true nature of twin souls, we wouldn't have such terrible conceptions. Could Michael comment on souls and sex changes?

We have often reiterated that belief is not necessary. This is another example of one dogma being more palatable than another and therefore acceptable. He cannot envision himself in a physical body of a female.

Paul [Saul of Tarsus] could not imagine a messiah who sweat, either, but Jesus did. [27 September 1973]

Dogmas are usually connected to a person's sense of identity and integrity, so a threat to one's dogmas is a threat to their "Ego"; refer to the chapter by that name. Refer to the chapter "Belief" for more about that. Basically and briefly, reality is that which exists whether or not one dogmatically believes in it or not. Dogma refers to a biased opinion of a person who is resistant to reality; refer to the chapter "Bias" for more about that. Resistance to reality is potentially dangerous to more than just the Ego, as we see further on.

Michaels: I have been reading John Lilly in [his book] The Center of the Cyclone and have had a similar experience.

We consider the ordeal John [Lilly] went through in order to achieve breakthrough dangerous for most on the Physical [Plane]. It was necessary for John, as there were blocks not known to him at the time. One was the dogma of the church that he had consciously repressed or rejected, but was there nevertheless. He did make it through though. You may be certain John knows. [01 November 1973]

The process of dumping a dogma is often a “dangerous ordeal” to the personality that is in the throes of such a tortured traumatic transition. Dogmas “do not go gentle into that good night” (poem by Dylan Thomas); they usually go ‘kicking and screaming’.

Regarding “dogmas of the church”, this phenomenon has a good side and a bad side. The brutal fact is that sometimes it is expedient for smart, informed, thoughtful people to tell stupid, ignorant, thoughtless people what is the case, such as where the latter simply cannot, or do not have the time and resources to, understand the former. This rulership by authoritative experts is what often happens in the educational system, the military system, and the governmental system. Where such “dogmatism” goes wrong is the human inclination to go down the road where “authority corrupts”. The aspiration of Michaelian students is, or should be, to become so smart, so informed, so wise, and so thoughtful that they do not need any authority, not even the Michaels, telling them what is the case; refer to the chapters “Validation and Verification” and “Intuition”.

The Michaels do give advice (refer to the chapter “Advice” for more about that), but they are not dogmatic about it:

Edgar: I would like advice regards getting rid of pain.

We can be of assistance only in that your illness is a part of Karma for you, and when you come to grips with your spiritual controversy, the pain will no longer be necessary. This can be accelerated, of course, by those methods we have outlined for the others; that is: meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. Edgar is waging an internal battle with reason versus dogma. This is not unusual, just agonizing, particularly for [those] Scholars who are slaves to reason. [15 November 1974]

Parsing this passage is agonizing for me, because the definitions of reason and the definitions of dogma are various. Therefore I look to the context here, and the original Michaelian group transcriptions in general.

Not all Scholars are slaves to reason; any Role can be a slave to reason, so that is why I inserted [those]. I take the word “reason” to refer to the Negative Pole of the Intellectual Center, –Reason, meaning rational to the exclusion of other modes of arriving at truth, the name for that being “rationalization”. I can see how a Scholar can also be a slave to dogma, if one understands, as I do, “dogma” to be a component of the Negative Pole of Scholar, namely –Theory, in the sense of –Hypothesis, –Speculation, –Conjecture, –Belief System. Some reasons and some dogmas have a lot more evidence to bolster them than others do. Both reason and dogma are problematic because they are both ontologically and epistemically limited and incomplete, meaning that, separately or together, they are not the entire path to the complete truth. Besides that, reasons and dogmas have different defects and deficiencies, so they can be in opposition to each other. Neither reason nor dogma are good at “coming to grips with spiritual controversy”. However, there are things that approach truth better than both reason and dogma, namely experiential practices such as “meditation, concentration, fasting, and study” (refer to chapters on those subjects), because these allegedly tap into true understanding, in that they result in knowledge in the sense of gnosis; refer to the chapter “Knowledge as Gnosis”.

The place of superstition in the scheme of things is sometimes valid, in that it allows powerfully psychically energetic souls to exercise their powers without disrupting their already-formed dogmatic belief systems. [20 December 1973]

That is a pretty good definition of superstition, a belief system that has an unscientific or pseudoscientific explanation of a phenomenon; for a more complete one, refer to the chapters “Superstition” and “Belief System”. The negative side of dogmatic religions is that they are little more than organized superstitions.

Dick: Robert [Burton] did not call his school a religion; it was a school of consciousness. Ours is a teaching, also, and not a religion, isn't it?

The only difficulty in that word [religion] is that it ties into dogma, and that [dogma] is not [true] religion [or religiosity or spirituality]. We wish to teach a joyous religion without dogma, and so decline to label it [a “religion”]. Jesus did not call his teaching Christianity. [03 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Religion”. There you will read that, among other things, religion in general has gotten a bad reputation because it appears that most religions have typically gotten bogged down in superstitions and dogmas. A review of the history of religions reveals that most of them began with the teaching of a person who achieved one form or another of enlightenment, and their insightful revelations were turned into superstitions and dogmas by less enlightened people. Religions have typically been named after the original proponent, but, according to the notion called “Perennialism”, true religions all profess the same fundamental principles; refer to my book The Synthesis: The Michaelian Teachings as Perennialism. There you will read that the Michaels did not name their “joyous religion” “Michaelism”; they named it “The Synthesis”.

In yet another passage, the Michaels disparage churches for their tendency to dogmatism:

This culture erects tremendous barriers in the name of progress to keep you from sighting the goal. Many of these are in the forms of false organizations that supersede the true organizations and keep you from seeking your cadre. When you align yourself with these false organizations or barriers, you become completely caught up in their dogmas and lose sight of any alternatives. All of these organizations purport to have a lofty goal, but since the goal of none is Agape, again, they can only lead to more enTrapment and more isolation from the goal. Examples of organizations that act as barriers are: ... the Catholic church or any other dogmatic church.... The list is endless, and they are real barriers to growth if you align yourself solely in them to where you become identified in their dogma and accept it as your own. [21 December 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Imprinting” and “False Personality” and “Identification” and “Barriers and Blocks” and “Traps” for discussions about how people become indoctrinated with dogmas. One of the features of dogmatism is that dogmas block the notion that there are alternatives to the dogma, alternatives that are stronger or better or truer than the dogma. There is a hierarchy of dogmatic belief systems, where some are better than others, and it is good to grow from the worse to the better, but the long-range goal is to graduate from dogmatism altogether.

We see that beyond the cultural mores and religious dogmas is a higher truth. [manifesto for original Michaelian group “Fellowship of Souls”, mid 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Culture” for more about socio-cultural dogmas. We do not generally regard the culture that we grew up in as having dogmas in the same way that religions do, but really they are equivalent in their potential harm to the individual when the culture has gone astray.

Concluding Comments on Dogma

The original Michaelian group transcriptions do not mention the word “indoctrination”, but they could have, considering how much of the Michaelian teachings concerns the mitigation of parental and cultural indoctrination and dogmas. If the Michaelian teachings is just another dogma (belief system) to you, then you do not actually understand the intention of the Michaels, namely that you inculcate your own personal truth, world truths, and universal truths; refer to the chapters “Knowledge as Gnosis”, “Validation and Verification”, and “Truth”.

The Michaelian teachings have been delivered as dogmas and doctrines, meaning that they do not come with an explanation or evidence or argument. Instead, the onus of validation and verification has been placed upon the students. What bothers me is that few students actually do that, perhaps because they are too trusting, or not motivated, or they do not know how. I have accepted this onus; my Meta-Michaelian project is an attempt to provide some evidence and argument and explanation on top of the mere dogmas and doctrines of the Michaelian teachings. May you go and do likewise. (Luke 10:37)

③ DRAMA

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “drama” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Issues of drama are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “drama” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This may seem like a strange topic for a chapter in this Study Papers book, but the word showed up enough times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions that it caught my attention as a subject potentially worthy of review and comment. So, I gathered the mentions in one place, thought about them, and confirmed the usefulness of this topic to the modern Michaelian communities. So here they are, for your edification.

Definition of Drama

So what is meant by drama? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

1a: literature – a composition in verse or prose intended to portray life or– character or to tell a story usually involving conflicts and emotions through action and dialogue and typically designed for theatrical performance : PLAY; compare CLOSET DRAMA

1b: a movie or television production with characteristics (such as conflict) of a serious play; broadly : a play, movie, or television production with a serious tone or subject [as in] a police drama

2 literature : dramatic art, literature, or affairs [as in] English drama

3a: a state, situation, or series of events involving interesting or intense conflict of forces [as in] the drama of the past week; [as in] dealing with some family drama

3b: dramatic state, effect, or quality [as in] the drama of the courtroom proceedings

In all cases in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, definition 3 applies.

Drama per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

From the beginning of the Michaelian teachings and the revelation of the Overleaves, particularly the Roles, it has been obvious to everyone that Sages are the personality type that is most enamored with drama:

Billie: I would like to ask for comment about a lady who did a psychic reading for me.

Essentially, there was considerable drama there. This lady is a Mature Sage.

Billie: Was it embellished?

She does not embellish as much as she dramatizes; there is a difference.

Billie: Was there something she said that is not correct?

No. We merely suggest that you consider all the information valid within your own more somber reflective nature.

Billie: I wonder what is to be gained by following her advice not to reveal anything she said for 19 days.

It adds to the mystique. [20 January 1974]

The point of including this entire Q&A thread is to make the distinction between the tendency of Sages to love drama with some of their other tendencies, namely for embellishment and mystique.

Cheryl: Do you need to acknowledge all Karma before you can become conscious?

That is valid. There are also what we will call for the moment "Sequences" that link souls together life after life and are not true Karmic Ribbons. In these Sequences, souls Agree to play out certain scenes together, again reversing the goals and completing Monads. Many of you are in Sequences with other members of this group, but there are no Karmic Ribbons between you. [20 February 1974]

This is the first time, but not the last, that the Michaels used the metaphor of the theatrical arts for some of the dramatic things that happen during life. Refer to chapters "Agreements and Sequences", "Karma", and "Monads" for more discussion of Michaelian teachings doctrines whose names appear in that passage.

Mallory: This man feels he will kill someone — he brought a gun to the hospital. I told him the hatred he felt was for himself. Where does this violence come from?

This is the guilt of which Dick spoke earlier. The guilt, of course, arises from wishful thinking. This man is also responding to his innate drive to be dramatic. Young Sages are more so. [30 May 1974]

Mallory was a psychologist. It is Good Work for psychologists to understand how personality traits affect how a person experiences the world and expresses in the world, including the tendency of Sages to be dramatic.

Marty: Newly recovered alcoholic living in my home. Mature Sage or Priest in Submission?

Many [Sages], yes, do have this problem [of alcoholism], sometimes due to the extremely false facade of the life they lead on stage or as a "famous personage". The alienation again drives them into an escape route that often ends in degradation. Sages, because of their flair for the dramatic, usually at one time or another, choose this type of life [alcoholism]. [19 June 1974]

Yet again with the Sages and their trauma-drama lifetimes.

Mallory: It [being in the moment] is not a dramatic thing; it just is. A person in the present is not experiencing anything dramatic. Does a Balanced Man feel high? It was said last time that the "surge" comes when one becomes Balanced.

If the moment is a quiet one, Balanced Man will feel the tranquility. If it is a "high" then Balanced Man will feel the ecstasy of the moment. Ironically, the reverse is often true in Mechanical Man. Young Souls involved with ecology legalization will often feel surges of emotionalism when confronted with a pacific, woodland environment. [17 September 1974]

Enlightenment is not to be characterized as a "dramatic" event in the sense that the word is usually used. Or perhaps it could be said that there is the Negative Pole of -Drama and then there is the Positive Pole of +Drama, the former being an unhealthy experience and the latter being a healthy experience. I see "surges of emotionalism when confronted with a pacific, woodland environment" as more positive than negative.

Elizabeth: I'd like a comment on the inner space, or other plane experience I had: I saw a person in the metaphysical bookstore that fit the person I met while in my inner space. I feel we have had past lives together.

When the student is in the meditative state or is otherwise attentive to the teaching, it is possible to experience what we choose to call the "pan-dimensional" universe, and that, of course, includes the Akashic plane. In order to answer your question, Elizabeth, we would explain to you what the term "precognition" really means. In those possessed of tremendous psychic energy, it is possible in the meditative or inner conscious state to "flash" on all of the alternative frames for a future that is close at hand. The problem is in the retaining of these flashes. Most souls do retain only the most dramatic fragments [of the experience], discarding the mundane. Then, if they recognize this as precognition, they also regard it as fact and accept the most awesome consequences. This is, of course, not true, for in the time you flash, it is merely an alternative, but sometimes you do set the wheels in motion on a subliminal level and the incident does take place. Elizabeth, this is essentially what takes place when you flash on a meeting that may take place in the near future. You can, in some instances, bring this about, but also, there is the very real attraction there that we have told you before happens when Older Souls come together after an Astral interval for the first time in this life. This attraction can be negative or positive, and can result in a coming together or a going away, but it does provoke an emotional response that is difficult to suppress. [15 October 1974]

In the above description I see +Drama rather than –Drama, because of the use of the word “awesome” as a synonym for an experience that is especially memorable in a good way.

In many [channels], there is a natural flair for drama. For instance, this group has had experience with this, and has been repulsed. This medium [Sarah] has a desire to soft-pedal all things because of the construct of the Overleaves. Other mediums have a desire to “gild the lily”, and the stripping away of these tendencies takes patience and time. There can be no doubt in anyone’s mind that the student had an emotionally overwhelming experience when he first came in contact with direct evidence that he had indeed lived before. We would not soft-pedal the importance of this, nor could we. [12 November 1974]

Whereas some channels can be overly –Dramatic (not a good thing), Sarah “soft-pedaled” a legitimate +Dramatic experience (also not a good thing). I see in this answer another instance of the difference between the negative –Drama and the positive +Drama. It is Good Work to make the distinction between the two in one’s own life, and move from the negative to the positive experience. It is also Good Work to make the distinction between –Drama as a bad thing, and –Anti-drama as also a bad thing. In other words, do not err in your perceptions of reality and in your responses to reality.

Before souls were Cast [into incarnation], the creatures-of-no-reason from which you [Creatures of Reason] have ascended were largely governed by fear, and their lives were taken up in many ceaseless battles for survival. This is no longer necessary on this world, and yet it goes on ceaselessly in spite of this. There are few large carnivores roaming the city streets, and yet most behave as though there are. The battle for survival is but another Tape Loop that plays on and on, even to the point of starving large portions of the culture, while the others waste and hoard. This only provides for the realism in the drama, for this is no longer necessary at all. [21 December 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Creature of Reason” and “Biocomputer”. Shakespeare and others have realized that life as humans on the Physical Plane can be likened to a theatrical play. This Wikipedia article contains a brief review of them: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/All_the_world's_a_stage<. Even the Michaels made the metaphor of life as theater, and I understand the statement above about the “realism in the drama” in light of the following, even though the word drama does not appear in it:

For a moment, look at the physical universe as an enormous stage, and all of the physical things within it as the sets and actors. Then look for a moment at the possibility that Karma, or the system of Karma, may in fact be looked upon as the director of the play of life. Souls experiencing all of life on the Physical Plane never have to seek spiritual growth. They can, and most do, go through the whole cycle [of reincarnation] in the “waking sleep”. The moment that you elect to commit yourself to the [spiritual growth] path, you remove yourself from the list of available actor’s equity. Were it not for Karmic Ribbons, souls would not experience much at all; they certainly would not experience all of life.

Now this play is, of course, a lie; there is no truth to be found within it. The only truth lies within the Real Space beyond the theater. In this Real Space beyond, then, the Essence is free to select the best script available — the one enabling the particular Fragment to experience out some facet of physical life that it has not experienced before. These are facilitated by what we have chosen to call “Overleaves”. Certain composites of Overleaves are conducive to certain types of activities — for instance, the extraction of an old [Karmic] debt. Remember, the moment you step on the [spiritual] path this is no longer the case. You may depart from the script just as soon as you realize that it exists. You may depart from it completely, and if you wish, without regrets, but this is hard work; just the realization is difficult enough. You see, that which you call Essence, that which has access to higher expression, operates always in Real Space. The False Personality fears Real Space as the agoraphobic fears the open field. [08 February 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Real Space versus Artificial Space”. There you will see that –Drama comes from Artificial Space whereas +Drama comes from Real Space; That is, +Drama in real life can be just as awesome as –Drama is awful in delusion.

Concluding Comments on Drama

The experience of –Drama is a component of Maya, in that it is a distortion of reality, a distortion toward exaggeration and fantasy; refer to the chapter “Maya”. –Drama is also a bit reminiscent of Glamour in that it is one of the potential distractions from the spiritual path, or a pseudo-path; refer to the chapter “Glamour”.

As we saw above, Sages, more so than any other Role, are attracted to drama, but many people other than Sages can find drama to be distracting, even if not as addictive as for the Sage. Sages love their drama and other people's drama. Not that there is anything wrong with that, necessarily. In the best experience, +Drama, when referring to the dramatic arts (movies and live theater), is one of the higher realms of experience; it provides a positive energy that lifts us out of the ordinary and into the extraordinary. The dramatic arts also make hard truths more palatable, more enjoyable, and more understandable. The dramatic arts allow us to learn vicariously, whether in true stories or in fictional stories.

DREAMS AND DREAMING

History of Dream Interpretation

Dreams per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Gene: Tomas, last night Carol had an unusual experience with a friend. Do we need to verbalize it? When she was talking to a friend about bombs, she started crying. This has to do with a recurring dream she has. Can there be a reason why she feels this?

Yes. The dreams are symbolic and have no meaning as far as bombs. [19 June 1973]

We took a short break and then Lorraine tried again on the [Ouija] board.

This is Tomas here.

About the question regarding Carolyn. The bomb [in the dream] mentioned; you will have to elucidate and not leave me to guess the conversation preceding.

Carol: I had a recurring dream when I was younger, until I was about 14, that I was running behind the school on a walkway and there was a bomb going to be dropped and I knew it, and I was running. In waking life, any time a plane went over, I was terrified. I just want to know why. I also had a recurring dream about a Japanese man being in my bathroom. I was afraid of him and I didn't like Japanese people in waking life because of this. Last night, my friend suggested that the dreams were connected and asked me why I was so afraid of bombs. Then I started crying and I don't know why. It was a creepy feeling.

As a child growing [up] in this life, this was often a subject discussed in your presence. The bomb is symbolic of all your accumulated fears. This is true of all persons in one way or another.

Carol: There wasn't a war while I was growing up — there hasn't even been a bomb scare.

It has been a topic of conversation for thirty years, Carolyn.

Gene: Where does the recurring Japanese dream come in?

Fears — that is all I can say now on this. [19 June 1973]

Silent meditation began at this point. Then both Richard and Sarah felt a tingling in their fingers and Richard felt the tingling over his head.

You must be open to any manifestation or the blocks will be just as strong as they are when you are dreaming, and the dream stops and reality takes over, but the mind refuses to make the reality tape and includes the experience in the reservoir of dreams. [03 July 1973]

Concluding Comments on Dreams and Dreaming

ECSTASY, JOY?, BLISS?

This chapter is the product of a search for the words “ecstasy” “joy”, “bliss” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions, and other words with a similar meaning. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they seek the experience of ecstasy by various means, as one among a number of their spiritual aspirations, as part of their spiritual path, as a component of their journey from living in Personality to living in Essence.

The word “ecstasy” is not capitalized in this chapter and other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that ecstasy is a spiritually rewarding experience, well worth whatever it takes to achieve it, and the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

Other words with a similar meaning, such as joy and bliss, appear in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, but a review of all instances reveals that ecstasy is used in the context of certain other components of the Michaelian teachings that those other words are not. Consequently, those words are reviewed in other chapters.

Definition of Ecstasy

So what is meant by ecstasy? The online American Heritage dictionary definition is:

Intense joy or delight.

A state of emotion so intense that one is carried beyond rational thought and self-control.

The trance, frenzy, or rapture associated with mystic or prophetic exaltation. {retrieved 01 November 2022}

Ecstasy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

[consider dividing into subsections on synonyms, why, what, how]

The first mention of ecstasy appears in one of the first session transcriptions that we have, a session with Soleal, before the Michaels appeared to the original Michaelian group. The context was sexual energy and the higher Centers.

Dick: Love and sex seem like separate things – but when they're pulling together, it seems like a stronger force is generated than either by itself. It seems like the only kind of energy that I have experienced to date that might be the kind of energy that you need for actual evolution.

[Soleal:] Sexual energy, when used to express higher Centers, can be incredibly strong. When the energy is relegated downward, it results in an energy leak. That is sometimes why you want to sleep after physical union. You fed lower Centers — sometimes the Moving Center and the Essence is exhausted, so the body goes to sleep to free the Essence. When you use Emotional Center to express Moving [Center] needs, don't you feel the leak? So, if you feel that, just stretch your mind. Right now, you are all using Emotional Centers to satisfy Moving [Center] needs and this is a result that is culturally induced — that you feel something uplifting each time you have a physical union. That is absurd! It just is not possible. The body is not capable of experiencing ecstasy. Only the Essence can experience ecstasy. The body does not even come close with its sensual pleasures. [03 July 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” for more discussion of the connection of sexuality with ecstasy. Basically and briefly, sex has its sensual pleasures, but it can also have its spiritual ecstasies. Sex between some people is an ecstatic experience when it fosters Essence contact. Numerous other passages make a connection between ‘higher’ Center sexuality and ecstasy, as we see below, and the chapter on “Centers, Higher”.

The word appears again in the first session in which the Michaels were the source:

Comment: It appears to me that in consciousness-raising, you don't concentrate.

Concentration on a single goal. In this case, the goal would be ecstasy. [12 August 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Meditation and Concentration” for more about that. Basically and briefly, an intensely focused meditative concentration on having the experience can in fact generate ecstasy.

... The Essence must pursue ecstasy in its own way or it is bored. [18 September 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Boredom” for more about an experience that is the antithesis of ecstasy. As stated previously, the Personality–self can seek ecstasy via the concentration pole of meditation, and that is fine, but the Essence–self has its ways also.

Dick: Are some people Sexually Centered?

No. Sexual energy is separate and apart from all other energy sources and can be effectively used to reach higher emotions.

Phyllis: If you experience sex on a higher level, what would be going on?

Cerebral orgasm. The whole soul experiences ecstasy. The body cannot experience ecstasy, only satiation. Only the Essence is capable of that experience [ecstasy]. [27 September 1973]

More is said about the synonyms in the chapter “Sexuality”, but notice that in these Q&A exchanges that “ecstasy” is connected to “higher emotions”, apparently referring to the Higher Emotional Center, and to “cerebral orgasm”. This is not the last time that we will see the synonyms.

Dick: It seems that it is the Personality that is mad — the Personality is the wolf and it is trying to eat Essence and beat on it.

It is only trying to survive. Survival is the goal for the organism [the physical body and False Personality]. Ecstasy is the goal of the Essence. Being burned at the stake was an ecstatic experience for the soul of Joan d'Arc.

Liberation — whether by death by fire or whatever method — is the goal. The body seeks to survive regardless. [02 October 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Liberation” for more about that. Basically and briefly, Essence gets “trapped” in the body by “karma”, and it wants to be free. Apparently, Essence finds incarnation to be a ‘necessary evil’ on its journey back to the Tao. Note the contrast between the goal of the physical organism and the goal of the spiritual Essence, and note that these two are reciprocally related: the more of one the less of the other. What is said here about Joan is succinctly embodied in the aphorism “Suffering is good for the soul”; refer to the chapter “Suffering”. There you will read that, basically and briefly, some spiritual aspirants intentionally inflict suffering on themselves, believing that this suffering will provoke spiritual growth. The Michaels regard this as an unnecessary and perhaps counterproductive practice. Jesus apparently agrees, because in the Sermon on the Mount, he says “Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.” (Matthew 6:34) The human condition provides the appropriate amount of suffering to liberate the Essence in due time.

Dick: You can't do that — not a burning love inside yourself.

A deep sense of spiritual satisfaction is the only reward that we [the Michaels] know of. You may call it ecstasy or whatever you wish. Stop a moment and ask yourself, why is it that you search and for what. [06 October 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Reward” for more discussion about what the Michaels had to say on the subject. There you will read that, basically and briefly, psychologists tell us that there is a biochemical reward system in the brain that steers us via pleasurable sensations toward experiences that are beneficial for the organism. You may read about that in many places on the internet, such as ><https://www.simplypsychology.org/brain-reward-system.html><. As below, so above: there is an analogue for this physical phenomenon in the spiritual realm, and this study paper provides a list of rewarding ecstatic experiences that steer us toward “a deep sense of spiritual satisfaction”.

Edgar: What happens when I am united with my Fragments?

When you finally reunite with all the Fragments, you will no longer be subject to the allurements of the Physical Plane, and for you, Edgar, since you have been in touch with the occult for over ten thousand years, you will know this and you will experience the ecstasy. [31 December 1973]

This tells us that reintegration with kindred souls after the reincarnation cycle is finished is ecstatic, but we can reasonably surmise that the same is true of polarized energy exchanges with kindred souls while incarnate.

Dick: In reading Robert Monroe's book, out of the body book [Journeys Out of the Body], his trips were nothing at all like a synthesis. He saw sub-human, fish-like creatures ... nothing like Michael describes. I'd like a comment on that and also one on what Monroe describes as “sex after death” — that he describes as male and female “zapping” together, not with organs but something else.

Astral matter is extremely flexible; malleable is a better term. You can do with it as you like.

As for the ecstatic feelings, that is the goal toward which we work. He would have to call it “sexual” since this is the only explanation available to him. [03 January 1974]

Contact with one's own Essence is “ecstatic”, and contact with the Essence of another person is “ecstatic”, and the feeling of the latter is often interpreted in sexual terms, because a cerebral orgasm is somewhat like a physical orgasm. I see these as the Positive and Negative Poles of ecstasy respectively. Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” for more discussion of what I prefer to call “polarized energy exchanges”. Here on the Physical Plane, the closest analogue to the primordial polarity of Ordinal and Cardinal is female and male, whereas on the Astral Plane, the analogy is between other polarized factors in the Fragment. The basic principle that applies to both physical and spiritual realms is that the collapse of a polarity into a unity is subjectively experienced as ecstasy, and has the name “love” – refer to the chapter by that name.

There is polarity on the Physical Plane and the Astral Plane, but is there polarity on the Causal Plane?

Dick: Is there anything resembling sex on the Causal plane?

There is, but it is genderless. The Essence is thoroughly capable of experiencing the ecstasy and frequently does. The Personality cannot because of the pain-pleasure Monad. It is automatic. In your culture, it is imprinted early in life that if you are to experience pleasure, you also must have pain. The entire Entity [Michael] experiences. There are no more Fragments. We are whole. [10 March 1974]

Elsewhere it is said that the Entity is fully reconstituted on the Cardinal levels of the Astral Plane, and the Cadre of seven Entities is reconstituted on the Cardinal levels of the Causal Plane. Reintegration of Fragments with their larger composites are subjectively experienced as ecstatic, as noted above.

In the original Michaelian group transcriptions, ecstasy often appears in the context of sexuality, obviously because of the analogy of cerebral and physical orgasm:

Question regarding exorcism as described in the journal, Medical Aspects of Human Sexuality, March 1974, page 159.

This behavior is certainly not confined to France, sixteenth through eighteenth centuries. It continues to exist today among those who find it impossible to express their sexuality through mundane channels. It was used extensively by homosexual males since the dawn of time. Also, in a relatively positive and low-key society, all forms of hysteria, including religious fervor and sexual ecstasy, were interpreted as “possession” in an extremely polite society such as the Rome of the republican era. This was often the case and those who were unfortunate enough to be unduly enthusiastic were declared to be mad and sent away, or in the case of slaves, put out of their misery. [27 March 1974]

Obviously, the type of “sexual ecstasy” mentioned in that answer is the physical kind at the Ordinal Pole of the experience, not the spiritual kind at the Cardinal Pole that is the goal of the Essence.

Edgar: Moses raised the serpent. Jesus said, “If I be lifted up,” etc. What is the relationship to kundalini here?

Yes, this [kundalini] is the highest form of movable energy you have at your disposal and therefore, that which you can utilize for each: the emotional states or Higher Emotional Centers, Higher Intellectual Centers, which are synonymous with subjective consciousness [and] objective consciousness respectively. Also, with the same had just described by the yogi [sic]. The lower Centers are fixed and the energy is like a closed system. The higher Centers are capable of ecstasy or bliss; the lower Centers are not. The Sexual Center or the kundalini force can only be breached by bringing the lower Centers into harmonious Balance. In other words, in separating from the Maya or illusions for glamour of the Physical Plane and by giving up your expectations of what a sexual experience should be. [27 April 1974]

Refer to chapters “Consciousness — Subjective and Objective”, “Centers, Higher”, “Kundalini”, “Sexuality”, “Maya”, “Glamour”, and “Expectations” for more discussion of subjects mentioned in that passage. A careful review of the original Michaelian group transcriptions tells me that ecstasy is an experience of the Higher Emotional Center more than it is of the Higher Intellectual Center or of the Higher Moving (aka Sexual) Center. Contact with Essence, mentioned numerous times in this chapter on ecstasy, is also said to be a higher Center experience.

Mallory: It is not a dramatic thing; it just is. A person in the present is not experiencing anything dramatic. Does a Balanced Man feel high? It was said last time that the “surge” comes when one becomes Balanced.

If the moment is a quiet one, Balanced Man will feel the tranquility. If it is a “high” [moment], then Balanced Man will feel the ecstasy of the moment. Ironically, the reverse is often true in Mechanical Man. Young Souls involved with ecology legalization will often feel surges of emotionalism when confronted with a pacific, woodland environment. [17 September 1974]

This passage is a supplement to the immediately previous passage about the relationship of Centers to ecstasy. Refer to chapters “Mechanical Man” and “Balanced Man”. Basically and briefly, Mechanical Man lives in the lower Centers, Balanced Man lives in the Instinctive Center, aka Neutral Assimilation Center and higher Centers.

Liz: Growth doesn’t occur in a vacuum. One must immerse himself in something — relate with someone — in order to grow, right?

Liz, spiritual growth is an extremely active process, but many times, it isolates you from the mainstream — this is what we are saying. Spiritual enlightenment, which is indeed a byproduct, is an ecstatic experience to which nothing can possibly compare. [28 September 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Enlightenment” for more discussion of that. original Michaelian group members were far more interested in transcendence than subsequent students seem to be, typically.

Creatures of Reason have it all over their fellow inhabitants, as they alone are able to experience awe and delight. But the Creatures of Reason in this culture seldom allow themselves this luxury. They instead find devious methods of avoiding these experiences. The denial of pleasure and the pursuit of pain is high on your list of priority, and it should be clear now why this is true, but there is no reason for it other than the instinctive memories. This is the strongest reason we know of for working on the separation from your Personality and allowing the Essence to free itself. Only the Essence can experience ecstasy. We have told you this before and we emphasized it again and again, to keep you aware of the goal. Separation from the Personality’s conflicts allows the student to override the instinctive behavior patterns that now govern your actions. [21 December 1974]

Here again, the Michaels weave ecstasy into the tapestry of other components of their teaching. Refer to the chapters “Creature of Reason”, “Pleasure”, “Instinct”, and “Essence and Personality” for further discussion.

Sarah found herself reciting parts of the Koran. She noted that she used religious rituals as a way to release emotions.

This soul has searched through the ages for truth. The Scholar has sought to intellectualize all experiences of ecstasy and has, therefore, denied the experience. Being now in touch, however timorously, with truth is both threatening and incredibly inviting. To allow the experience, ritual, or some form that will enable the intellect to recede, could be beneficial. More talking about it is not Good Work, and merely prolongs the agony that must, of course, precede the ecstasy. We patiently await your trying another doorway. [11 January 1975]

Here again, the Michaels weave ecstasy into the tapestry of other components of their teaching. Refer to chapters “Religion”, “Emotional Center”, “Truth”, “Ritual”, “Good Work, Bad Work”.

Dick: I feel the only route to Positive Pole of Sexual Center is love.

We have no quarrel with that, either. The only ecstasy that we know of occurring during the sexual act has occurred in Adepts who are Balanced and who do express Agape. [25 January 1975]

Please stop associating religion with the "church". Religion is the ecstasy of the Logos. In your society, the church is a business in Artificial Space. One is of the Essence; one is not. One is in Real Space; one is not. Preparing an altar for the experience can be third line work of the highest order or it can be a drudge — or even worse, it can be a mockery. Or better yet, for those in the Work, it can be the gift of higher expression. [16 February 1975]

All do not grow to appreciate that which is in Essence, but most do experience a nagging pull in that direction. Religion has nothing to do with formal belief in any one particular system. We would have you look upon religion as an ecstatic celebration of the pan-dimensional life of the constant creative force of the universe, of the Tao. We would see you look upon religion as the joy of the liberated Essence. [Dimensions! Magazine, June 1975]

In a limited sense, it is possible to function on the Physical Plane in Essence. Survival is the goal of the Personality and this is directly opposed to the goal of the Essence, which is ecstasy. The Personality cannot forgive, because in doing so, it exposes its Achilles heel to anti-survival thrusts. For instance, hostility must be met with the back to the wall if survival is to be assured. The other, especially if he be more powerful, must be the first to concede. Then a certain pseudo forgiveness takes place. [21 November 1976]

Love from the higher Centers cannot even be made by the part of the lower Center from which the Overleaves operate. It can be glimpsed in those rare moments when the Overleaves are vanquished, either by mind expanders [psychedelics] or by religious ecstasy or by application of the Work — that is, either through meditation or concentration that is diligently pursued. The group high that is experienced by the student is, oddly enough, an excellent stepping-stone. This is why this Entity emphasizes group Work rather than solitary struggle. What you are seeking, dear students, is a high and it is the highest high that you can possibly imagine, and however you get there is not nearly as important as the thing itself. What do you think that word (Agape) means? Agape is the highest high. [30 September 1977]

Joan: I am afraid of making mistakes in my ballet class.

The dance has always been intimately connected with the "letting go" of the Personality and intimately entwined in the spiritual quest. The dance is frightening to most. It represents the ecstatic abandonment of which Dick has spoken and this is sensed on many levels by the dancer, however mature that dancer might be. The man George (Gurdjieff) discerned this and made the dance an integral part of his spiritual teaching. It is possible to abandon one's self in the dance and you, Joan, do not like that. At least, not at the present time moment. The Spiritualist Priest would, but other Overleaves in conflict would not. [21 October 1977]

Cynthia mentioned that it seemed to be as she suspected, that the material the teacher has given us is complete and we just haven't figured out how to use it properly. This was the response:

No, Cynthia, the material is obviously not all there, as you — and we mean that collectively — are not satisfied and still search. When enlightenment occurs the quest is over, at least insofar as the Physical Plane is concerned. We have been so far unable to instill in you the permission, or give you the permission to seek that ecstasy or joy that is the end product of all that you seek. However, at least all of you are experimenting with the possibility that there may be such a state as ecstasy. Many are not even that lucky. Richard — the other Richard — has chosen to leave (he had fallen asleep on the floor) because this is frightening information for him. He cannot even contemplate what this quality might bring to him, for it would mean utter destruction of all of his defense mechanisms. Even simple happiness is quite beyond his grasp, and yes, anyone with the same Overleaves exactly will experience this difficulty to a greater or lesser extent. All those with Cynthia's Overleaves exactly will experience her dilemmas and frustrations, and if they are in a teaching, they will be fortunate enough to be allowed to look at them and decide whether or not to change their course. Cynthia uses the Overleaves many times to make her life not work because she has been led to believe that her life will not work. She uses her lack of formal education as an excuse not to have to formulate goals for herself because that would conflict with the picture that the Overleaves have of themselves. Alice defeats herself in the same fashion because two of her Overleaves would be terrified of success. [04 November 1977]

Concluding Comments on Ecstasy

The word “ecstasy” occurs many times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions (I count xxx). Consequently, this is not a brief chapter. Ecstasy is yet another one of those subjects that was significant in the original Michaelian group — and it was mentioned in Messages from Michael a half dozen times — but the subject never gained any traction in the consciousness of subsequent Michaelian students, or groups thereof. Ecstasy was said to be one of the goals of the Michaelian teachings, right up there with Agape and such. And ecstasy is connected to many components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be consequential. To my way of thinking and feeling, the resurrection and examination of subjects such as this makes the writing of this Study Papers book all the more worthwhile.

Psychedelics?

Ecstasy is mentioned in conjunction with various phenomena. These are:

- ‘higher’ level sexual experiences
- Essence Contact, either with our own Essence, or contact with other Essences
- reintegration of the Fragments of Composites

⑦ EGO

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “ego” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) Ego issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. In the next section, you will see that the Michaels use the word with both a negative and positive connotation: ego as –Ego is a negative worth eschewing and ego as +Ego is a positive worth cultivating. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on various websites, including https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

The word “ego” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. This word has varying definitions in both the general understanding and in the Michaelian presentation. Let’s look at the common definition first, then review the Michaelian perspective.

It might be a little surprising how often this word ego shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

Definition of Ego

So what is meant by the word “ego”? Let’s check the dictionary.

1: the self especially as contrasted with another self or the world

2a: EGOTISM sense 2

2b: SELF-ESTEEM sense 1

3: the one of the three divisions of the psyche in psychoanalytic theory that serves as the organized conscious mediator between the person and reality especially by functioning both in the perception of and adaptation to reality; compare ID, SUPEREGO

Did you know?

Ego is the Latin word for “I”. So if a person seems to begin every sentence with “I”, it’s sometimes a sign of a big ego. It was the psychologist Sigmund Freud (well, actually his original translator) who put ego into the popular vocabulary, but what he meant by the word is complex, so only other psychologists really use it in the Freudian sense. The rest of us generally use ego simply to mean one's sense of self-worth, whether exaggerated or not. When used in the "exaggerated" sense, ego is almost the same thing as conceit. [-Ego] Meeting a superstar athlete without a trace of this kind of ego would be a most refreshing experience. But having a reasonable sense of your own worth is no sin. Life's little everyday victories are good — in fact, necessary — for a healthy ego. [+Ego] [<https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/ego>< — retrieved 28 February 2023]

Speaking of Freud, Wikipedia has a lengthy definition and description of the Freudian use of the term, and that contains this summary:

In modern English, ego has many meanings. It could mean one's self-esteem; an inflated sense of self-worth; the conscious-thinking self; or in philosophical terms, one's self. Ego development is known as the development of multiple processes, cognitive function, defenses, and interpersonal skills, or to early adolescence when ego processes are emerged. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Id,_ego_and_super-ego#Ego< — retrieved 28 February 2023]

Refer to the Chapter 4Q, "The Seven Life-Stages", in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart for the documentation about "ego emergence" in "early adolescence". There you will read that adolescence is the time when a person develops an "ego" — meaning, a sense of self-hood — that is distinct from the family of origin, during the third Life-Stage, which correlates with the Ordinal Expression Process of the Overleaf System.

Notice that the definition of ego is somewhat ambiguous in the common vernacular, and such is the case with the original Michaelian group transcriptions. The Michaels admit that "We are guilty of some semantic ambiguity at times..." (27 March 1974), and their usage of this particular word is an example. In order to clarify the ambiguity, in my commentary on the Q&A exchanges, I say that the "ego" has a Positive Pole, +Ego — which is a healthy sense of self— and it has a Negative Pole, -Ego — which is an unhealthy sense of self. In all cases, inside and outside the Michaelian teachings, one should consider the context, and thereby discern which Pole is meant.

Another way to characterize -Ego versus +Ego is to note that ego-selves have a 'membrane' of some kind, whether physical or psychological, that defines a boundary between the self and the not-self. A person with an +Ego regards the membrane as joining self with not-self, whereas a person with an -Ego regards the membrane as separating self from not-self. This fundamental difference in perception or attitude is functionally equivalent to the distinction between "Love" and "Fear"; refer to the chapters by those names.

Ego per Gurdjieff

Founding members of the original Michaelian group had for a while been affiliated with a local Fourth Way group. For the story about that, refer to the chapter "Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton". Basically and briefly, the Michaels adopted and adapted some of the concepts that they learned therein. The word ego does not appear in the index of Ouspensky's book In Search of the Miraculous, or in the index of Ouspensky's book The Fourth Way. However, this does not mean that Gurdjieff and Ouspensky were unaware of the concept; they just had a different name for it. Therefore, refer to the chapter "I's, Many" for the discussion about the Gurdjieffian conceptualization of the ego.

Ego per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The earliest mentions of ego appear before the Michaels appeared:

[Soleal:] Renunciation would feed the ego and would be Bad Work. [mid 1973]

Here it seems to me that ego is used as a synonym for self-righteousness. If you do anything solely for the reason that it 'buffs and/or puffs' your ego, then it would be Good Work for you to examine your motives. Refer to the chapter "Good Work, Bad Work" for the documentation of, and evaluation–categorization of, various and many activities into positive and negative bins. Also refer to the chapter "Motivation".

In the next appearance of the word, in the first full session transcript that we have, another meaning of ego is understood by its context. Founding member Carolyn is learning to channel:

Carolyn: Does that apply to me?

[Tomas:] No, no, you could do great things if you will just get you out of the way. The biggest problem in something like this is in getting the ego out of the way. You have to get you out of the way. When you can put you out of the way and let the other shine through, then you can do it. [19 June 1973]

Here it seems to me that ego is referring to one's usual state of consciousness. In channeling, that ego must be submerged or superseded by another 'entity', meaning, another ego-self, and if that does not happen completely, then misinformation will happen; refer to the chapter "Bias" for more about that factor in channeling.

[Tomas:] ... he [Dick] follows instructions like a Mercury. That can give me an ego problem, he reacts [takes my advice] so suddenly [quickly]. [10 July 1973]

Tomas was an Astral Fragment, so he had an Astral Plane perspective, but he was no more evolved than the original Michaelian group members, so he still had some egotism to contend with. However, Astral Fragments are almost surely more aware of their issues, ego and otherwise, than Physical Plane Personalities are.

In this same session, the conversation about ego continued:

Gene: Are we asking the right questions? Can these help? Should we pick a subject?

[Tomas:] You are correct in your long explanatory phrasing about the questions and answers. That is why I asked you to think up a subject prior to the meeting. If I give you the question and then the answer, I will have problems with my ego, and you will most likely learn nothing. [10 July 1973]

Tomas still had an ego problem, meaning that his sense of self was dependent on what others thought of him and how others responded to him, but the Michaels never admitted to such.

By the way, this answer is a clue to why the Michaels prefer that their students ask questions and they have a dialogue, an exchange, rather than the Michaels deliver a didactic monologue to their students, as would be the case with the Michaels dictating books: a Q&A dialogue is a more effective learning environment; refer to the chapter "Dialogue".

Speaking of the Michaels, most of the following Q&A exchanges are from them.

The ponderousness of Sri Aurobindo's books and the books written by Dr. Chaudhary were discussed.

Dr. Chaudhary is not a Young Soul. He is wordy because of national origin. Writing in his own language, he is quite different. He has not resolved his ego either; he must appear erudite at all times. This is part of Karma for him. [26 August 1973]

That Chaudhary was a PhD is an indication that he was in fact erudite, and that is okay, but that he must appear erudite is egotistical. The allusion to Karma here might refer to what later became known in the Michaelian teachings as "self-karma", meaning that there is a lesson here that his soul has chosen for his incarnate Personality to learn; refer to the chapter "Karma" for more about that; basically and briefly, karma is an intense learning experience, whether voluntary or involuntary. In this case, where the "ego" was involved, there was a lesson to be learned about what is called "epistemic humility", the lesson being: don't be a "know it all". In fact, the more you know, the more you should realize that there is so much more yet to know.

Heretofore, we can discern several meanings of the word ego by examining the context in which the word appears, but then the Michaels defined it:

Discussion: The word "ego" was discussed extensively at this point. Unfortunately, there is no recording, so this scribe is unable to capture it in essence. However, Ellis did mention that he had been searching for fifty years, and he wondered how to get away from ego (False Personality).

The word does not matter so much as your understanding. However, "ego" to the psychiatrist normally means "self", so be certain that you all understand each other. For purpose of ease in transmission, we have been using terminology familiar to the majority, with some variation. For instance, we perceive no schism between "self", "soul", and "Essence"; all are spiritual. False Personality is attached to the organism [physical body]. [08 October 1973]

Regarding "self", "soul", and "Essence", the Michaels admitted "We are guilty of some semantic ambiguity at times" (27 March 1974). My preference is to not have semantic ambiguities, so I suggest that the reader refer to chapters “Soul” and “Essence and Personality” wherein I attempt to clarify definitions of those terms as used by the Michaels.

This passage hints to me that there is a Negative Pole of ego and a Positive Pole of ego. Heretofore, in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, the word ego was used in a negative or pejorative sense, as self-righteousness, as limiting, and as egotistical; refer to the chapter “Personality — True and False” for more about the negative meaning of ego as False Personality, but also the positive meaning of ego as True Personality. There is the neutral sense that some psychologists prefer, where ego means having a well-defined internally-consistent sense of self-hood, neither positive nor negative. The Michaels do not exclude the neutral meaning. Further on, I will expand the meaning of ego to include the Fragmentation of the primordial undifferentiated Tao, which I regard as the origin of self-hood.

Ellis: As I received it cold from the [Ouija] board, my ego got in the way. He [Michael] was telling me I was wrong and I knew that could not be right. I see now that that is where the freedom lies, in letting go and opening. [23 October 1973]

It is okay to have a healthy ego in the sense that one has proper boundaries about who one really and truly is, but a healthy ego is also willing to let go of the smaller self and open to the larger self. In other words, the ego, the lower self, should learn and grow and develop enough to express the higher self consistently; refer to the chapter “Higher Self”. The lower self is experienced as confining, whereas the higher self is experienced as liberating.

Ray: I have energy surges after healing treatments, and I have a fear of this being from False Personality or my ego.

If the surge is caused by elation of a false sort, a feeling of tiredness will supervene soon afterward. [08 November 1973]

It is up to the student to learn to discern what is ego inflation in False Personality versus what is ego elevation or liberation in True Personality, which is aware of the higher self. The latter has no subsequent “let-down”, whereas the former does.

The following Q&A exchange mentions “Troubled Souls”, so refer to the chapter by that name.

Evelyn: What is the Level and Role of my brother?

This was a troubled Fifth Level Mature Priest. (Committed suicide at age 36.)

Dick: Troubled where? Personality or soul?

That is valid [it is both]. This is a conflict between Essence and Personality. It is when the individual Fragment cannot cope with the conflict, that the integrative defense mechanism falls apart and allows the ego to disintegrate before there is any strength in Essence, leaving the soul goalless and adrift. [15 November 1973]

In addition to the definition of ego provided previously, this is another key passage for understanding the proper function of ego versus the improper function. I take the phrase “integrative defense mechanism” to refer to a property of all living beings: they have a membrane or skin, and that defines the boundary of self and not-self. Another property of living things is the desire to maintain the integrity of the self, which is to say that they have a built-in will to continue to live, and that often includes defending the self against the forces of disintegration both inside and outside the membrane. One of the primary goals of organisms typically is to achieve and maintain equilibrium or homeostasis (another is reproduction). If this integrity is not properly defended, then the organism will die; it will not evolve into a better organism, nor will it team up with other organisms to make a better society of organisms.

However much any particular ego-self might desire to live forever in the status quo, this is not the way of nature as a whole. The entire “ego-self” can be visualized as levels in space and/or stages in time, such that the membrane between self and not-self is porous or ambiguous; there is a constant feedback between self and not-self, and the two must adjust to each other. As we have seen previously, the spectrum of the so-called “ego” spans from sub-personalities to False Personality to True Personality, but we know that beyond True Personality there are other levels/stages of ego-self, namely the soul-self, the Fragment self, the composite-self (of kindred souls), and the Essence-self. (Refer to chapters “I’s, Many”, “Soul”, “Fragment”, “Composites”.) If the lower-earlier levels/stages of ego-self cannot resolve the conflicts within the level/stage, or resolve the conflicts between the levels/stages in the hierarchy of selves, then there can be disastrous results. That there are “conflicts”, as the Michaels said, indicates that there is a power struggle between integrative and disintegrative forces all up and down the spectrum of ego-self; this is another instantiation of the Monad Principle (refer to the chapter “Monads”). If integration wins, then ego-self ascends the spectrum by embracing the more-inclusive ego-self. If disintegration wins, then ego-self descends the spectrum or breaks down into its sub-personalities, called “dissociative identity disorder” in the psychiatric profession. A complete repudiation of the egoic struggle, a suicide that benefits no other self, is the most extreme case of disintegration.

However, there is a type of suicide that is integrative: it is built into nature in the form of self-sacrifice for the greater good. Among living organisms, selves feed on other living selves for the sake of the survival of the organism, but also for the sake of the survival of the ecosystem as a whole. This also happens within multicellular living organisms, where individual cells are continually recycled for the sake of the entire organism. In the case of the spiritual path, it is preferred that the lower–earlier levels/stages of self-hood should yield (or “die”) to the higher–later levels/stages of self-hood, thus: False Personality > True Personality > soul > Fragment > kindred souls > Essence (as I prefer to define those terms).

[Dick:] My ego would be famous overnight and would like it.

Part of your evolution will be the loss of your ego, which would like the [fame]. [20 November 1973]

The context here indicates that the False Personality pole of the ego is intended, where the death of the old ego-self is okay if it leads to the ascendance of the new ego-self at the next higher level/stage. The achievement of fame often intensifies the normal conflict between the False Personality and the True Personality, and exacerbates the struggle between disintegration and integration. Some celebrities have a breakdown, as in they ‘crash and burn’, whereas others make a breakthrough, as in “That which does not kill me makes me stronger”.

Dick again brought up his ego issues in a session a month later:

Dick: I would like to ask about spiritual materialism — that is, using the powers of the teaching to draw attention to myself. That is, using the teaching for ego gratification. There is a conflict developing here.

Haven’t you discovered yet that all things that are ego-gratifying have an element of delicious clandestine guilt attached? The ego seeks intrigue and adventure; the Essence does not. [16 December 1973]

Obviously, that use of the word ego referred to the Negative Pole of self-hood. When you observe yourself feeling seduced by intrigue and adventure, you know that it is from the Negative Pole of ego rather than from the most Positive Pole of ego, namely Essence. Refer to the chapter “Guilt” for more discussion about that emotion. There you will read that guilt also has a Negative and a Positive Pole, the Negative Pole that puts the self down and the Positive Pole that motivates the self to do better next time. In other words, Negative guilt pushes the –Ego down the hierarchy of self-hood and Positive guilt pushes the +Ego up the hierarchy of self-hood.

That ego has to do with levels/stages of self-hood is not just my idea:

Richard: I would appreciate a comment on my sharing my insights with people who do not seem to care or understand what I am saying. It seems I am at a higher level. Is this my ego dragging me down to a lower level? [16 December 1973]

That question was reminiscent of previous uses of the word ego as referring to illegitimate self-promotion or self-aggrandizement of some kind. One must be careful to not try to teach others from a high perch of presumed superiority. Newbie Michaelian students want to share the wonderful teaching, and that can be okay to do so with people who are genuinely receptive, but to do so out of a feeling of superiority is not good.

Schizophrenics are Mid-Cycle Mature Souls who have ego disintegration without the corresponding spiritual growth. [27 December 1973]

The psychiatric term for “ego disintegration” used to be called schizophrenia or multiple personality disorder but is now called “dissociative identity disorder”; refer to the chapter “Health — Mental and Physical” for more discussion of mental illnesses. The way it is used here, “ego disintegration” (the death of False Personality) is a good thing if it is accompanied by spiritual growth (emergence of True Personality). My preference is to see the development of a healthy “ego” (self-hood) at each level/stage of the process of spiritual growth, because the idea is to then outgrow each level/stage of self-hood. Typically, one enters a level/stage of self-hood in the Negative Pole, then grows enough to exit that level/stage through the Positive Pole.

Tina: Are there any of my former lives that I can read about? I feel this has something to do with my ego.

You have had two very interesting lives, Tina. Ego gratification would be a very natural phenomenon for one on the Physical Plane upon hearing that they were a leading figure in the past. One must realize that out of all of those intervals [incarnations], accomplishment of this nature must have been yours at least once, especially with the role you chose. In the eighteenth century, you were a young dilettante in France by the name of Jean Jacques Rousseau. In the fourteenth century, you were with Theresa T’Avail. [24 January 1974]

One of the egoist things that people tend to do when they learn about reincarnation is to wonder if they were ever anyone famous in a past life. (For the record, when I asked about this, the answer was No, but it was said that I had been affiliated with the German polymath Goethe.) Just as comparing yourself with your contemporaries is not ego-healthy, comparing yourself with a famous past life of your own is not ego-healthy, unless you are in this life a person of notoriety and influence. On the other hand, if one happens to find out that they were a person in the historical record, then to read about that person might give them helpful insights about their current life, because past lives do shape one's current "ego", or identity or self-hood.

Edgar: I would like to return to the comment you made at the beginning of the evening on the origin of the species, Homo Sapiens. We seem to ignore it with our egotistical questions.

We have discussed the problem of personal agendas before. We do understand this drive [to ask egotistical questions] and we do not deplore it; it is just that we have much more time than any of you, and we would be of as much help as possible in the limited time available. Being in a more intimate [communal] situation would also eliminate this problem [because it would minimize egotistical focus]. We will discuss this question of origin [of Homo Sapiens] again soon. It is important that you have some foundation in this before you begin to expound [the Michaelian teaching outside the group]. [24 January 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Agenda". In some Michaelian groups subsequent to the original Michaelian group, the policy is or was to ask one "egotistical (personal) question" and one general interest question that furthered the Michaelian teachings. Both types are appropriate, and should be apportioned with the balance of individual benefit versus group benefit in mind, in order to maximize the overall benefit.

Shirley: I feel Ray has something to contribute, and the problem is that his ego gets in the way. [31 January 1974]

Ray was a Sage, and Sages do tend to be self-centered and self-absorbed, so maybe that is the meaning of "ego" that was intended in that passage. Those of us who are not Sages but interact with Sages do well to not let their egotism — if they are still trapped there — get in the way of appreciating what they have to offer.

It is often the case that how a person says something (e.g., it is egotistical) makes what they say seem unpalatable and easy to dismiss. A skill worth developing is the ability to filter out the off-putting ego stuff so that you do not 'throw out the baby with the bathwater'. An example of this is:

Cynthia: I have lots of ego attachment.... It may be that I like to show off. [18 February 1974]

Cynthia was an Old Sage in Growth and Passion, in the Intellectual Part of Emotional Center, which makes a so-called "motor-mouth". In a case like that, those who listen have a lot of 'chaff' to separate in order to see the 'wheat' in what they are saying. By the way, "ego" in the sense of self-absorption is typical for all three Cardinal Roles: Sage, Priest, and King.

Edgar: I suppose it is ego that wants to be healed physically. [17 March 1974]

Edgar was in a wheelchair and his ego resented it. Refer to the notion of self-karma mentioned previously: this is where the soul self chooses to experience something that the Personality self would un-choose if it could. Here again, I say that the lower self-hood should 'die' by accepting the choices of a higher self-hood.

The following is another excellent Q&A exchange on the subject of -Ego versus +Ego:

Dick: I become irritated with people who have expectations who tell me not to have any. One cannot initiate anything unless he has expectations. There are rare times when I can just be and have no expectations, and that is beautiful. This leads me to a topic I could not understand with Robert [Burton]'s group, where it was the goal to give up one's ego. As I see it, from one's ego comes one's self-image, one's power, one's strength. If my ego is deficient, then I am in a depressed state and for sure cannot love. In Robert's group, they continue to put down ego, one way by calling I "it": e.g., "It went to dinner" instead of "I went to dinner." I have been trying the EST and Ken Keyes's way to experience experiences. If I'm down, I don't ask myself what to do to go up. I aggravate the down so I can feel it as full as possible. I have burned out a number of things in this way, but I do not feel better for it. It seems that if I have lightened my load, I should feel more buoyant and better. Maybe I haven't tackled the basic problems. Could Michael comment on ego strength?

What you wish to give up is the strength of the ego of the Personality. The Essence has much [ego] strength of its own. They are separate and distinct. Remember, when you become your Essence, there will not be the albatross of [your] Repression [Mode] to deal with. Perhaps it would be helpful to point out to you at this time, Dick, that you come far closer to loving when you are painting than at any other time. You do not have to start with loving difficult persons; this is not the primary objective at this time [stage/level in the hierarchy of self-hood]. Loving is Higher Emotion, and that requires Balance [of all Centers]. The person who is "conscious" is not a doer anyway. Most who have reached that exalted state of physical being prefer not to do; they are content merely to be with the present — that feeling you have glimpsed when you were in those states briefly.

(paraphrased) This is something we have asked you to consider before: what is it you wish to do, learn to be more fruitful and happier in life? or go on to spiritual enlightenment? The goals are very different, and the methods of approach, therefore, would have to be quite different. Living in life requires what you are calling self-image and ego strength. Spiritual acceleration does not require this; it requires negation of the cultural facade. Those who defined the ego and ego states thereof were not, after all, conscious beings, and were observing only the Personalities of others with their own Personalities. The Essence, separate from this, has an innate strength of its own, and can survive if the body is prepared for the surge when it comes. Disintegration only comes when the Personality is lost and the Essence is freed prematurely, such as in some psychotic states. Otherwise, those on the [spiritual] path [of grown up through the hierarchy of self-hood] find the surge exhilarating and liberating, and are prepared for it when it comes, but this only comes after the groundwork has been laid. Those tools we have given you are at your disposal. You might say that the Essence has its own ego; you are just not acquainted with it. The Artisan ego is what has produced the world's great masterpieces, not always for the King's ransom, either, many times in a lonesome gallery [such as yours]. [14 September 1974]

Egos cannot help but have expectations; refer to the chapter "Expectations" for more about that. Also refer to chapters on "Culture" and "Facade" for subjects related to -Ego, or negative self-hood. Doing is a function of the lower ego-self; Being is a function of the higher ego-self. Dick was an Artisan, allegedly the French painter Auguste Renoir in a past life. He painted in a shed in the back yard of his home. Each of the Roles, not just Artisan, has a self-hood that defines what it is good at and what it is not so good at. What to do? Do what you are good at, and do it as a fulfillment of Essence +Ego and not Personality -Ego.

The egotistical self-hood defined by external culture rather than internal integrity is mentioned again:

Is it the egotism of the Intellectual Center not to like housework, or is it a cultural thing?

This has little to do with culture, surprising enough. The Exalted [Cardinal] Roles [Sage, Priest, King] find mundane chores distasteful, particularly those not in the Moving Center. The Ordinal Roles [Warrior, Slave, Artisan] accept them in more grace, but there again, they are often preferred by Warriors and Scholars simply because they point to efficiency and therefore to winning. [17 September 1974]

In this case I understand "ego" to be synonymous with "identity", meaning, what a person is like by nature. This is more than okay, since we come with a different identity in each lifetime, with all of its strengths and weaknesses, cravings and aversions. Regarding the alleged "egotism of the Intellectual Center", it is the nature of that Center to make distinctions and give names to phenomena, so in that sense it is indeed egotistical in the sense of defining self-hood.

It [establishing higher level contact] involves your psyche. It also involves your ego. [17 September 1974]

Here again I note that the concept of "self-hood" applies to levels and stages, one level/stage that is commonly called "ego" and another level/stage that is commonly called "psyche"; refer to the chapter by that name. By the way, the word "psyche" is derived from the Greek word for "soul", so perhaps that statement is equivalent to the difference of Essence versus Personality, as in the following answer:

... work in order to be "right" for you, must be rewarding in the sense that it produces a deep down sense of satisfaction. By this, we do not mean ego gratification but [we do mean] Essence satisfaction. [24 September 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Motivation" and "Reward, Gratification, Satisfaction" for more discussion about discerning why you do what you do, whether driven by the lower -Ego-self or by the higher +Ego-self.

It is now a pattern with him [who threatens suicide] that has become imprinted on this weak ego. [24 September 1974]

Two comments come to mind: 1) a "weak ego" is easily imprinted, and that can be a good thing or a bad thing depending on the characteristics of the person who, or the event that, is doing the imprinting, whether good or bad; 2) a weak ego is subject to disintegration and self-destruction ("suicide"), since a strong ego by nature wants to continue to live, as noted previously.

Abdullah asked if the pressures asserted by the full moon (astrological moon) were influencing behavior of certain ones at the place he works.

It is common that troubled souls react to the full moon with far more intensity than more Balanced-out souls. The thing that these young men had in common was that they were all troubled Mid-Cycle Mature Souls. Troubled souls can sometimes be guided through this difficult period by someone who is able to recognize the ego disintegration, who is in tune with the lunar cycle and also close enough to the involved souls to recognize the restlessness and disorientation that precedes the break. [01 October 1974]

There is a name for the alleged craziness that has been attributed to the full moon: “lunacy”; Wikipedia even has an entry on it: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Lunar_effect<. Refer to the chapter “Troubled Souls” for the whole story about that phrase. There you will read that, basically and briefly, one of the characteristics of troubled souls is “ego disintegration”, meaning that they lose their sense of a unified self — they don’t know who they are any more; they have an “identity crisis”. In an extreme case, as already noted, this is called dissociative identity disorder. Of course, this is a very bad thing, for the soul as well as for the Essence. There is typically a disorientation during the transition between levels/stages, but it is a good thing if the ego, in the sense of having a well-integrated self-hood, moves up the levels/stages of psychological and spiritual development without permanent malfunction.

This medium senses the division existing within the psyche of most of the cadre, and it is the fight for survival. Only the ego needs to survive; the Essence “survives” already in eternity. Impatience, lack of trust, and a stubborn clinging to the “I am not psychic” belief hold you all from experiencing truth, as it is available to all. [28 December 1974]

In that passage, the “ego” self is opposed to the Essence self, and resists transformation; therefore –Ego is conservative by nature, rather than progressive as is +Ego. The old self-hood must metaphorically ‘die’ for the new self-hood to be ‘born’ in its place. The transition between the old self-hood and the new self-hood is troublesome to one degree or another, and if it is unsuccessful, that results in the “troubled soul” mentioned above. Refer to chapters “Essence and Personality”, “Psyche”, “Paranormal, The”, “Truth”, “Trust”, and “Belief System” for more discussion about those relevant topics mentioned in that passage.

The teacher [Michael] and the student [Soleal] are not in conflict except as those roles are seen through the veil of ego. [11 January 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Veil”. There you will read that the –Ego creates an artificial veil between a self and other selves, or a self and the environment. Conflicts between egos are one of the potential results of a sense of separation between self and not-self or other-self.

Besides creating a sense of “self-hood”, another word for what the ego does is “individuation”:

All the ego strength that individuates each of you is as the strength of the wave. It is indeed powerful. It does indeed make its mark, and that mark is erased as the undertow erases all that came before. Erases, but is not forgotten. [05 February 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Individuality” for more discussion about this function of the ego. Regarding ‘erasure’ without ‘forgetting’, I understand this to mean that, each successive ‘wave’ of individuality is the legitimate successor of the previous ‘waves’. In a healthy transformation from one self-hood to the next self-hood, the successive ego state includes the former ego state even as it transcends it. This is explained in much greater detail in Chapter 4Q, “The Seven Life-Stages”, in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart.

There was a great deal of talk at this point about violence, anger, hostility, et cetera, and ways of dealing with it, and moving on to more positive spaces in ourselves.

Ideally, this teaching could provide such an environment where the trust level would give permission to ventilate the anger. But remember that anger is an emotion felt by the ego when its expectations go unfulfilled or even worse, ignored. What should develop within a teaching is the “steward” who can stand aside in each of you and observe the ego ventilating its wrath. But we must realize that only a fraction of self is angry. There is never a time when all the Overleaves are angry or sad or happy. If that ever happened, either enlightenment or disintegration would occur. For instance, Intellectual Center cannot experience anger. [21 March 1977]

One point to be gleaned from that answer is that the –Ego is a rigid identity structure, so it reacts negatively when it encounters something that is inconsistent with its self-image; –Ego does not want to change, but change is built into the system as a whole. What to do? The passage hints that there are two paths that the self-limited ego can take to ‘get over itself’, the positive way and the negative way. The positive way is for the ego to expand the definition of “self” to include first the “steward” (the higher self), and thence ultimately to include the unfragmented Tao; this is the path to “Enlightenment”; refer to the chapter by that name. The negative way is for the ego to “disintegrate”, to ultimately exclude self-hood to such an extreme that only the unfragmented Tao remains. Another way to name these two paths is as I have suggested above, namely +Ego and –Ego. Both paths involve the changing of perceived and functional boundaries. For more information, refer to chapters “Violence”, “Anger”, “Hostility”, “Negativity and Positivity”, “Expectations”, “Trust”, “Steward”, and “Self-Observation”. All of these phenomena are connected in a network of meaning in the Michaelian teachings, and involve the +Ego and the –Ego.

The attachment of the ego to the status quo is mentioned again:

At this point, we talked about lack of readiness.

You are not disgusted enough with the power the ego, or Personality, has over you. All of you — not just Joan. No one of you is willing to take a long, searching look at those Overleaves that are holding you to your stasis. You can move to those Positive Poles. All of you are in love with your current Personalities to a certain extent. In some, this is a controlling interest. In other words, an exaggerated sense of rightness holds you back. [10 April 1977]

The Negative Poles of the Overleaves are of –Ego and self-righteously resist change, whereas the Positive Poles of the Overleaves are of +Ego and embrace change. This means that achieving the Positive Poles is only one step forward toward the “obsolescence” of the Overleaves: refer to the chapter “Overleaves, Changing”.

Dick felt that he wanted to become a Sage [Role], and he felt that this was possible, to change from one Role to another. There was much discussion on a variety of subjects and this was the response:

That state that Dick describes is, of course, that which this Entity chooses to call Agape. That is, “love”. This state cannot be achieved romantically by the Overleaves. In no way can the Personality abandon itself for even one moment. The ego never relaxes its vigil. It is anti-ego to even consider this, for after all, that is when the devil — or as we choose to refer to it — the mass societal ego, can rush in and influence. [03 September 1977]

Not only individuals, but groups and corporations and tribes and cultures and nations have an ego-identity that resists change. Previously, the transcendence of ego was referred to as “enlightenment”; here it is referred to as “Love” and “Agape”; refer to the chapters by those names. There you will read that transcending ego involves the transcendence of cultural programming and of Personality, including the Overleaves, including even the Role.

The subject of transcending the ego, aka Personality, aka Overleaves, was revisited a month later:

On this particular evening, we had a great deal of conversation about the Overleaves and just how much value they really hold for us. We talked about the fact that we feel we don't always use them properly and wondered what we could do to use them more effectively.

The majority of all students of this and comparable teachings use the Overleaves and all other tools given to them in the manner that will allow them to control their environment to their greatest satisfaction and to keep the game they are playing going. Only the exceptional student uses the tool as it is intended. In the case of those of you here present, you use these tools as many less knowledgeable use religion — as a controlling device. All of you need to feel that you are an individual rather than a Fragment of a larger whole. This is the function of the ego — that is, to keep the illusion of separateness intact. If this [illusion] dissolves, the ego is in trouble. [04 November 1977]

One of the features of –Ego is that it wants to control other egos; refer to the chapter “Control” for more about that phenomenon. While you are at it, refer to the chapters “Individuality” and “Separation”, because the preference for that way of life is also very much a function of –Ego. Separation is covered in the chapter “Alienation”. A list of “tools” in the Michaelian toolbox, given to help us transcend –Ego, are found in a chapter by that name. In the healthy dissolution of the –Ego there is a healthy embrace of the “larger wholes”, the +Egos up the hierarchy, from True Personality to soul to Fragment to Cadence to Greater Cadence to Side to Entity to Cadre and so on.

In refusing to see the Overleaves interact in those of similar composition, the ego is merely asserting its conviction that the individualistic approach is the only sane approach. Actually, it is a very insane approach, as all of you could immediately call to mind several hundred areas where there is little or no difference at all in either the function or appearance of those here gathered. But we are equally certain that each of your ego structures could produce quite an impressive list of differences — not only that, but areas where [anti-Agape] no agreement could ever be reached. [04 November 1977]

The –Ego emphasizes differences whereas the +Ego emphasizes agreement, the embrace of ever-larger wholes. The Overleaf System can be used to feed –Ego, but the Michaels revealed the Overleaf System as a tool to be used to transcend –Ego, aka Personality. In fact, the study of any personality typology should be use to evolve above and beyond stuckness in personality per se. The word “balanced” has been used a few times in this chapter when referring to people who are not stuck in one self-hood or another; refer to the chapter “Balanced Man” for the whole story.

(We think the teacher is referring to her Self-deprecation and her Submission.)

Cynthia [a Sage] views tragedy as preferable to no emotion at all, and runs into many situations where she can play out the role of the tragic heroine. This is an incalculably rich role for the Sage in the Passion Mode, and suits the ego well. The only problem is, it leaves the Essence in the lurch. [04 November 1977]

That was yet another in a long series of passages where Personality in general, and personality traits such as Overleaves in particular, are covered with the term “ego”, and the ego is contrasted with the Essence. I should not end this chapter without noting that Essence is another ambiguous term as used in the Michaelian teachings; refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality”. Briefly and basically, the term “essence” also refers to an identity — the “essence” of something being that characteristic or quality without which something would be ambiguous, without definition — since Essence is contrasted with something that has identity, so therefore it is also an ego, or rather an +Ego.

Concluding Comments on Ego

A careful reading and pondering of the original Michaelian group transcriptions allows us to mitigate the ambiguities in the usage of the word “ego”. (The function of ego is in fact to mitigate ambiguity.) Paying attention to the context of the statements is a way to clarify the usages, but so is keeping in mind the following philosophy, which lists the stages in the creation of ego in the first place:

The Tao produced the One, the One produced the Two, the Two produced the Three, the Three produced All things. All things carry the Yin and embrace the Yang, and through the blending of the Chi they achieve harmony. [Lao Tzu, Tao Teh Ching, Chapter 42]

My understanding of “ego” or “I-ness” is informed by the notion that the Tao is infinite consciousness per se, but somehow mysteriously conceives of the notion of finitude or finiteness, and that is the origin of ego-ness or selfhood. In Michaelian terms, this goes by the name “Fragmentation” (refer to the chapter by that name), first into Oneness, then into Twoness, and then into Threeness, and then into Allness. The Overleaf chart is the mandala that reflects this fundamental ontological structure of Personality in subjective time/space, but also reflects the logic and mathematics of objective space/time, because both objective and subjective realms embody the Oneness, Twoness, Threeness, and Allness Principles. We as human ego-selves partake of the making and the breaking of selfhood

The word “ego” refers to a sense of self-hood, an identity that distinguishes a self from a not-self or an other-self. The ego self has attributes or characteristics. The Overleaf System of personality traits is all about human ego. (Chemistry is about atomic and molecular ‘egos’; Biology is about living species, another type of ego-ness; and so on.) One of the inherent attributes of the ego-self is that it resists change; it wants to maintain or perpetuate its self-image, its identity; it wants to survive as it is. It is the nature of the ego-self that it has the tendency to conserve and maintain the status quo or equilibrium of its identity.

However, the reality of the creation is that more than one ego-self exists, meaning that egos are different from each other. The contact of one ego-self with another ego-self provides feedback that impels change. There are two ways this can go: integration and disintegration. The Positive Pole, +Ego, is pro-adaptive in relation to other ego-selves, and the Negative Pole, -Ego, is mal-adaptive in relation to other ego-selves. One of the aspects of the Monadic evolutionary process is the resolution of Yin/Yang, aka Cardinal/Ordinal, conflicts, and that includes the conflicts between the past self-hood and the future self-hood. The Michaels concur that we should “carry the Yin and embrace the Yang and blend the Chi and achieve harmony”, and thereby ascend the hierarchy of self-hood, through False Personality and True Personality and soul and Fragment and Cadence and Greater Cadence and Side and Entity and Cadre all the way back to the undifferentiated egoless Tao.

EMBODIMENT

Physical, Astral, Mental, Causal bodies – from Theosophy and the original Michaelian group contrast evolution in quantitative embodiment in Ordinal Planes versus qualitative evolution in embodiment in Cardinal Planes

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “Embodiment” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions, and other words with a similar meaning. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Briefly and basically, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

So what is meant by embodiment? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

The word “embodiment” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that trust issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology, the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

Embodiment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The goal of the organism [Personality and the physical body] is, of course, survival. Sexuality is made more difficult by culturally imposed barriers and artificial conditions. This is another barrier. Denial of the pleasures of eating, sleeping, and just biding your time on a pleasant, sunny day are more.

The Personality can come up with many efforts to rationalize why these pleasures should not be experienced: they are not good for you; they cost too much; they waste too much time; they are not useful; they are evil, et cetera. [20 March 1974]

Concluding Comments on Embodiment

EMOTIONAL CENTER

It might seem strange that an Entity such as the Michaels, which consists of former Action Role persons, Warriors and Kings, seemed to have a special fondness for the Emotional Center in their recommendations to the original Michaelian group, but such is the case. I found this fact to be so interesting that I have collected those instances into this chapter, and commented on them at length. I suspect that many readers will also find this interesting. My guess is that the Michaels were keen on the proper functioning of the Emotional Center as an important component of the spiritual path because the original Michaelian group members were primarily in the Intellectual Center, and this constituted an imbalance in their personalities; refer to the chapter “Balanced Man” for the explanation.

A more general discussion of the Emotional Center is found in my book A History of the Overleaf Chart, in Chapter 2A in Part Two, “Revelation of Overleaves”.

[[Create sections on, for instance, Negative Emotions; contra Intellectual Center; Spiritual Path Context, etc.]]

[[research the word “heart” to acquire context for Michael’s meaning]]

Emotional Center Descriptions

Only many subjective minds that grow from Emotional Center need to keep the closeness of the physical contact. [03 July 1973]

When you teach, teach impartially and without emotion. The truth is not to be learned through Emotional Center. [undated quotation from Soleal]

Only Emotionally Centered beings suicide. You can only reach them emotionally, of course. Suicide is quite romantic to them; also retaliation. [26 August 1973]

Centering is important also, and most late Cycle Old Souls choose Emotionally Centered bodies, as this is the Center easiest to work with. [13 December 1973]

If Scholars who are not Emotionally Centered have trouble with their emotions, how can we overcome that part in us?

First, you must wish this. Most Scholars have little regard for emotional entanglements, unless they happen to be Emotionally Centered. Most Scholars would prefer not to be bothered with the responsibility that goes along with these intrigues. The way you can handle it is to become Balanced and thus come into contact with the Emotional Center and learn to control the output. Right now, there is sporadic high output with little insight — it resembles volcanic eruptions. [27 December 1973]

In order for this group to achieve the cohesion necessary to provide growth, a level of intimacy and trust far exceeding what you now have must be reached. This cannot be achieved through dialogue. Dialogue is false personality’s defense against Emotional Center. [31 January 1974]

Could we have something on the Moving Part of Emotional Center?

The “love of action”. These souls make ideal spectators and will yell themselves hoarse at all spectator events. They rarely participate, but will drive hundreds of miles to spend a weekend at a ski lodge. The romance of movement prevails here with little active participation.

It has been said [in the Gurdjieffian teachings] that the Intellectual Part of Emotional Center is the seat of the “magnetic center” for [spiritual] teachings. Is this so?

That is valid. It also produces the top historians and social scientists, most writers and journalists, many war correspondents, anthropologists and archaeologists. In this Part [Intellectual Part of Emotional Center], the intellect is romanticized. [03 March 1974]

What are the characteristics of the Moving Part of Emotional Center?

It is movement romanticized. The movement becomes the love-object. Most dancers, such as the man Rudolph Nureyev [outstanding Russian ballet member] are Trapped here.

Are those who sit around and watch Trapped here?

Many times this is true — depending on the energy level present. The spectators do draw though from the action on the field. By the same token, some Movers [those with the Moving Center], such as again professional dancers, are trapped in the Emotional Part of Moving Center, where emotion must be expressed through movement. [27 March 1974]

The Intellectual Part of Emotional Center has produced some sensitive moving contributions to this world, such as those of the poet Stephen Vincent Benet and the man Robert Frost. [01 May 1974]

The Intellectual Part of Emotional Center happens to be the one that attracts students to a [spiritual] School. [07 December 1974]

In the first session of the original Michaelian group transcriptions that have become widely available, in the first mention of the Emotional Center, there are hints of the function of the Emotional Center as an important component of the spiritual path. Lorraine was the channel, and the source on tap was the Astral Plane Fragment, Tomas:

Gene: There are many times when I am listening to a song or watching television or something when I have an unexpected emotional wave and I feel like crying over something simple, soft and sweet or whatever. These come at unexpected times. I wonder why these happen.

[Tomas:] Well, I believe that that is because it revokes a memory from the past. I do not mean revokes, I mean promotes a memory from the past — a memory in your consciousness. It dredges it up and suddenly it is there. You don't know why, but you remember something. It makes you... Do you know, about when you hear a song in this conscious life that you have now that brings back a memory that you had in the past, when you were a boy, it reminds you of a summer afternoon and suddenly you feel a nostalgic feeling. The same thing happens here, except this is bringing back a pleasant or unpleasant memory from maybe three lives back. But it is all in your subconscious. It is all there and there is nothing to explain it, other than the fact that you just are suddenly aware of a nostalgic feeling within yourself — a sentimental feeling within yourself — a great love pouring out of you. [19 June 1973]

This is the first indication, among many others in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, that the Emotional Center can be the conduit leading from a subconscious memory to a conscious review of an emotional past-life experience. This type of revelation can be useful for understanding the context of, and the otherwise unconscious impulses of, one's current lifetime.

Emotional acceptance will only come about when the [Intellectual Center] expectations have ceased. [03 July 1973]

Per the chapter "Levels of Being" in the ontological and evolutionary hierarchy, the Emotional Center is more fundamental than the Intellectual Center. Therefore, if one can extinguish negative thoughts — unrealistic expectations being one of them — then positive emotions can emerge. Positivity works in the other direction also: extinguishing negative emotions promotes positive emotions, which promote positive thoughts. This is well known in therapeutic counseling psychology, and goes by the name "Rational Emotive Behavioral Therapy", on which Wikipedia has an article.

[Soleal:] Even if the negative emotion is not expressed, it is there until the being begins serious work on the real self. When you teach, teach impartially and without emotion. The truth is not to be learned through Emotional Center. [Dimensions! June 1975]

As we will see further on, the Michaels say the opposite: Emotional Center recognizes truth that the Intellectual Center does not. I suggest that Soleal's statement about truth not being found via Emotional Center can be reconciled with the Michaels' statements if we discerns the difference between negative emotions in the Negative Pole and positive emotions in the Positive Pole. In what follows, I make this distinction, and it seems to make impartial sense.

Alice: Can marijuana help get in touch with emotions? Should I smoke it?

[Tomas:] Marijuana can help to get in touch with emotions. Yes, Alice, you need work there. [05 July 1973]

This statement is the first of many where Intellectually Centered people are advised to develop a healthy Emotional Center as a part of “Balancing” the three lower Centers. Refer to the chapters, “Levels of Being” and “Balanced Man” and “Centering Traps”, for more information.

[Tomas:] With deepest love, love on a higher plane, each are “being.” There is no question of life or living, just to be, and because of love, be together. Love is one essence piece that was a gift and is to be used to attain higher things. Without the complete, deepest emotional love, higher planes cannot be attained. The love is part of the puzzle of the whole self and is an integral part of being. With love, the soul has been made complete and is then allowed to grow. Love is a large step to higher things. It is an emotional reality and should be sought. Your steps past it can be glorious. [10 July 1973]

Elsewhere it was said that the function of reincarnation is to experience “all of life”, meaning that the soul becomes well-rounded and complete. Certainly that includes all that the Emotional Center has to offer. To the above statement by Tomas, I would add that the Higher Emotional Center correlates with the sixth plane, by whatever name it is called. Refer to the chapters, “Love” and “Planes”, for more information.

Negative Emotions

Even if the negative emotion is not expressed, it is there until the being begins serious work on the real self. [Mid-1980]

Carolyn: I have felt the need to express my opinions more lately, and I wonder if this is good. Sometimes I have spouted off.

Do you understand the source of the negative emotions? If so, then you should examine them carefully and see if you can turn them into something positive. Hostility is never an act of conscious will. The only positive forces are peaceful, loving ones. Carolyn still has a tendency to slip into the patterns or vibrations of the moment. Many sleeping souls provide the necessary shocks to keep her on the right track — constantly examining herself. This is a common failing among neophytes on the true path. There are always many doubts until the integration takes place, and the commitment is made and is irrevocable. Life on the material plane, with all its glamour, continues to lure you back. The glamour is illusion — Maya, if you prefer the more esoteric term. Maya is part of Karma and is present for a very specific purpose. It tests your spiritual growth all the time and is your sole eternal safety checkpoint. When you reach the point in your spiritual growth when you “know” that all hostile feelings and thoughts and words — and even world wars — come from lower Centers in sleeping souls and they are not in control, then you will lose the desire or need to retaliate or spout off. It’s like spouting off to a stone wall for all the good it does you. You gain nothing and lose a great deal. [24 July 1973]

The Baby Soul is normally agreeable, a pillar of the community — until an opposing viewpoint is expressed. Then, inwardly the Baby Soul is bewildered, baffled by the difference. Outwardly, it will express anger, hostility, negative emotional energy, belligerence. [late August 1973]

Dick: I think I’m Centered in Intellectual Part. I used to think I was in Emotional Center.

We think so too, but you use Emotional Center often. You have had a tendency toward downward leaks [to negative emotions]. This is not so much in evidence now. You are moving toward Balance. [08 September 1974]

Cynthia: Could you clarify whether I am the debtor or the debtee?

Cynthia is the debtor. Naturally, the one to whom the debt is owed [debtee] will have more negative emotions surrounding the payoff. The one who owes [debtor] will usually seek quiet solution while the one who is owed will continue to demand fireworks long after dawn. [30 May 1974]

When Mechanical Man expresses verbally a negative emotion, you see, there is a compounded energy leak. It is fine to just admonish you all not to [verbally] express [negative emotions], but we understand that you must know why. When you compound the leak, you step completely back and allow the lower Centers full control, and it is a soulless, automatic response, and much overloading of the circuitry occurs. However, when you merely acknowledge to yourself that you are having a negative reaction, why then you are immediately reducing the force of the reaction, simply by the internal Photograph, and also by sending the reaction up a notch instead of downward. In other words, this process requires, in and of itself, the use of Intellectual Center in order to Photograph the inappropriate action. This enables the hot wires to cool down a bit, and allows the time to formulate a dispassionate response. This also many times results in a cooling off of the trigger. Also, when that happens, there is a neutral energy flow, and this in time can provide access to Higher Centers and, therefore, positive energy. [05 October 1974]

Alice: My friend feels great negativity from his wife. I feel he is in the Repression Mode.

In the first place, the lady is not feeling negativity, just boredom, and this is perceived not as a negative emotion, but simply as a lack of emotion, by him. But you are correct in that this man is in the Repression Mode. With his other Overleaves, he could unleash great talent on an unsuspecting world. Except for the Repression, he has the identical Overleaves of some of this world's great musicians. This man is a Spiritualist in the Intellectual Part of Emotional Center, more Impatient than Stubborn. But this is self-directed and there is much frustration at self for repressing the drive. [05 October 1974]

Emotional Center as Spiritual Access

The barrier between you and the Emotional Center is one that many in this cadre share. You are not alone. [14 December 1974]

Summary Comments on Emotional Center

List the functions of the Emotional Center towards enlightenment

- bringing non-verbal or pre-conscious insights to awareness where they can be re-experienced
- insights into past life emotional karmas
- Balancing all of the lower Centers as a part of transcending them into the higher Centers.

Not to be confused or conflated with the intuition insights of the Instinctive (Impulse) Center

Not the Heart Chakra.

Head versus Heart dichotomy

ENERGY AND ENERGY LEAKS

There is a concept in both Gurdjieff/Ouspensky and in the original Michaelian group called “energy leaks”. The whole idea is related to a number of other factors, such as Centers and Chakras, and Kundalini, all of which are covered in other chapters in this Study Papers book. First we will find out what the original Michaelian group members knew from the Gurdjieffian teachings, and then we will find out what Michael had to say about it, because they pretty much borrowed it entire.

[[Search for “drain” as well as “leak”.]]

Energy Leaks according to Ouspensky

Q. Why should moments of consciousness be so rare? Is it a question of energy?

A. No fuel. If you have no electricity, or if you have a pocket torch with a bad battery, you may have a flash and then nothing. Consciousness is light, light is the result of a certain energy; if there is no energy there is no light.

Q. Does the secret of all development of consciousness lie in the conservation and control of energy?

A. No, not all the secret, though conservation and increase of energy is very important. But in itself it is not enough; one has to know how to control it. Energy is the mechanical side of consciousness. We cannot begin with the idea of control. In order to control one small thing we must know the whole machine. First, we have to stop waste of energy; second, collect it by self-remembering; then, adjust things. We cannot begin in any other way.

Q. Can energy be stored?

A. Yes, energy can be stored when you are able to store it. But at first the question is not about storing but about not wasting. We would have enough energy for everything we want to do if we did not waste it on unnecessary things. For instance, the reason why we are so formatory is that we are too dull, we do not feel enough. We thin we feel, but this is an illusion. And the reason why we feel so little is because we have no energy available for the Emotional Center.

Leaks of energy were already spoken about, but the worst of all is expressing negative emotions. If you can stop the expression of negative emotions, you will save energy and never feel the lack of it.

We can only hope to become conscious beings if we use in the right way the energy that is now used in the wrong way. The machine can produce enough energy, but you can waste it on being angry or irritated or something like that, and then very little remains. The normal organism produces quite enough energy not only for all Centers but also for storing. Production is all right, but expenditure is wrong. These leaks have to be studied, because with some kinds of leaks it is not worth going on until they are stopped, for the more one accumulates energy, the more will leak out. It would be like pouring water into a sieve. Certain negative emotions produce precisely such leaks. In certain situations some people go through a whole range of negative emotions so a habitual that they do not even notice them. It may occupy only five minutes or five seconds, but it may be sufficient to spend all the energy their organism produced for twenty four hours. [author, book, page]

Psychic Energy

[[Is this section a repeat of the chapter by the title of “Psychic Energy”?]]

Before you can have an “energy leak”, you have to have energy; so what is that all about?

Psychic energy is the energy generated by the essence. It is naturally a more refined energy than that generated by the internal centers of emotion, intellect and instinctive and moving functions. This energy is independent of the others. [29 November 1973]

I would like comments on energies used by various energy Centers.

All of this energy is psychic energy. Imagine a superconductor with many terminals, each representing a different power drain. If one of these users or consumers is utilizing massive amounts of power, there will be a corresponding loss in the other areas, occasionally even short circuits and blown fuses. The power that energizes the psyche is all the same type, or rather, the same grade of electromagnetic radiation. There is no refinement from one center to the other until the powers of transmutation become yours to utilize; then this energy becomes centralized — channeled, so to speak. When we speak of harmonious balance, we refer to that state in which this concentration is reached. And this also goes for the release of specific amounts of energy. Emotionally centered mediums have an easy time with manifestations, and also become excellent transport mediums. This medium (SC) is not Emotionally Centered, and is not in touch with the release mechanism that would enable, or at least enhance, the manifestation. Astral entities can manifest without any assistance, we cannot. We must borrow the energy from one of you, and we cannot do this against your will. We wish to remind you that there are two very specific types of reactions: implosion and explosion; also, two specific charges in polarization: negative and positive. A great deal of the energy utilized by the lower centers in life situations are implosion reactions with negative charges. Controlled reactions of this type do not ever become as spectacular as their antitheses [the higher Centers].

NL: Is our energy self-generated? Are we born with a certain amount of energy and it regenerates?

The body can be thought of as the vehicle, or the conductor. The essence becomes the source of attraction, and as [spiritual] growth occurs, can draw upon an infinite power source. However, the average soul uses a very small, a very finite, amount of the energy available during a given physical interval. Most of you are somewhat sluggish due to cultural inducements, and rarely draw upon much energy. [27 December 1973]

The source for the energy is the same. The speed [with] which it is burned as fuel is faster when utilized by the Higher Centers. [09 February 1974]

Clarify this.

The fuel is the same for all Centers. It is the consumer that is different. [09 February 1974]

The production of fuel: does it have anything to do with self-remembering? In order to Balance the Centers, we have to have a larger supply to reach higher Centers.

An analogy would be an old fashioned stove with insufficient insulation, a leaky chimney, and an inefficient flue compared to a brand new radar [microwave] oven. Moments of pure consciousness do produce contact with Higher Centers, yes. [09 February 1974]

Is self-remembering the way to produce psychic energy?

Not the way, simply the by-product. The self-remembering must be produced first through those methods we have outlined to you [meditation, concentration, fasting, study]. Then as you go progressively toward balance, you automatically will have more and more flashes of consciousness, opening the door to higher expression.

Comment: That makes it sound like you generate what you need as you go along. There are check points to tell you where you are. [09 February 1974]

I feel that a conscious soul has inner fires burning.

We do not dispute that. The energy will be available in quantities, now unavailable to you, simply because you will not be leaking it out through fantasies and hostilities. [30 May 1974]

The energy force of the universe is neutral, and simply flows. Psychic energy in the hands of such as the man _____ is a very positive source. He is right. He can draw at will, but does not do this indiscriminately. He uses the discretion that we would wish. [29 October 1974]

Energy, you see, does have a vibratory quality, and psychic energy is no exception to this. If the vibratory quality of the universal flow is neutral, and the psychic energy flow from the essence is positive, then the vibratory quality of the personality must be negative. [21 February 1975]

As long as you continue to play the game of the culture and undergo the constant role-switching that occurs day in and day out, there will not be too much outward change in you. But this does not mean that there has been no change. It is merely that the role-switching uses up a tremendous amount of psychic energy which could be utilized for work on the path. Some students are able to remain in life roles and become adepts, but this requires total detachment — or “non-attachment” if you prefer. You see, as long as you are involved in the conflict of the personality against all other personalities, then the essence is held back. If the student is performing in a capacity that allows the essence to bloom, it is possible for him to remain in the mainstream if he wishes, and yet not lose contact with the teaching. Most of you students still lose contact with the greater part of the teaching the moment you walk out into your life role. It is even at times, spectacular, to observe as you don your masks. There is still some need in many of you to hide the fact that you are "into" something like this from those who still have your permission to organize your lives. Do you wonder then why you do not live the teaching or why there is no outward visible sign at all that you have grown through this teaching? As long as this remains something to be hidden, your personality will be externally vigilant to ensure there is no slip-up, and that no one suspects you might be a little strange. [21 December 1974]

Energy Leaks in General

Energy Vampires

Can we stop the drain, the leaching process [from energy vampire people]? Can we recharge our energy some way?

Stopping the discharge would be the best course, yes. You should now be able to feel the leak and simply refuse to allow them to feed upon you. [09 February 1974]

Why do I feel drained or pulling at times?

Fear. This is usually a powerful feeling, and if you do not know what it is, it can scare you badly.

(Comment: precognition should not drain you.) [03 July 1974]

The only way we know of to come to agape, which presumably is the goal, is to acknowledge your feelings, likes and dislikes, and then come past them. We have not ever advocated the toleration of any obnoxious behavior to you, and we never will. It is far too much of an energy drain. [21 September 1974]

Sock it to me, Michael, so I may be a better person for it.

Since your own Chief Feature is Self-Deprecation, your own timidity is stronger and therefore needs the work. The start now has been good, but you must not dwell on the possible effects of your photographs. This is a horrendous drain in energy. Just say it. Most of the time you have been right when you have felt strongly. Practicing with those you trust is all right for the present. It is valid that if it is the truth you speak, most have no rejoinder. Only those in Rejection will sometimes reject even the truth. [21 September 1974]

I experience the luxury of anger, and feel the drain. [Soleal 11 January 75]

Children in this culture are permitted to drain off enormous amounts of usable energy in the form of hostility. [12 February 1975]

Working with one who is truly not a student only wastes the energies of the cadre, and grieving over their loss results in a tremendous drain. I don't think I even need mention what happens when you fantasize over what might happen if that one or this one left the teaching. [16 February 1975]

Energy Leaks and Centers

I would like comments on energies used by various energy Centers.

All of this energy is psychic energy. Imagine a superconductor with many terminals, each representing a different power drain. If one of these users or consumers is utilizing massive amounts of power, there will be a corresponding loss in the other areas, occasionally even short circuits and blown fuses. The power that energizes the psyche is all the same type, or rather, the same grade of electromagnetic radiation. There is no refinement from one center to the other until the powers of transmutation become yours to utilize; then this energy becomes centralized — channeled, so to speak. When we speak of harmonious balance, we refer to that state in which this concentration is reached. And this also goes for the release of specific amounts of energy. Emotionally centered mediums have an easy time with manifestations, and also become excellent transport mediums. This medium (SC) is not Emotionally Centered, and is not in touch with the release mechanism that would enable, or at least enhance, the manifestation. Astral entities can manifest without any assistance, we cannot. We must borrow the energy from one of you, and we cannot do this against your will. We wish to remind you that there are two very specific types of reactions: implosion and explosion; also, two specific charges in polarization: negative and positive. A great deal of the energy utilized by the lower centers in life situations are implosion reactions with negative charges. Controlled reactions of this type do not ever become as spectacular as their antitheses [the higher Centers].

NL: Is our energy self-generated? Are we born with a certain amount of energy and it regenerates?

The body can be thought of as the vehicle, or the conductor. The essence becomes the source of attraction, and as [spiritual] growth occurs, can draw upon an infinite power source. However, the average soul uses a very small, a very finite, amount of the energy available during a given physical interval. Most of you are somewhat sluggish due to cultural inducements, and rarely draw upon much energy. [27 December 1973]

Is there anything useful about this for us to know?

Well, of course, you can use them as a fairly handy yardstick by which to measure your progress toward balance [of Centers]. You can feel the energy being expended, and after awhile locate its point of exit and then more accurately pinpoint the center responsible for the output. If it is not the proper center to handle the particular action then you know that there has been a leak. [16 June 1974]

Is it that the trapped part increases in energy while the weakened part decreases in energy?

[That is] valid, except for the Instinctive Center, which malfunctions only during organic illness. [16 June 1974]

Can chakras be likened to Leyden jars [which accumulate an electrical charge and then discharge their static electricity]? Would that be a proper analogy?

Very much so; you could even say overwhelmingly so. The energy leak virtually paralyzes any other Centers. [Some Centers] attempt to intervene. For instance, the Intellectual Centers attempt to prevent crimes of "passion." Yes, it does [prevent crimes], and many weird symptoms manifest such as impotency, premature ejaculation, vaginitis without a causative organism, etc. Normally though, it is the Moving Center that digs the sex act and Emotional Center says it is bad. Intellectual Center is fairly aloof about sex. [16 June 1974]

When mechanical man expresses verbally a negative emotion, you see, there is a compounded energy leak. It is fine to just admonish you all not to express, but we understand that you must know why. When you compound the leak, you step completely back and allow the lower centers full control, and it is a soulless, automatic response, and much overloading of the circuitry occurs. However, when you merely acknowledge to yourself that you are having a negative reaction, why then you are immediately reducing the force of the reaction, simply by the internal photograph, and also by sending the reaction up a notch instead of downward. In other words, this process requires in and of itself the use of Intellectual Center in order to photograph the inappropriate action. This enables the hot wires to cool down a bit, and allows the time to formulate a dispassionate response. This also many times results in a cooling off of the trigger. Also, when that happens, there is a neutral energy flow, and this in time can provide access to Higher Centers, and therefore, positive energy. The only positive energy we know of is that which we have elected to call "agape." Other sources may be either neutral or negative. The high states are free of the complexity found in the lower states. This should explain the purity of the energy flow. The lower states, being more complex, require more complex emotions to feed upon and be fed upon. [05 October 1974] _____ asked about Centering, and what force makes one achieve balance.

The achievement of balance is an act of will. The force behind it is the combined energies of the true "center of gravity" [a Gurdjieff term] within you. You always have this energy, but normally you allow it to dissipate unused. When you work toward balance, you learn to conserve this energy and divert it into the work. This energy does not run out, by the way. It is part of the neutral universal flow and is infinite. You must learn to tap it, however. Your centers of gravity are now top heavy, or off true center. When you go to balance it is centered — ergo, balanced; not very mystical, but far more practical. There is no leakage of energy in balanced man, and all of this energy can be diverted into the [spiritual] work — whether this be meditation, concentration or study. [26 November 1974]

What part of the brain would correspond to the Centers? Is it a set, a gestalt, or what?

More than anything, this [balanced Centering] can be seen as an appropriate reaction to the situation. In the case of the Lower Centers, it means that there is no leaking of energy and fatigue buildup as a result. You see, if you respond to an intellectual situation with an emotional reaction, it is usually totally inappropriate, and it comes not from Emotional Center, but usually from the Emotional part of the Center in which you spend your life. If you respond to an emotional situation in a Moving Centered way, there is a tremendous downward relegation of energy, and fatigue follows. You can readily determine wrong use of Centers in yourself by the way that you feel after the situation has passed. If you are tired, angry or any of those negative things, you can be sure that wrong use of Centers is to blame. If you feel high, elated, joyous, etcetera, then perhaps good use of Centers has occurred. Any situation that produces a negative reaction is wrong use of Centers, and therefore wrong work for students on this path. This is why we ask that you look at your negative reactions, even in retrospect, and determine what happened to your energy when you expressed. Centering, or balance, is, above all, appropriate. That is what it means — the loss of all of these unreasonable lapses in the volition. When you react negatively, you are certainly not in control — your false personality is in control. The true personality of the essence merely looks at the script and makes the appropriate response at the moment it is called for — from the Center equipped to handle that situation with dispassion. [25 January 1975] felt very highly charged bolts of energy coming in. He didn't need much sleep, and couldn't find a way to outlay the energy.

You can utilize these periods of positive energy flow to work toward balance through work in the centers. Moving center is a good one for this channel, and is, of course, the easiest to reach. Other good work can involve the breathing exercises that you experienced, turning the energy upward and out into the liberated meditation. You see, even meditation is subject to real and artificial space, and the personality imposes limitations on the space that the meditation may occupy. The liberated meditation of the essence utilizes the energy efficiently, and does not cause leakage, resulting in fatigue. The moments of power that those in the Caution mode experience from time to time may be utilized in the same fashion. [08 February 1975]

So let's take a look at the various Centers that can leak energy. Turns out that only Sexual Center and Emotional Center are mentioned.

Sexual Center

[Sex is] the worst energy leak of all; also the biggest Maya of all. It is also the biggest thing here to go upward, but usually people go downward with it. [08 September 73]

Love and sex seem like separate things, but when they're pulling together, it seems like a stronger force is generated than by either by itself. It seems like the only kind of energy that I have experienced to date that might be the kind of energy that you need for actual evolution. Can you comment?

Sexual energy, when used to express Higher Centers, can be incredibly strong. When the energy is relegated downward, it results in an energy leak. That is sometimes why you want to sleep after physical union. You feed lower centers — sometimes the Moving Center and the essence is exhausted, so the body goes to sleep to free the essence. When you use [the] Emotional Center to express moving needs, don't you feel the leak? So, if you feel that, just stretch your mind. Right now, you are all using Emotional Centers to satisfy moving needs, and this is a result that is culturally induced — that you feel something uplifting each time you have a physical union. That is absurd! [Soleal, late December 73]

Emotional Center

Down here where I am, on this poor old Physical Plane, could you send me a little more energy?

Tap the proper source and the energy will be there. Emotional energy results in a powerful leak when used to feed other Centers.

How can one get to the source?

By not reacting to the Maya of the Physical Plane. This results in a drain. No amount of stewing in one's own juices will make a mechanical object perform beyond its optimal level. [18 September 1973]

I would like to ask if there is advice on how to turn things around in the right direction.

You are using Emotional Center as a psychic dumping ground. This is causing the energy leak you are feeling now. The meditations, or more correctly concentrations, under marijuana result in good insights for you, if you will follow them out. [22 September 1973]

I am confused about my tearfulness and energy leaks and wonder where this recent tearfulness in me is coming from.

Comment: If the tears are coming from a positive place and there is love and communication, they probably are not an energy leak. If they are coming without a pattern, they are probably an energy leak.

Tears are, of course, the outward manifestation of a working Emotional Center. If the tears are shed for no reason, in other words, they are crocodile tears, you can be sure that the soul is Emotionally Centered. [20 February 1974]

[[Continue to research to the end of the original Michaelian group transcriptions.]]

Disempowerment

This phenomenon has not gone unnoticed in psychotherapy or in pop psychology, where it often goes by the name “disempowerment”....

Concluding Comments of Energy and Leaks

③ ENLIGHTENMENT

This chapter is the product of a search for the word enlightenment in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word is a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, so there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book, including: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

The word enlightenment is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is NOT one of many others in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions. Rather, it is one that focuses on a spiritual component. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings are usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated; both are amenable to psychotherapy. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”: >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

With any spiritual teaching, one can reasonably expect that the subject of so-called “enlightenment” will be present, even if not central to that teaching. Such was the case with the original Michaelian group. But what does this mean in spiritual teachings in general, and in the Michaelian teachings in particular? And how does one arrive at, or elicit, enlightenment? Why even seek enlightenment? Answering these questions are the subject of this chapter. As we will see, their answers are various.

Enlightenment per Wikipedia

We all have at least a vague and general notion of what “enlightenment” refers to, but how about we clarify and expand the definition by taking a look at the history and description of it from my usual primary source of information, Wikipedia. Underlined words are my emphasis, calling attention to synonyms.

Enlightenment is the “full comprehension of a situation”. The term is commonly used to denote the Age of Enlightenment, but is also used in Western cultures in a religious context. It translates several Buddhist terms and concepts, most notably bodhi, kensho, and satori. Related terms from Asian religions are kaivalya and moksha (liberation) in Hinduism, Kevala Jnana in Jainism, and ushta in Zoroastrianism.

In Christianity, the word “enlightenment” is rarely used, except to refer to the Age of Enlightenment and its influence on Christianity. Roughly equivalent terms in Christianity may be illumination, kenosis, metanoia, revelation, salvation, theosis, and conversion.

Perennialists and Universalists view enlightenment and mysticism as equivalent terms for religious or spiritual insight. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Enlightenment_\(spiritual\))< — retrieved 04 November 2021]

After that introduction, there followed more extensive explanations of enlightenment according to Buddhism, Hinduism, and Jainism. Then the Wikipedia article continued with a major section on the Western understanding. Let me borrow a few pithy statements that seem relevant to the discussion to follow:

In the Western world the concept of enlightenment in a religious context acquired a romantic meaning. It has become synonymous with self-realization and the true self, which is being regarded as a substantial essence which is covered over by social conditioning.

The Western notion of enlightenment is equivalent to the Michaelian notion, in terms of the maximization of Essence or True Personality and the minimization of False Personality.

The equivalent term "awakening" has also been used in a Christian context, namely the Great Awakenings, several periods of religious revival in American religious history.

Refer to the chapter "Awakening from Sleep" for discussion of the Michaelian equivalent of that metaphor for enlightenment.

Another equivalent term is illuminationism.... Illuminationism is a doctrine according to which the process of human thought needs to be aided by divine grace. It is the oldest and most influential alternative to naturalism in the theory of mind and epistemology. It was an important feature of ancient Greek philosophy, Neoplatonism, medieval philosophy, and in particular, the Illuminationist school of Islamic philosophy.

Augustine was an important proponent of Illuminationism, stating that everything we know is taught to us by God as He casts His light over the world, saying that "The mind needs to be enlightened by light from outside itself, so that it can participate in truth, because it is not itself the nature of truth. You will light my lamp, Lord," and "You hear nothing true from me which you have not first told me." Augustine's version of illuminationism is not that God gives us certain information, but rather gives us insight into the truth of the information we received for ourselves.

Obviously, the words "enlightenment" and "illumination" both use the metaphor of coming out of the "dark" and into the "light".

The Wikipedia article has a lot more to say about the history and meaning of enlightenment in various religious and spiritual traditions and movements. I highly recommend that you read it in preparation for the following presentation.

In addition to the above quotations, we all probably have our own notion of what "enlightenment" refers to, but I would bet that few of us have actually experienced it. That is why we seek it; that is what the "search" is often about; that is what the "spiritual path" allegedly leads to. Now that we know some of the history of the concept of enlightenment, let's see what the Michaels had to say about it.

Enlightenment per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The subject of enlightenment came up very early in the original Michaelian group — this was even before the Michaels showed up — and it came up repeatedly until near the end of the original Michaelian group. Let's start with the first appearance of the word, and continue chronologically until the end.

Dick: Okay then, I'll meditate on the one question.

[Soleal:] Just be patient. You cannot achieve enlightenment by any route in one day or by any method without first making the decision to establish this as the goal for the present lifetime and then making the decision to devote the rest of the life to that pursuit. The devotion must be there, no matter which path you take ultimately. The path can take you through the mainstream of life on your world, or you may eventually decide that you must have the seclusion. A communal setting would offer this in many ways. You need people around by whom you can measure your progress and this is not bad for you. Self-confidence, and I mean in your own spiritual strength, must be developed. [03 July 1973]

Several times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, it is recorded that Dick wanted to be gifted with something like an enlightenment experience. The Michaels consistently reminded him that it does not work like that, considering the Michaels' understanding of enlightenment, which might be different from the understanding of others. There is a chapter, “Communal Living”, that discusses that lifestyle as a potential contribution to enlightenment.

Dick: I have a question about Kundalini energy. My impression is that enlightenment requires a great amount of energy and that it is Kundalini energy. I experienced the energy once at age 37, briefly. What I want to know is, can it be a gift? And if so, can Tomas give it to me?

[Tomas:] This cannot be completely a gift — it requires work on your part. It can be a temporary gift. As you say, it can be painful to come down. Be careful of what you ask, Dick; it could be given [but maybe you wouldn't like it].

Refer to the chapter “Chakras and Kundalini” for more information about that. Having a kundalini experience sometimes happens at the beginning of enlightenment (which is a disorienting way to start your spiritual path, if not actually painful), or it can happen somewhere along the way, induced by various means, either as a product of spiritual practices, and/or as a gift by an enlightened Master.

Dick: Can it be given in increments?

It can be regulated. This is also temporary. Shall we try this in two days, Dick? I will attempt to send the energy Saturday, your time. Meditate and then we can try. This experiment may not succeed on the first attempt.

Dick: Is this [kundalini] the essence of consciousness?

Not entirely. By itself, it can be called insanity. There also must be understanding.

Tina: Then we need more than cramming information?

There is a difference in the two. Understanding comes with living experience. Information is the abstract acquisition of facts, none of which have been lived through. The excess of information is confusing and of no benefit to your growing process. It is not good unless there is understanding along with information. In your case, Dick, this is why I suggested exercise and moving — to calm down the information. [05 July 1973]

Although the acquisition of information can be illuminating, it is not the kind of enlightenment that comes from a personal spiritual experience. It can actually be counterproductive to focus on the acquisition of information if it excludes or detracts from having spiritually transformative experiences.

The next mention of enlightenment appeared in the first session in which the Michaels were the source.

The question was asked concerning the decision to go on in the search for spiritual enlightenment — on to becoming an Adept. What do you do when you get so far and are not too sure you want to continue? We wondered if the Masters picked those in whom the desire for “psychic experiences” was quite strong to become Adepts.

The desire is polar, too. Everything in the universe is, of course. Along with the desire is always the dread. The choice does not become clear to you until you have experienced the desire from another dimension. You must stand and observe the desire from the shadows of dread. Wishes, like everything, have positive and negative poles. There must be attraction and repulsion or nothing exists because no energy is being generated. The primordial force was energy, not mass. Think about that when you are hung up on cause and effect. The more primitive one is energy. Does it not seem that all seeking the least complex will return to the energy from whence they came? Complexity is the antithesis of what the spirit seeks. The body represents the epitome of complexity. That is why the spirit is again and again attracted to it, until the partially awakened Essence catches a glimpse beyond the “veil.” [12 August 1973]

This answer hints that enlightenment is the awakening of Essence in the simplicity that follows after complexity is transcended.

Two weeks later, the subject came up again. The affirmation then was that philosophical exercises in vocabulary and rhetoric were just half-acquired enlightenment, not the entirety of what the soul seeks:

Dick: I would like to have a medical session some night, but right now, I'd like to move on to something else. I'd like to bring up the subject of “heaviness” that I find reading all these esoteric books and Hindu books. So far, in these systems, I've found so little of the ordinary type of joy. I'd like to buy a toy boat, just lie in the bath tub and putt around.

You would probably benefit much more from that activity than from reading fifty philosophical texts. These are nothing more than another Old Soul expounding on half-acquired enlightenment. Enlightenment is not ponderous. As I said before, as growth progresses, the soul seeks simplicity. This is one good way to discern whether a particular piece of literature will be of any help to you. If it is merely an exercise in vocabulary and rhetoric, then abandon it. Some very wordy material comes from Young Souls. Be wary of this in selecting reading material. [26 August 1973]

Personally, based on what I have seen of it, I believe that good philosophy can provide a certain kind of enlightenment, the conceptual kind that inquiring minds seek. However, the kind of enlightenment recommended by the Michaels, the spiritual kind that the soul seeks, is a step beyond philosophy.

Ray: Two weeks ago, Michael suggested further contact with meditation. I can't concentrate, and I need more advice on this.

Meditation is the clearing of the mind of trivia, and allowing the free flow. Transcendental Meditation provides good groundwork for those new to the enlightenment game. The more exalted forms such as that taught by Chögyam Trungpa requires much preparation, and may take years to perfect. Also, many meditate for all of their lives and achieve nothing. To be effective, meditation must prepare one for activity, not rest. [08 November 1973]

The use of the word "game" here is not pejorative, but it does indicate that there are game-like techniques or skills that take practice and focus, such as of meditation and concentration, that are useful to achieve the goal of enlightenment.

Jeff: What benefit or harm is there to stimulating the acupuncture point known as the "Divine Door"?

No harm. The benefit depends on your belief system. If you think or believe in it, it will probably be of benefit. If your belief system is such that you believe that stimulation of certain areas of the human brain such as the hypothalamus, the pineal gland, [or] the anterior pituitary produces a doorway to enlightenment and this belief is strong enough, sometimes the result is just short of miraculous. [15 November 1973]

Such supposed doorways to enlightenment are effective for the same reason that placebos and hypnosis are effective: it is a property of the way the mind works.

Sue: Any hint in the direction I might take?

Should we go through it all over again, Sue? Meditation, concentration, fasting, study, right-thinking — this is the magic enlightenment formula, like $E = MC^2$. [22 November 1973]

Those practices and other practices that foster enlightenment are listed in the conclusion of this chapter.

Phyllis: I would like to know about the manifestation at age 35 — the breakthrough that occurs then.

What we have said is that the Role in Essence manifests at approximately this age. Yes, some break through much earlier, particularly if they go their own way early in life. Loners break through far more easily than those attached to large "close" families: these take much longer.... if you do not manifest at this stage it is unlikely that you will later. However, we know of a few souls who have not. Having your Role manifest and searching for enlightenment are quite different. Baby Warriors do not search [spiritually] but they do manifest [their Role]. There is no magic age for beginning to search [spiritually] — we are now working with an octogenarian [in his eighties] who has just begun. [20 December 1973]

Enlightenment is beyond the clear manifestation of the Role in midlife as the Michaels say, but I would also add that it is beyond the healthy psyche in general.

Dick: I spent hours with Nancy and it is like she cannot see the difference between [Gurdjieff's] "C" [Cosmic] and "B" [experiential catalyst] groups. She thinks she will be God-conscious soon. She thinks she's near, through the Agni Yoga. Is it because I do not have the guidance when I'm talking with her or what?

No. It is not your lack of guidance. It is your lack of courage of conviction that does not permit you to point out the utter nonsense in the hope for instant "enlightenment". The path is long and steep. The difference in the teachings is, of course, the fact that this is a living teaching; many of those are not. You have found it difficult to interpret the scriptures of the various religious sects on your world. This is because these are now dead teachings. [30 December 1973]

This would seem to indicate that ancient paths to enlightenment might not be as effective or efficient or valid as modern methods taught by an authentic and current teacher such as the Michaels (a type "C" influence), who tailored their recommendations to the actual seekers, not to generic seekers. One wonders if some of the messages to the original Michaelian group members are entirely appropriate for post-original Michaelian group members. I would say that an informed person can use ordinary life experiences (type "B") as spiritual catalyst. I would also say that ancient spiritual paths are not completely worthless for modern seekers.

We would point out to you at this point that there is a vast difference between spiritual growth and "enlightenment". We would expect all of you, without exception, to grow from this experience; we would not expect you all to achieve "cosmic consciousness". [27 January 1974]

The path to enlightenment is “long and steep”, as it said in the previous Q&A exchange quoted above, so that might be too much to expect that of oneself; it is not too much to expect spiritual growth.

Sarah: A good teacher keeps students unfulfilled to keep them coming back for another lesson.

Of course, there are (ways). We have spoken to you many times of conscious recall of the dreams and of the time spent on the Astral Plane, but most must go through this process one step at a time. Most cannot jump from that Maya-filled life in which they find themselves into the too rarefied atmosphere of enlightenment.

These processes are valid, but they do take time and they do open doors to many more processes that bring you ever closer to the goal. We would Photograph your Impatience now, and that is not necessarily a bad place to start. There is no truly rapid method by which you can throw off the weighted cloak of culture and society; this takes time. [10 May 1974]

Refer to the chapters, “Dreams and Dreaming” and “Planes” for more information on those topics. The recommendation here seems to be to take ‘baby steps’ on the spiritual path, which consists of various ways to shed various encumbrances outlined by the Michaels. If that goes well in a reasonable amount of time, then maybe full-blown enlightenment is within reach.

[Is] clothing a part of Personality?

Clothing and other adornments convey to all far more about inner psychology of the Personality than you even now realize. We have stressed to all of you that enlightenment is far from drab, and when souls adopt protective coloration, it usually has to do with insecurity and fear of their own desires and wishes. We would see all [of you] decked as peacocks rather than as drab mud hens, as drabness in clothing usually denotes drabness of the soul. One Fragment of this Entity [Michael], remembers wearing the red of the Cardinal and enjoying every moment of it. Also, many Fragments of this Entity were “born in the purple” [as royalty or at least high ranking] and gloried in the pomp and circumstance, and yet somehow [we] achieved transcendence. [25 June 1974]

This would seem to indicate that outward appearance is not necessarily a false thing, a hindrance to spiritual growth. When coming from the right place, it is not a delusion of grandeur; it can augment spiritual development.

Dick: Michael has a job to do, too, as I see it and that is to produce #4 and #5 people in his teaching. (See In Search of the Miraculous, by P. D. Ouspensky, for enlightenment on men with numbers ... index will guide you.) If Michael is sensitive, he will help us solve our internal problems. The discovery track of what we are has to be complete before becoming a #4 or #5 man. Comment, please. [03 September 1974]

The transcriber was making a funny with this parenthetical statement: People ranked #4 and #5 in “Level of Being” were enlightened according to Gurdjieff; refer to the chapter “Level of Being”.

The following lengthy answer is a rather good description of the difference between psychological well-being as a healthy personality and enlightenment as an expression of Essence:

Dick: I become irritated with people who have expectations who tell me not to have any. One cannot initiate anything unless he has expectations. There are rare times when I can just be and have no expectations, and that is beautiful. This leads me to a topic I could not understand with Robert's group, where it was the goal to give up one's ego. As I see it, from one's ego comes one's self-image, one's power, one's strength. If my ego is deficient, then I am in a depressed state and for sure cannot love. In Robert's group, they continue to put down ego, one way by calling I "it": e.g., "It went to dinner" instead of "I went to dinner." I have been trying the EST and Ken Keyes's way to experience experiences. If I'm down, I don't ask myself what to do to go up. I aggravate the down so I can feel it as full as possible. I have burned out a number of things in this way, but I do not feel better for it. It seems that if I have lightened my load, I should feel more buoyant and better. Maybe I haven't tackled the basic problems. Could Michael comment on ego strength?

What you wish to give up is the strength of the ego of the Personality. The Essence has much strength of its own. They are separate and distinct. Remember, when you become your Essence, there will not be the albatross of Repression [Mode] to deal with. Perhaps it would be helpful to point out to you at this time, Dick, that you come far closer to loving when you are painting than at any other time. You do not have to start with loving difficult persons; this is not the primary objective at this time. Loving is Higher Emotion and that requires Balance [of all Centers]. The person who is “conscious” is not a doer anyway. Most who have reached that exalted state of physical being prefer not to do. They are content merely to be with the present — that feeling you have glimpsed when you were in those states briefly. (paraphrased) This is something we have asked you to consider before: what is it you wish to do, learn to be more fruitful and happier in life? or go on to spiritual enlightenment? The goals are very different, and the methods of approach, therefore, would have to be quite different. Living in life requires what you are calling self-image and ego strength. Spiritual acceleration does not require this; it requires negation of the cultural facade. Those who defined the ego and ego states thereof were not, after all, conscious beings, and were observing only the Personalities of others with their own Personalities. The Essence, separate from this, has an innate strength of its own and can survive if the body is prepared for the surge when it comes. Disintegration only comes when the Personality is lost and the Essence is freed prematurely, such as in some psychotic states. Otherwise, those on the path find the surge exhilarating and liberating, and are prepared for it when it comes, but this only comes after the groundwork has been laid. Those tools we have given you are at your disposal. You might say that the Essence has its own ego; you are just not acquainted with it. [14 September 1974]

The above is one of several references to Essence as the source of enlightenment or something like it, as distinct from the unenlightened Personality; refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality” for more such descriptions.

Liz: Growth doesn't occur in a vacuum. One must immerse himself in something — relate with someone — in order to grow, right?

Liz, spiritual growth is an extremely active process, but many times, it isolates you from the mainstream — this is what we are saying. Spiritual enlightenment, which is indeed a byproduct, is an ecstatic experience to which nothing can possibly compare. [28 September 1974]

The above was one of several answers where the emphasis is on distinguishing enlightenment from other aspects and processes of spiritual experience.

Leslie: Asked if her Goal had changed from Acceptance to Growth. She is a Mid-Cycle [Fourth Level] Mature Warrior in Acceptance, Intellectual Part of Moving Center, Idealist, Passion Mode, Stubbornness as Chief Feature, Body Type Mars-Lunar.

As we have told you before, the Goal of Acceptance is in itself a powerful Exalted [Cardinal] Goal from which spiritual enlightenment can spring. With this [Goal], there is no need for a switch in Overleaves — merely extinguishment of the Negative Pole [–Ingratiation], which in this case is the desperate need to be accepted universally by others. In exchange for this, you come into the Positive Pole [+Agape], which is, of course, the unqualified Acceptance of others, just as the Negative Pole of the Growth Goal [–Confusion] involves tremendous scattering of energies as the soul rushes from school to school searching feverishly for that illusive “way”. [09 November 1974]

So, add the process of extinguishment of the Negative Poles of Overleaves as another one of the tools for approaching enlightenment.

Liz: I feel Soleal wants to be silent with us. We should terminate and be silent with Soleal.

[Soleal:] I sense the desire for a more intense and personal experience on the part of these students, and that is all right with me. I can tolerate the change in the level of communication. In fact, in some ways it is welcome, but remember that in asking for this at this point, you eliminate all of those students who cannot allow the creative silence. Let me tell you that this “Oh, shit!” state is very close to enlightenment on several levels. Now, with that in mind, try it. [11 January 1975]

My understanding of this answer is that Soleal is saying that the “Oh, shit!” realization that one has difficulty entering the “creative silence” is a forward step on the path to enlightenment.

A rather lengthy discourse on enlightenment came about two years later. Almost the entire session is relevant to the topic. This is another passage where endarkenment (if I may coin a word) is equated with the Personality and enlightenment is equated with Essence contact:

The evening began with talk about the [A Course in] Miracles material, and we shared thoughts about the difference between false goals and true goals. Must we give up life goals?

All must realize that the term Holy Spirit [in that book] does in fact refer to the Essence — that within the self that is in contact with the Tao. To contact this Holy Spirit, then, requires only the quieting of the Overleaves to the extent that the Essence can be perceived. The perception is often brilliantly elucidated during a so-called “spiritual” experience, when the Personality is temporarily inactivated by the powerful input. Drugs will often facilitate this, but are not necessary; environment is more important. Without this perception, all of this [Michael's teaching or any spiritual teaching] is simply another barrage of words. Only the knowledge of one's own Essence is convincing. We cannot emphasize this too much. It can be explained by the timeworn cliché: “seeing is believing”. There is no other way that one can be certain that planes beyond the physical exist, other than experiencing them. The same can be said for the perception of one's own Essence. When this is accomplished, the power of the experience drowns disbelief. Then, of course, it is still entirely up to you which course you wish to pursue. It is doubtful, though, that one would choose to continue with purposeless activities. False goals are those that are largely unattainable, as they exist only in fantasy. True goals lead to the awakening of the Essence and its breakthrough. This is indeed possible for those who wish it and without great sacrifice upon the mountain-top.

Mention was made of rituals and practices designed to bring about enlightenment.

We simply speak of various asceticisms that are unnecessary. Rituals do help the uninitiated, but only in the preparatory stages. These serve to quiet the mind.

It is interesting that the left cerebral hemisphere is unable to allow this perception (of the Essence). Many times, persons sustaining brain damage in the left side do experience their Essence for the first time.

Twenty years after this channeling, a left-hemisphere stroke happened to a neuroscientist named Jill Bolte-Taylor, as recounted in a TED talk: >https://www.ted.com/speakers/jill_bolte_taylor<. Evidently, the left hemisphere contains the Personality self, and the right hemisphere contains the Essence self. Refer to the work of Iaian McGilchrist (><https://channelmcgilchrist.com><) for a thorough exposition of brain lateralization; it confirms what is stated in this quotation.

The session continued:

("Facilitate" would be a better word than "allow".)

The Intellectual Center cannot perceive God. The Intellectual Center is not interested in this perception; it does not count it as a loss [to not perceive God]. Only the Higher Centers long [yearn] for the Tao, through the Emotional Center. The desire for human closeness and exclusive relationships derives from this [Emotional Center yearning]. It is the substitute that the Overleaves accept, but since it lacks perfection, it does not satisfy. The Essence seeks the perfection that it is. The Essence loves. This is the only emotion it is capable of. It loves all that is self and All There Is.

Try an exercise if you wish. The next time you are involved in a hostile exchange with someone with incompatible Overleaves, create within [yourself] the quiet space: face this challenge squarely and attempt to acknowledge to that other person, "Thou art God". This does not have to be said aloud, but said [within] enough to become reality. It does not even have to put an end to the hostilities. It is merely acknowledgment that is important. If you are able to achieve this, it will be the Essence that does the achieving. The Overleaves may very well go right on spitting.... and we are asking that you create a corridor through which your Essence can pass.

We would cease use of the word "detachment" as this is misleading. You are already detached from that which you seek [Essence].

We talked about efforting, not getting any place — just get into deeper and deeper trouble with life. It seems there should be no effort. (I did not get the specific comment that brought about this next response.)

What you are experiencing is passion. This is a gateway to Agape if used in the proper perspective. The man Jesus was passionate. The transcendence to Agape took place only when the Infinite Soul began to manifest, but this is not to say that Agape cannot be experienced by those untranscended — it can, but only through the Essence; the Overleaves cannot experience Agape. The Overleaves cannot even experience passion most of the time. True passion has sustained many great teachers throughout their physical lives. False passion would better be called greed, for this is what determines most of the emotions that you now associate with the word passion.

In spite of the myth of childhood happiness, the child on the Physical Plane is in the least enviable spot in the universe. He is at the mercy of everything and everybody, and he knows it. He chooses to block this knowledge and does this well. So well, in fact, that any thought of going back or regressing to that state appalls the average adult. Abandoning oneself to play, then, is quite a scary fate and not one easily accomplished once the cherished adult status is achieved. We have never known of an adult who has achieved spiritual enlightenment. Who is more vulnerable than a child? The man Eric Berne knew this when he called the Intellectual Center "the adult," the Moving Center "the parent" and the Emotional Center "the child". The Moving Center is concerned with right action, the Intellectual Center with right thought — where, then, is there room for love? [12 December 1976]

My guess is that the Michaels' answer to this question is that "room for love" can be found in the unfettered Emotional Center, which knows how to play — not work — toward enlightenment, like a carefree child who is oblivious to the artificial concerns of adulthood, and who is therefore "vulnerable" to Essence.

A couple of months later, the subject of enlightenment surfaced again:

There was a great deal of talk at this point about violence, anger, hostility, etc. and ways of dealing with it and moving on to more positive spaces in ourselves.

Ideally, this teaching could provide such an environment where the trust level would give permission to ventilate the anger. But, remember, that anger is an emotion felt by the ego when its expectations go unfilled or even worse, ignored. What should develop within a teaching is the “steward” who can stand aside in each of you and observe the ego ventilating its wrath. But we must realize that only a fraction of self is angry. There is never a time when all the Overleaves are angry or sad or happy. If that ever happened, either enlightenment or disintegration would occur. For instance, Intellectual Center cannot experience anger. [21 March 1977]

The metaphor of the “steward” was borrowed from the Gurdjieffian teachings. The steward uses self-Photography to rise above the ego and its antics, and this is one of the techniques for approaching enlightenment.

Surrender is perhaps the most difficult task before you, and the stakes are high if you wish to achieve what you set out to do. Therefore, many are likely to act out an experience that is not real. All of you here present have more difficulty with the concept of vulnerability and surrender than any other aspect of spiritual training. All of you are escaping the fear of poverty and degradation that the early decades of your lives instilled in you. Young ones, just ten years your junior, do not have this fear. It is not necessary to be poor in order to be spiritually enriched. It is only necessary to give up the effort of the unrealistic goals set for you by the culture and go on from there. More true spiritual thought and action comes from relatively secure environments than from impoverished backgrounds. Squalor does not ordinarily breed enlightenment; rather, it breeds defeat, frustration and, ultimately, a giving up of goals. It’s okay to be comfortable as long as the goals are realistic and do not compromise the values of the teaching — then the amount of luxury accrued is relatively trivial. In other words, if the wealth comes easily and at no expense to the spiritual life, then the wealth is immaterial. It is when the desire for the wealth overrides all spiritual considerations that trouble occurs, and then irreconcilable conflicts [between ego and Essence] arise, and there is an inability to proceed any further with any teaching. There is a point where a choice must be made and a true assessment of your material needs versus wants must occur if you are to go on. If you decide at that point that continued acquisition beyond that which is necessary is vital to your survival, then you must pursue this or dissatisfaction will follow you and plague you the rest of this life. You will give up spiritual teachings at this point — and that is not necessarily a bad choice — just a choice. [10 April 1977]

Refer to the chapter “Asceticism and Austerity” for more on finding the balance between physicality and spirituality that provides an optimal trajectory toward enlightenment.

We have never told you that this is anything but difficult. You pay a magnificent price for that freedom that is enlightenment. It is freedom in the truest sense of the word. Paradoxically, all human life yearns to be free, while it expends tremendous energy developing mind prisons for itself. The yearning for God is that same state. [30 September 1977]

Refer to the chapter “Liberation” for further discussion of that metaphor for enlightenment and endarkenment.

Cynthia mentioned that it seemed to be as she suspected, that the material the teacher has given us is complete and we just haven’t figured out how to use it properly. This was the response:

No, Cynthia, the material is obviously not all there, as you — and we mean that collectively — are not satisfied and still search. When enlightenment occurs the quest is over, at least insofar as the Physical Plane is concerned. We have been so far unable to instill in you the permission, or give you the permission to seek that ecstasy or joy that is the end product of all that you seek. However, at least all of you are experimenting with the possibility that there may be such a state as ecstasy. Many are not even that lucky. Richard — the other Richard — has chosen to leave (he had fallen asleep on the floor) because this is frightening information for him. He cannot even contemplate what this quality might bring to him, for it would mean utter destruction of all of his defense mechanisms. Even simple happiness is quite beyond his grasp, and yes, anyone with the same Overleaves exactly will experience this difficulty to a greater or lesser extent. All those with Cynthia’s Overleaves exactly will experience her dilemmas and frustrations, and if they are in a teaching, they will be fortunate enough to be allowed to look at them and decide whether or not to change their course. Cynthia uses the Overleaves many times to make her life not work because she has been led to believe that her life will not work. She uses her lack of formal education as an excuse not to have to formulate goals for herself because that would conflict with the picture that the Overleaves have of themselves. Alice defeats herself in the same fashion because two of her Overleaves would be terrified of success. [04 November 1977]

This answer provided a list of characteristics that come with enlightenment: satisfaction, ecstasy, joy, happiness. It also provided a list of characteristics that come with endarkenment: fear, defense mechanisms, difficulty, dilemmas, frustrations, conflict, defeat. The Overleaves, and particularly the Negative Poles of the Overleaves although it does not say so here, are one serious impediment to enlightenment.

Students often confuse facts with final results. We see much growth in the student Louise. Growth is the hardest and most constant Goal. Most students find this confusing, therefore, the facts appear clearer when the ego is pulling off the most subtle facade of all. Growth is not true enlightenment. Students find this the biggest stumbling block — Overleaves are stunted in this case. Do not confuse the facts with the goal, Louise. There is a station in which a student does overcome this tendency. Everlasting growth is not the goal, Louise; Growth this lifetime is the Goal. [07 November 1977]

To this I would add that all of the Cardinal Inspiration Overleaves — Growth, Passion, Arrogance, Priest, Spiritualist, Higher Emotional — might give the person who has one or more of them an illusion or facade of enlightenment, but this is not actual enlightenment. These particular Overleaves are “facts” but they are not “results”. At best, these facts, more so than other Overleaves, might impel a person who has them to seek results such as “enlightenment”, however they understand that notion.

Summary Comments on Enlightenment

The quest for enlightenment was a ‘thing’ in the original Michaelian group, but not so much since then, in subsequent Michaelian teachings individual students and groups. In fact, one definition of enlightenment from Troy Tolley’s channeling was this:

Enlightenment is often misunderstood. It is contextual and ever-evolving. Enlightenment tends to only mean that one reaches a state of comfort in their understanding of the universe as they experience it. It is a state of acceptance and utilization of a structure that makes sense of the universe from the highest perspective of that Personality at the time. In other words, nearly all Soul Age Levels indicate Enlightenment was reached. [<https://our.truthloveenergy.com/blogs/entry/4875-20220504-session/?tab=comments#comment-30030>< — retrieved 06 May 2022]

Many tools and techniques that foster enlightenment are mentioned in the original Michaelian group transcriptions as documented in this chapter, namely: meditation, concentration, fasting, quieting the Overleaves, transcendent spiritual experiences, abandoning oneself to play in the Emotional Center, brain stimulation, psychedelics, extinguishment of Negative Poles, Photography, and surrender to Essence. The point to be made here is that, per the Michaels, enlightenment is an experiential thing, not an intellectual or philosophical thing. The Michaels endeavored mightily to drive this point home to the original Michaelian group members, who were trapped in Intellectual Center.

ESSENCE AND PERSONALITY

Anyone who knows anything about the Fourth Way work knows that this phrase, Essence and Personality, did not originate with the Michaelian teachings; it originated with Gurdjieff. This subject is yet another component of the Gurdjieffian teachings that was carried over to the original Michaelian group in some form. Some of the subjects made the transition without modification, but most made the transition with modifications. And there are differences not only between Gurdjieff and the original Michaelian group, but also between the original Michaelian group and subsequent Michaelian teachings communities. Thus, this is one of those subjects that has evolved over the decades. At the end of this chapter, I suggest that the subject needs some more modifications if we are to eliminate ambiguities in terminology, and hence in understanding.

Sorry to say, but because of the changes over history, the analysis and synthesis of the subject is lengthy and tedious. We will start at the beginning of the story.

“Are Essence and True Personality synonymous?” This is an ambiguity in the Michaelian teaching that is uncomfortable to me, and I do not yet have clear definitions. Per <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Essence>, the word is ambiguous. Somewhere in the original Michaelian group transcriptions the Michaels said that they were “guilty of semantic ambiguity at times”. Several of my completed “Study Papers on the original Michaelian group” discuss instances where I believe that has occurred (e.g. “Ego”). Your question is one of those cases, and I have not yet researched and written those chapters, so I do not have a full answer.

A few thoughts come to mind, but as I said, I have not yet studied and written and resolved this particular issue to my own satisfaction, probably to yours neither. My plan has been to do exactly that in future Study Papers. Maybe you would like to study this out and write it up?

Michaelian books have glossaries and definitions, and those might be a little different from the original Michaelian group, and they lack the thoroughness that I strive for in my scholarly academic research of analysis and synthesis.

The dictionary definition of Essence is something like this: that which remains as permanent when all that is temporary is removed. Maybe this definition of Essence is similar to “Spark”, the alleged eternally unique primordial scintilla of Tao that survives Grand Cycles. Kabbalists, not just Michaelians, use that exact term to describe the finite fragments of the Infinite.

My plan was to research Essence as Gurdjieff understood it, apparently always contrasted with Personality, where the function of a spiritual path is to develop an immortal soul because according to Gurdjieff people are not born with an immortal soul. Maybe Gurdjieff’s definition of Essence = what others call “Soul”. That is another ambiguous word.

If/when I research it further I suspect that I might find that per Gurdjieff Essence = True Personality, but I am relatively certain that is not the case per the original Michaelian group Michaelian understanding. I would rather limit True Personality to the human condition and sandwich it between False Personality as like a ‘lower’ self and Essence as like a ‘higher’ self.

My impression is that the Michaels’ definition of both Essence and True Personality is almost certainly different from Gurdjieff’s; per Michael the Essence is distinct from the True Personality, the latter limited to a human incarnation, but Essence is said to transcend incarnations.

The Overleaf category of “Role” is also said to transcend incarnations, hence perhaps the many instances of the phrase “Essence Role”. My preference would be to divorce those two words for clarity’s sake, since Role is relevant only on the Physical Plane; on the Astral Plane and ‘above’, conglomerations of Fragments function there as Role does in incarnation.

It may be that the term Essence is used to simply provide one term that covers the high stack of levels of selfhood that are beyond incarnate Personality.

While in a Christian group in my youth, I was introduced to the notion of “laying up treasure in heaven, rather than treasure on earth where moth and rust corrupts”. The notion of “building moral character” was in that category: developing permanent virtues. This seems similar to Gurdjieff’s notion of creating an Essence that survives death.

The thought occurs to me that True Personality also transcends incarnations in the sense that what is experienced in TP adds transcendent permanent qualities to the Self, whereas what is experienced in False Personality is neither transcendent nor permanent in the Grand Cycle of experience.

Definition of Essence

Philosophically, that which cannot be removed without changing the identity is referred to as the essence, or the essential self. In other words, the essence is permanent but the essence can have temporary attributes.

Introduction

Essence (Latin: essentia) is a polysemic term, that is, it may have significantly different meanings and uses. It is used in philosophy and theology as a designation for the property or set of properties or attributes that make an entity or substance what it fundamentally is, and which it has by necessity, and without which it loses its identity. Essence is contrasted with accident: a property or attribute the entity or substance has contingently, without which the substance can still retain its identity.

The concept originates rigorously with Aristotle (although it can also be found in Plato), who used the Greek expression to ti ên einai (τὸ τί ἦν εἶναι, literally meaning “the what it was to be” and corresponding to the scholastic term quiddity) or sometimes the shorter phrase to ti esti (τὸ τί ἐστι, literally meaning “the what it is” and corresponding to the scholastic term haecceity (thisness) for the same idea. This phrase presented such difficulties for its Latin translators that they coined the word essentia (English “essence”) to represent the whole expression. For Aristotle and his scholastic followers, the notion of essence is closely linked to that of ‘definition’ (ὁρισμός horismos).

In the history of Western philosophy, essence has often served as a vehicle for doctrines that tend to individuate different forms of existence as well as different identity conditions for objects and properties; in this logical meaning, the concept has given a strong theoretical and common-sense basis to the whole family of logical theories based on the “possible worlds” analogy set up by Leibniz and developed in the intentional logic from Carnap to Kripke, which was later challenged by “extensionalist” philosophers such as Quine.

Etymology

The English word essence comes from Latin essentia, via French essence. The original Latin word was created purposefully, by Ancient Roman philosophers, in order to provide an adequate Latin translation for the Greek term οὐσία (ousia)...

St Thomas Aquinas, in his commentary on De hebdomadibus (Book II) by Boethius, states that in this work the distinction between essence (id quod est, what the thing is) and Being (esse) was introduced for the first time. Whereas the Being participated in entities is infinite and infinitely perfect, the essence — and not the matter — delimits the perfection of the Being in entities and makes them finite. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Essence> — retrieved 29 July 2023]

Essence and Personality According to Gurdjieff

As usual, I will quote from Ouspensky, who quotes Gurdjieff at length regarding this subject:

It must be understood that man [humans] consists of two parts: Essence and Personality. Essence in man is what is his own. Personality in man is what is “not his own”. “Not his own” means what has come from outside, what he has learned, or reflects, all traces of exterior impressions left in the memory and in the sensations, all words and movements that have been learned, all feelings created by imitation — all this is not his own, all this is from Personality. A small child has no Personality yet. He is what he really is. He is Essence. His desires, tastes, likes, dislikes, express his Being, such as it is. But as soon as so-called “education” begins, Personality begins to grow. Personality is created partly by the intentional influences of other people, that is, by “education”, and partly by involuntary imitation of them by the child itself.... Essence is the truth in man; Personality is the false. But in proportion as Personality grows, Essence manifests itself more and more rarely and more and more feebly and it very often happens that Essence stops in its growth at a very early age and grows no further.... Sometimes though very seldom, and sometimes when it is least expected, Essence proves fully grown and developed in a man, even in cases of undeveloped Personality, and in this case Essence unites together everything that is serious and real in a man. But his happens very seldom. As a rule, a man's Essence is either primitive, savage, and childish, or else simply stupid. The development of Essence depends on work on oneself. A very important moment in the work on oneself is when a man begins to distinguish between his Personality and his Essence. [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 161–163]

Gurdjieff did not teach the innate immortality of the soul and did not teach reincarnation, as the Michaels did. From the description above, it is obvious that what Gurdjieff meant by Essence is what came to be known in the Michaelian teachings as True Personality, and that what Gurdjieff meant by Personality is what came to be known in the Michaelian teachings as False Personality; refer to the companion chapter on “Personality: True and False” for the study paper on that subject. The meaning of Essence in the Michaelian teachings evolved into something else, namely as something beyond the True Personality that someone is born with, as something beyond even the soul that animates a human incarnation, as “the intrinsic core of the soul”. Anyway, this difference between what came to be called Essence and True and False Personality was actually not apparent from the beginning of the original Michaelian group — it was developed over the two-year course of the channeling sessions, and it was somewhat clarified and codified by Chelsea Quinn Yarbro for MF, and thence to the subsequent Michaelian teachings community.

Let us trace that development, first by looking at Essence in the original Michaelian group, then Personality in the original Michaelian group, then the contrast between Essence & Personality in the original Michaelian group, then the confusion of “Essence” with “Role” in the original Michaelian group, then my proposed disambiguation of the terms.

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is not a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they appear in the transcriptions, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Essence per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

In this section, I collect, analyze, and synthesize the original Michaelian group statements that pertain exclusively to the Essence. First I search through the original Michaelian group transcriptions looking only for the word “Essence” in order to get a definition and description. By examining the use of the word in various contexts, the definition of the concept of Essence is thereby constructed. [[Perhaps this section can be divided into subsections, dedicated to different aspects or characteristics of Essence.]]

Even before the Michaels showed up in channeling, Soleal was using the word Essence in the original Michaelian group:

I would like to know how long you have been the leader of your world, and I would like to know what you teach them.

I have been here for ten of this world's revolutions [around its star]. I teach them what I would teach you: that is, to seek moderation in all things, to love unselfishly, to become intimate with the inner workings of your spirit, to live in the essence of that spirit, to liberate the trapped Essence is the reincarnational purpose. I try to guide them in this path, so that they might be free sooner. [early 1973]

Refer to the chapters “Moderation”, “Love”, “Intimacy”, “Liberation”, and “Reincarnation” for more about those subjects. It would seem that Essence here refers to that which reincarnates, which transcends lifetimes.

Alice: So does that mean that I am a catalyst?

Zealots make the finest catalysts. You are not a zealot, but you can act as a calming force on those around you. There is peace and serenity in your Essence too. This could be the major part of growth for you to get in touch with those fine elements. [03 July 1973]

My takeaway from this passage is that Essence has characteristics that define it, such as being serene versus being catalytic by nature. Putting that notion together with the previous notion, we come to understand that these Essence characteristics are carried over from lifetime to lifetime. At this point in our research, it seems like a good idea to make a distinction between the “character” traits of Essence that spans lifetimes and the “personality” traits of a particular lifetime. Is this notion supported by subsequent channeling?

Dick: Love and sex seem like separate things — but when they're pulling together, it seems like a stronger force is generated than either by itself. It seems like the only kind of energy that I have experienced to date that might be the kind of energy that you need for actual [spiritual] evolution.

Sexual energy, when used to express higher Centers, can be incredibly strong. When the energy is relegated downward, it results in an energy leak. That is sometimes why you want to sleep after physical union. You fed lower Centers — sometimes the Moving Center and the Essence is exhausted, so the body goes to sleep to free the Essence... The body is not capable of experiencing ecstasy; only the Essence can experience ecstasy.... [03 July 1973]

Refer to chapters “Sexuality”, “Centers, Higher”, “Energy and Energy Leaks”, and “Liberation”. Briefly, what you will find there is that the Sexual Center is a higher Center, and that Essence is accessed via the higher Centers, and that Personality operates mostly in the lower Centers. With this passage, we can add to the distinction between Personality and the characteristics of Essence the distinction between the properties of the body and the characteristics of Essence.

In this same session, the channeling on this subject continued as follows:

As you live more and more in your Essence, you will realize that the [Essence] goals are very different [from the goals of the body and of the Personality]. The body seeks survival in physical form. The primeval Essence does not need the form and substance. It cares nothing for the desires of the body. It seeks elevation through any avenue open to it. Think of the way Jesus died. This is always the way it is in the end. Entrapment in the physical body is part of Karma for the Essence. It will fight to be free, and if martyrdom is all there is, it will choose that door to freedom. [03 July 1973]

Refer to chapters “Liberation” and “Karma”. Here again, we see that Essence has characteristics, including motivations, that transcend lifetimes, as distinct from the body (and the Personality) that are limited to a particular lifetime. A recurring theme in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, first revealed here, is that Essence often pulls in different directions than the body (and the Personality) does.

In this same session, the channeling on this subject continued as follows:

Dick: All right, then I'll lean. I'd like to hear more about the last subject.

The Essence uses others to get free. The state you desire can be achieved by decision. This may sound platitudinous, but it is the only way it can happen. No one is going to do it for you — take your hand and lead you to the sacred spring, so that you can drink the holy elixir and have instant knowledge. [03 July 1973]

My takeaway from this passage is that the Personality self can either thwart Essence by making decisions that are contrary to Essence (its default mode of operation), or it can step aside and let Essence into the life. Much more is said about this in the section below that is dedicated to the contrast between Essence and Personality.

That was the last of Soleal's references to Essence, and then the Michaels appeared. In their first session, the Michaels also had somewhat to say on the subject.

Complexity is the antithesis of what the spirit seeks. The body represents the epitome of complexity. That is why the spirit is again and again attracted to it, until the partially awakened Essence catches a glimpse beyond the “veil.” [12 August 1973]

Refer to chapters “Awakening from Sleep” and “Veil”. Here again in this passage the Essence is contrasted with the body. However, new to this discussion is the notion of the ‘awakening’ of Essence. There are other passages that say the Essence is always vigilant (see below), so I take this passage to mean that, from the point of view of the Personality, it is as if the Personality relaxes its grip on the life enough to allow the Essence to increase its influence in the life.

Then I would say that much of his advice does not apply to us. Isn't that what that answer means?

Much does not apply now. When you rid yourself of all negative thoughts about sex, then it is possible for you to have a variety of higher level sexual encounters. These do not always have to be physical. Some of your most rewarding sexual encounters occur when you think you are asleep. These are encounters with unknown beings on the Astral Plane, and also Essence encounters with actually known beings. [12 August 1973]

In this passage I distinguish three levels of the “self” at play, from lower to higher levels: 1) the waking Personality self; 2) the dream body self, aka the astral body self, which might otherwise be referred to as the “soul”; 3) it is not clear from this passage if the astral self is different from the Essence self, but it could be. How these three relate to each other is not yet clear at this stage of our investigation, but clarity is on the way, even in this same session:

Discussion: concerning being unpopular because you held unpopular beliefs, pursued teachings, etc.

There will always be unpopularity when unpopular ideas are espoused and expressed. The body does not wish the Essence to be freed. It will fight to keep the Essence asleep. It takes many such fights to strengthen the Essence. [12 August 1973]

Refer to chapters “Liberation” and “Awakening from Sleep”. Here again in this passage the motivations of Essence are contrasted with the motivations of the body. Here again, I understand that the Essence is always vigilant, but from the point of view of the Personality, the Essence appears to be as if it were ‘asleep’ when it is not allowed to function in the life.

Concerning the “alien corn”: That part that was brought to mind was about homesickness and longing. The corn, you know, is neutral. It just grows and gives ears of corn, but it is called “alien corn” because it is not growing in her home.

To have the feeling of home, the Essence must be at peace. As long as the different drummer still sounds different to you, you will remain out of step with the music. [12 August 1973]

The Essence will be more at ‘peace’ the less the Personality ‘fights’ it. The more your Personality ‘marches to the tune’ of Essence, the more the feeling that you have come ‘home’.

Should we help her?

If you are willing to provide the necessary support. Her Essence is a problem with her — it keeps cropping up. [17 August 1973]

The Personality tends to regard the Essence as a pest.

How does [her] friend share a Karmic Ribbon?

An essentially passive resistance to change is his chief obstacle. From what you are projecting, however, the Essence is one of compassionate strength. This is not always presented to the world, but you sense it at a deeper level. This is not a joyous Essence. This is why he seeks joy in the Essence of others at that deeper level. [17 August 1973]

Here again we see character traits (strength, joy) ascribed to Essence, and it is said that they function at a “deeper” level, probably meaning deeper than Personality.

What is an obstacle for me?

Alice has an obstacle in Personality, not Essence; that is the necessity to put herself down in front of others and thereby gain the reassurance [that she is not so lowly]. You can overcome that by realizing that the Personality is a hindrance, and that its “needs” need not be fulfilled. [17 August 1973]

What about Arthur’s Essence? What is it?

This man has a joyous expansive Essence. [17 August 1973]

Could we have a definition of Karma from Michael?

As you reap, so you also sow. Or as you sow, so you shall reap. However, this goes far deeper than mere action by those immersed in the waking sleep. For them, the energy loss is far greater, for most of their lives are wasted in fantasy and fantasy costs much in Karmic debts. You must fulfill all carnal desires before serious work is begun on the Essence. This can take many lives, usually a minimum of forty-nine. [26 August 1973]

I would like to know what course of action to take, whether to go back to school, which is one of the present aims or just what to do.

The formal education would only serve to give you the proper credentials and increase your credibility factor. If you can pursue the course in Essence, this would be Good Work. Otherwise, you probably will not distinguish yourself academically. [26 August 1973]

My patients have headaches and I have no inkling of why they have chronic ones. Some I just don’t understand at all. I can’t figure out why they have headaches all the time.

Headaches are repressed emotions. Many things can be said through the painful head. Most frequently, a weariness of the body coupled with a bored, trapped Essence will produce the worst headache. Young Souls frequently have migraine headaches. They do not attempt to understand the treadmill they are on. Mature Souls frequently have tension headaches from being surrounded by uncomfortable souls all day. Mature Souls in close contact with Baby Souls and many Young Souls tend to have the most frequent and severe headaches. You can treat their headaches by helping them see the source. With Young Souls, you can only treat the pain. [04 September 1973]

[[Continue the word search through the remainder of the original Michaelian group transcriptions. Passages that do not provide additional insight or angles of perspective need not be quoted here.]]

Essence Contact

Is our Essence aware of the things we have to accomplish?

The group answered, yes, and that we needed to be in touch with our Essence. [15 May 1974]

Essence Role

So called because it does not change from lifetime to lifetime, not because it is the essential identity of the primordial “spark” that is Cast from the Tao. Make a distinction between spark and Essence. In other words, Essence Role is of the Physical Plane, not all of the planes. In other words, Roles is essential to an identity on the Physical Plane, not because Role-ish is essential identity. (Does the essential identity of the “spark” consist of three parameters, which metaphorically provide its ‘address’ in the 3-D ‘matrix’ of all “sparks”?)

Ralph: Roles are in Essence, not changeable. What are Roles on higher Astral Plane, if any?

The Roles are, of course, retained on the low Astral Plane where the souls remain separate. As the integration [of the Entity] begins to take place, the Roles become more and more blurred, until they are dissolved, or better yet resolved, on the high Astral Plane. They are not transcended here, but the memory of them is retained. If you like, you can compare it to a racial mixture that eventually leads to assimilation. [08 October 1974]

Personality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

In this section, I collect, analyze, and synthesize the original Michaelian group statements that pertain exclusively to the Personality.

Essence and Personality per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

In this section, I collect, analyze, and synthesize the original Michaelian group statements that pertain exclusively to Essence and Personality as distinct and contrasting factors in the human experience. This gives us a comparison and contrast to the two terms, and thus help us to understand what they refer to.

Dick: Rodney Collin in his writings said that the left side was the Essence (right side being Personality). It seems that what happened to Sarah validates it.

It can be taken for true. It also applies backwards to left-handers, as their control comes from the opposite side of the body. I believe this last part conflicts with Collin. [05 July 1973]

The left side of the body is controlled more by the right brain hemisphere, whereas the right side of the body is controlled more by the left brain hemisphere. British psychiatrist Iain McGilchrist has a lot to say about the differences in function and perception between left and right hemispheres of the brain in his book The Master and his Emissary. My correlation of that book with Michaelian concepts is that the Personality mostly functions in the lower Centers in the left brain hemisphere, and that the Essence mostly functions through the higher Centers in the right brain hemisphere.

I have a complicated question about Personality and Essence. From what he has said before, it seems like you get here and you develop the Personality (the learned Personality according to where you land) and it is much in the way of what you want to do. You may never do what you are supposed to do because of the Personality. This is what I've been doing.

You will burn out all your Karma. You must. The choices you make between physical bodies are part of the learning process also.

Comment: Maybe he's saying you'll lose it in spite of your Personality.

Personality is just another defense the body employs with the help of the other bodies around it. [12 August 1973]

The (False) Personality is associated with the body, and both of those are at odds with Essence.

Essence Role per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

In this section, I collect, analyze, and synthesize the original Michaelian group statements that pertain exclusively to the juxtaposition of Essence and Role.

Concluding Comments on Essence and Personality

Conclusion: "Essence" is the broad generic term for all of those characteristics that define that which transcends any particular lifetime with its Personality traits. Role is one of those few characteristics that partakes of both realms, so it is "ambiguous" in that it is of both Personality and Essence. Soul Age is a measure of the amount of experience assimilated over the course of lifetimes, so it also is ambiguous in that it partakes of both realms.

ESSENCE CONTACT

When you begin to see these 'sides [of a problem]' as merely alternatives and not as either negative or positive then you will know that Essence is looking at the situation. Until then you can be sure that the Personality is reacting to a proposition which seems threatening. We would agree that [there is no positive or negative in Essence]. But you must remember that in Essence one experiences, one does not evaluate. We would point out that that which is the Soul operating from Essence feels that which we call Agape, and that is a feeling of tranquillity, of peace. And we doubt that the Personality of many earth-bound Souls would consider these particularly strong emotions. We do not dispute that [the Soul has inner fires burning]. The energy will be available in quantities now unavailable to you simply because you will not be leaking it out through fantasies and hostilities. In this society we would say the majority [of Essences are bored while incarnate]. To stimulate it of course it must be presented with challenges, not struggles. When Essence has to struggle it refuses. Struggling is not worth the effort and it knows this. Insoluble problems are good examples of struggles that the personality loves and the Essence flees from through boredom. Spiritual Growth, for example [is challenge for Essence]. All forms of studious endeavor when undertaken for the sheer joy of the undertaking. Some forms of religious pursuit. Work that is in Essence. That is to say, for instance, painting was in Essence for the Old Artisan [name deleted] and his Essence was not bored. [Besides fighting,] many activities involving administrations and leadership [are in Essence for Warriors]. Even supervisory positions in public recreation areas. We know of many Mature and Old Warriors in this country now working as park rangers and their Essences are not bored. [05 June 1974]

The personality disintegrates without Essence Contact. He spends increasingly more time out of the body on a more pleasant Plane for him and will perhaps choose to stay soon. [14 July 1974]

① “EST” — ERHARD SEMINARS TRAINING

Erhard Seminars Training (EST) was (and still is, in the form of “Landmark Forum”) an intense seminar, originally developed and led by Werner Erhard. It was popular in the San Francisco Bay area at the time the original Michaelian group was meeting, and several members of the original Michaelian group attended EST training. Its program was primarily geared for minimizing cultural programming and maximizing one’s true self. EST has many similarities to Gurdjieff’s and the Michaels’ concept of shedding the False Personality to reveal the True Personality. Because of these similarities, and because EST had an effect on the original Michaelian group members, and because the Michaels basically endorsed EST, I deem it worthy of inclusion and discussion in this Study Papers book.

The knowledge of the involvement of the original Michaelian group members with EST (and Gurdjieff, and A Course in Miracles, and other contemporary spiritual movements) is not generally known in Michaelian teachings communities subsequent to the original Michaelian group because Yarbrow said nothing about it in her books. original Michaelian group members were not “playing” with the Ouija board at a party when they contacted the Michaels, and the original Michaelian group did not exist and develop in a metaphysical vacuum, as Yarbrow’s fictionalized account of the original Michaelian group in Messages from Michael would have us believe. However, now we have the original Michaelian group transcriptions available for study, and I suggest that it enriches and augments our understanding of the Michaelian teachings in general if we investigate the influence that these various movements had on the original Michaelian group members.

An excerpt from the second issue of Dimensions! newsletter had this to say about some of the teachings that the original Michaelian group members explored:

Aside from our own teacher [the Michaels], we have individually and in small groups within our group been experiencing the Gurdjieff/Ouspensky material, and/or Werner Erhard’s EST training, as well as the approach of Chögyam Trungpa, Rinpoche, whose book Cutting Through Spiritual Materialism has been of interest to some of us. One of our people has just read The Only Dance There Is by Baba Ram Dass and is sharing this with others of us. Another is perusing The Phoenix Lectures by L. Ron Hubbard, of Scientology. Others are in touch with the Living Love Center and are studying their Handbook to Higher Consciousness. The Logos abounds, to be sure ... within and without us ... and we synthesize and unfold, as we learn and, ultimately, detach. [Dimensions! June 1975]

To start the comparison of EST with Michaelian teachings, let’s take a look at the founder of EST and the nature of his work.

Brief Biography of Werner Erhard

Turning, as usual, to my trusty source of information, Wikipedia, we find the following statements, extracted from a lengthy biography of Erhard. Underlined words are my emphasis on the nature of the influences that led to EST:

Werner Hans Erhard (born John Paul Rosenberg; September 5, 1935) is an American author and lecturer known for founding EST, which operated from 1971 to 1984. He has written, lectured, and taught on self improvement.... In 1991 Erhard retired from business and sold his existing intellectual property to his employees, who then formed Landmark Education, renamed in 2013 “Landmark Worldwide”, with which he consults occasionally.

While largely self-educated, Erhard was influenced by or worked closely with academics, philosophers, thinkers and artists. During his time in St. Louis, he read two books that had a marked effect on him: Think and Grow Rich by Napoleon Hill (1937) and Psycho-Cybernetics by Maxwell Maltz (1960). When a member of his staff at Parents Magazine introduced him to the ideas of [psychologists] Abraham Maslow and Carl Rogers, both key figures in the Human Potential Movement, his interests became more focused on personal fulfillment than sales success. After moving to Sausalito, he attended seminars by Alan Watts, a Western interpreter of Zen Buddhism, who introduced him to the distinction between mind [Michaeliese: Personality] and self [Michaeliese: Essence]; Erhard subsequently became close friends with Watts. Erhard also studied in Japan with Zen rōshi Yamada Mumon.... Erhard attended the Dale Carnegie public speaking course in 1967. He was sufficiently impressed by it to make his staff attend the course, and began to think about developing a course of his own. Over the following years, Erhard investigated a wide range of movements, including Encounter, Transactional Analysis, Enlightenment Intensive, Subud and Scientology. In 1970 Erhard became involved in Mind Dynamics and began teaching his own version of Mind Dynamics classes in San Francisco and Los Angeles. The directors of Mind Dynamics eventually invited him into their partnership, but Erhard rejected the offer, saying he would rather develop his own seminar program — EST, the first program of which he conducted in October 1971. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Werner_Erhard — retrieved 30 June 2021]

Adding 35 years to his birth year of 1935 we arrive at 1970. Thus we find that Erhard developed and deployed EST at the time of his Fourth Milestone (aka Internal Monad). How appropriate to do what he did at that time in the story arc of his life. As we will see below, the Michaels pegged Erhard as a first Level Old Sage. How appropriate that he formulated a synthesis of various psychological and spiritual traditions, and then taught his synthesis.

Essence of EST

Continuing the Wikipedia article on Erhard, we find the following. Here again, I have underlined words and phrases that describe what EST is all about. The typical Michaelian student will recognize the similarities to components of the Michaelian teachings, specifically the transition from living in False Personality to living in True Personality, from living per cultural expectations to living per Essence promptings.

Starting in 1971, EST, short for Erhard Seminars Training and also Latin for “it is” offered in-depth personal and professional development workshops, the initial program of which was called “The EST Training”. The EST Training’s purpose was to transform the way one sees and makes sense of life so that the situations one had been trying to change or tolerating clear up in the process of living itself. The point was to leave participants free to be, while increasing their effectiveness and the quality of their lives. The EST Training was experiential and transformational in nature.... American ethicist, philosopher, and historian Jonathan D. Moreno has described the EST training as “the most important cultural event after the human potential movement itself seemed exhausted” and a form of “Socratic interrogation” [“know thyself”]. Erhard challenged participants to be themselves and live in the present instead of playing a role imposed on them by their past, and to move beyond their current points of view into a perspective from which they could observe their own positionality. The author Robert Hargrove said, “you’re going to notice that things do begin to clear up, just in the process of life itself.” [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Werner_Erhard — retrieved 30 June 2021]

Notice that the essence of the EST method of mitigating False Personality is the same as in Gurdjieff (self-observation) and in the Michaelian teachings (Photographing) during the course of daily life. This is a psychotherapy more than it is a spirituality, but my perception is that the former lays a proper foundation for the latter. That is to say, psychotherapy increases self-awareness, which eventually leads to Self-awareness.

This brief review in the biography of Erhard is expanded in the Wikipedia article on EST itself:

Erhard Seminars Training (marketed as est, though often encountered as EST or Est) was an organization, founded by Werner Erhard in 1971, that offered a two-weekend (6-day, 60-hour) course known officially as “The est Standard Training”. This seminar aimed to “transform one’s ability to experience living so that the situations one had been trying to change or had been putting up with clear up just in the process of life itself”. An EST website claims that the training “brought to the forefront the ideas of transformation, personal responsibility, accountability, and possibility”.

The EST Standard Training program ... confronted participants one-on-one and challenged them to be themselves rather than to play a role that had been imposed on them by the past.

Jonathan D. Moreno observed that “participants might have been surprised how both physically and emotionally challenging and how philosophical the training was.” He writes that the critical part of the training was freeing oneself from the past, which was accomplished by “experiencing” one’s recurrent patterns and problems rather than repeating them. The word experience was used to mean a process of fully experiencing the pointless repetition of old, burdensome behaviors so as to not be run by them. The seminar aimed to enable participants to shift their contextual state of mind around which their life was organized from the attempt to get satisfaction or to survive, to an experience of actually being satisfied and experiencing oneself as whole and complete in the present moment. The EST training offered people the opportunity to free themselves from the past, rather than living a life enmeshed by their past....

These classroom agreements provided a rigorous setting whereby people's ordinary ways to escape confronting their experience of themselves were eliminated. Moreno describes the EST training as a form of "Socratic interrogation ["know thyself"] ...relying on the power of the shared cathartic experience that Aristotle observed." Erhard challenged participants to be themselves instead of playing a role that had been imposed on them and aimed to press people beyond their point of view, into a perspective from which they could observe their own positionality. As Robert Kiyosaki writes, "During the training, it became glaringly clear that most of our personal problems begin with our not keeping our agreements, not being true to our words, saying one thing and doing another. That first full day on the simple class agreements was painfully enlightening. It became obvious that much of human misery is a function of broken agreements — not keeping your word, or someone else not keeping theirs."

As a way of observing and confronting their own perspective and point of view, groups of participants were brought onto the stage and confronted. They were asked to "imagine that they were afraid of everyone else and then that everyone else was afraid of them" and to re-examine their reflex patterns of living that kept their lives from working. This was followed by interactions ... covering topics such as reality and the nature of the mind, looking at the possibility that "what is, is and what ain't, ain't", and that "true enlightenment is knowing you are a machine" [shades of Gurdjieff!] and culminating in a realization that people do not need to be stuck with their automatic ways of being but can instead be free to choose their ways of being in how they live their lives. Participants were told they were perfect the way they were and were asked to indicate by a show of hands if they "had gotten it".

Eliezer Sobel said in his article "This is It: EST, 20 Years Later":

I considered the training to be a brilliantly conceived Zen koan, effectively tricking the mind into seeing itself, and in thus seeing, to be simultaneously aware of who was doing the seeing, a transcendent level of consciousness, a place spacious and undefined, distinct from the tired old story that our minds continuously tell us about who we are, and with which we ordinarily identify.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Erhard_Seminars_Training< — retrieved 30 June 2021]

Although Gurdjieff is not mentioned as an influence on Erhard, we see many similarities in their psychology, in their philosophy, and in their practice. As with the Gurdjieffian teachings, EST was about minimizing the acculturated Personality and maximizing the Essence; both people were focused on "waking up" the sleeping soul via "shocks". One method was self-observation after being taught what to look for; another method was Photography by others who were further along than oneself; these methods were presented in an intensely intimate setting that drove the physical, emotional, mental, psychological, and philosophical lessons home.

Less than two years after Erhard began his seminars in October 1971, the original Michaelian group began to meet in the spring of 1973. This was after some prior involvement that founding members of the original Michaelian group had with a local Gurdjieff teacher, Robert Burton, who started his group in 1970. As I said above, the original Michaelian group did not come out of a metaphysical vacuum; it came out of these two precursors.

EST in the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The first mention of EST in the original Michaelian group transcriptions happened in the second session in which the Michaels were the source. It is obvious from that mention that some of the members of the original Michaelian group had taken, or were planning to take, the EST seminar:

Comment: EST might take care of people's personal agendas.

In the original Michaelian group, the phrase “personal agenda” was sometimes used in contrast with the transpersonal agenda; refer to the chapter “Agenda” for more information. Personal and transpersonal paths, physical and spiritual paths, often interfere with each other, but the aim of both EST and Gurdjieff (and the Michaelian teachings) is that people use the experiences of daily physical life as catalyst for spiritual development.

Not if it means financial disaster to the person involved. It is enough that several of you know the techniques, then you can teach the others. [17 August 1973]

The EST seminar was not inexpensive. We see here that the Michaels endorsed EST as a valuable adjunct to their teaching; we see below how this was the case.

Dick: I would like to know about the man who devised “EST”, Werner Erhard.

He [Werner Erhard] is not a manifestation of the Causal body [Transcendental Soul] if that is what you mean. However, he does have a workable system for Older Souls. Older Souls are capable of helping each other. In this [Old Soul] Cycle, the psychological becomes philosophical and this is the approach needed. This is why you all discovered Gurdjieff. [04 September 1973]

Erhard had an extremely charismatic personality, so one might have reasonably suspected that he might be a Transcendental Soul, but he was not. Mainstream psychotherapy is most appropriate and effective for Mature Souls. Old Souls often prefer, and are benefited by, non-mainstream methods when implemented by other Old Souls, to address their particular kinds of issues. I have already commented on the similarity of EST with Gurdjieff; both are appropriate for the psychological and philosophical (and spiritual) aspirations of Old Souls, which are often beyond mere mainstream psychotherapy.

Alice: EST helped me to concentrate, but I seem to have lost some of the ability when I went to the mountains.

Even though an intense seminar can ‘wake a sleeping soul’, there is a tendency to go back to sleep in False Personality; vigilance in mitigating distractions is important. One of the perks of mitigating False Personality is the ability to minimize distractions, and to focus on what is real, true, and important to the True Personality or Essence.

Richard: Did you lose it because you were out of touch with it and should have kept it up?

Alice: I guess so. I’ll enroll again. It did open up some feelings.

Richard: Let us ask if it would be of value to us.

It would be a valuable experience.

Dick: [Valuable] for [my children] Kathryn, Cheryl, and Richard?

Kathryn and Richard, yes. Cheryl would enjoy it, but don’t expect her having the same experience. She will perceive the experience in an entirely different light.

Perhaps this was said because Cheryl was a Young Soul, whereas Kathryn and Richard were Old Souls.

Sarah: He’s already told us Werner Erhard was an Old Soul who had a good exercise for Old Souls. [08 September 1973]

That Erhard was an Old Soul was implied, but not stated explicitly, in the session from four days previous; see above.

Alice: One more question, which my daughter Cheryl requested me to ask: Will EST, which she is in the process of experiencing, help her to burn Karmic Ribbons?

Something like Erhard Sensitivity [sic] Training [EST] does not burn Ribbons, but the experience could conceivably put her in touch with untapped inner resources that would enable her to make wise choices in the future and thus burn the Ribbons.

EST allegedly fosters an accurate, unencumbered view of reality, and obviously it is good to have that perspective when facing Karma or any other challenge in life.

Sarah: Wanted to know if children could be helped by EST?

The children would benefit enormously.

Sarah: That’s the first he’s ever said that any of us would benefit. When I offered to send [my daughter] Dorothy to the special children’s EST, she began to cry.

The children do not always make wise choices.

Sarah: You mean I ought to drag Dorothy screaming and kicking? [17 October 1973]

This seems to be a rhetorical question; if the Michaels answered it, it was not recorded.

Dick: The first time I felt this kind of love was at an EST meeting when I saw Betty Fuller, a fat group leader from Esalen. I felt it and it surprised me. [27 October 1973]

One can read about Betty Fuller on the internet; search for her if you are so inclined. She was a large woman with a powerful personality and alleged healing abilities.

Dick: I was at EST this past weekend and tried to perceive different people's Roles and Soul Level. Was I correct on any of these?

As noted above, the EST sessions filled an entire weekend.

Some were. You failed in your perception of Mature Souls in the throes of an emotional crisis. This can be mistaken for the drive and vigor of the Young Soul.

My impression is that EST works very well for Mature Souls in an emotional crisis, but as stated above, the Zen-like philosophical component is very suitable for Old Souls to work through their conceptual blocks.

Dick: I placed Werner Erhard as a last Cycle [Level] Mature Sage.

He is a first Level Old Sage.

Sage is the Role that is best suited for this kind of teaching venue. The first Level is the Warrior-ish Level, which helps to account for the disciplined rigor that was applied to the attendees in the sessions.

Dick: I have come to believe that the EST thing is a powerful tool for the [Michael] group. [Is this] true?

Yes. We have said this. Positive tools are powerful by definition. [08 November 1973]

This is yet another endorsement of the EST principles and practices from the Michaels.

[Dick:] I have prepared a letter to Werner Erhard asking for his help. He has a staff of fifty and a thousand he could ask for help, both to insure safety and to spread the word.

First of all, it will be difficult to convince Erhard or the medical centers to listen to you....

[Dick:] Should I not send the letter to him?

I am implying you should.... If Werner Erhard does not listen, it is obviously not he. There is no way of telling unless you mail the letter. The man does listen to most. [20 November 1973]

The original Michaelian group lacked a charismatic leader, so they asked about Erhard, who was charismatic. Cardinal Roles, such as Erhard the Sage have more charisma. My own feeling about this sort of thing is that charisma has some legitimacy if it does not get subverted or distorted by glamour and hype and sensationalism and such, but that teachings spread by charisma are not as enduring as letting truth and reality take its course via the "grassroots" efforts of Ordinal Fragments.

Gene: Is EST to precipitate these radical changes within me?

That will probably be pretty catalytic. [03 January 1974]

SusanT: What role did EST have in my transition of Goals [from Submission to Growth]?

We think that, for you, this was a most valuable tool. [20 January 1974]

The three previous statements are a rather strong endorsement for the effectiveness of EST and similar methodologies.

Dick: According to Gurdjieff, only with a conscious teacher can one "do" anything. Most people plea when anything goes drastically wrong, "God help me!" At EST, we learned that only "I" am responsible for the mess "I'm" in. We have to look inward and not put the blame on something outside ourselves.

That is, of course, valid. Without a Teacher, you can do nothing. You are blind and deaf; "asleep." [27 February 1974]

Here again, a comparison is made of the teachings and methods of Gurdjieff and Erhard.

Narra: Is my Chief Feature Self-deprecation?

That is valid. The Erhard Sensitivity [sic; Seminars] Training (EST seminar) helped enormously.

Narra: Would EST help a Mid-Cycle Young Sage in Growth?

It cannot harm her. The danger in this [Young Soul] Cycle is always the one of misguided enthusiasm and aggressive proselytizing. [27 February 1974]

Yet another original Michaelian group member who did EST.

Comment: A statement was made concerning the EST process where a box is constructed mentally and problems are placed in it. (Robert Monroe used a similar technique in his [audio] tapes this weekend.)

We would see you all put your problems in the box and leave them there. We would tell you also that you can cleverly construct a trap door in the bottom of the box and can eliminate them altogether. [10 March 1974]

Yet another endorsement of EST by the Michaels. Refer to the chapter “Monroe, Robert” for more information about that teacher that original Michaelian group members had contact with in the form of audio tapes.

Comment: An attempt was made to explain primary, secondary and tertiary upsets and how one must go back to the original upset. Those who have been through EST understand this, but were having difficulty explaining it to the rest.

The body does not like pain, obviously, and will erect as swift a barrier as possible between its receptors and the pain. It is sometimes by fainting, sometimes by more subtle denial. [20 March 1974]

There is a connection is between physical pain and emotional upsets. This Q&A exchange and others are discussed in the chapter “Suffering”.

Is Werner Erhard’s information from the Causal Plane? Is it true?

That is valid.

The so-called “Causal” Plane (“Mental” Plane per Theosophy) correlates with the Intellectual Center, whereas the Astral Plane correlates with the Emotional Center. The EST methodology worked on both Centers, so the questioner was probably wondering what plane EST resonated with.

What is the SRGA on Werner Erhard?

That is correct. Impatience, a Realist in Dominance.

Perhaps someone made guesses but they were not recorded. The three mentioned are all Cardinal Action Overleaves; Erhard was a dynamo.

Does he do automatic writing?

Yes. Some of it [EST] just came into his head, but he is given a headache when he tries to improvise.

Why?

There is, of course, an enormous resurgence of interest in the occult in this part of the world. Sometimes, potential Students are led gently to the School. Sometimes, it is like a bolt out of the blue or a tap on the head. At any rate, this [occult resurgence] is available all over this country. If you are able to listen to the words, you will find them [wherever you are]. You are here [in the Bay Area, in this group] because you wish to be. This is not facetiousness. At a deeper level, you wish to know [that] this [interest in the occult] is not unusual. Given your total picture, it points to curiosity about many things. [27 March 1974]

In subsequent decades, EST and its successor the Landmark Forum spread all over the world, as has the Gurdjieffian teachings — and now the Michaelian teachings.

Alice asked for a clarification of the word typed “facetiousness” from page 2 of March 27’s transcripts. The word “facetious” did not seem to fit the question.

“Facetious” but more like “platitudinous”.

We did later answer the question concerning Werner’s aching head in that when he fogs over the information, he is reminded by the pain. [15 May 1974]

Would that this were true of all teachers.

Narra did shed her gray [Aura] overtone following Erhard’s Sensitivity [sic] Training. We hope this is permanent. [15 May 1974]

Above it was said that EST is so intense and effective that it could even facilitate the change in an Overleaf; here it is said that it can facilitate the change in one’s Aura color. Gray is an indicator of repression, and Narra’s Mode was Repression; perhaps she at least went from the Negative Pole to the Positive Pole. Refer to the chapter “Auras: Colors and Meanings” for more information.

Joan: Could I have a comment about my arrogant attachment to the motherhood role?

The “motherhood role” is wholly in False Personality, yes. You are attempting to be more reasonable about this and this is not easy in your culture because, as the man Werner says, you do not experience your experiences. Therefore, it is almost irresistible to attempt to live again through your children, and this is unfair to both you and the child. Also, there is an element of Martyrdom in the motherhood role of the culture, which is unnecessary. It is not at all good to put off self-growth until the children are grown. They will not appreciate you one quanta more for your efforts. [16 June 1974]

One recommendation of EST and other psychotherapeutic/spiritual groups is to be mindful of your experiences: pay attention, be vigilant, be awake. More is said about that further on in this chapter.

Ted: In CIF and EST, [we are] exposed to much knowledge. What is the purpose of these for us?

This answer would be much the same for all in this room. That is, to synthesize and verify this knowledge so that you can be in a better space to promulgate the Logos. [19 June 1974]

It is not just for ourselves that we learn; it is also for others who may be influenced by us.

Delia: Should I take EST?

It would not be a bad idea. [28 August 1974]

Yet another endorsement of EST, at least for this particular person.

Dick: I become irritated with people who have expectations who tell me not to have any. One cannot initiate anything unless he has expectations. There are rare times when I can just be and have no expectations, and that is beautiful. This leads me to a topic I could not understand with Robert's group, where it was the goal to give up one's ego. As I see it, from one's ego comes one's self-image, one's power, one's strength. If my ego is deficient, then I am in a depressed state and for sure cannot love. In Robert's group, they continue to put down ego, one way by calling I "it": e.g., "It went to dinner" instead of "I went to dinner." I have been trying the EST and Ken Keyes' way to experience experiences. If I'm down, I don't ask myself what to do to go up. I aggravate the down so I can feel it as full as possible. I have burned out a number of things in this way, but I do not feel better for it. It seems that if I have lightened my load, I should feel more buoyant and better. Maybe I haven't tackled the basic problems. Could Michael comment on ego strength?

What you wish to give up is the strength of the ego of the Personality. The Essence has much strength of its own. They are separate and distinct. Remember, when you become your Essence, there will not be the albatross of Repression [Mode] to deal with. Perhaps it would be helpful to point out to you at this time, Dick, that you come far closer to loving when you are painting than at any other time. You do not have to start with loving difficult persons. This is not the primary objective at this time. Loving is Higher Emotion and that requires Balance [of all Centers]. The person who is "conscious" is not a doer anyway. Most who have reached that exalted state of physical being prefer not to do; they are content merely to be with the present — that feeling you have glimpsed when you were in those states briefly.

(paraphrased) This is something we have asked you to consider before: what is it you wish to do, learn to be more fruitful and happier in life, or go on to spiritual enlightenment? The goals are very different and the methods of approach, therefore, would have to be quite different. Living in life requires what you are calling self-image and ego strength. Spiritual acceleration does not require this. It requires negation of the cultural facade. Those who defined the ego and ego states thereof were not, after all, conscious beings and were observing only the personalities of others with their own personalities. The Essence, separate from this, has an innate strength of its own and can survive if the body is prepared for the surge when it comes. Disintegration only comes when the Personality is lost and the Essence is freed prematurely, such as in some psychotic states. Otherwise, those on the path find the surge exhilarating and liberating and are prepared for it when it comes, but this only comes after the groundwork has been laid. Those tools we have given you are at your disposal. You might say that the Essence has its own ego. You are just not acquainted with it. The Artisan ego is what has produced the world's great masterpieces, not always for the King's ransom, either, many times in a lonesome gallery. [14 September 1974]

The reason that I include this lengthy quotation is to emphasize what is stated repeatedly in this chapter and in this book: there is a difference between psychotherapy that makes one a better human being, and the spiritual path that transcends being a mere human being. EST, Gurdjieff, and the Michaelian teachings have elements of both, because the former is a necessary precursor to the latter.

Louise asked Michael to comment about the upcoming EST trip for her.

Yes, we would consider this a wise move and a growth experience. [24 September 1974]

Yet another original Michaelian group member does the EST program. What is not stated here is that Louise's daughter Leslie, who became a Michael channel, also took the EST training and worked in the EST office, according to an interview with Louise.

Comment: We need a Teacher to pass on to us the Agape — like passing the torch in the Olympics. A discussion was held about the experience of looking into other people's eyes without speaking for an extended time. This was an EST process.

This would bring up many taboos and would be a rewarding experience. We would suggest that you start off with only a few minutes and then increase gradually. You see, this is a more powerful experience than you think, for there are now in your group souls who are beginning to trust, and looking at them closely will produce strange emotions. [05 October 1974]

"Eye-gazing" is a common exercise in various encounter groups that have psychological and/or spiritual intimacy as a goal. An internet search yields millions of hits; check it out if it interests you.

Louise: [Question not recorded.]

EST will open many doors. [11 November 1974]

Yet another endorsement from the Michaels.

Two and three years later they were still discussing the EST experience:

There was talk of the Personality and the fact that we must have it for a reason, and why not live with it — or words to that effect.

There comes a point, believe us, when you tire of the experience [of putting up with Personality].

The fallacy in your interpretation of the [Werner] Erhard training (this to Cynthia) is in your stubborn insistence that you love your misery. We do not hear the man Werner saying this [love your misery]. It is possible to endure an unpleasant situation with grace, but the goal is to step from it as quickly as possible, not stay there and grind your molars. [21 November 1976]

Cynthia was an Emotionally Centered Mature Sage in the Passion Mode; she worked for a time for the EST organization.

Dick said we were all just spiritual dilettantes — the utilitarian value comes later — the value of the Overleaves. In order to “surrender,” there has to be a feeling that there is something to achieve through this surrender.

There are two types of experience going on within this movement — and by ‘movement’ we mean the whole guru game that is now on-going. These are the true experiences and the [false] cultural experiences. Most of those who go to EST do not experience anything but group highs, and this could have happened merely by smoking marijuana in the living room with a group of friends. Others have elected to change their lives, and this has occurred only through surrender to the processes. Faith is what determines success.

Dick: The problem is trusting the process. It used to be that “the truth shall set you free.” ... Now it’s baloney that sets you free. (Dick said that!)

Perhaps Dick equated the word “faith” with “baloney”, which I believe is a misunderstanding of what the Michaels meant: I connect “faith” with “surrender to the process”, the outcome of which one does not know in advance. On the other hand, like Dick, I have misgivings that artificial situations, such as those engineered in EST sessions, will effect real and lasting change. Life experiences, including crises, are the best teachers, in my opinion. The self-awareness and self-appraisal taught by Erhard, Gurdjieff, and the Michaels can teach one how to most efficiently and effectively assimilate the catalyst of ordinary and extraordinary life experiences.

Comment: Nonetheless, we’ve all found answers for ourselves — with Robert’s group, EST or S.T.A.R., etc. [10 April 1977]

Dick would like a comment on his observation of himself finding it more difficult to forgive people having more powerful Overleaves than his own.

The absolving oneself of all guilt is, of course, the first step toward understanding the ability of those in Exalted Overleaves to absolve others of the responsibility that they themselves can then willingly shoulder. This concept is no different than that espoused by Werner Erhard, only it is expressed in religious terminology and, therefore by definition, becomes obscure and difficult to absorb; or, at least, one gets the illusion of difficulty from the semantic problems. Forgiveness is really no more than the utter willingness to accept responsibility for one’s own life, and this is why it is so difficult for those in Ordinal Roles when their own existences seem so pale beside the more Exalted Roles. In truth, the Exalted Roles are more able to take the responsibility. Of course, they are. It is easy to take responsibility in the Power Mode, and a King finds it easy to excuse the behavior of a Slave. However, it is far from impossible for those in Ordinal Roles to go through the process of learning to take responsibility for their wins as well as their losses.

We want you to understand that guilt is never a religious-induced phenomenon, and [it] serves only as a part of vanity [Arrogance] in this culture. At one time, it was necessary to extract obedience from a more barbaric populace. This is no longer true, but you keep it around because it aids enormously in the suffering that you all love. The man Werner has discovered within himself an answer, and he chooses to call it accepting responsibility. Others choose to call it forgiving; it all means exactly the same. If you accept responsibility for your own actions, then where will you place the blame if failure occurs? The answer usually becomes: there are no failures. Oddly enough, when the responsibility becomes yours and yours alone, you take precautions not to fail. Failure is an easy way out, and those in Ordinal Roles love to fail because it takes so little effort and the blame can be placed on those in “power”. But, truthfully, no one in an Ordinal Role loses unless he wishes — any more than do those in Exalted Roles. This country has had leaders in Ordinal Roles who have been exceptionally effective. The sense of failure comes not from specific Overleaves but from enculturation and, yes, some Overleaves are more susceptible to enculturation than others, especially some Chief Features and the younger soul levels [Ages]. The Roles are not, however, and you can succeed from any of the Roles providing the Chief Feature is not one that dooms the life experience to failure. Even that [Chief Feature], as you all know, can be extinguished and worked through, but this takes that willingness to stand where you are right now, and realize that you have put yourself there and no one else is responsible. [03 September 1977]

Werner Erhard's "Hunger Project" came up and some [expressed] not feeling the need for concern and that the only real hunger is to expand our consciousness. People's experiences are incomplete and only have a partial picture of the whole from the angle their perception is coming from. Therefore, as Gurdjieff said, everyone lies the minute he speaks. [21 October 1977]

That was the last time the subject of EST appeared in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. It recurred many times during almost the entirety of the original Michaelian group, from shortly after the Michael's first appeared, to near the time that the second Michaelian group started in the late winter or spring of 1978. EST had an effect on original Michaelian group members, and considering the quantity of EST graduates, it likely has had an effect on more people than the Michaelian teachings.

Concluding Comments on EST

Considering how many times the subject of EST came up in the original Michaelian group sessions, I would say that that is an indication of how important it was to them and how many of them took the course.

Subsequent Michaelian students are typically not as intense about the path to spiritual enlightenment as the original Michaelian group was; at best, one might regard the current emphasis of the Michaelian teachings to be on mere psychotherapy.

The original version of EST, under the leadership of Erhard, was so intense and rigid that it garnered a lot of negative criticism; the Landmark Forum toned things down considerably.

Some time in the late 1990s, at a time when I did not know of its derivation from EST, I attended an introductory session of the Landmark Forum. I could see why it has an appeal to a certain class of spiritual seekers in the self-help psychology and spirituality crowd, but I did not take the course.

ESTEEM, HONOR, RESPECT

This chapter is the product of a search for the words esteem, honor, and respect in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Issues of esteem, honor, and respect are unavoidable, they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

The words esteem, honor, and respect are not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings are usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated; both are amenable to psychotherapeutic techniques. Obviously, esteem, honor, and respect are positives to be cultivated. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as "spiritual bypassing". This is discussed at length on such websites as >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<. To skip mitigating one's psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Esteem, Honor, and Respect

So what is meant by template? The online Merriam Webster online dictionary definition is: Wikipedia has an article that provides a definition and a description, as follows (underlined words are my emphasis):

Esteem, Honor, and Respect per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

Concluding Comments on Esteem, Honor, and Respect

EVIL AND GOOD

Philosophers and theologians have deeply pondered the so-called “problem of evil” for millennia. And not just philosophers and theologians, most thoughtful and sensitive people, when they experience or witness something that seems “evil”, also wonder why there is evil in the world. The subject came up in the original Michaelian group, of course, and the Michaels had their answer, as we will see.

The following study paper is the result of a word search for evil and good, but also sin and righteousness, and similar terminology. There is also a related chapter, “Suffering”, which the reader might want to peruse in tandem with this chapter in order to get a broader and clearer picture of what the Michael’s had to say about something that affects us all in one way or another.

Before we look at what the Michaels had to say, let’s take a brief look at what the philosophers and theologians had to say.

The Problem of Evil

In theology, the problem of suffering is connected to the nature of God and the purpose of human life. If God is good and wants the best for its creation, why is human life often filled with so much pain? There is even a technical name for this: “theodicy”. There is an extensive article in Wikipedia that describes the history of the problem and some proposed answers, far more than quoted below, but this is the most relevant portion. Underlines are my emphasis.

The problem of evil is the question of how to reconcile the existence of evil and suffering with an omnipotent, omnibenevolent, and omniscient God. There are currently differing definitions of these concepts. The best known presentation of the problem is attributed to the Greek philosopher Epicurus. It was popularized by David Hume. Besides the philosophy of religion, the problem of evil is also important to the fields of theology and ethics. There are also many discussions of evil and associated problems in other philosophical fields, such as secular ethics, and evolutionary ethics. But as usually understood, the problem of evil is posed in a theological context. Responses to the problem of evil have traditionally been in three types: refutations, defenses, and theodicies. The problem of evil is generally formulated in two forms: the logical problem of evil and the evidential problem of evil. The logical form of the argument tries to show a logical impossibility in the coexistence of God and evil, while the evidential form tries to show that given the evil in the world, it is improbable that there is an omnipotent, omniscient, and wholly good God. The problem of evil has been extended to non-human life forms, to include animal suffering from natural evils and human cruelty against them.

Thereafter was an extensive accounting of the philosophical arguments about the nature of evil and what it all means. We may skip that and move on to the part of the Wikipedia article that is relevant to the Michaelian teachings, the part that has to do with theological concerns: “God” and “soul” and such. This is technically known as “theodicy”. My comments are interspersed among the Wikipedia quotations; underlines are my emphasis.

Soul-making or Irenaean theodicy

The soul-making (or Irenaean) theodicy is named after the 2nd-century Greek theologian Irenaeus whose ideas were adopted in Eastern Christianity. It has been modified and advocated in the twenty-first century by John Hick. Irenaean theodicy stands in sharp contrast to the Augustinian. For Augustine, humans were created perfect but fell, and thereafter continued to choose badly of their own freewill. In Irenaeus' view, humans were not created perfect, but instead, must strive continuously to move closer to it.

The key points of a soul-making theodicy begin with its metaphysical foundation: that "(1) The purpose of God in creating the world was soul-making for rational moral agents". (2) Humans choose their responses to the soul-making process thereby developing moral character. (3) This requires that God remain hidden, otherwise freewill would be compromised. (4) This hiddenness is created, in part, by the presence of evil in the world. (5) The distance of God makes moral freedom possible, while the existence of obstacles makes meaningful struggle possible. (6) The end result of beings who complete the soul-making process is "a good of such surpassing value" that it justifies the means. (7) Those who complete the process will be admitted to the kingdom of God where there will be no more evil. Hick argues that, for suffering to have soul-making value, "human effort and development must be present at every stage of existence including the afterlife".

C. S. Lewis developed a theodicy that began with freewill and then accounts for suffering caused by disease and natural disasters by developing a version of the soul-making theodicy. Nicholas Wolterstorff has raised challenges for Lewis's soul-making theodicy. Erik J. Wielenberg draws upon Lewis's broader corpus beyond The Problem of Pain but also, to a lesser extent, on the thought of two other contemporary proponents of the soul-making theodicy, John Hick and Trent Dougherty, in an attempt to make the case that Lewis's version of the soul-making theodicy has depth and resilience.

Critique

The Irenaean theodicy is challenged by the assertion that many evils do not promote spiritual growth, but can instead be destructive of the human spirit. Hick acknowledges that this process often fails in the actual world. Particularly egregious cases known as horrendous evils, which "[constitute] prima facie reason to doubt whether the participant's life could (given their inclusion in it) be a great good to him/her on the whole," have been the focus of recent work in the problem of evil. Horrendous suffering often leads to dehumanization, and its victims become angry, bitter, vindictive, depressed and spiritually worse.

Yet, life crises are a catalyst for change that is often positive. Neurologists Bryan Kolb and Bruce Wexler indicate this has to do with the plasticity of the brain. The brain is highly plastic in childhood development, becoming less so by adulthood once development is completed. Thereafter, the brain resists change. The neurons in the brain can only make permanent changes "when the conditions are right" because the brain's development is dependent upon the stimulation it receives. When the brain receives the powerful stimulus that experiences like bereavement, life threatening illness, the trauma of war and other deeply painful experiences provide, a prolonged and difficult internal struggle, where the individual completely re-examines their self-concept and perceptions of reality, reshapes neurological structures. The literature refers to turning points, defining moments, crucible moments, and life-changing events. These are experiences that form a catalyst in an individual's life so that the individual is personally transformed, often emerging with a sense of learning, strength and growth, that empowers them to pursue different paths than they otherwise would have.

Steve Gregg acknowledges that much human suffering produces no discernible good, and that the greater good does not fully address every case. "Nonetheless, the fact that sufferings are temporal, and are often justly punitive, corrective, sanctifying and ennobling stands as one of the important aspects of a biblical worldview that somewhat ameliorates the otherwise unanswerable problem of pain".

A second critique argues that, were it true that God permitted evil in order to facilitate spiritual growth, it might be reasonable to expect that evil would disproportionately befall those in poor spiritual health such as the decadent wealthy, who often seem to enjoy lives of luxury insulated from evil, whereas many of the pious are poor and well acquainted with worldly evils. Using the example of Francis of Assisi, G. K. Chesterton argues that, contrary "to the modern mind", wealth is condemned in Christian theology for the very reason that wealth insulates from evil and suffering, and the spiritual growth such experiences can produce. Chesterton explains that Francis pursued poverty "as men have dug madly for gold" because its concomitant suffering is a path to piety.

G. Stanley Kane asserts that human character can be developed directly in constructive and nurturing loving ways, and it is unclear why God would consider or allow evil and suffering to be necessary or the preferred way to spiritual growth. Hick asserts that suffering is necessary, not only for some specific virtues, but that "...one who has attained to goodness by meeting and eventually mastering temptation, and thus by rightly making [responsible] choices in concrete situations, is good in a richer and more valuable sense than would be one created ab initio in a state either of innocence or of virtue. In the former case, which is that of the actual moral achievements of mankind, the individual's goodness has within it the strength of temptations overcome, a stability based upon an accumulation of right choices, and a positive and responsible character that comes from the investment of costly personal effort."

However, the virtues identified as the result of "soul-making" may only appear to be valuable in a world where evil and suffering already exist. A willingness to sacrifice oneself in order to save others from persecution, for example, is virtuous because persecution exists. Likewise, the willingness to donate one's meal to those who are starving is valuable because starvation exists. If persecution and starvation did not occur, there would be no reason to consider these acts virtuous. If the virtues developed through soul-making are only valuable where suffering exists, then it is not clear what would be lost if suffering did not exist. C. Robert Mesle says that such a discussion presupposes that virtues are only instrumentally valuable instead of intrinsically valuable.

The soul-making reconciliation of the problem of evil, states Creegan, fails to explain the need or rationale for evil inflicted on animals and resultant animal suffering, because "there is no evidence at all that suffering improves the character of animals, or is evidence of soul-making in them". Hick differentiates between animal and human suffering based on "our capacity imaginatively to anticipate the future".

Cruciform theodicy

Cruciform theodicy is not a theodical system in the same manner that Soul-making theodicy and Process theodicy are, so it does not address all the questions of "the origin, nature, problem, reason and end of evil." It is a thematic trajectory that, historically, has been the primary Christian response to the problem of evil. Its inclusion as a theme divides general theistic theodicies from specifically Christian ones. Its key elements are: God not being a distant deity but instead, as James Cone states, seeing in the person of Jesus, "God's identity with the suffering of the world". Marilyn McCord Adams says incarnation is the "culmination of a series of things Divine love does to unite itself with material creation...".

The cruciform theodicy asserts that an ontological change in the underlying structure of existence has taken place through the life and death of Jesus, with its immersion in human suffering, transforming suffering itself. Philosopher and Christian priest Marilyn McCord Adams offers this theodicy of "redemptive suffering" in which personal suffering becomes an aspect of Christ's "transformative power of redemption" in the world. An alteration in thinking of the believer also occurs in this model, as they come to see existence in a new light. For example, "On July 16, 1944 awaiting execution in a Nazi prison and reflecting on Christ's experience of powerlessness and pain, Dietrich Bonhoeffer penned six words that became the clarion call for the modern theological paradigm: 'Only the suffering God can help'."

This theodicy contains a special concern for the victims of the world, and stresses the importance of caring for those who suffer at the hands of injustice. Soelle says that Christ's willingness to suffer on behalf of others means that his followers must themselves serve as "God's representatives on earth" by struggling against evil and injustice and being willing to suffer for those on the "underside of history".

Afterlife

Thomas Aquinas suggested the afterlife theodicy to address the problem of evil and to justify the existence of evil. The premise behind this theodicy is that the afterlife is unending, human life is short, and God allows evil and suffering in order to judge and grant everlasting heaven or hell based on human moral actions and human suffering. Aquinas says that the afterlife is the greater good that justifies the evil and suffering in current life. Christian author Randy Alcorn argues that the joys of heaven will compensate for the sufferings on earth.

Stephen Maitzen has called this the "Heaven Swamps Everything" theodicy, and argues that it is false because it conflates compensation and justification. This theodical view is based on the principle that under a just God, "no innocent creature suffers misery that is not compensated by happiness at some later stage (e. g. an afterlife)" but in the traditional view, animals don't have an afterlife.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Problem_of_evil< — retrieved 30 October 2021]

After this brief introduction, there followed an extensive exposition on the definition, formulation, history, theology, and philosophy of the subject. Check it out if you are so inclined. The Stanford Encyclopedia of Philosophy also has an extensive article on the subject: ><https://plato.stanford.edu/entries/evil/><. [[After researching this topic in the transcriptions, I should perhaps quote from these sources and compare and contrast to what the Michaels said.]]

The original Michaelian group members were not philosophers or theologians, so they were not sophisticated about the subtleties of arguments about the reason for "evil", but the subject did come up a few times, and the Michaels did have somewhat to say about it.

Evil and Good per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The word “evil” first appears in the original Michaelian group transcriptions in the second session in which the Michaels were the source:

Phyllis: [Question not given] ...

The concepts expressed here blow your mind. There is no evil in the universe. This alone is enough for some to really have a foundation–shaking experience. [17 August 1973]

This blunt statement requires a thorough explanation ... There are many other allusions to evil before we get to that ...

If the Young Soul’s own personal opinion of sex is rather low, it will do its best to convince those around it that sex is evil and should be eschewed. The Baby Soul tends to be fundamentalistic in its religious beliefs.

Personification of the godhead is the strongest in this Cycle. The Baby Soul believes in the forces of evil. [late August 1973]

The first clue to an answer is that people subjectively perceive evil where the Michaels have a different, and I would say objective characterization from their higher perspective.

Dick: Was my father a late Cycle Old Soul whose personality was much bound up in False Personality?

Yes, but not late Cycle, [he was] early [Cycle Old Soul]. This is why he could not come out of the False Personality to be “real” to you and Mary [his mother]. CarolH [his sister] did not perceive this. He had [the] desire to search, but not [the] knowledge of the goal. The goal [of searching] does not become clear to other than Older Souls. That is why the penitent orders are almost entirely composed of Mature Souls. They perceive the collective guilt of the world around them and assume that it is they who have sinned. There is no sin, only Karma, as there is no evil, only Maya. [08 September 1973]

This answer — that the perception that “evil” objectively exists is part of Maya hints at the doctrine of justification or reconciliation mentioned in the philosophical literature quoted above — is elaborated in the chapter on Maya.

EVOLUTION AND INVOLUTION

EXCUSE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “excuse” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) People making excuses is a pervasive phenomenon in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “excuse” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological and psychotherapeutic component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing” (>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass<), and it usually proves to be problematic.

The purpose of this chapter is to point out where excuses are legitimate and where they are not legitimate. Wisdom comes with knowing the difference. A related chapter is “Forgiveness”.

Definition of Excuse

So what is meant by excuse? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Excuse per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Dick: False Personality is always on guard. As far as Personality goes, it is not going to be duplicated. It's amazing how False Personality will avoid painful or even good situations. You make excuses and justify intellectually, even manufacturing illnesses to avoid doing something. [06 October 1973]

Most Old Souls are rather sloppy. The tendency toward simplicity is Good Work; being a menace to public health is not. Sometimes the casualness provides an excuse to vegetate. [10 November 1973]

Edgar: Why is it that Old Souls with united Fragments are not superior in competence to Young Souls who have a smaller amount of united Fragments?

The Old Soul, at a deeper level, realizes the futility and temporary nature of material achievements, and, therefore, lacks the drive to accomplish this. You are all extremely competent, even in Roles that are out of Essence. The drive is now for spiritual evolution in all of you. Therefore, you are inclined to let the rest slide. Any one of you could achieve anything you wish to do. Why didn't you? For instance, Edgar uses poverty as an excuse, but this is invalid. Many poverty-stricken Young Souls have achieved wondrous things through sheer struggle. Sarah uses the same excuse. [22 November 1973]

Does "acceptance" mean that a person accepts everything around him or does he work to get others to accept him?

Acceptance as a Goal causes the soul involved to go through various machinations in order to find their special niche in life. This also in turn causes them to excuse the faults of others, since they themselves recognize their own imperfections. This is the proverbial "nice guy". [31 December 1973]

... verbal communication is a poor excuse for the sum of communication. However, until one of you break through with telepathy, this will have to do. [31 December 1973]

Refer to the chapters "Communication" and "Telepathy".

Mary: I read the group's book and would suggest a glossary would be most helpful, with definitions of such words as Maya, Monad, Logos, and Karma.

We would propose an exercise in psychic Photography for all of you as follows: begin to Photograph yourselves reacting to suggestions of change with the statement, "I cannot", then realize that this is not true. Sometimes, the truth will be that you do not at the present moment possess the required skills or knowledge, but more often than not, the truth will be, "I do not want to." This is vital, and a positive step on the path. You can help by Photographing each other in this. Also, all of you are guilty of using this as an excuse many times a day to shift the blame, and this accomplishes that nicely. You present then the picture of a student at the mercy of the cosmos, which is, of course, absurd. [20 March 1974]

The lady [Mary, mother of Jesus] was a reasonably intelligent young woman raised in strict tradition, married to a strongly independent Artisan [Joseph] of somewhat impious ideas. She found it necessary many times in her life to make excuses for him to her disapproving relatives. [13 May 1974]

There is, in the last analysis, no confrontation except that which occurs when the Essence is free enough to confront the Personality. The confrontation is an inner thing. That is the only one that will produce growth. There is also a lack of trust among many of you in that if one opens the door just a crack, perhaps the light will be so blinding that that one will not be able any longer to move in darkness. In other words, there will be no more excuses possible. [09 February 1975]

Perhaps you have heard the aphorism, "When all else fails, read the instructions". It is the same with the spiritual path. You should not wait until all alternatives have been exhausted before you do the right thing.

Excluding a source of valuable Friction is just another excuse.... [15 April 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Friction" for more information about that method of advancing oneself on the spiritual path. Overcoming Friction is an unpleasant way to advance, but it should not be excluded on that account.

Dick would like a comment on his observation of himself finding it more difficult to forgive people having more powerful Overleaves than his own.

The absolving oneself of all guilt is, of course, the first step toward understanding the ability of those in Exalted Overleaves to absolve others of the responsibility that they themselves can then willingly shoulder. This concept is no different than that espoused by Werner Erhard, only it is expressed in religious terminology and, therefore by definition, becomes obscure and difficult to absorb; or, at least, one gets the illusion of difficulty from the semantic problems. Forgiveness is really no more than the utter willingness to accept responsibility for one's own life, and this is why it is so difficult for those in Ordinal Roles when their own existences seem so pale beside the more Exalted Roles. In truth, the Exalted Roles are more able to take the responsibility. Of course, they are. It is easy to take responsibility in the Power Mode, and a King finds it easy to excuse the behavior of a Slave. However, it is far from impossible for those in Ordinal Roles to go through the process of learning to take responsibility for their wins as well as their losses. [03 September 1977]

Refer to the chapter "Responsibility" for Michael's take on the opposite of making excuses.

She uses her lack of formal education as an excuse not to have to formulate goals for herself because that would conflict with the picture that the Overleaves have of themselves. [04 November 1974]

[[continue word search to end of transcriptions]]

Concluding Comments on Excuse

EXPECTATIONS

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “expectation” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) “Template” issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “template” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings are usually either a ‘virtue’ to be cultivated or a ‘vice’ to be mitigated; both are amenable to psychotherapy. Obviously, template is a vice / virtue. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on various websites, including https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Expectation

So what is meant by expectation? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Expectations per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

[[These quotations are so numerous that this section could be divided into subsections by subject category.]]

The first mention of expectations is found in one of the earliest sessions, before the Michaels appeared:

The details of a sexual encounter were described here to simplify the above.

[Soleal:] Much progress is made after this lesson is brought to consciousness. My telling you will only give you something to work out. Some people work on the giving of themselves freely for many lifetimes. That is the most difficult part of love. Love, to mean anything in the line of consciousness, cannot be predicated on anything material; it must come from higher Centers. That comes about when you finally give up non-verbal expectations about the actions of those around you and begin to accept them without modification in your fantasies. [03 July 1973]

Don't be so surprised when other people do not act according to your expectation. The simple fact is that one never knows exactly how other people will act or react, so it is best to not have strong expectations about them. Refer to the chapter "Fantasies" for more discussion about that topic, which is related to expectations. Romantic relationships are often fraught with unrealistic expectations, perhaps more so than any other type of human relationship; refer to the chapter "Sexuality" for more discussion of that.

Sarah: Can you tell us the how?

[Soleal:] To get to higher Centers, do what Jesus did: fasting, meditation, and agonizing self-appraisal. Exercise the body, learn to love unselfishly. This is hard to do, but it can be achieved by [first] intellectually apprehending the fact that no other Creature [of Reason] owes you anything, and then materially obtaining what you need through your own resources. Emotional acceptance will only come about when the [Intellectual Center] expectations [of entitlement] have ceased. Jesus had no aspirations of his students. In fact, he knew that he would fail the most dismally in his mission to those closest to him; yet, he persisted in his efforts. For his own growth, it was more important to express the higher good than it was that those around him absorb it. Many did absorb — many more now than then. Even if you feel that good efforts are being wasted, continue. Positive energy is never wasted; somebody always absorbs it. [03 July 1973]

Having expectations is mostly a function of the Intellectual Center, so if a person releases expectations they will experience the other Centers without that encumbrance or distortion. The Michaels never use the word "entitlement" in place of "expectation", but entitlement is a certain type of expectation, when defined as "belief that one is deserving of or entitled to certain privileges". You might ask yourself, What would Jesus do? The answer is that in every situation, he would have no unrealistic expectations.

Erotic love has a tendency to be fickle and slips away at the mere hint of an unfulfilled expectation, while Agape has no expectations to begin with — asks nothing in return and accepts, and is the hallmark. [24 July 1973]

The opposite of having expectations is to have "Agape" — refer to the chapter by that name for a complete description of Agape. So, whenever you find yourself surprised by the fact that someone else is not fulfilling your expectation of them, then you know that you are not in Agape. (If an employee of yours cannot live up to their job description, then that is different.)

The Young Soul perceives love as Eros, solely predicated upon those expectations it has of the others around it.

If the others fail to live up to those expectations, the Young Soul can hate with equal zest. [late August 1973]

When the Young Soul motto "do it my way" is not satisfied, the Young Soul reacts negatively. As an Old Soul who watches Young Souls, it always amazes me when I see how they can be so rigid in this sense of entitlement, that other people owe it to them to live according to standards not their own.

Dick: [Valuable] for Kathryn, Cheryl and Richard?

Kathryn and Richard, yes. Cheryl would enjoy it, but don't expect her having the same experience. She will perceive the experience in an entirely different light. [08 September 1973]

Kathryn and Richard were Old Souls, and Cheryl was a Young Soul. Here again we see that Soul Age is a significant determinant of perceptions. If we should have any expectations at all about other people, it might be to expect them to act appropriately for their Age, and if their Age is different from ours, we can reasonably expect their perception to be different from ours. Even here we must not expect predictability in others, because stereotyping others based on some personality typology, even the Overleaf System, is risky business.

Dick: Many of my patients had pain problems today and I did not have the time to help them — to help them see the source.

Your society uses time as an enemy. How can you expect to be of much help with the scheduling you are enduring? [Mid-September 1973]

The quicker you adjust your expectations to reality, the happier you will be. As a physician employee of Kaiser Permanente, Dick may not have had the freedom to set his own time allotment schedule for seeing patients. This situation with for-profit hospitals is detrimental to the health of the doctor as well as of the patient. We can reasonably expect Young Souls to set schedules that value the financial health of the institution above the physical and mental health of its people. One way to mitigate detriments to one's health is to not have unrealistic expectations.

Dick: I think that the way you eventually get there is by chipping away at it the way we're doing. One of our big things, for three years, was to rid ourselves of anger and hostility, either dumping it or accepting it, but somehow just saying that you want to get rid of it doesn't get rid of it. There was no method suggested there that seemed workable.

Unfulfilled expectations are the sole cause of anger. We know of none other. When you stop expecting, there will be no anger.

Dick: There is a delicate line between that and going to sleep. Lots of things in life depend on expectations.

You must communicate your needs and wants to those around you. Unless you are telepathic, you must do it verbally. Then you must leave them with an option. You must make that option known to them. The alternatives, with all of the ramifications, must be understood, as well as the motivation of their acceptance or refusal. When there is complete understanding, there will be no disagreement. You have all heard this before and we must emphasize it because it is the secret to effective communication, which will banish the specter of unfulfilled expectations. [02 October 1973]

Anger might be the biggest clue that you have unfulfilled expectations. Refer to the chapter "Communication" for more discussion of that method for mitigating unrealistic expectations.

Dick: Some of the internal depression and anger I experience seems to be the result of expectations I have of myself.

Re-examine those expectations for shades of realism. One step at a time is normally effective for useful ambulation. Why not for spiritual liberation? [02 October 1973]

It has been said somewhere that depression is anger turned inwards. Obviously, expectations are not only about other people; they are also about oneself. The point to be made here is that if you find yourself either angry or depressed, you should try to figure out what "shades of realism" (aspects of reality) you are not in agreement with, and make 'course corrections' in your "ambulation". This will lead to spiritual liberation; refer to the chapter "Liberation".

The group was not finished hashing out their understanding of the above revelation:

Dick: Also, I don't feel that he [Michael] completely explained that question of expectations of others. He said that we would have to make our needs and wants known to others verbally, but then you have to learn to expect them not to be fulfilled sometimes.

Sarah: He [Michael] said that you have to tell them what the alternatives are and give them the option of not doing it.

Dick: Then you can't really expect them to do it.

Gene: No, Dick, I think what they mean is that you can have a certain standard for yourself and then you must communicate that standard so that the other person will know what you are thinking and then they can do it or not do it. But if they don't know and the other guy thinks you expect him to do something ...

Dick: Yes, but then there is this other thing. Soeal says that when you finally realize that no one owes you anything, you have no expectations. But making your wants known implies an expectation.

Gene: So when you start making wants known, you are saying that you are less than perfect.

Dick: Then Buddhism is the not having of any wants.

Alice: This is the game of life. I mean, you can go and sit on a mountain somewhere — many do and they don't have any expectations — but they are not playing the game like we are.

Dick: I think that all unhappiness results from greed or wanting something. Greed imprisons you in Maya.

Just because you have a want, does not mean that the chosen one must supply it. You may need to go to several sources. Expectations are foolhardy. Greed is a large part of Maya. [02 October 1973]

In America these people grew up in a Young Soul culture with all of its expectations imprinted in them. If they had grown up in a Buddhist culture, dealing with expectations would not have been such a big deal.

Dick asked for a comment on her general health (seems run down).

Her general health is all right, except that she drives herself in an effort to achieve her expectations, which are high. Kathryn's path is a steep one. [17 October 1973]

Kathryn, one of Dick's adult daughters, was a King. Even as an Old Soul, that Role is known to have high expectations of oneself and others.

Richard: Can I be selfish and ask another personal question? What is the best way I can overcome my nervousness?

Your nervousness stems from what you fantasize to be other's expectations of you: your mother, your first grade teacher, even Sarah.

Richard: What is the best way to overcome that?

Stop caring what they expect. You will not please them anyway. [20 October 1973]

Richard was in Acceptance Goal and Caution Mode. Not only Soul Age and Role as mentioned previously, but other Overleaves create issues regarding expectations. Refer to the chapter “Fantasy” for more about that.

Ellis: I had a blissful childhood, with love and enjoyment. Was I aware of my Role then?

Children, before they are thoroughly programmed for their societal role, usually operate from Essence and know their Roles. The Role the child first voices as a desire usually comes from Essence. After that, from False Personality, based on expectations of those around the child. [23 October 1973]

Children perceive the expectations of their parents and their playmates, whether those expectations are explicitly stated or not. Refer to the chapters “Essence and Personality”, and “Personality — True and False”.

Billie: What is the cause of the welty rash that occurs every time I bump myself? Is there anything I can do for it?

This rash occurs now largely because you expect it to. The best thing to do is to ignore it. The second best thing is to apply a soothing unguent and then forget it. [23 October 1973]

Psychosomatic illness is a real thing, based on the belief system and expectations that get programmed into subconscious mind at one time or another; refer to the chapter “Bio-computer” for more about that. The opposite of this is the so-called “placebo” effect, where an expectation about some healing procedure being applied actually facilitates the healing.

Richard: If I am to act out of Essence, I'm afraid that people would take advantage of me.

In what way can they possibly take advantage of you? If you are acting out of Essence, you have no expectations of them anyway. Then it does not matter if they don't come through. [27 October 1973]

This is a repetition of the notion stated previously and subsequently that Essence does not have expectations.

Betty: Is my brother honest?

Within his concept of honest, yes, but don't count on this fulfilling your expectations. [08 November 1973]

Betty's brother probably did something that caused her to question his honesty. It does not say so here, but there might have been a significant Soul Age difference between Betty and her brother, such that they had different conceptions of honesty. Whatever the case with them, in our own cases, if we are not careful, we will tend to expect others to operate according to our belief system, value system, or behavior system. In my case, if people do not play the ‘game’ of life by the same rules that I am playing by, and if I cannot adjust my expectations to accommodate them, then I minimize interaction with them. Dishonesty is one of those cases where I would be unwilling to adjust my expectations enough to maintain affiliation.

Edgar: I'm seeking for a practical way of practicing the teachings of Christ. Can you tell how this can be accomplished for me?

That should be self-evident.

Richard: Could we ask for a general comment?

Honesty without guile, simplicity without poverty of soul, love without material expectations, emptying the life of all nonessential considerations, the endless Cycles of evolution with the Physical Plane being the crudest and roughest. These are the things emphasized in the true teachings of Christ. [22 November 1973]

Reciprocal “love”, where there is an expectation of favors in return, is not the type of love that Jesus or the Michaels recommend.

Question about homosexuality.

This unfortunate syndrome is almost always culturally induced. Most of the time it is a form of rebellion, either by an Emotionally Centered male, usually either an Artisan or a Sage, or an Intellectually Centered female, usually either a Scholar or a Priest. This [American] culture frustrates the inclinations of both — or we should say, all — of these Roles, and the squelching is done in childhood. The job is usually quite thorough.

One other form of mixed gender conflicts arise with the children of the above who do not have a clear-cut picture of the “roles” that society expects them to play. They go out into the world unequipped to play the proper role, and [so they] play it by ear. Sometimes, this results in the gender conflict. Ideally, one should be able to express love for others regardless of the genital assignment without fear of castigation. This is quite an upward step in the evolution of Creatures of Reason. Don't expect it to happen in this lifetime. [14 December 1973]

Don't have any expectations and you will be pleasantly surprised. [1 December 1973]

Or do have expectations and be unpleasantly surprised. Those are your choices.

Gene: She wants to know if there is residual cancer. Does she?

Yes, she does. This is not now aggressive and we think that Darcy has more of a chance to counteract this at this point than at the onset. This lady does not recognize in herself the sadness that she has. You must get to her sadness and also to her resentment over unfulfilled expectations. She will talk to you and she has the aptitude to acquire the necessary insights. [20 December 1973]

Besides anger, resentment is another negative emotion that is generated by unfulfilled expectations. Refer to the chapter "Extinguishment" for a lengthy list of negative emotions.

Tina: I hear. What can I do with this?

Propagate the Logos. This isn't trite. We expect this teaching to reach others. We are not just hollering down the rain barrel. [31 December 1973]

It is okay for the Michaels to have that expectation, since it was realistic.

Sarah: I [an Idealist] expect people to perform a certain way and never can quite see that they do not mean what I hear them to say. I see Idealism as being able to perceive things as they could be and trying to pursue that.

That is valid.

Dick: A Cynic [and a Skeptic] thinks everyone has an ulterior motive.

Shirley: Is it because of my Priest Role that I have trouble accepting the work of other nurses? Why do I expect so much of them and other people? I do not like it when they are careless.

As [a] Priest, you naturally expect others to measure up to your own exalted standards. You are also an Idealist and with [the] Goal of Dominance.

(Transcriber note: What more can you expect than to expect a bunch?)

The Realist perceives the situation at hand in an almost intellectual clarity, and sub-consciously applies all of the alternatives with lightning speed, coming up with a workable solution within an extremely short period of deliberation. The Realist has few expectations of fanciful nature, and, as would be expected, is grounded in reality.

Ray: In the area of Attitudes, the description of Realist does not fit with my idea of what Billie's Attitude is. I have seen fantasies and expectations in Billie.

We do not see many fanciful expectations in Billie. We see less in you than before. But, there are some lingering there. Your imagination just a short time ago was the most exciting component of your life. [24 January 1974]

A person's Attitude has a lot to do with what they expect to see in the world; they interpret what they see through whatever colored glasses their Attitude gives them.

[[continue word search to end of transcriptions]]

[Soleal:] In our system, the good of many is valued over the good of the individual, and I will admit that you have good, sound cultural mores and a right virtue of your training to regard this as scary. But however frightening it may sound at the outset, the good of the many eventually serves the needs of the individual. The system, in order to work at all, of course, requires, above all, patience and the belief that your individual needs — and notice I did not say "wants" — will be served. The expectation of instant gratification of all wants is consummately absurd and belongs in childhood. [18 February 1974]

Ray: What is the criteria whether a Ribbon is formed or not?

If you communicated all of your expectations, the other soul understood all the options and took action on that basis, then a Ribbon probably [doesn't?] exists. Most interpersonal crises revolve around unfulfilled expectations and do not involve Karma of a substantial sort. Neglect of very young children constitutes Karma; breaking engagements does not. [20 February 1974]

Maybe I am misunderstanding something, but it makes more sense to me that a Karmic Ribbon is not created if thorough and accurate communication is sent and received; the next sentence says that.

[[continue word search to end of transcriptions]]

Ted spoke of his feelings that there was a strong attraction between Liz [his wife] and Richard: [Is this] from previous lives? False Personality? He asked for a comment from Michael about his feelings in this.

These two [Liz and Richard] have had many Sequences in the past and many lives have been interrelated, but the insight is valid.

In this culture, those on the Physical Plane have a tendency to sexualize all encounters with one of another gender. If they feel powerful emotional discharges around this other person, they interpret them as Eros or sexual attraction and the False Personality demands gratification. In the soul in a teaching or the soul going into Balance, this gratification can sometimes bring about startling Photographs of the Personality at work and the expectations they had of the other, based upon the interpretation of the emotion. Souls on the Physical Plane, until they meet with a teaching, have no mechanism with which to interpret emotions accurately. They must merely interpret according to the dictates of the culture. The Physical Plane and its pervasive atmosphere demands that you “do” something physical about ethereal matters. Consequently, when the Essence awakens for an instant and feels love for its Essence Twin or an old [physical] twin [from a previous lifetime], the False Personality immediately goes to work on this emotion, converting it into something it can understand. This is what is meant by some spiritual leaders who exhort their followers to rise above the Physical Plane. Mechanical Man has not learned to rise above the desire for instant gratification; therefore, he experiences much frustration, since the culture largely denies him that gratification. Cultures that impose rules of social conduct and interpersonal relationships usually arise out of the frustrations of unfulfilled expectations. The sexual experience never attains the height that it is expected to, as it is used in place of love so many times, and the Personality, not knowing any better, blames the partner for the failure to produce bliss, when the responsibility lies within self and self’s ridiculous expectations of a biologic act which comes basic to the organism. Man considers himself civilized because he has risen above oestrus. What an aspiration! [19 November 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” for the whole story about that realm of life experience. Having expectations is necessary to navigating the future as it arrives; the brain builds up a model of the world based on past personal experience of the environment, including what the culture teaches. However, reality does not always match the model, so the quicker one adjusts to reality, the better off one is.

[[continue word search to end of transcriptions]]

Concluding Comments on Expectations

Based on what I have read about all living things, they evolve based on what I have come to call the Feedback Principle. All living organisms have a membrane or skin that separates their internal realm from their external realm, aka environment. There is a feedback between the external and the external: they both affect each other. Over their lifetime, organisms build up an internal memory or model of the external world based on their experiences within it; this maximizes survival potential. One of the feature of life, as distinct from inanimate objects, is that organisms consult the model when they anticipate future action, which is to say that, besides a memory of the past, they also have an “imagination” about the future. The more accurate the model is, the more likely they are to survive in their goal-directed behavior (mate-seeking, food-seeking, whatever). Besides accuracy of the model, there is also the matter of the flexibility of the model. Once in a while an organism encounters a novel environment, not modeled in the memory or the imagination. The more “intelligent” the organism is, the better it can adapt — and survive. Humans are organisms; their “expectations” are based on memories of the past and anticipations of the future. The smart, wise thing to do, is to adjust as quickly as possible to any new reality that intrudes into one’s life.

EXPERIENCE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “experience” and its derivatives in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Experience issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The word “experience” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

Definition of Experience

So what is meant by experience? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Experience per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Experience

③ EXTINGUISHMENT

There are a number of words in the Michaelian teachings that are names for characteristics that should be “extinguished” in the Personality if one is to progress on the spiritual path to enlightenment. These are typically jargon words that get capitalized in this Studies Papers book. There are good reasons to discuss these subjects in this Study Papers book, namely: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that negativity is a negative to be eschewed. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is a subject that benefits by division into subcategories, namely the various components of Personality to be extinguished. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Extinguish the Chief Feature

By far the most common juxtaposition of the word extinguishment with a Michaelian jargon word is with the Chief Feature:

Cheryl: May we have the next Overleaves?

These Chief Features can be stated as: Impatience, Arrogance, Greed, Stubbornness (which includes tenacity), Self-deprecation, Martyrdom, Self-destruction.

Cynthia: Half are outwards and half are inwards.

Alice: Can these be changed in our lifetime? Can you get rid of them?

You must grow [spiritually] to extinguish this.

What is Cheryl’s Chief Feature?

Self-deprecation.

Is her sub-Feature self-effacement — taking a back seat, lacking in self-confidence?

Cheryl has a tendency to fade away in crowds. Also, [she] has many negative reactions to rather ambivalent statements about Young Souls. What does this suggest?

Comment: Non-existence (self-effacement).

There are many remnants in Cheryl, but she is close to extinguishment [of the Chief Feature]. That is valid. [27 February 1974]

Betty: What is my Chief Feature: Stubbornness? The spirituality may cover Arrogance.

We still see some Stubbornness, but it is valid that Betty has almost extinguished this. [03 March 1974]
That which comes from vanity [Arrogance] must, of course, be ultimately extinguished. [13 May 1974]

Delia: I feel he has some Self-deprecation (Yorgos).

The lady is right. The [Chief] Feature has all but been extinguished by now. [03 July 1974]

Ron: SRG? Priest? Artisan? Scholar? Slave? (all were mentioned) ... Power, Self-deprecation, Spiritualist, Growth?

This is a Fifth Level Old Priest in Growth, a Spiritualist, yes. In the Power mode, with a Chief Feature of Self-deprecation. With this extinguished, the man could realize the full potentials of the exalted Overleaves he has chosen. Without this extinguishment, he will not. He is quite close now to the point where he will manifest, in so far as the Soul Level [Age] is concerned. Yes, this body is Mars-Jovial, but this should not have you confused. In the Emotional Part of Moving Center, which right now is a barrier, also toward full potential, as the enTrapment is truly strong. He can look at this, also. [15 October 1974]

Carolyn wished verification of [her] SRG: Third Level Old Artisan, Passion Mode, Stubbornness as Chief Feature, Moving Part of Emotional Center, Saturn / Mars, an Idealist?

We agree with that. The lady is firmly Trapped in the Emotional Part of the Intellectual Center. We believe that this is as it was originally stated. Perhaps the lady equates education with Intellectual Center. For shame. The lady has strong [Chief] Features of Stubbornness and Impatience. Right now, the Impatience seems to be winning. This is easy to trade. To extinguish, now, is another question. [09 November 1974]

Alice: I tried giving myself the suggestion to eat less carbohydrates. It worked for eight hours, at which time I indulged in them. I tried looking at that and found that I probably did not like myself enough to eat what is good for me, so for the past week I have been suggesting to myself that I will like myself better and will do those things that are good for my being. I've been feeling better about myself, but seem to plunge into more frequent downs. Comment, please, on what I can do in this area?

[Soleal:] You need to learn to use your moments of Power to extinguish your Chief Feature [Self-deprecation]. This can even work with Chief Features such as Arrogance, although that is a tough one to drop. The moments of Power must be utilized in the work, for it is in this way that you will be able to finally switch Modes. You cannot go through the Self-deprecation Tape from the Power Mode as easily as you can from Caution [Mode]. [01 February 1975]

Refer to the chapter "Bio-computer" for more information about Tapes.

Bill asked about a Sequence with [his wife] Donna. What is needed to complete it, and if free of pressure but not love? Fear he has False Personality? Or some level of knowledge? He feels her rejection.

With you, Bill, only Balance will satisfy the Sequence agreement. By extinguishing your Chief Feature [Impatience], you will end the pressure you feel now. Your Chief Feature, of course, now stands in the way of realization of this and many of your "pressured" feelings. [16 February 1975]

Even that [Chief Feature], as you all know, can be extinguished and worked through, but this takes that willingness to stand where you are right now and realize that you have put yourself there and no one else is responsible. [03 September 1977]

Extinguish False Personality

Recall that True Personality is what you are born with and that False Personality is the personality acquired subsequent to birth. Once you become aware of this, then the False Personality should be extinguished if one is to progress on the spiritual path to enlightenment.

What part of [the] Overleaves are in Essence and what [part are] in Personality?

All of the Overleaves are geared to the Physical Plane and thus primarily of the False Personality. Of course, you cannot alter your Body Type or Role except by subtle extinguishment and this is achieved only after all else is Balanced [the fourth Level of Being]. Thus, the Role can still manifest in one acting primarily out of Essence [fourth Level of Being and above], but not to any measurable extent in the occult master [the seventh Level of Being]. [25 June 1974]

Joan asked if we can ever experience total death of the False Personality. Are there lapses? Does it always continue?

There are instances that we remembered well where there has been total death or extinguishment of the False Personality, concomitant with the emergence of True Personality of the Essence. This was indeed gratifying to behold, but it happens rarely on the Physical Plane, even in Adepts who are at a high Level of Being. They must be constantly alert to prevent the instinctive behavior reactions of the False Personality from sneaking in.

The False Personality has difficulty differentiating between conditions such as fragility, softness and the like. These are called by the culture “feminine” characteristics and therefore there is a tendency to lump them all together and perceive them as the same. The False Personality is perhaps the most fragile, as it is one that can be extinguished. After all, the True Personality cannot be, no matter how deeply you bury it in “bullshit”. [25 January 1975]

Extinguish Negative Poles

The list of Negative Poles of each Overleaf was probably not yet revealed at the time of this mention that they should be extinguished as part of one’s spiritual path to enlightenment:

Leslie: Asked if her Goal had changed from Acceptance to Growth. She is a Mid-Cycle [Fourth Level] Mature Warrior in Acceptance, Intellectual Part of Moving Center, Idealist, Passion Mode, Stubbornness as Chief Feature, Body Type Mars–Lunar.

As we have told you before, the Goal of Acceptance is in itself a powerful Exalted [Cardinal] Goal from which spiritual enlightenment can spring. With this [Goal], there is no need for a switch in Overleaves — merely extinguishment of the Negative Pole [–Ingratiation], which in this case is the desperate need to be accepted universally by others. In exchange for this, you come into the Positive Pole [+Agape], which is, of course, the unqualified Acceptance of others, just as the Negative Pole of the Growth Goal [–Confusion] involves tremendous scattering of energies as the soul rushes from school to school searching feverishly for that illusive “way”. [09 November 1974]

The Poles of the Overleaves had been revealed long before this next message came through:

(We talked of changing the Overleaves and the teacher’s mention of “quieting” them.)

“Extinguishing” was the word used, but perhaps this is a harsh word as “quieting” does sound easier. The Positive Poles of the Overleaves — this is the goal. Once reached, you are in Essence. All is equal. Study again the words we gave you in defining the action of the Positive Poles of the Overleaves. There is no qualitative difference. [12 December 1976]

Extinguish Maya

The only quotation in this section uses the word “fantasies” as something that should be extinguished as part of one’s spiritual path to enlightenment, but I would like to expand this extinguish injunction to the entire category of “Maya”, another one of those Michaelian jargon words that has its own chapter in this Study Papers book.

Shirley asked what we could do to help him perceive us better or us perceive him better.

[Soleal:] I am afraid that it is my own task to perceive you and I must do it in my own time. However, you have access to the same energy that I do, and you are welcome to try any of the teacher’s [Michael] gimmicks whenever you wish. My own perceptions are colored a little by my own imagination, which is by no means extinguished. This is also among the last vestiges to go. During the waking hours, I can maintain a high level of vigilance over my fantasies. At other times, this becomes difficult and unfamiliar sensations assail me and I lose all of my comfortable landmarks. [11 January 1975]

Extinguish Negative Thoughts

Perhaps this category belongs with the extinguishment of Maya, but in the original Michaelian group transcriptions no specific appearance of the phrase “negative thoughts” is to be found. Nevertheless, the internet resources on the subject are abundant, and it seems helpful to have some of them referenced here. Here is a convenient list of some negative thought patterns from one of those internet resources:

As you observe your thoughts, work on identifying and labeling cognitive distortions and negativity.

For example, if you tend to view yourself as a complete success or failure in every situation, then you are engaging in “black-and-white” thinking. Other negative thinking patterns include:

Jumping to conclusions: This distortion involves making assumptions about what others are thinking or making negative assumptions about how events will turn out.

Catastrophizing: This pattern of negative thinking is characterized by always assuming that the worst possible outcome will happen without considering more likely and realistic possibilities.

Overyeneralization: This pattern is marked by a tendency to apply what happened in one experience to all future experiences. This can make negative experiences seem unavoidable and contribute to feelings of anxiety.

Labeling: When people label themselves in a negative way, it affects how they feel about themselves in different contexts. Someone who labels themselves as “bad at math”, for example, will often feel negative about activities that involve that skill.

“Should” statements: Thinking marked by “should” statements contribute to a negative perspective by only thinking in terms of what you “ought” to be doing. Such statements are often unrealistic and cause people to feel defeated and pessimistic about their ability to succeed.

Emotional reasoning: This involves assuming that something is true based on your emotional response to it. For example, if you are feeling nervous, emotional reasoning would lead you to conclude that you must be in danger. This can escalate negative feelings and increase anxiety.

Personalization and blame: This thought pattern involves taking things personally, even when they are not personal. It often leads people to blame themselves for things they have no control over.

Unhelpful thinking patterns differ in subtle ways. But they all involve distortions of reality and irrational ways of looking at situations and people. [<https://www.verywellmind.com/how-to-change-negative-thinking-3024843> — retrieved 25 January 2023]

Only self-aggrandizing narcissists have no negative thoughts about themselves or others. The balanced and healthy person can be aware of one’s defects and deficiencies and mistakes, and those of others, without condemning oneself or others all to hell for them.

Extinguish Negative Emotions

Only guilt and fear are mentioned specifically as things that should be extinguished as part of one’s spiritual path to enlightenment, but I would like to expand this injunction to extinguish to the entire category of Negative Emotions:

Dick: Is there anything that can be said to help us with fear and guilt?

We could give you a carte blanche. This is relatively true as example. Voltaire glimpsed this when he said, “All is true. Everything is permitted.” This guilt and fear that one feels on the Physical Plane is, for the most part, culturally induced and, therefore, can only be extinguished by an act of will and allowing yourself to have the guilt-producing experience. This guilt stems for the most part in the lingering belief in a system of black and white, evil and good, with a judgmental god dispensing punishment made to the crime. The fear is largely tied up in the unrealistic longevity aspirations of most on the Physical Plane. No one is judging you, Dick; no one is qualified to do this. [06 March 1974]

Alice: Is there any way out of the Pleasure-Pain Monad?

Your guilt build-up produces the pain. When you choose to extinguish the guilt, you will lose the pain at the same time — only then. [10 March 1974]

Depending on who you ask (there are differences of opinion; google the phrase), there are many negative emotions, far more than guilt and fear. On the internet I found a list of 158 negative emotions, a number of the names of which are found among the Chief Features, Negative Poles of the Overleaves, False Personality, and Maya:

Afraid, agitation, agony, aggressive, alarm, alienation, anger, anguish, annoyed, anxious, apathy, apprehension, aversion, baffled, bewildered, bitter, bored, brooding, claustrophobic, coercive, confusion, contempt, cowardly, cruel, dazed, dejected, demoralized, depressed, despair, disappointment, discombobulated, discomfort, discontentment, disgruntled, disgust, disheartened, dislike, dismay, disoriented, dispirited, displeasure, distress, disturbed, doubtful, dread, dumbstruck, embarrassment, ennui, envy, exasperated, fear, fright, frustrated, fury, gloomy, glumness, greed, grief, grouching, grumpiness, guilt, hate, helpless, homesickness, hopeless, horrified, humiliation, hurt, hysteria, impatient, indignant, infuriated, insecurity, insulted, irritated, isolated, jealousy, lazy, loathing, lonely, longing, loopy, mad, melancholy, miserable, miserliness, mixed up, moody, mortified, nasty, nauseated, negative, neglected, nervous, numb, obstinate, offended, outrage, overwhelmed, panicked, paranoid, perplexed, pessimism, pity, possessiveness, powerlessness, puzzled, rage, rattled, regretful, rejected, reluctant, remorseful, resentment, resignation, restlessness, revulsion, ruthlessness, sadness, scared, scorn, self-conscious, self-critical, self-loathing, self-pity, shame, shocked, smug, sorrow, spite, stressed, stubborn, stuck, submissive, suffering, sullen, suspicious, tension, terror, tired, torment, troubled, uncertainty, undermined, uneasiness, unhappy, unnerved, unsettled, unsure, upset, vengeful, vicious, vigilant, vulnerable, weak, woe, worried, wrath.

Commit this list to memory, then notice how often you lapse into a negative emotion, and you will be appalled. (Oops! that is a negative emotion not on the list.) These negative emotions are all too human, but it is possible to extinguish all of them and still be very human; you will be a Balanced Human, one who is expressing Essence through positive emotions, as recommended by the Michaels.

And as recommended by Gurdjieff: "Self-observation and self-study must, from the first, be accompanied by the struggle against the expression of unpleasant emotions." [P.D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 112]

Extinguish Negativity

The final category of functions of Personality to be extinguished is "negativity" in general. This category would seem to include all of the other categories documented above, plus the extinguishment of negative thoughts:

Eugene: How do you create more pure energy?

Extinguishment of negativity. [06 March 1974]

Dick: The soul is another guy who calls himself "Dick." If I am asleep and Michael talks to me, I do not hear him.

The Personality has an extremely limited capacity for experiencing positivity. Whenever you experience unsolicited pleasure, you are experiencing it from Essence. This is why the extinguishment of negativity is so vital to spiritual growth. If you have not guessed this yet, the Personality is the Negative Pole of a Monad [and Essence is the Positive Pole]. [17 March 1974]

Concluding Comments on Extinguishment

Above, we were given a list of negative personality characteristics that should be extinguished on one's spiritual journey, but how do we do that? There are many chapters in this Study Papers book that discuss the practices that facilitate extinguishment of negativity. For instance: "Concentration and Meditation", "Fasting", "Moderation", "Photography", "Psychedelics", "Ritual", and "Validation".

⑧ FACADE

This chapter is the product of a search for the word facade in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) having a facade is pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word facade is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that having a facade is a negative to be eschewed. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Facade

So what is meant by facade? Wikipedia has an article that provides a definition and a description, as follows:

A façade (also written facade) is generally the front part or exterior of a building. It is a loan word from the French façade, which means ‘frontage’ or ‘face’. The word is a loanword from the French façade, which in turn comes from the Italian facciata, from faccia meaning ‘face’, ultimately from post-classical Latin facia. The earliest usage recorded by the Oxford English Dictionary is 1656. [<https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Facade> — retrieved 30 March 2023]

The article goes on to describe the use of the word in architecture, referring to the front-facing side of the building. There is also discussion of the use of the word for those cases where there is no actual building behind the front-facing construction. The article says nothing about the use of the word in psychology, it being used in a metaphoric sense, for the appearance that one shows in public in order to fit into society and culture, which is exactly the way that the Michaels use it, according to the original Michaelian group transcriptions. The word is used in this way because one does not present an artificial appearance when one is at home or in private.

Facade per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first of ten mentions of this word in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is this:

The fixed rigid [False] Personality is rather like a mountain of granite. Chipping away relentlessly is the sole solution.... Each of you spent many years building the facade. Do you really feel that you should be able to discard this quite casually with hardly a whimper? We think not. Progress is being made in quite concrete ways. [02 October 1973]

Right away we see that a facade is a component of False Personality; refer to the chapter “Personality — True and False”. Briefly and basically, one of the goals of the Michaelian teachings is to minimize the False and maximize the True.

May I suggest that the Michaels were clever to use the words “building” and “concrete” here, because buildings have facades, sometimes made of concrete (and sometimes of granite). The point to be made here is that False Personality presents a facade to the world that is not the true or genuine self.

The next mention of facade gets a little closer to the notion of a public-facing component of Personality as distinct from the private reality of one’s true self:

Billie: Can a soul take on a dual Role?

Not in Essence. However, the life role often bears little relation to the Essence Role, and if False Personality is firmly in command it will almost be impossible to detect the Essence Role. On a personal level, others can often detect the facade and the underlying Role before the student can. [15 November 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality” for the distinction between those. Here, “life role” = “facade” = “False Personality”. This passage hints at the notion expressed more fully elsewhere that a person’s occupation should fulfill one’s actual Role rather than some pretend role. The metaphor for this is, ‘don’t put square pegs in round holes’. There are facades other than the one we don for our employment environment. For instance, there is the one we don when we visit our relatives.

Ellis: I have difficulty in understanding the development of the soul. We grow up with conflicts and images of self. I cannot let go [of my self-image] with other people or myself.

The object is not so much to give up self, as it is to find self. You are encased in so many layers of facade, that you cannot even perceive the source of your desires, let alone control their emanations. The final level of spiritual evolution on the Physical Plane pertains, of course, to the absolute control of the desire, not just the [control of] acting out. This is a very gradual process, the first step of which is to recognize that there are conflicts [between layers of self], which you have done. [29 November 1973]

Notice that a person not only dons a facade in the presence of others, but also does it for themselves. A place to look for one’s true self hidden behind facades to to pay attention to internal conflicts in one’s self-images.

The following Q&A exchange is another mention of the two realms where a facade often appears, in the family and in the world in general:

Cheryl: So what does make a Sequence?

Agreement to play out a certain fragment of life. For instance, we have told you before that not all parents and their children are playing out the Parent-Child Monad. This Monad results in a far more complex relationship than just the ordinary one. Siblings are taught by this culture that they must feel something for each other and are encouraged to even falsify such conditions. This is not always true. Relationships within the typical nuclear family are rarely honest because of this.

Dick: Dislike carry over on Astral Plane, because on the Astral Plane, the facade is all gone. [12 June 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Honesty and Dishonesty” for elaboration on that subject.

Marty: Newly recovered alcoholic living in my home. Mature Sage or Priest in Submission?

Many [Sages], yes, do have this problem, sometimes due to the extremely false facade of the life they lead on stage or as a “famous personage”. The alienation again drives them into an escape route that often ends in degradation. Sages, because of their flair for the dramatic, usually at one time or another, choose this type of life [alcoholism]. [19 June 1974]

The more of a facade one dons, the more one becomes alienated from oneself and from real life. This can lead to negative experiences; refer to the chapter “Alienation”. The tendency of Sages to don a facade is also documented in the chapters “Drama” and “Mask”.

Spiritual acceleration does not require this; it requires negation of the cultural facade. [14 September 1974]
Refer to the chapter “Culture” for the story about one of the many sources of facade.

It is, of course, easier for those in Exalted [Cardinal] Roles [Sage, Priest, King] to put up the facade, for it is more important for them to show the world the bella figura [good impression]. [12 February 1975]

The use of the words “easier” implies that the Ordinal Roles (Warrior, Server, Artisan) are not as inclined to put on a facade for the sake of impressing other people as the Cardinal Roles are. As for the Neutral Role, Scholar, based on the statement that “Most Scholars would prefer not to be bothered with the responsibility that goes along with these [emotional] intrigues” (27 December 1973) I would venture to say that Scholars are even less inclined to put up a facade than the Ordinal Roles; they prefer to be aloof from all that nonsense.

Many here tonight understand the principle involved in choosing not to lock into the other’s bad spaces and to choose to present a neutral facade at these times. This requires a conscious act of will and this is what we wish you all to strive for. [Dimensions!, April 1975]

Apparently a “neutral facade” in some cases is a good thing, such as when it is not reactive to other people’s negativity. Perhaps this “neutral facade” also refers to being ‘transparent’ about who you really are; other people can see your ‘insides’ without distortion. The use of the word “neutral” here implies that there are two faces of a facade, a passive facade that hides the truth about who and what you really are, and an active facade that presents a falsehood about who and what you really are.

The truth is that all of life loves and is loved. All interrelationships are [grounded] in love. The problem arises when the facades interrelate, instead of the Essences. The issue is not one of gaining or achieving more, but rather of stripping away. The layers need to be peeled away in order for the Essence to be reached. On your [Physical] Plane, only the facades, or what we have called False Personality, interrelate. This is the source of all of your conflicts. [Dimensions!, June 1975]

Refer to the chapters “Love” and “Essence and Personality”. The point to be emphasized here is that it is not possible to love or be loved if people only show their facades to each others. With the right people on both sides of the equation, revelation of the true self — even if defective and deficient — is endearing. One of the premises of the Michaelian teachings (and many other spiritual teachings) is that people are good on the inside (Essence) and not so good on the outside (False Personality), so “self-improvement” is a matter of shedding the false in order to reveal the true.

Students often confuse facts with final results. We see much growth in the student Louise. Growth is the hardest and most constant Goal. Most students find this confusing, therefore, the facts appear clearer when the ego is pulling off [putting on] the most subtle facade of all. [07 November 1977]

Refer to the chapter “Ego” for the discussion of yet another synonym for facade. As stated in the first appearance of the word, where the facade is compared to a mountain of granite, here we see that it can also be the opposite: subtle.

Concluding Comments on Facade

The other chapter most closely related to this chapter is the one named “Masks”, which is another metaphor for the same general phenomenon.

It does not discuss this in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, but I wonder if there are certain situations when there are legitimate reasons to wear a mask or hide behind a facade. For instance, maybe you are with people that you have good reason to believe are unsympathetic to who you really are, who are not themselves open and honest people, so what would be the benefit to self and other to ‘let it all hang out’. This is a passive kind of facade, where you do not reveal things about yourself that it would do no good to reveal. This is not the active kind of facade, where you wear a mask that presents a falsehood. My suggestion is that it is best to reveal one’s ‘dirty laundry’ and ‘come clean’ and ‘come out of the closet’ in a strategic process of self-revelation, on the way to getting to know only those other people where the potential for such intimacy is possible. The long range goal with everyone is to “tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth”, but it has to be reciprocal, on both sides of the equation.

FAITH

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “faith” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions, and other words with a similar meaning. I have added some commentary, which consists of my analysis and synthesis of the quotations. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts. Briefly and basically, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

So what is meant by faith? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

The word “faith” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. One might therefore wonder why it is even included in this book. One answer is that it is just a Scholar–Cast Artisan thing to do: I study the Michaelian teachings documents and I write about them and I want to be thorough. Another answer is that trust issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology, the subject came up in the original Michaelian group numerous times, some interesting things were said about it, and it might be helpful for Michaelian students to have the answers conveniently collected all in one place.

Faith per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Faith

④ FANTASY

This chapter is the result of a search of the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group for the word “fantasy”. Obviously, this word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings, but even so, the word appears often enough that it seems to me that students can benefit from seeing all of those instances documented and commented on in a chapter of this Study Papers book. Furthermore, the word is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be more significant; these will be noted in the commentary on the instances of the word and its contexts.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that fantasy is a negative to be eschewed. Psychological issues are addressed with psychotherapy. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

The word fantasy is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

It might be a little surprising how often this word fantasy shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

Briefly and basically, we humans are subject to the unhealthy propensity to get lost in one form or another of unreality, flights of fancy, jumps to unjustified conclusions, unwarranted imaginary problems, and such. The Michaels address several kinds of fantasies such as these, and more. The list of fantasies given in this chapter provides to the reader a convenient catalog of stuff to be vigilant about on their psychotherapeutic path.

Fantasy per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they appear in the transcriptions. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first mention of the word fantasy appeared more than a month before the Michaels appeared:

The details of a sexual encounter were described here to simplify the above.

[Soleal:] Much progress is made after this lesson is brought to consciousness. My telling you will only give you something to work out. Some people work on the giving of themselves freely for many lifetimes. That is the most difficult part of love. Love, to mean anything in the line of consciousness, cannot be predicated on anything material; it must come from higher Centers. That comes about when you finally give up non-verbal expectations about the actions of those around you and begin to accept them without modification in your fantasies. [03 July 1973]

Refer to the chapter “Sexuality” for more discussion of the fact that sexuality can be distorted by fantasies perhaps more than any other facet of human life. This answer is not only about sexual fantasies, but about our general inability to see other people as they really are rather than as what we want to see in them.

Dick then meditated on a complicated question silently. Soleal answered as follows:

Postpone the decision for now, and don't dwell on the fantasy of the reaction of others that would confirm your worst fears. [03 July 1973]

You might be surprised to learn that other people are usually disinterested in condemning you for your every little sin of omission or commission, so stop worrying about what they think of you. This particular fantasy is covered in some detail in the chapter “Considering — Internal and External”.

The subject of fantasy appears again soon after the Michaels appeared to the original Michaelian group:

I am only pointing out to you that you are not always present, and one reason is that you are still in fantasy to a still injurious extent. Now, that only applies to those aspirants who desire help with conscious[ness] raising techniques. Others can and will disregard this information; it serves no purpose to them. Dick, you are an aspirant; take heart; [for you] the ability is there. [21 August 1973]

When one is truly “present” in the moment — meaning, focused on the situation or circumstance in which one is currently embedded — then one's mind will not drift off into some imaginary world. Some people have more capacity for this mind-wandering than others. However, as with so many phenomena, I perceive a healthy and an unhealthy expression. Even though it does not say so here, I would say that –Fantasy is a Negative Pole and +Imagination is a Positive Pole of the Higher Intellectual Center, which I prefer to name the Concept Center.

In the next original Michaelian group session, the subject of fantasy appeared again:

Dick: Could we have a definition of Karma from Michael?

As you reap, so you also sow. Or as you sow, so you shall reap. However, this goes far deeper than mere action by those immersed in the waking sleep. For them, the energy loss is far greater, for most of their lives are wasted in fantasy and fantasy costs much in Karmic debts. You must fulfill all carnal desires before serious work is begun on the Essence. This can take many lives, usually a minimum of forty-nine. [26 August 1973]

Refer to chapters “Karma”, “Energy and Energy Leaks”, “Awakening from Sleep”, “Essence and Personality”. Fantasy can be serious business in the sense that people who are distracted by fantasy rather than focused on reality often do something hurtful. The point to be made here is that we better pay attention to what is really going on.

Kathryn: Is it useful for us to know when we are going to die, so that we can speed things up?

Not until you can stay out of fantasy about it. This information is already known to you on another level. When you can tap this, there will be no danger [of fantasy]. [26 August 1973]

A Michael channel told me that the plan for this lifetime is to live to 96 or 97. My father lived to age 96 so this is not an unreasonable expectation, and I do not sense that I have any fantasies about that. My plan is to try to get everything on my bucket list done ASAP, rather than dilly-dally because of some expectation that I have plenty of time left.

Richard: I see as long as I'm in False Personality, I'm blocking and wasting much energy, and I suppose the best thing to do would be to separate from False Personality as much as possible.

Soleal has a tendency not to trust his decisions until he has fantasized over the alternatives, none of which are relevant and come from vestigial False Personality. [06 October 1973]

Refer to the chapter on “False Personality”. Basically and briefly, False Personality resides more in the Negative Poles of the Overleaves. The mention of “trust” reminds me of the Poles of the Skeptic Attitude, namely –Suspicion versus +Investigation (“trust but verify”). It also reminds me of the Poles of the Caution Mode, namely –Phobia versus +Deliberation. The point that I want to emphasize here is that a distinction should be made between excessive planning and inadequate planning when one comes to ‘a fork in the road’ that requires some serious thought; there is ‘due diligence’, and then there is more than and there is less than ‘due diligence’. The trick is to find the ‘due’ point in ‘diligence’. If you find yourself fantasizing and catastrophizing about some weighty decision, then apply +Investigation and +Deliberation; this will get you back 'down to earth'.

Richard: What is the best way I can overcome my nervousness?

Your nervousness stems from what you fantasize to be other's expectations of you: your mother, your first grade teacher, even [your wife] Sarah. [20 October 1973]

Elsewhere, Richard was said to be trapped in the Negative Pole of his Acceptance Goal, -Ingratiation. Refer to the chapter "Considering — Internal and External" for more discussion of the undesirability of fantasizing about what other people think of you.

Billie: How does the Role of Artisan apply to me?

You can bring a great deal of creative talent to all that you do, but you do not do this consistently. You need time to yourself alone to indulge in fanciful activity to bring this out. You are right about the music. This could be a great avenue. [23 October 1973]

There are a couple of instances in the original Michaelian group transcriptions where the word "fanciful" is used. This is obviously not exactly the same concept embodied in the word "fantasy". I include the word in this chapter because I want to make a distinction between a healthy imagination, such as Artisans in the Positive Pole are prone to have, and an unhealthy imagination, such as Artisans in the Negative Pole are prone to have.

Richard: Where would be the best place to look?

Don't look now. Listen. When you speak of buying land there now, it is fantasy. Wait until you have been there. We feel that you will be drawn to the land, but there is a special place that should draw you more than the others. Take [a] vacation and be leisurely about the decision. It is the most important one you will make. [20 October 1973]

During the original Michaelian group there was much discussion about starting a commune. It was an aspiration that never got past the fantasy stages. It is Good Work to run new ideas through one's imagination, to 'simulate' what could happen, but when there is very little actual data to crunch, the mind drifts off into fantasies. This was early days of the original Michaelian group, so the Michaels recommended that they continue to research their options realistically before even considering the making of plans.

There was quite a discussion here about sexuality, False Personality, and Essence. Some at the meeting were uneasy because they thought Michael was running down sex. Then came:

Plan is fantasy, or if you will, imagination. If the sexual act is surrounded by fantasy, it is both competitive and unreal. It is neither good nor bad [per se]; it is that which insures the continuity of the Tao. This universe has an awesome order. [08 November 1973]

Refer to chapters on "Sexuality" and "Essence and Personality". In terms of fantasy versus imagination, I would polarize them as "bad" versus "good" this way: -Fantasy versus +Imagination. Besides being "unreal", sexual fantasies can be "competitive" rather than unitive.

More was said about sexual fantasy later in this same month:

Dick: Please explain "passive non-identification".

Soleal's advice is colored by his own personal bias, but still good. We doubt that this is an impossible goal for most. Basically, it would mean satisfying those needs that are strictly physical with a minimum of fuss and bother. The greatest energy loss is not in the sex act itself but in the fantasy that surrounds [it]. The calories you burn are really insignificant. [29 November 1973]

That was a brief statement, but the subject gets complicated when 'unpacked'. Animals don't have fantasies about sex, but people do, because they are complicated, consisting of many layers that can get confused. The confusion between layers is what results in "fantasies", which are unsorted, misunderstood, misapplied beliefs about what is really going on here.

Alice: I had a strange "I" that appeared a couple of times the night we had our last meeting. Everyone left except Sue and Carolyn. I had been working at the hospital because of the hospital strike, and it seemed that they were trying to keep me up so that I would be so tired that I could not go into the hospital in the morning. I know intellectually that this is not so. Is there anything there in past Karma for me with either of them, as the feeling was strong. I know I was also very tired from working at the hospital the past week.

There is no negative Karma for you. This was a fantasy trip, Alice. Carolyn was very high on the marijuana and wound up like a top. The only resentment that she had was due to the fact that she could not use the office equipment and wished to do this. Neither has much emotional ties with labor unions. [16 December 1973]

We tend to make up explanations that make sense to us rather than just ask other people what is really going on with them.

Richard has much work to do in the area of being or being able to live one day at a time. How many times have your dire fantasies borne fruit, Richard? [30 December 1973]

Perhaps you have heard the joke: "Worrying about the future must work because nothing I worry about ever comes to pass." Richard was in the Caution Mode, which is notorious for worrying about every little thing, especially in the Negative Pole of -Phobia. If you, dear reader, are a 'worry wart', you might want to refer to internet resources on "generalized anxiety disorder".

Billie: I am concerned about my mother's reaction to the news that Ray and I have split. I know my father is going to have to handle her, so I am worried about their reactions.

Their reaction will be much of what you already suspect. Your task is to realize that this is truly your fantasy when you take responsibility for their reaction. You must realize that you can do nothing to stop it, except to capitulate again, and aren't you tired of that? [17 January 1974]

This phenomenon of fantasizing about other people, called "Internal Considering" in the Gurdjieffian teachings, came up repeatedly, and the Michael's always recommended against it.

Mallory: I would like to know if there is somewhere I could go for this training, and if I could use it to help people.

That is valid. You could conceivably bring this to an entire community that would be receptive to this in the near future. You can learn the Sufi dances and also folk dancing helps some to act out their fantasies. This can be the most valuable for essentially non-verbal, strictured souls. [22 January 1974]

At the time, Mallory was in college, in the process of becoming a psychotherapist. Here, to "act out their fantasies" is not a bad thing; it is therapeutic when facilitated in a recreational, fun, harmless setting. Many psychotherapeutic techniques are aimed at understanding a person's "fantasies" as a means to uncover their hidden truths. Mallory was a Seventh Level Mature Warrior, and the advice given was totally appropriate for that Age and Role. So, the takeaway notion from this passage is that we should look at our fantasies and ask what it is that they are trying to tell us about stuff that we might have repressed or overlooked.

Shirley: I feel I am my own worst enemy and I want Michael's help.

That is valid. We think that you are not helping yourself right now, Shirley. None of the conflicts you are now experiencing are Karmic, and the suffering is needless. Accept the guidance of those who would give freely of their time and company, and reconstruct your life around this new superstructure. You will find the meaning you seek. You can alter your goal and change things for yourself in a most positive way by taking what is offered instead of chasing rainbows that have already faded. This advice can be taken to heart by others here also, but you are now dwelling in fantasy and you must take the step that will liberate you from this. If you follow our advice, you cannot fail to change it; it is guaranteed. [24 January 1974]

Refer to chapters "Karma" and "Liberation". There is a difference between "chasing rainbows" and "following your bliss", meaning, there are realistic aspirations and there are unrealistic aspirations. If you are having difficulty discerning the difference all by yourself, then you might want to ask your friends for a "reality check".

Different Attitudes provide different tendencies or proclivities to "dwell in fantasy," or not:

Sue: Could we have the Attitude for those who do not know what theirs is?

Sue is a Realist. Billie: Realist. Ellis: Skeptic. TomM: Idealist. The only one in the group with a Spiritual[ist] Attitude is Cheryl.

The Realist perceives the situation at hand in an almost intellectual clarity, and sub-consciously applies all of the alternatives with lightning speed, coming up with a workable solution within an extremely short period of deliberation. The Realist has few expectations of fanciful nature, and, as would be expected, is grounded in reality.

Ray: In the area of Attitudes, the description of Realist does not fit with my idea of what Billie's Attitude is. I have seen fantasies and expectations in Billie.

We do not see many fanciful expectations in Billie. We see less in you than before. But, there are some lingering there. Your imagination just a short time ago was the most exciting component of your life. [24 January 1974]

The Pragmatist Attitude provides the least distorted perception of the world, and therefore it is probably the least inclined to 'flights' of fantasy. All of the other Attitudes are more distorted in their perspective, but the Realist Attitude is a close second to Pragmatist for lack of fantasy. The Cardinal Attitudes (Idealist, Spiritualist, Realist) are prone to happy fantasies, and the Ordinal Attitudes (Skeptic, Stoic, Cynic) are prone to unhappy fantasies.

The next mention of fantasy in the original Michaelian group transcriptions mentions “the Idealist’s dreams” in particular:

[Soleal:] I think that one of the problems with the teacher and also with me in accepting your outlines for organization would have to be your reliance to such a great extent upon the money that can be poured into your group excluding a number of students who can offer far more than a mere medium of exchange (such as money) and consequently, the teacher has vetoed your plans. This is Bad Work to exclude on this base, and also [it is Bad Work] to dwell at such length upon all of the directions as contingencies that might happen. Do you realize that this is as much a fantasy as the Idealist’s dream? I am not an Idealist, but I am certainly willing to run a trial-by-error test on anything that seems to be meaningful in the end. If everyone on your world had waited until all of the loose ends were neatly tucked in, no progress ever would have been made. There is such a thing as obstinate realism. [18 February 1974]

This is another passage about the communal living project, as it was still not going well: some people had an unrealistic positive view, and some had an unrealistic negative view. This passage affirms and confirms what I said about some previous passages, namely that there are positive and negative fantasies. The trick for all of us is to discern when we are in one or the other mode, and we would do well to find the balance point between the extremes that makes solid progress, being neither overly optimistic nor overly pessimistic about our aspirations and expectations.

Edgar: It took me a half an hour to realize that I was all right.

We would remind you all at this point that whatever your pre-conceived fantasy of the appearance of this entity is, that [is] what you will see on the Astral Plane until you clear the blocks. [20 February 1974]

As stated previously, fantasy is usually the product of a natural tendency in a personality type, or it is the product of an overactive imagination when confronted with insufficient or ambiguous or confused data, as is the case here in this passage.

Dick: Patty felt fear of BA’s violence. Is her fear valid? He seems benign to me.

He entertained fantasies of this [violence], yes, and she perceived it. In this male, it was pure fantasy. [03 March 1974]

Certainly, keeping one’s (negative or positive) fantasies to oneself is better than acting them out in reality, but, of course, the best option is to extinguish fantasies.

It is interesting to note that the dreams all concern some primary fantasy fears, such as Alice’s dreams of pursuit with intent to [do] violence to her and Sarah’s dreams of food being destroyed before her eyes. [13 March 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Dreams and Dreaming” for more discussion of the study of one’s dreams for ferreting out one’s fantasies.

Richard: When I was building my fence today I had these fantasies about having trouble with my neighbor, who has threatened me with a knife before. It really tired me out with all the fantasies I had should he come out drunk again and become belligerent. [14 April 1974]

Real threats are especially good at provoking fantasies, and then maintaining fantasies that are hard to ‘shake off’.

Comment on psychological reasons or effects of the rip-off.

The man Jim enjoys being his own boss. Being a carpenter is not so much a problem as being under the constant direction of others. Also, this man works far better as a solitary entity. But, aren’t you just a little bit leery about being out all by yourself and don’t you spend a great deal of time with this fantasy, only to reject it as impractical?

Regarding hypnotherapy — having a therapy place where some of us would treat troubled people by hypnosis — synthesis while under hypnosis.

Once we realize we can change — how do we know when that is?

Usually, the Mature Soul at that point seeks therapy. Whether this is effective depends upon the skill of the therapist. The same goes for the skill of the teacher in the school such as this.

We believe that it is certainly worth exploring [and] discussing where the others fit in would help; all could make a contribution. Such a move in the right direction could be a tremendous stride toward growth if the space was positive and the manifestation did not involve unrealistic fantasy. [08 May 1974]

This is just another friendly warning to have reasonable expectations about whatever we do.

Dick: Feeling [that] a conscious soul has inner fires burning.

We do not dispute that. The energy will be available in quantities, now unavailable to you, simply because you will not be leaking it out through fantasies and hostilities. [05 June 1974]

Several times the Michaels note that fantasies are a waste of time and a leak of “energy”, which could otherwise be directed to spiritual growth.

Gene: At times, I have felt that Susan was suppressing her sexuality.

We see little fantasy of this nature in this lady. [16 June 1974]

It might have seemed to Gene that his wife was frigid, because he was not one to “suppress” his sexuality. The point to be made about this Q&A exchange is that one type of fantasy is to attribute or impute or explain the behavior of others based on our own subjective evaluation of them. This is a common mistake.

Narra: What happened to the SLA [Symbionese Liberation Army] members that were pacific and then became violent?

The same phenomena occurred here that occurs over and over again. The way of peace is far too slow for most Young Souls, and if they are politically involved, they usually temper their mercy with a little blood at the end. The three in question were swept up in the charisma of the leader, but they were already tasting the frustration of bringing about a “better world” through non-violence. They [perceived] massive inequities around them, and were unable to separate from their fantasies. The trouble with this and many revolutionary groups is that they choose notoriously poor targets through Emotional Center. For instance, the man Marcus was viewed by the militant Black as “Uncle Tom”. In reality, he was far from that. [19 June 1974]

Besides Attitude, mentioned previously, the Soul Ages and Centers are prone to certain types of fantasies that are specific to them. Actually the Negative Poles of all of the Overleaves are different types of “fantasy”, if you expand the definition to include an unrealistic and unhealthy way of being in the world. Generally speaking, it is self-righteous to try to “change the world” unless one has perfected oneself, in which case one would have no fantasies about oneself and the world; one would perceive self and not-self without distortion.

What is the difference between boredom and depression?

We would say that the line is exceedingly thin, almost invisible. Boredom normally comes about when the individual is unable to meld his fantasy with the realities of everyday life, and this includes fantasied expectations of those around him, such as those the man Dennis has of the man James and [the woman] Marsha.

Marty: What does Dennis expect besides service and a home? All his decisions made for him? Can he understand his fantasizing, given his Overleaves?

No. [03 September 1974]

One type of fantasy is to use the imagination as an escape from boredom, from situations, or from people that do not live up one’s expectations. As I said above, if you look at the Negative Poles of all of the Overleaves you will see a long list of distortions toward fantasy.

Sexual behavior in this culture is largely instinctive to the point where any gesture of friendliness is interpreted as a sexual overture if it comes from one of the opposite gender, and the fantasies and expectations begin.

When you behave as society wishes you to, you can know for certain that instinct has a large part in it, unless of course it happens to coincide with what you really desire, and this is rare. [21 December 1974]

By “instinctive”, per the context, I understand this to refer to cultural programming, not the type of instinct that animals are born with. Per previous comments, unlike animal sexuality which is purely instinctive, aka inborn, thanks to cultural imprinting human sexuality is rife with fantasies heaped on top of the inborn drive to propagate the species.

Soleal, an Adept on another planet, shares his struggles against his own fantasies as he contemplated a potential visit to planet Earth:

Shirley asked what we could do to help him perceive us better or us perceive him better.

[Soleal:] I am afraid that it is my own task to perceive you, and I must do it in my own time. However, you have access to the same energy that I do, and you are welcome to try any of the teacher’s [Michael] gimmicks whenever you wish. My own perceptions are colored a little by my own imagination, which is by no means extinguished. This is also among the last vestiges to go. During the waking hours, I can maintain a high level of vigilance over my fantasies. At other times, this becomes difficult, and unfamiliar sensations assail me, and I lose all of my comfortable landmarks.

It is perhaps not possible for me to convey this to you so indirectly. When I can be among you, it will become far easier. The process involved leaves me with a dual feeling of anticipation and dread. I can share with you all of my fears and trepidations that I have in the waking state, and thereby let you glimpse the chink in the armor, and perhaps this will above all things boost the trust level for a few of you.... [11 January 1975]

The human brain is actually hard-wired to panic under threatening conditions; this is the well-known so-called “fight or flight” reflex; it is a part of the survival program built into all living organisms. Psychologists know how this works: the human mind has a memory of past events, and it generates a “model” of how the world works based on that data, so that it can make predictions about the future that are more or less statistically accurate, the purpose being to ensure its safety as much as possible. Extrapolating from that built-up model, the human imagination generates an expectation of how the world will work in the future, and it constantly checks that model against what actually happens, and the model gets updated. Rinse and repeat ad eternum as we go through life; this is how we learn. All of creation partakes of this so-called “feedback loop” process between objective and subjective reality systems. This useful and beneficial function of imagination typically tips into the realm of counterproductive fantasy when it faces unusual and unfamiliar situations that have not yet been modeled, particularly those that evoke fear, the “fear of the unknown”. Looking for the optimal coping strategy, the imagination frantically searches the ‘space’ of all known or statistically possible actions and responses to actions. As Soleal said, this instinctive mechanism built into the organism is one of the last facets of False Personality that will be overridden on a spiritual path.

Fantasies about fears about the future are among the most pernicious:

You have not lost a thing when a non-serious student leaves the teaching — at least, you have lost nothing positive. What you may have lost is much scattering of energies to the winds. Working with one who is truly not a student only wastes the energies of the [original Michaelian group] cadre, and grieving over their loss results in a tremendous drain. I don’t think I even need mention what happens when you fantasize over what might happen if that one or this one left the teaching.. [16 February 1975]

Little did they know that a few days hence the large group meetings would cease, that the original Michaelian group would revert to the founding and core group members meeting on an occasional basis. The point to be emphasized here is that “shit happens”, and it is wise to factor this fact into our model of how the universe works, so that we are not so surprised and so dismayed when “shift happens”.

When is Soleal coming?

[Soleal:] I think, and the teacher [Michael] agrees, that [to tell you] that would be Bad Work, and would only encourage fantasy to tell you when. [16 February 1975]

On several occasions the Michaels, as well as Soleal, refused to provide an answer to a question, saying that it was up to the questioner to trust their intuition; refer to the chapter “Intuition”. The desire to know the future is understandable to those who are fearful or prone to fantasy by nature. However, the future is not ‘set in stone’, so any sense of security that one might have about the future comes best from more predictable internal resources than from less predictable externalities. In the so-called “sermon on the mount”, Jesus is alleged to have said: “Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.” (Matthew 6:34, KJV) One common aphorism about this recommended state of mind is to “Be here now”.

We have a message for the lady Louise. You were in complete illusion, you were in fantasy, all your fears are in fantasy. Of course the mountain is not real, and perhaps you may look deeper into the Biblical characters [with] whom you have chosen to identify; [this might be] ‘Symbology’, perhaps, rather than truth. We would say the same for the man Allyn. It is a mystical experience, not [a] spiritual one. Learn to differentiate. [16 April 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Fear” to see more examples of illusory trepidations. Having a list helps one to be more vigilant about what might trip you up.

[Soleal:] Reality is never as difficult to deal with as the fantasy, because in the fantasy you seldom see any tangible results. [Dimensions! June 1975]

Fantasies typically make matters worse rather than better, so squelch them if you can. Otherwise, even though “seldom”, they could conceivably become “self-fulfilling prophecies”.

The evening began with talk about the [A Course in] Miracles material, and we shared thoughts about the difference between false goals and true goals. Must we give up life goals?

All must realize that the term Holy Spirit [in that book] does in fact refer to the Essence — that within the self that is in contact with the Tao. To contact this Holy Spirit, then, requires only the quieting of the Overleaves to the extent that the Essence can be perceived. The perception is often brilliantly elucidated during a so-called “spiritual” experience, when the Personality is temporarily inactivated by the powerful input. [Psychedelic] Drugs will often facilitate this, but are not necessary; environment is more important. Without this perception, all of this [Michael’s teaching or any spiritual teaching] is simply another barrage of words. Only the knowledge of one’s own Essence is convincing. We cannot emphasize this too much. It can be explained by the timeworn cliché: “seeing is believing”. There is no other way that one can be certain that planes beyond the physical exist, other than experiencing them. The same can be said for the perception of one’s own Essence. When this is accomplished, the power of the experience drowns disbelief. Then, of course, it is still entirely up to you which course you wish to pursue. It is doubtful, though, that one would choose to continue with purposeless activities. False goals are those that are largely unattainable, as they exist only in fantasy. True goals lead to the awakening of the Essence and its breakthrough. This is indeed possible for those who wish it and without great sacrifice upon the mountain-top. [12 December 1976]

In this passage, we see that the Personality and the Overleaves can be the sources of distorted perceptions of the world and of truth and of goodness. Allegedly, the Essence wants to reveal itself and its true perceptions to us. This passage reveals the Michaels’ epistemology: how do we know that some proposition is real and true rather than a fantasy? Answer: experientially. If the reader does not have some familiarity with the ins and outs of the branch of philosophy called epistemology, then take a look at this lengthy webpage; it is well worth reading for context about the subject of this chapter: ><https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Epistemology><; epistemology is all about discerning the difference between reality and unreality, truth and fantasy, knowledge and ignorance. For relevant information on subjects mentioned in this passage, refer to the chapters “Essence and Personality”, “Psychedelics”, “Awakening from Sleep”.

Dick: Robert [Burton] was fascinating to me. He DID see a different reality. I will never be able to. There can be no spiritual growth for me — forget it.

We would like you to consider the possibility that once a thought is thought, it becomes a tangible force in the universe, and a concept once discerned must be acted upon somewhere in the physical universe, even though, perhaps, not by the particular man-mass that thinks it. Even your fantasies are tangible. This accounts for many Biblical admonitions such as the one concerning lust after a neighbor’s wife [one of the Ten Commandments]. The notion is not new, and has occupied philosophers for many centuries. [21 October 1977]

According to Seth, “you create your own reality”. According to some interpretations of quantum physics, there is a feedback loop between physics and personality. To what extent this is true or not is arguable by physicists and by philosophers and by non-physical entities, but until we know for certain exactly how this works it is wise to “be careful what you wish for.”

Concluding Comments on Fantasy

People who are attracted to spirituality, more than those who are not, are prone to have good imaginations, and they are attracted to flights of fancy, and they are prone to fantasies. Many components of the Michaelian teachings are directed at the discovery and mitigation of fantasies, and these are covered not only in this lengthy chapter, but in several other chapters about subjects that could be placed in the general category of psychotherapy to mitigate fantasy, such as “Maya”, “False Personality”, “Fear”, “Drama”, “Glamour”, “Awakening from Sleep”, “Liberation”, “Buffers”, “Energy and Energy Leaks”, “Communication”, “Identification”, “Imprinting”, “Knowledge as gnosis”, and “Veil”. Read them, and you will likely get a better grip on reality.

Speaking of reality, fantasy and reality are inversely related, meaning that the more of one the less of the other. So, if you find yourself having a lot of fantastical ideation about something, then you know that the fantasy is trying to fill in the missing ingredient of some desired reality. That being the case, by reviewing the nature of your fantasies, you might be able to discern some clues about what is the reality that you seek but have not yet achieved.

③ FASTING

This chapter is the product of a search for the word fasting in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

The word fasting is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

As we all know, “fasting” is going without food for some period of time. According to the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, this involves more than just skipping meals. Specifically, fasting is one of the primary practices or tools that the Michaels recommend to their students, to promote and augment spiritual development. It is almost always recommended in connection with other consciousness-raising practices.

It might be a little surprising how often this word fasting shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

This chapter is one of many that discusses a particular tool that the Michaels recommend if they are serious about advancing on their spiritual path; refer to the chapter “Tools” for a complete accounting.

Fasting per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

If the Michaels said it once, they said it a dozen times:

[Soleal:] To get to higher Centers, do what Jesus did: fasting, meditation, and agonizing self-appraisal. [03 July 1973]

Alice: How can I raise myself to the higher — through meditation?

[Tomas:] You are right. Meditation is the door by which you can enter the higher plane and communicate with those waiting to help. Fasting and occasional solitude and silence prepare you for a more meaningful experience. There are many excellent places giving instruction. Maybe this would open the door for you, Alice. The need for personal guidance varies with the individual. [24 July 1973]

Dick: Is fasting healthy?

Fasting when done properly leads to the liberated meditation. It produces the same state as marijuana if practiced long enough and diligently enough. You should not fast if you are ill or if there is honest grief or pressures of private agendas.

Dick: How should we do it?

Start with one day. Go to two, then three. Do not exceed five at this stage. Take plenty of liquids and be quiet at first. Do not drive. That [liquids] includes water and unsweetened liquids and fruits [juices?].

[What about] milk?

No milk. You can fill up on milk. [21 August 1973]

Perhaps “fasting” to the Michaels meant to avoid solid food, not liquid food other than milk. Perhaps tea and coffee without sugar or artificial sweetener are acceptable? I do not see how fruit juices would be considered an unsweetened liquid. Evidently, dehydration is not a good thing.

Edgar: I would like advice regards getting rid of pain.

We can be of assistance only in that your illness is a part of Karma for you and when you come to grips with your spiritual controversy, the pain will no longer be necessary. This can be accelerated, of course, by those methods we have outlined for the others; that is: meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. [15 November 1973]

Speaking of doing what Jesus did:

Edgar: What is meant by his saying he was the Son of God?

You are all sons of “God”. This man, before the Infinite Soul manifested, referred to himself as the servant of man. The Infinite Soul said, “I am the Word.” The Infinite Soul manifested during a period of intense meditation and fasting, and “the sermon on the mount” was the first uttering of the Infinite Soul. [22 November 1973]

Sue: Any hint in the direction I might take?

Should we go through it all over again, Sue? Meditation, concentration, fasting, study, right-thinking — this is the magic enlightenment formula, like $E = MC^2$. [22 November 1973]

How do you start planning for internalizing?

Answer: They’ve told us through fasting, meditation, and concentration. [06 February 1973]

Edgar: Is there any technique I can use to detach myself from Maya?

We have given those to you. They are again: meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. [03 March 1974]

Dick: We can tell in the book how we have received the material intellectually. However, we don’t yet have the necessary steps to overcome our Overleaves. We have some keys, such as “experiencing it out”, and meditation, fasting, studying, which seem non-directive. [10 May 1974]

Would fasting help meditation?

Many times it does, yes. It deepens the trance. [03 July 1973]

Thaddeus: What would Michael suggest in work to further myself?

We have suggested that you meditate. We also suggest that for you, creative silence is something you might find valuable. This must be done with another student. Otherwise, it is not effective. Although you have been known to talk to yourself, you are much more inclined to do this when in the presence of others. You have a noisy head and must work to quiet it down. This is not unusual with your Overleaves, but as a student, you must choose to override it. Also, you can practice concentration, augmented [with psychedelics] or not. Also, for you, periodic fasting would be of great value. Spiritual food is what you crave, but the Personality demands the substitute. If you can stand not to gratify the body’s demands, the hold of the Personality will weaken. The movement you are now doing is good — don’t stop. In fact, you could increase it. [29 October 1974]

James asked what must we do to become awake.

We have, of course, outlined to this cadre the steps that they must take if they are to ever become sufficiently awake to hear the words. We have told them of the highest truth, which is Agape, which is the unqualified acceptance of other creatures as the greater part of self. We have given them the tools for attainment of this state, which are yes, meditation, concentration, fasting, and study. [20 November 1974]

Bill told us he is taking a course from Transcendental Meditation and would like a comment from Michael about anything he could do prior to the experience that would help him.

Prior to this, fasting would help, yes, for at least twelve hours. Also, a brisk walk and openness. This is a highly successful form of meditation for beginners and works most of the time. [26 November 1974]

Sandy: Seth seems to give more personal help with private situations. Why not Michael also?

We are most willing to act as a guide or help you in all of those areas involving spiritual growth, such as meditation, concentration, fasting, and the like... [02 January 1975]

Fasting without proper mental preparation can interrupt the accepted behavioral stimuli of the brain cells. The intention to fast must in advance be determined or the body reacts in pain. [13 April 1975]

Dick talked about Kundalini energy.

... The way to this energy can be found through many media. Those we have suggested have been meditation, concentration, and fasting, augmented [by psychedelics] or not; also, art that is of a participatory nature, [such as] music, color, water — and by water we mean swimming, floating, sailing or simply standing beneath a water flow — “hydrotherapy” if you prefer. The sensory deprivation method is another, but there again, the water [in the sensory deprivation tank] helps more than you realize. [04 November 1974]

Concluding Comments on Fasting

The practices that the Michaels mention in connection with fasting are: meditation and concentration, self-appraisal, solitude and silence, prayer, study, positive thoughts, psychedelics, art, hydrotherapy, and sensory deprivation. (To these I would add mindful walking). In other words, don't just suffer the hunger pangs and harbor resentment that you “have to” do this unpleasantness; do focused, intentional “spiritual” activities.

Refer to the chapters “Meditation and Concentration” and “Psychedelics” for those adjuncts to fasting.

FEAR

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “fear” and its synonyms in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. Learned students will know that these words do not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Fear issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The words relating to fear are not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because they have no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; they are not Michaelian jargon words that needs definitions apart from their use in the common vernacular.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a spiritual component, as so many other chapters in this book do. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings are usually either a ‘virtue’ to be cultivated or a ‘vice’ to be mitigated; both are amenable to psychotherapy. Obviously, fear is a negative worth eschewing. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on various websites, including https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Fear

So what is meant by feminine and masculine? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Fear per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is a subject that benefits by division into subcategories. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The word “fear” occurs many times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions in contexts that have no significance or relevance to a general discussion of what may be called the philosophy of fear, so I omit those from this chapter.

Relevance of Overleaves to Fear

The first relevant Q&A exchange is this one:

Richard: I’ve been told that I have some obstacles toward spiritual growth — some “bad Tapes” so to speak — that are keeping me from progressing. Can you tell me about them?

Anxiety over others' impressions of your actions, obsessions with systems and procedures, worry about what is right, the fear that you will not be somehow the good little boy. [But the reality is:] Your halo can be tarnished, and many will still love you. [mid 1973]

Refer to the chapter "Bio-computer" for more about "tapes", aka 'programming', that can obscure and counteract True Personality. The above message was channeled long before Richard's Overleaves were revealed, but note that, besides those "obstacles toward spiritual growth", Richard had the Goal of Acceptance and the Caution Mode. These two Overleaves are "diametrically" opposed to each other, and it is the type of internally-abrading Overleaves that can make a person neurotic, and make other people neurotic as they interact with that neuroticism. Anxiety, obsession, worry, and fear are variations of the Negative Pole of the Caution Mode, namely -Phobia, and "good little boy" is from the Negative Pole of the Goal of Acceptance, namely -Ingratiation, and "love" is from the Positive Pole of the Goal of Acceptance, namely "Agape".

Infant Souls are often bitten by dogs who have no previous history of biting, simply because of their inordinate fear... The Baby Soul is fearful (of almost everything), and her kitchen is usually antiseptically clean. [lat August 1973]

There are legitimate fears, such as of aggressive dogs and harmful germs, but when taken to an extreme the fear is illegitimate:

Infant Souls manifest fear. This can be seen in their eyes. This fear is out of proportion to the situation. The whole business of living is fearful to them. [18 September 1973]

Infant Souls having so little understanding of life, my speculation is that their pervasive sense of fear is a product of bewilderment and bafflement.

Richard: Misguided concern ... does this primarily involve others?

It stems from your fear of being either challenged or rejected [due to your Goal of Acceptance and your Mode of Caution]. [22 September 1974]

This was a very early hint that the Negative Poles of the Overleaves are based in fear, among other issues, and the Positive Poles are based in love; refer to my comment on the first Q&A exchange in this chapter.

Miscellaneous Fears and Comments on Fears

Dick: I've been chipping away at the granite mountain with my internal dialogues and it doesn't seem to get anywhere for me. Another thing is that I realize that, in me, fear predominates over love, no matter how strong the love is.

Fear of loss of control besets all of you. With you, Dick, it is loss of emotional control. With Richard, it is fear of being considered insane. With many of you, it is fear of loss of reasoning.

Dick: I don't live in fear all the time, because everything I do is designed to avoid situations where I might encounter it.

If the Personality was not living in fear, it would not go to such elaborate means to avoid the pain-producing situation. [02 October 1973]

We do not say that your fears are groundless, just that perhaps we can aid you to convert them into [something] other than fear. [91 November 1973]

That is a key passage in this chapter on fear and what to do about it. The general and basic idea is to notice your specific fear, ask yourself what its source might be, consider how you might confront it in such a way that you transmute it into love. This is not unlike the injunction mentioned previously in this chapter, namely to transmute the Negative Poles of your Overleaves into their Positive Poles.

Shirley: What does she associate pain with?

Most persons who have been fortunate enough not to have had much pain are terribly afraid of it. It is more of the same old fear of the unknown. All of your literature is resplendent with gruesome accounts of the agonies associated with this disease. We are not surprised that it is feared. [29 November 1973]

Ellis: I have been reluctant to get involved in the extra-consciousness out-of-body experience phenomenon. Is this from fear?

It is merely the same old fear of the unknown. [13 December 1973]

Fears born uncertainty are some of the most debilitating. This type seems to be related to the fear of loss of control mentioned previously.

Fear of Going Against Social Norms

... fear of castigation. [14 December 1973]

Fear of social punishment is like fear of being shamed, which is discussed at length in the chapter “Shame”.

Phobias from Past Lives

Mallory: I would like to ask about a fear of vomiting, which I have had as long as I can remember. Is this fear from a past life?

Yes, the vomiting is reminiscent of a time you died of Diphtheria and could not help from choking. The fear persists in many for the same reason.

(Mallory suggested that many people died in this manner and wouldn't there be many more who had this fear?)

Alice: [Alice's daughter] Victoria had a fear of vomiting. Did she too die of diphtheria in another life?

She was choked. [22 January 1974]

Various seemingly irrational phobias can perhaps be traced to past-life traumas that carry over to the present life.

[[Continue search to end of transcriptions. Include synonyms such as fright.]]

Concluding Comments on Fear

Perhaps you have heard it said that the opposite of love is not hate, it is fear. There is something to be said for that, and this is what I say. The way I think of the relationship of love to hate and fear is that +Love is the Positive Pole of the Goal of Acceptance, +Unification, and –Hate is the Negative Pole of the Goal of Rejection (the “complement” of the Goal of Acceptance), namely –Prejudice, and –Fear is the Negative Pole of the Caution Mode (the “diametric” of the Goal of Acceptance), namely –Phobia. In graphic form, note how this shows up on the Overleaf chart:

FEMININE AND MASCULINE

This chapter is the product of a search for the words feminine and masculine and their variations in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. Learned students will know that these words do not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Masculinity and femininity issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The words femininity and masculinity are not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because they have no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; they are not Michaelian jargon words that needs definitions apart from their use in the common vernacular.

Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

Definition of Feminine and Masculine

So what is meant by feminine and masculine? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Feminine and Masculine per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Feminine and Masculine

FLASH

This chapter is the product of a search for the word flash and its derivatives and synonyms in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word flash is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

The reason I researched and wrote this chapter is because I noticed, while I was researching and writing the chapters on “Intuition” and “Insight” (refer to those chapters), that this word appears repeatedly in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. A word search in the original Michaelian group transcriptions revealed that the subject also appears in other contexts, so then I flashed on the notion that having a chapter of its own would be a useful project.

Definition of Flash

So what is meant by flash? The online Merriam Webster online dictionary definition is: Wikipedia has an article that provides a definition and a description, as follows \(underlined words are my emphasis\):

Flash per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is a subject that benefits by division into subsections. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

Concluding Comments on Flash

“epiphany” never appears in the original Michaelian group

FRAGMENTATION and REINTEGRATION

Question: Well, if we do Astral travel to associate with the spirits more, maybe they won't let us associate with them, after we have made the commitment. You really don't know whether they will associate with you anyway. That puts you where you don't care. Take the Astral trips first. See if you like it.

Don't worry. We will associate. We will now answer an earlier question. We are integrated fragments of an ancient entity. (One of us had wondered earlier who our new entity was.) [date]

Comment (from the medium): He wants to say something else.

The entity of which [Saint] Paul [of the Bible] was a part is not completely integrated.

Discussion: concerning the effects of alcohol on quieting the personality, then the Fragmentation of Paul's Entity, and finally Fragmentation in general.

When the spirit Entity first becomes Earth-bound, there can be as many as a thousand Fragments. As the Entity progresses, the Fragments unite. As each lesson is learned, the Monads are formed.

Comments: You mean we are all fragmented? That's what he said, which means that we have a lot of things to work out here. Well, I'm still fragmented.

You will be until you are reintegrated. The Christ entity even consisted of two Fragments. Jesus still had a guru in John [the Baptist]. The master/pupil Monad must be experienced from both sides.

The next question was also lost, but it concerned the fact that John [the Baptist] was presumably a reincarnation of Elias.

You are correct, Elias was a part of the Infinite Soul at the time of the manifestation. The Causal body evolved. The high planes each have seven levels. The fragments integrate at different times. When the integration takes place, evolution supervenes. [18 September 1973]

Does this mean that I only have one more life? They say that I only have one Monad left. What does this mean? Do I make it then or is that my last chance?

Then, your [entity] fragments will be reunited and you will be an integrated Causal body. [date]

Is burning a karmic ribbon always a negative thing?

Sometimes you are the debtor. Sometimes it is to you that the debt is owed. The ribbon is the thread that links you to the other fragments of a karmic play. You wish to complete the Monad. As soon as this is accomplished, the fragment has evolved. As soon as the major Monads are completed, the fragments are integrated.

Could we have a clarification of Fragments and Entities?

The higher planes each have seven levels of evolution, not just the physical. The continuous creative force that is universal casts out Entities into physical lifetimes. These Entities fragment and become many different personalities. Their integration is the evolutionary pattern for all souls. You do not feel the desire to seek the remaining fragments of your entity until the last physical cycle. Then at that time, there is almost a compulsion. You do not always know why, but you always do seek.

Dick: It seems that the unification of Fragments goes on inter-life [between lifetimes]. You can't do it here, can you?

You can, but it is difficult. It requires psychic union and that by definition requires that you be an Adept. That is always polar. It is usually done between lives.

Dick: You could not possibly experience all there is to experience in 49 lives. Do Fragments experience between lives?

Richard: Can we assume then when the Entity is reintegrated, it has experienced everything there is on the physical plane?

It has experienced all of life, yes. Each fragment does not need all experiences, but most fragments choose to experience all of life. [date]

Gene: I imagine that they are talking about the non-fragmented Entity — the unified Entity — “were first born at the same time,” and that seems to me contradictory, because those of us who were born are only part and not the Entity.

Entire entities are cast from the Tao. They fragment into physically trapped souls for as long as is necessary for them to experience all of life through the cycles. This means that when Eugene’s entity first fragmented, other entities fragmented also. The entity that includes Eugene fragmented at the same point in history as did the entity that includes Sarah and Alice. [date]

Ellis: Do we have any idea as to how many persons are involved in the Fragmentation of an Entity?

Sarah: They say at least one thousand and then they reintegrate at different speeds.

Richard: They also made the statement that not all of the Fragments have to experience all of life.

Ellis: Then they reintegrate into the Entity and that is the total cycle. Then where do you go from there?

Sarah Chambers: Where Michael is.

Ellis: On the transcendental level?

Richard: Here again, I think that we are assuming too much.

Ellis: The next question that comes to me is, is this a process of growth and evolution and for what purpose or just indigenous or if that is so, why?

To ensure the continuous creative force is the only purpose we know. The entities no longer earth-bound experience lengthy periods on the high planes and at the end, reunite with the primeval force that is creation. Thus, the created becomes the creator and the cycle repeats itself ad infinitum. This is infinity.

Dick: If Eugene and I are part of the same Entity, whose perception does the reunited Entity have?

The whole becomes the sum of the parts.

Gene: Do we then lose our individual perceptions?

You will lose your individual perceptions long before you become a mid Causal teacher. [date]

Gene: Remarked that he felt that he was probably already at least one hundred reintegrated Fragments.

Eugene is essentially correct. There are approximately twenty separate fragments of that entity extant on the Physical plane. All of you are composites of completed Monads.

Dick: How many Fragments are in my composite?

Approximately one hundred and fifty. All of you now have fragments that are a part of the mid Astral sequence.

Dick: Did I experience this polarity?

No.

Richard: I have past lives and so do the other Fragments. When you come together, do you remember the other lives of the other Fragments?

You do experience the flashes from all of the composite fragments. This is why Sarah is so confused right now.

Richard: Is this something like micro-Akashic records?

Yes, but you must remember that all of the fragments are not in the physical body at the same time. Georges Gurdjieff glimpsed this in part when he presented his theory of recurrence. [date]

Sarah Chambers: Can you tell us about the Astral plane and its levels?

The first level of the Astral plane is populated by living fragments adept at Astral travel and those souls who penetrate this plane accidentally through drugs. The second level of the Astral plane is inhabited by all those between [physical] bodies. The third level attracts Old Souls who are trying to burn final karma without being reborn.

The mid Astral bodies are partially reunited entities. You have manifested a mid Astral entity previously [Tomas]. The three higher levels are progressively integrated. Access to the high planes is through these levels. Even very high adepts such as Soleal have fantasies concerning the high planes. We have confronted him on the low Astral plane and have been required to descend a staircase that does not exist except in his mind.

Question: What is meant by the high planes?

By "high planes," we refer to the Causal [plane] and beyond [Mental plane, Messianic plane, Buddhaic plane].

Eugene Trout: From the first time a Fragment is made, this [Role] carries on. If I'm 150 Fragments at this point (in time), that means there are 150 Roles. Could they comment on this? Do we assimilate these? Is there a dominant role?

The Fragments as they integrate assume the dominant personality. The strong experiential thread persists.
[date]

I was David Hume. Was anyone else David Hume?

When you were David, there were approximately forty integrated Fragments. But to answer your real question, no, there is no one else alive. [date]

Am I acquainted with any of the Fragments of my Entity?

You have been acquainted with Fragments before. They are integrating. One person you know now is part of your larger Entity — a teacher at school.

How many Fragments are united in me?

CH's Entity consisted of five hundred Priests, four hundred Sages and one hundred Kings.

Richard: How many Fragments are united in me?

In you, there are now one hundred and thirty five fragments.

Dick: Am I correct in assuming in my Role I have lived 5,000 previous lives? (One hundred fifty Fragments, each Fifth Level Old soul = 4,800 lives.)

This is not completely valid. The dominant Fragment, in other words, the thread that is still drawn to the Physical Plane, remembers only those lives that pertained to it exclusively. It only has indirect access to the integrated fragments [of its Entity].

Dick: Does the dominant Fragment have indirect access to my previous lives?

The integrated Fragments of your entity, which are a part of the low Astral body, have a tremendous pull on you. It is almost as though they are calling you home. You are right though, R____, it will be curtains for those who integrate. The others will continue as long as they are earthbound by karmic ribbons and have incomplete Monads.

Dick: Who will be the dominant Fragment between Phyllis, Eugene Trout and me?

This will depend on the evolution. Right now, it would appear that Eugene has a few more incomplete [Monad]s. The Fragments you hold in common with Eugene and Phyllis are the same. These Fragments did not fall by the wayside. They experienced all of life.

Dick: You mean my 150 Fragments are the same as Phyllis's and Eugene Trout's?

That is valid.

Dick: How can I have the same Fragments as Eugene Trout and Phyllis?

The strength comes from those Fragments that have already integrated and are no longer subjected to karma. You are a part of this Entity, not separate from it, but there is now a partition between you and those Fragments available, so to speak. It is up to you whether [or not] you can draw upon the conglomerate knowledge. You must first be able to perceive that a large part of your time is now being spent off the Physical Plane, and this time grows longer as more and more of the original Entity becomes integrated. The pull is almost irresistible now. More than half of the allotted sleep you now spend on the Astral Plane; Phyllis too.

Dick: Are 150 Fragments incarnate in me on this Physical Plane?

No. There are more than one hundred Fragments integrated [on the Astral Plane]. It really amounts to the same thing. R____, stop thinking of the Astral Plane as 'up there'; it is 'down there' — reach out and touch it.

Dick: Is my incarnate soul a single Fragment?

In your physical body, there is a single dominant thread, but you must understand that you are no longer separated from your integrated Fragments. They are very much a part of you. When the Entity first Fragments and all of it is on the Physical Plane, there is wide separation, then there is progressive integration. All of the Fragments still incarnate have the pull exerted on them by their Astral Fragments. There is no “real” separation, merely a physical barrier that is easily scaled.

Dick: 150 Fragments are on the Astral Plane then. (The body is a container working on its karma.) Eugene Trout, PJ and I are sharing the 150 Astral Fragments.

That is valid.

Dick: Who would be the dominant Fragment if Eugene Trout, PJ and I are united?

It will be a Fragment that has not experienced all of life.

Dick: That spoils my concept. Then the Schlitz beer ads are correct: one time around. This destroys my concept of the continuation of that consciousness of which I am aware. After that, I would be united with my Entity and would no longer be conscious of self as I now know it.

That is invalid. The whole is the sum of the parts. We have no dominant Fragments. We are an Entity-integrated whole. There is no sense of loss, wistfulness, poignancy or what have you. The loss is perceived only on the Physical Plane. Now we are whole. Before, we were split apart and therefore had less than total. There is still evolution in store for us. Although we apprehend this, we still do not see it as it will be when this occurs. Right now, you feel that the loss of the individuality will be felt as pain. This is not true. The individuality is painful, not the integration. [date]

AD: Roles are in essence, not changeable. What are roles on higher astral plane, if any?

The Roles are, of course, retained on the low Astral plane, where the souls remain separate. As the integration begins to take place, the Roles become more and more blurred, until they are dissolved, or better yet, resolved, on the high Astral plane. They are not transcended here, but the memory of them is retained. If you like, you can compare it to a racial mixture which eventually leads to assimilation. Your observation is valid except for the judgment about it. There is a great difference in the power, but it cannot always be equated with a higher spiritual being. [date]

① FRICTION

This chapter is the product of a search for the word friction in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) friction is unavoidable in our lives; it is pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

About a dozen times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, the word Friction is used. One could guess what it probably means by its usage in the common vernacular and the context in which it is used in the transcriptions, but it is never actually defined in the transcriptions. As it turns out, it did not need to be defined because this is a term and concept in the original Michaelian group — one among many — that was adopted and adapted from the Gurdjieffian teaching, one of the spiritual teachings that some of the original Michaelian group founding members were familiar with. For an introduction to the general subject of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the involvement of founding original Michaelian group members with it, refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton”. The term has a particular meaning apart from the common vernacular, and because of this specific meaning in the context of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the Michaelian teachings, it is on the jargon list, and therefore capitalized.

Even though the Michaels used the term Friction on numerous occasions during the original Michaelian group, Yarbro did not mention [\[verify\]](#) it in her book about the original Michaelian group, Messages from Michael, perhaps because, near as I can tell, Yarbro was not familiar with the Gurdjieffian teachings. The Michaels have not used it in subsequent groups so far as I have been able to determine, perhaps because subsequent groups have not been familiar with Gurdjieffian teachings. Therefore, the term, and even the concept referred to by the term, has not become common knowledge in the Michaelian teachings community subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Nevertheless, I believe Gurdjieff’s psychological insights are worth discussing, the subject of Friction being one of them. I also believe that it is worthwhile to make the historical record of the original Michaelian group reasonably complete.

So far as both Gurdjieff and the Michaels were concerned, Friction is the word that applies to any experience — internal or external — that can be consciously and intentionally used as catalyst for psychotherapeutic and/or spiritual growth. Friction is whatever happens, inside or outside, that gets the Mechanical Man upset enough that he wants to make changes for the better in his life and consciousness. Experiences are labeled Friction if they make one aware of issues that need to be addressed. Friction is a “wake-up call”, or anything that “rubs one the wrong way”, or is outside one’s “comfort zone” — to use common pop-psychology terminology. Friction has commonly been addressed by various psychotherapeutic tools in societies and cultures from, I suppose, prehistory to now. The Gurdjieffian and Michaelian teachings have their own psychotherapeutic tools for dealing effectively with Friction.

First we will look at some of what the Gurdjieffian teachings has to say about Friction, then we will take a look at what the original Michaelian group transcriptions say about the subject.

Friction Per Gurdjieff

Georges Gurdjieff taught that a person does not have an immortal soul; one must create it via struggle, and the struggle in general was called The Work. Another one of Gurdjieff’s descriptive words for this struggle/work was Friction.

The following quote is from one of Gurdjieff's pupils, Peter Ouspensky, who quoted a lecture given by Gurdjieff:

Fusion, inner unity, is obtained by means of "friction", by the struggle between 'yes' and 'no' in man. If a man lives without inner struggle, if everything happens in him without opposition, if he goes wherever he is drawn or wherever the wind blows, he will remain such as he is [— unchanged]. But if a struggle begins in him, and particularly if there is a definite line [between yes and no] in this struggle, then, gradually, permanent traits begin to form themselves; he begins to "crystallize". [P. D. Ouspensky, In Search of the Miraculous, p. 32]

On the subject of Friction, Ouspensky himself had the following to say in some of his lectures:

The moment one starts working — trying to remember oneself, trying not to identify, to remember the system — at once friction begins. Friction creates energy. If things are easy, there is no friction. But if you put spokes in the wheel of Mechanicalness, this creates friction, which creates energy. [P. D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 254]

... where there is friction [opportunities for training will always present if you can find them]. But that depends on what you want — on whether you want friction, on your decision, your state, and your position. In the Work every moment one has to overcome laziness, inertia, wanting to stop. If one does not work there is nothing to overcome, but if one works at anything one always has to overcome one's desire to stop working... Anything is friction if you do it. But it is not enough merely to think about it. Only by friction can you create energy and develop will. ... Work means friction, conflict between "yes" and "no", between the part that wishes to Work and the part that does not wish to Work. There are many parts of us that do not wish to Work, so the moment you begin to Work, friction starts. If I decide to do something and a part of me does not wish to do it, I must insist as much as I am able, on carrying out my decision. But as soon as Work stops, friction stops. [P. D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 259]

Some habits are quite ordinary and harmless, but if you begin to [intentionally] put obstacles in their way it will give you good material for self-observation, and you will be able to distinguish identification when it enters. This struggle introduces friction, and without friction you would not notice yourself, you would live as though in a thick fog, without noticing it. But the second step depends on your decision — you can only be simply irritated by this friction, or you can [choose to] use it [as catalyst to change]. [P. D. Ouspensky, The Fourth Way, p. 315]

The word "Work" in these quotations is capitalized because it had a specific meaning in the Gurdjieffian teachings, referring as it did to practices that allegedly fostered spiritual growth. The concept was to some extent adopted and adapted in the original Michaelian group, so refer to the chapter on that subject.

In those four references, Ouspensky only mentions internal Friction, between conflicted factions of the Personality self. Elsewhere there is a lot of talk in the Gurdjieffian teachings about the many "I"s — sub-personalities — that make the typical person indecisive and inconsistent. As internal Friction is dealt with effectively, the person becomes unified in their consciousness.

However, an expositor of the Gurdjieffian teachings had this to say regarding Friction between Personalities:

The tasks assigned to the students were invariably concerned with the actual functioning of the school: gardening, cooking, house-cleaning, taking care of animals, milking, making butter; and these tasks were almost always group activities. As I learned later, the group work was considered to be of real importance: different personalities, working together, produced subjective, human conflicts; human conflicts produced friction; friction revealed characteristics which, if observed, could reveal "self". One of the many aims of the school was "to see yourself as others saw you"; to see oneself, as it were, from a distance; to be able to criticize that self objectively; but, at first, simply to see it. An exercise that was intended to be performed all the time, during whatever physical activity, was called "self-observation" or "opposing I to it" — "I" being the (potential consciousness), "it" the body, the instrument. [www.american-buddha.com/boyhood.gurdjieff2.htm]

There is much more to the Gurdjieffian teachings on the spiritual path than what is said above about Friction, but a summary of it is this: Friction provokes soul-searching; soul-searching provokes choices; choices develop a unified physical consciousness which crystallizes into a permanent spiritual consciousness that survives the death of the physical body.

With that foundation in the Gurdjieffian teachings laid, let us build on it with the Michaelian teachings. Now that we know what Gurdjieff taught about Friction, we understand what members of the original Michaelian group understood about it. In this section we examine each of the dozen or so occurrences of the word in chronological order as they appeared in the original Michaelian group transcriptions.

Friction per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The first mention of Friction showed up in the original Michaelian group transcriptions even before Michael showed up. It was channeled from a spiritually adept student of Michael from another planet, Soleal. It was in a session for which we do not have the complete and dated transcript:

I think a sense of responsibility toward your job is essential. Don't you have a sense of responsibility toward your job?

Oh yes, I certainly do. I just do not worry about it. It takes skill to separate [distinguish between responsibility and worry]. That is your Friction, to learn to take the action necessary with calm detachment. [early 1973]

Underlined words in this and other quotations are my emphasis, to call attention to key concepts.

When one experiences Friction, one is presented with an opportunity to learn something. Anyone who has ever had a job knows that employment offers many opportunities to experience Friction. Any person who is on a self-aware psychotherapeutic or spiritual path can use the Friction as impetus or catalyst to make wise choices that minimize the Friction. At the minimized Friction there is calm detachment, without worry, that still gets the job done. This is a “skill” that can be learned, and the Michaelian teachings is full of information to facilitate this skill.

The next mention of Friction is also from a Soleal session, and involves another common source of Friction besides employment, namely imprinting:

Richard: I am trying to work on my bad tapes and get rid of them, and I have a strong feeling when these impulses are coming in on the board and we're going over certain words, I get a different register than I get when we're going over other words, and I seem to correlate the one group of words with the bad tapes. Are you helping me work on the bad tapes in that way?

Not to my knowledge. You may be picking up on core words that have special meaning to you. If this can be of help to you, if you can be conscious to it [sic]. Whenever you ask a question, there is much hesitation because you have so many auxiliary readings going. To separate is as I told you already, your major part of Friction. [03 July 1973]

The “bad tapes” mentioned here are experiences imprinted in the Bio-computer subsequent to birth, that influence a person inappropriately, causing Friction. The mitigation of the Friction then is obviously to consciously, intentionally erase the tapes, so to speak.

Some Frictions can be catalysts for growth, and others, not so much:

Should I keep the Capri [automobile]?

The Capri is a worthless piece of junk, but it is providing you with some beautiful Friction. Yes, scrap it. [04 September 1973]

There is a tendency of the Personality to get attached to its Friction because in some perverse way it finds the Friction seductive or appealing or attractive — “beautiful”. In this passage, the Michaels advise to “scrap” whatever Friction cannot be used for growth because of the attachment trap. This implies that one has better things to do than be distracted or held back by unnecessary Friction. There is “skill” in discerning what Friction is worthless and what is not. This passage is reminiscent of the so-called serenity prayer: “God, grant me the courage to change the things I can, the serenity to accept the things I cannot change, and the wisdom to know the difference.” A student of the Michaelian teachings might substitute “Essence” for “God”.

Friction inevitably appears whenever one applies psychotherapeutic and/or spiritual tools. Sometimes, growth automatically rubs the body and the personality the wrong way:

It is not necessary to be physically inactive in order to grow. It is necessary to meditate and be inactive for periods of time, but not all day every day. The Work brings about Frictions and growths like new grass in the forest after a rain. [20 November 1973]

The advice here is to take care of both one's physical and spiritual aspects in a balanced proportion. Otherwise, the neglected side of one's life will experience Friction.

Not only the mind and the spirit, but Body Type figures into the Friction equation. In the next appearance of Friction in the transcriptions, a specific type of Friction, procrastination, was mentioned as common for a certain Body Type, and for some of the Roles:

Question about procrastination.

This is usually the major part of Friction for Saturnine [Body Type] individuals and also with all but Priests, Slaves, Warriors, and Kings. They cannot procrastinate, as it goes against their Essence more than other Roles. Scholars, Sages, and Artisans do not hesitate to put off things indefinitely, in hopes that some miraculous solution will suddenly appear all by itself, and then this Saturnine creature can just sit back and wait for the [gear] wheels of the gods to grind. [14 December 1973]

When the environment — the flow of events in the universe — makes it clear that something should be done in a timely manner, and it does not get done, then there is Friction. Although the passage says nothing about it, Cardinal Fragments (Sage, Priest, King) tend to have an I'm OK you're not OK worldview, which means their Friction is more likely to be with others and the environment than within themselves. On the other hand, Ordinal Fragments (Warrior, Server, Artisan) tend to have a You're OK I'm not OK worldview, which means their Friction is more likely to be within themselves.

The next mention of Friction in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is that between Roles:

Dick: I would like to ask for a comment on my hatred for Dominant Warriors, and anything on the synthesis for acceptance and fears.

This would represent a major part of Friction for you, as you see in them all those traits you endeavor to eradicate from your own life. Only by understanding that Warriors in the earlier cycles are pretty much a victim of their karmic ribbons — and will be until they meet with a teaching — then you can apply the same principle of unconditional acceptance that you must with all others in perceiving the synthesis. This acceptance is imperative. [03 January 1974]

The part about “you see in them all the traits you endeavor to eradicate from your life” is called projection in psychotherapy, and the Jungian answer to it is called shadow work. Michael seems to endorse this. The use of the word “hatred” here indicates something more than a petty annoyance. This strong a reaction is surely a red flag that something is seriously amiss. The resolution to this kind of Friction with another person is the same as all other kinds, unconditional acceptance. “Unconditional” refers to the neutral place that is the gestalt, or “synthesis” of the negative and positive poles of a phenomenon. Neutralize the hatred with love. In other words, integrate the experience. This is an “imperative”, or necessary endeavor, for all those in a spiritual teaching.

The next mention of Friction came a month after the one quoted above, and again uses the word synthesis as the way to ameliorate it:

Betty: Some of the nurses make me so mad. How can synthesis help me feeling this way about some of them?

[She] is in Rejection; also is a Cynic. This will take much work for you, and is there for Friction. [03 February 1974]

Some people are so obnoxious that it is truly a major challenge to integrate the entire experience into a profound understanding and thus neutralize the Friction.

The next mention of Friction is in the context of contrast between the Gurdjieffian teachings and the Michaelian teachings:

Gurdjieff was organized and was not haphazard, and Michael says the only thing valid [in his cosmology] was the Centers and a life beyond the physical ...

[Soleal:] At great risk of developing some real Friction, I offer this, in part my own, in part the Teaching, not yet inseparable.

Then Soleal described the Friction that the original Michaelian group members would face if they continued on the spiritual path, any spiritual path, but especially if they started a commune: privacy issues, trust issues, acceptance issues, control issues, needs issues, organizational issues, financial issues, and so on. Then he said:

[Soleal:] It is sometimes difficult and sometimes disheartening, but in the long run, rewarding beyond words. [18 February 1974]

Confronting Friction then is sometimes very much in the realm of delayed gratification. Not every step of the journey is always rewarding. Therefore, it is best to be farsighted when stepping upon the spiritual path.

In the next mention of the term, we see that one of the tools for managing Friction is meditation:

Mallory: Would a silent mantra help?

It can, or you can use the one you have now, except that this [current one] does produce some Friction with you and that needs to be resolved. "Never changing, ever flowing, eternally the Tao" works for some. [20 February 1974]

It is best to resolve the Frictions one has now than ignore or repress them and go on to other sources of Friction. The mantra proposed appears to be one that might resolve this person's Friction.

The term Friction next appears again in the context of communal living:

Many of you came to this because of the Friction in your lives, seeking a method of handling this and still staying above ground emotionally, and toward this end, some of you have made much progress. [24 February 1974]

There is Friction aplenty in the typical living arrangements in our culture, and it is Good Work to resolve those Frictions before embarking on the Frictions that one will surely encounter in a commune. Communal living might be an escape from some Frictions that are inherent in the culture at large, but it can also be the source of other Frictions. Ultimately, there is no avoiding Friction by changing living arrangements because many of the issues go with the person who has them, independent of circumstances and situations. The only way out is through — one must be transformed.

There is usually Friction in any new situation, not just starting a commune, and with any new people who come into one's life:

Are new students helpful because they bring new questions?

Each new student who approaches this teaching in a serious vein brings new questions that would otherwise go unasked. This is good. The constant ebb and flow of students causes consternation and provides Friction for some students, but these [new students] are welcome to our private help any time [if group members are not so inclined to help]. [27 March 1974]

The word consternation of course refers to an unpleasant, negative experience. The goal of a psychotherapeutic path is to turn this into a positive, growth-provoking experience, and then it is properly labeled as Friction. In the pop-psychology vernacular, this is "turning lemons into lemonade."

Some people go along with the cultural norm and do or do not feel Friction, whereas others go against the cultural norm and do or do not feel Friction:

Is the work ethic a carry-over from a past life?

We would see it as one of the most tenacious barriers you must scale.... We feel, however, that you should discharge your obligations made in good faith, whether or not the respondents are in the teaching or not. Whoever is beyond this, we see no real obligations. We would see you pursuing some form of relaxation every day, even though this may at first seem like work for you.... Just resting is all right, also. The penchant to "do" is part of Friction for the Ordinal Roles [that they would do well to let go of]. [27 March 1974]

The Ordinal Roles are Warrior, Slave/Server, and Artisan. Typically, they are not content to just relax and "be"; they feel they earn their worth by doing things that make a contribution to the greater good, even at their own expense. The Cardinal Roles, Sage, Priest, and King, have more self-worth inherent, are less willing to sacrifice their well being for the greater good, and have a greater natural ability to just be. The balanced approach is to both do and be in moderation and proportion, whatever one's Role.

As part of the preparation for living communally, the original Michaelian group members spent some long weekends together. Of course this brought up some issues:

We shared a discussion about a weekend full of Friction.

Friction such as this always forces one to objectively assess one's inner progress in a situation such as this one provided at the end of the week. One is also forced to see the contrast.... Then the progress can be seen with far more clarity than if one goes on in the same old rut. [03 April 1974]

One of the reasons for reflecting on one's level and type of Friction is to note the mile-marker, so to speak, of one's progress on a psychotherapeutic path. It was Good Work that they collectively discussed the Friction. There is a time to experience Friction, and a time to reflect on it, to extract as much progress as one can.

Speaking of Friction among group members, the next mention of the word was this:

Dick: What are we going to do with the group being so loose?

You can use this for Friction [and thereby grow toward Agape] or you can successfully eliminate it altogether by going to smaller sessions only. [14 April 1974]

The group continued to increase in size — and presumably looseness — for about another year, and this of course increased the Friction. The excessive Friction eventually caused the group to overheat. The large group was disbanded, and they went to the smaller, core group sessions for another three years. So far as we know, this seemed to be the happy medium, a Goldilocks zone of not too much and not too little Friction. The point here is to manage one's amount of Friction, as much as possible, so that it can be assimilated most efficiently.

Besides group interactions, family interactions can be another source of Friction, of course:

Mallory: Do I have bad karma with [my son]? Why do I have such clashes with him?

The Friction is caused by clashing Overleaves. [30 May 1974]

The Overleaves, except for the Neutral Overleaves, have Cardinal and Ordinal attributes, and they have Positive and Negative Poles. This oppositeness makes for clashes (if not dealt with in a psychotherapeutic way) or Friction (if dealt with in a psychotherapeutic way). Integrating the opposites in one's consciousness neutralizes the Friction. Or, to say this another way, one can use the Friction between polarized Overleaves and Poles of Overleaves to grow out of one's narrow identity. Refer to the chapter "Abrading Overleaves" for some elaboration.

It is one thing to experience Friction with others; it is another thing to experience Friction within oneself:

Ted: I have no personal goal at this time. What could be a meaningful one for me now?

Since it [the lack of a goal] is the primary point of Friction for you now, why not attempt the transition into growth? We would suggest for you [the] concentration [exercise]. [24 September 1974]

Depending on one's interpretation, one can be comfortable with the feeling of being stagnant, or one can be uncomfortable with it. In the latter case one can use the Friction as a catalyst for change. The recommendation here to do the concentration exercise is probably applicable to all students. This means focus on the problem, whatever it is, until you make a breakthrough; don't deny it or ignore it or repress it.

Sometimes it is useful to intentionally put oneself in a situation where Friction is inevitable. The spiritual school or commune is one such situation. The key to success in this situation is to manage the level of Friction — to keep it constructive rather than destructive considering the level of consciousness — aka psychological/spiritual maturity — of the people involved, and to apply the tools that effectively transmute Friction into progress:

This group engaged in a lengthy discussion of communal living, discipline of small children, the rights of teenagers, and the problem of domestic animals. We then asked the Teacher for a comment.

The whole purpose of bringing you together communally was not to present you with insurmountable situations and more Friction than you can handle. The purpose instead was to bring you together in the Work. The most startling advantage of all would not be apparent until you were well into the venture and had some experience in dealing with a lack of alienation.... Students must learn to realistically look at the amount of Friction caused by their reactions... Students in a communal situation must learn that, if the responsibility for the Friction becomes communal, it will not be allowed to violate the inner spaces. We have no quarrel with firm, loving disciplinary measures issued by the most competent student [toward the less competent]. This would eliminate much of the Friction. Looking at the Overleaves should be extensively used in determining who would be most effective in the various Friction-fraught areas... [12 February 1975]

Presumably, in a commune, there will be advanced Students who can help the less advanced students transmute their Friction better than they would if they were on their own. From other passages, we know that to "eliminate" Friction is not to deny or repress or avoid it, but to be transformed by it. It would be a mistake to believe that living in a commune, even with other Students of the Michaelian teachings, results in less Friction.

There are situations where Friction is advantageous because of its potential byproducts. This is particularly true in communes where the participants are consciously engaged in learning from Friction:

It has been our experience that the most significant progress in the Work is always made by groups of dedicated committed students, together working toward the goal of Agape. This can only be done in any steady sense in a communal setting, in that there must be continuity, and there must be Overleaves that are incompatible for the Work to be continuous. Most in life choose to live with only those other souls whose Overleaves complement their own. [Dimensions! April 1975]

Creating a Frictionless commune will not help anyone's growth. It is the Friction that produces the shocks for growth. Jumping from one well-feathered nest into another produces no Friction. ... Exclusivity for the sole purpose of avoiding Friction is Bad Work and should not be sanctioned, especially by advanced Students.... None of you is unable to combat this "bullshit" should you choose to do so. Excluding a source of valuable Friction is just another excuse, the same as looking for the ideal land package that will gratify all the Instinctive Centers involved. [15 April 1975]

The above is the most explicit statement in the transcriptions of the role and use of Friction. To be dismissive of Friction as “bullshit” is simply not the right attitude for a student of the Michaelian teachings to take. To maintain “exclusivity” — separation of self from sources of catalytic Friction — is simply not Good Work. The student should take advantage of the opportunities that the universe provides, rather than avoid or deny them. My stipulation is that if the value of Friction for spiritual growth is a one-sided understanding between two people, it can still work, but it helps enormously if both parties are aware of the value and use of Friction.

The Philosophy of Friction

A brief review is appropriate here if the reader is to understand Friction in the context of other aspects of the Michaelian teachings. Both the Gurdjieff and Michaelian teachings are concerned with growth or development. This is said to consist of seven stages, three lower/Ordinal–Personality/psychotherapeutic stages, a middle/Neutral/composite stage, and three higher/Cardinal–Essence/spiritual-growth stages. Progress is made by integrating life experiences, which are often composed of Ordinal and Cardinal halves that when completed combine to form a Monad, a whole experience. Progress in the Ordinal stages is generally driven by discomfort with the current situation, so Friction is an appropriate term here. To use a common metaphor, one might say that in the Ordinal stages, the “stick” that drives progress is the norm. In the Cardinal stages, the “carrot” is the normal impetus to progress. The term Friction does not seem to apply so well to the carrot, but still there is a discomfort with the status quo. Both negative/Ordinal stick and positive/Cardinal carrot are catalyst for progress.

According to Gurdjieff, Friction is the “struggle” between yes (Cardinal) and no (Ordinal) in one’s sub-personalities, and the resolution of that struggle results in personal and spiritual growth. This is just one type of Friction, the internal type, but it makes Friction a subset of the concept of Monads in the Michaels’ cosmology. There is a lengthy chapter “Monads” but briefly, Monads are whole experiences that consist of Cardinal and Ordinal halves that are experienced separately. Some examples are: rich and poor, healthy and sick, strong and weak, smart and stupid. In Monads, when one has fully experienced both the Cardinal and Ordinal halves of the Monad, then the Monad is said to be complete, and thereby one’s consciousness is raised to the next higher level in a septenary of progression; one has learned another piece of all that life has to teach. Likewise, when a person resolves their internal Friction by getting above and beyond the struggle between competing sub-personalities, then they grow psychologically and spiritually.

There are two poles on the psychotherapeutic/spiritual path. At both poles there is no Friction. The Ordinal pole is when one is completely content to remain with the status quo and has not even started to progress on the path. This is the natural abode of Mechanical Man, ‘asleep at the wheel’ so to speak. The Cardinal pole is at the end of a very long process of vigilance in regard to Friction (and other catalyst for progress), when one sees and accepts reality exactly as it is without getting perturbed; in other words, when one has become Balanced Man, fully awake and aware. These two poles are comparable to the Negative and Positive Poles of the Goal of Stagnation, namely, –Inertia and +Suspension. One can also find a meaningful resonance with the Negative and Positive Poles of the Observation Mode, –Surveillance and +Clarity.

Whereas Gurdjieff said the immortal soul is created by struggle and work — Friction — the Michaels have a different view. They say each of us already has an immortal soul. Personality is said to be the Ordinal, mortal, pole of the human Monad, and Essence is said to be the Cardinal, immortal, pole of the human Monad. Unlike what Gurdjieff taught, Michael teaches that we therefore do not need to create the soul via work on self, but Essence can be developed by this work, the spiritual path. In the three Ordinal stages of the seven-stage process, Personality is developed by this work, and this is herein termed the psychotherapeutic path. Michael agrees with Gurdjieff that there are decisions and choices involved on both the psychotherapeutic and spiritual paths if we are to realize and actualize this alleged fact that the soul exists. Michael repurposed the word and the concept significantly.

There is the Friction that involves psychotherapeutics — development of the Personality component of the human Monad — and there is the catalyst that leads to spiritual growth — development of the Essence component of the human Monad. Friction is between the competing parts of the Personality or the Personality versus the environment, and catalyst is between Personality and Essence or Essence versus the environment. By nature, both the Personality and the Essence are hedonistic. That is, there is an innate bias in both of them to avoid suffering and seek pleasure. The Personality is on a hedonistic psychotherapeutic path, and the Essence is on a hedonistic spiritual path. The common hedonistic goal ultimately brings them together. When the Personality or the Essence experiences Friction or catalyst, it decides by choice to find a way to mitigate the suffering and/or seek the pleasure.

There is a type of Friction that was not alluded to in any of the quoted material. That is the Friction that occurs between Personality and Essence. In order to understand Friction, one must understand the subject of Personality and Essence as Gurdjieff and the Michaels presented it. That is the subject of another lengthy chapter, but here is a brief explanation: The human being has a Personality (physical, Ordinal) component and an Essence (spiritual, Cardinal) component. Together these make up the Monad that is the human being. In some spiritual teachings, this is referred to as the lower self and the higher self respectively. In all of these teachings, neither side of the Monad is complete without the other, and the goal of the teaching is to bring the two together into a harmonious and unified whole. Ultimately, the two are not in conflict, but before this ultimate truth of their compatibility is realized and actualized in the human life, there is Friction between Personality and Essence. The original Michaelian group transcriptions describe at length the situation of Essence versus Personality; the goal of the spiritual path is Essence and Personality, such that there is no Friction between them; the Monad is then complete.

The terms, Mechanical Man and Balanced Man and Personality and Essence — from the Gurdjieffian teachings and adopted in the Michaelian teachings — are explained in other chapters. The terms, Ordinality and Cardinality and Monads — from the Michaelian teachings — are also explained in other chapters.

Summary and Conclusion

There are, of course, situations that one should just extract oneself from if possible because no learning can be extracted from them, or the costs outweigh the benefits, or there is actually nothing that can be done, internally or externally, to transmute the problem. Realms where it is generally expedient to transmute Friction are: family, work, lovers, and friends — unless there is serious abuse involved. However, if one perceives that one has issues within oneself, or has issues with other people, or has issues with the situation at hand, then the first thing is to simply recognize or re-frame the issue as an opportunity. If there is a little voice inside one that says the problem is not reality itself, the problem is one's perception or interpretation of reality, then it is time to dig down to the root of the problem. There are Gurdjieffian and Michaelian tools for resolving Friction, listed as follows:

- Photography. That is Michael's term for what Gurdjieff called self-observation. This tool is hardly mentioned in this chapter, but it has its own chapter. Briefly, one makes progress on the path just by noticing that one has a problem or an issue. Seeing it for what it is automatically stops the problem, or at least (temporarily) gets one out of subjective consciousness and into objective consciousness. This tool is also called disidentification, and there is a chapter about that.
- Choice. Here again, this tool is hardly mentioned in this chapter, but it has its own chapter. Briefly, the next step after one notices that there is an issue, is to make a choice to not deny or repress or avoid the issue, but to face it head on, figure it out, get to the root of it, and do something about it.
- Monadology. This tool applies knowledge of the underlying psychodynamics of a certain kind of Friction to its transformation. This is where the issue consists of Cardinal and Ordinal phenomena, such as abrading Overleaves, or the projection of unresolved internal issues onto others. In this instance, the halves of the Monad can be reconciled and progress can be made by collapsing the polarity, otherwise known as integrating the source of the Friction. The subject of Monads has its own chapter.
- Agape. This is said to be the ultimate goal of the Michaelian teachings. It consists of giving up attachment to the differences. Instead, arrive at and maintain unconditional regard for everything. There is of course a chapter on this subject. You should just “kiss and make up” with whatever “pisses you off.”

FORGETTING AND REMEMBERING

This chapter is the product of a search for the words “forgetting” and “remembering” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) This chapter is not as trivial as the title might suggest to you, considering that the concept has implications that go far beyond the psychological, into the realms of the philosophical and spiritual and theological.

The word “template” is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Definition of Forgetting and Remembering

So what is meant by template? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Forgetting and Remembering per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are [not] presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

Concluding Comments on Forgetting and Remembering

Hindu teaching about Brahman forgetting itself = creation of the universe.

⑥ FORGIVENESS

This chapter is the product of a search for the word forgive and its derivatives and synonyms in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) issues of forgiveness are unavoidable; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

The word forgiveness is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

It might be a little surprising how often this word forgiveness shows up in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, considering that it has not appeared very many times in subsequent channeling sessions that we have record of. Precisely because it covers a subject that might otherwise have been ignored and forgotten, I regard it as useful and valuable to include this chapter, as with numerous other similar chapters on obscure topics in this Study Papers book. Doing so makes our understanding of the Michaelian teachings richer and more complete.

Basically and briefly, the Michaels informed the original Michaelian group members that forgiveness is a personal and social convention, invented by the Personality self to absolve feelings of guilt, or to excuse perceived offensive conduct by others. However, the Essence has quite a different view of right and wrong and what to do about it.

Definition of Forgiveness

So what is meant by forgiveness? The following definition and description was found on the internet:

What Is Forgiveness?

Psychologists generally define forgiveness as a conscious, deliberate decision to release feelings of resentment or vengeance toward a person or group who has harmed you, regardless of whether they actually deserve your forgiveness.

Just as important as defining what forgiveness is, though, is understanding what forgiveness is not. Experts who study or teach forgiveness make clear that when you forgive, you do not gloss over or deny the seriousness of an offense against you. Forgiveness does not mean forgetting, nor does it mean condoning or excusing offenses. Though forgiveness can help repair a damaged relationship, it doesn't obligate you to reconcile with the person who harmed you, or release them from legal accountability.

Instead, forgiveness brings the forgiver peace of mind and frees him or her from corrosive anger. While there is some debate over whether true forgiveness requires positive feelings toward the offender, experts agree that it at least involves letting go of deeply held negative feelings. In that way, it empowers you to recognize the pain you suffered without letting that pain define you, enabling you to heal and move on with your life.

While early research focused on forgiveness of others by individuals, new areas of research are starting to examine the benefits of group forgiveness and self-forgiveness.

[><https://greatergood.berkeley.edu/topic/forgiveness/definition>< — retrieved 12 November 2022]

This description is all well and good regarding the Personality level of the human experience, but, as we will see in the next section, the Michaels presented a rather different perspective regarding “forgiveness” at the Essence level as it relates to human experience.

Forgiveness per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels’ answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The first mention of forgiveness in the original Michaelian group transcriptions is found toward the end of a long series of Q&A exchanges about Karma: What creates it and what are we to do about it? (Refer to the chapter “Karma” for the whole story.)

Richard: Does Essence force False Personality to work off Karma?

No. It is merely that the Essence acknowledges the debt. Of course, most Karmic Ribbons are incurred by False Personality. Remember now, all of you, that all of the myriad little interpersonal crises you weather in a given lifetime are not [Karmic] Ribbons.

What makes a Karmic Ribbon?

Deliberate action: positive or negative, of course.

Ray: What is the criteria whether a Ribbon is formed or not?

If you communicated all of your expectations, the other soul understood all the options and took action on that basis, then a [positive?] Ribbon probably [doesn’t?] exists.

The two words in separate brackets are my attempts to make sense of this statement: strike out one or the other. Proper communication and appropriate response should not result in a negative Karmic Ribbon, but I can see how it could result in a positive Karmic Ribbon. Positive and negative Karma are discussed further on.

Most interpersonal crises revolve around unfulfilled expectations and do not involve Karma of a substantial sort. Neglect of very young children constitutes Karma; breaking engagements does not.

Refer to the chapter “Expectations” for more discussion of that subject. Basically and briefly, if you have no expectations of others about how they supposedly “should” behave toward you, then you avoid hurt feelings or other negative reactions. In that case, there is no need for ‘forgiveness’ or anything like that.

We wish to clarify this further in a broader sort for everyone’s benefit.

Hostile actions such as murder, armed robbery, kidnapping, abandonment, embezzlement of large sums of money, leaving other souls destitute, all incur debts that must be paid. Humanitarian acts, great courage in the face of overwhelming adversity, acts of public altruism, all incur Karma of a positive sort. This can be as simple as a man helping another to start a small business to a millionaire giving his entire fortune to a research organization. Fits of pique do not incur Karma. You can yell and scream yourself blue in the face and not incur Karma. You can have the nastiest temper on the planet and still not incur Karma, unless you hurt someone in your rages. Emotional pain is self-inflicted and incurs no Karma.

Not everyone is mature enough to realize that “sticks and stones may break my bones but words can never hurt me”, so they feel hurt when negativity it is directed at them. Sometimes the right thing to do, after you get over your nasty temper tantrum, is apologize, for the sake of social harmony, closing the loop of “clearing the air”. An apology does not include asking for forgiveness; it is up to the other person to offer that in response to the apology, if it is a part of their belief and value and behavior system to do so.

Cheryl: Do you need to acknowledge all Karma before you can become conscious?

That is valid....

Nichols: I would like to ask what “acknowledgment” means in Cheryl’s comment. Does acknowledgment have to be in life?

Cynthia: It [acknowledgment] is the teachings of Jesus, complete forgiveness, accepting it [forgiveness] even if you do not know what for.

You must somehow petition for this [acknowledgment]; otherwise, there is no communication.

After all that run-up, we now get to the word “forgiveness”. As this chapter progresses, we will see more indications that, obviously, people have different ideas about what misbehavior is, about what acknowledgment is, and about what forgiveness means. They might be religious or they might be secular, so we must take account of that in our “communications” with them. Offering forgiveness and accepting forgiveness might or might not be appropriate with any specific person regarding any specific situation.

By “petition”, in the context of the mention of Jesus, I take this to refer to Biblical statements along the lines of “Confess your sins one to another” and other statements about asking and giving and receiving forgiveness: refer to ><https://www.openbible.info/topics/forgiveness>< for many Biblical quotations on the subject.

Nichols: If I have a falling out with someone, and can see and can accept the reality and forgive him but he does not accept me, is there Karma still there?

Then the communication has been incomplete and you may still find yourself facing the business end of a shotgun. One needs only to be aware that there is a Ribbon, but for full understanding and acknowledgment, both must know. [20 February 1974]

Refer to the chapters “Karma” and “Communication” for more complete discussions of those subjects. Basically and briefly, stupid, ignorant, foolish incarnate Fragments make mistakes. In terms of human legal systems, there are “crimes” and there are “misdemeanors”: Karma is like a crime and an “interpersonal crisis” and a “falling out” are like misdemeanors. The incarnate Personality selves do well to “forgive and forget” ‘misdemeanors’ if they can, by means of “acknowledgment” and by means of “communication”. However, resolving Karmic ‘crimes’ must be handled at a higher level, by the Essence selves; the Essence self is not as limited by stupidity and ignorance and foolishness as the Personality self is.

The discussion about Karma continued in another session later that month, and again the notion of forgiveness was a part of the conversation:

Dick: Why not wait until you are on the Astral level to study it [Karma] objectively? Why study while on the subjective, life level? If you are dispassionate, you are in no position to do anything. Why start while you’re here?

Many souls choose this as a method of accelerating.

Alice: We have to experience living while on the Physical Plane, don’t we?

That is valid. During the Astral [Plane] interval [between incarnations], the study is retrospective and unchangeable. Here [on the Physical Plane] you have the opportunity to change right up until the last breath is drawn [at the time of death].

Dick: The concept smacks of Christian forgiveness of sins. It has the same flavor.

There must be a perception behind the words. However, the words have been muttered many times in meaningless context because they were literally ‘blowing in the wind’ and addressed to forces completely detached and unable to even answer. In order to have this concept [of forgiveness] made valid, the situation must be apprehended, and the plea addressed to the correct source. [27 February 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Acceleration” for more about that subject. Even though the Personality self cannot usually resolve Karmic ‘crimes’ because it is not evolved enough to do so, it facilitates the process of spiritual growth for the Personality self to know about and acknowledge the difference between ‘crimes’ that it cannot resolve on its own and ‘misdemeanors’ that it can resolve on its own. Basically and briefly, ‘crimes’ and ‘misdemeanors’ are to be resolved at the level where they are truly and fully “perceived”, “apprehended”, and “acknowledged”, whether by the Personality self or by the Essence self.

Richard: My “work ethic” gets in my way. My boss was supposed to be there in the afternoon to receive a call, but had gone sailing. I got “revenge” by calling him that evening at 9:00.

Cynthia: That’s hard on the Agape.

We would speak of Agape in this context, thanks to Cynthia. Agape sometimes means only not appointing yourself as judge and jury. Agape also always means forgetting. Notice that we did not say “forgive”; this is beyond you and is far too abstract. We said “forget”, and this means quite literally “the end”. It does not mean crawling away to lick your wounds and to plan a counter-attack; it means forgetting once and for all. The concept of Agape does not mean [a required] proximity [to the other person]. In practice, it often can be more easily applied when one moves away from the immediate cause of the hostility. [17 April 1974]

This is probably the key passage in this chapter on the subject of “forgiveness”, and the key is to “not appoint yourself as judge and jury” about what other people do (or about what yourself does). When you perceive yourself as having been “wronged” (or yourself as having done wrong), just forget about it.

Sometimes it helps to remove yourself from the proximity of the wrongdoer. Refer to the chapter “Agape” for more discussion of that topic. Basically and briefly, true Agape does not even perceive that an infraction has occurred, let alone that it needs to be “forgiven”. For those of us who have not achieved perfect Agape, then forgiveness procedures (acknowledgment, communication) as described previously often makes sense, when done with sincerity and sensitivity.

Does it help to forgive those who owe us [Karma]?

Forgiveness is a gratuitous, empty term. Forget, yes, that is valid. Remember, then look at it, and then forget it.

Does this help in having others forget the debts? This attitude would encourage those to forget their debts.

Sometimes it does, especially if they are also in contact with a teaching or in a sufficient space to hear the words. [30 May 1974]

The function of Karma is to learn lessons. If the lesson of a particular Karmic event can actually be learned without the repayment of the debt, then so much the better. It might be possible for spiritually mature people to “forgive and forget” Karma during incarnation, but my suggestion is that that does not necessarily mean that the Karmic Ribbon is burned; the means of repayment, or forgiveness, is for two Fragments between lifetimes to determine and negotiate.

I guess that pretty much put to rest the discussion of forgiveness, because the next mention of forgiveness came two and a half years later:

We talked about “forgiveness” ...

This is a very transcendental notion, of course, and involves negating the Physical Plane. Of course, if the Essence forgives, then the “hatchet” is buried because the Essence does not feel the transition between the planes as death.

In a limited sense, it is possible to function on the Physical Plane in Essence. Survival is the goal of the Personality and this is directly opposed to the goal of the Essence, which is ecstasy. The Personality cannot forgive, because in doing so, it exposes its Achilles heel to anti-survival thrusts. For instance, hostility must be met with the back to the wall if survival is to be assured. The other, especially if he be more powerful, must be the first to concede. Then a certain pseudo forgiveness takes place. [21 November 1976]

On the Physical Plane, where one of the games is called “survival of the fittest” (or strongest), it is not safe to “forgive and forget” someone who has seriously wronged you and who is not inclined to back down or change. It is healthy to be wary of, and/or defend yourself against, and/or remove yourself from the vicinity of, harmful, hurtful people. This includes the avoidance of people who are spiritually, intellectually, and emotionally abusive, not just those who are physically abusive. Don’t kid yourself that you the Personality self are such a spiritual giant that you can tolerate severe mistreatment of any kind by a sociopath. In terms of the transcendental meaning of the word forgiveness, the Essence self can do it but the Personality self cannot; refer to the chapter “Essence and Personality”. The Personality self can only do “pseudo forgiveness” toward a repentant abuser.

And then another year went by before the subject of forgiveness surfaced again:

Dick would like a comment on his observation of himself finding it more difficult to forgive people having more powerful Overleaves than his own.

The absolving oneself of all guilt is, of course, the first step toward understanding the ability of those in Exalted Overleaves to absolve others of the responsibility that they themselves can then willingly shoulder. This concept is no different than that espoused by Werner Erhard, only it is expressed in religious terminology and, therefore by definition, becomes obscure and difficult to absorb; or, at least, one gets the illusion of difficulty from the semantic problems. Forgiveness is really no more than the utter willingness to accept responsibility for one’s own life, and this is why it is so difficult for those in Ordinal Roles when their own existences seem so pale beside the more Exalted Roles. In truth, the Exalted Roles are more able to take the responsibility. Of course, they are. It is easy to take responsibility in the Power Mode, and a King finds it easy to excuse the behavior of a Slave. However, it is far from impossible for those in Ordinal Roles to go through the process of learning to take responsibility for their wins as well as their losses. [03 September 1977]

Refer to the chapter “EST” for more about Werner Erhard. Refer to the chapter “Guilt” for more discussion of the relationship of the concept of forgiveness to the concept of guilt. Basically and briefly, we see that the view of those subjects as communicated by the Michaels differs from the typical view of humans. “Absolving” and “excusing” oneself and others for the “bad” things they do is from Personality; the Essence self has a different approach, namely that it “accepts responsibility” for what the Personality self does, and fixes things. The Personality self should also learn to accept responsibility for its actions, and give others the room to accept responsibility for their actions. Even if the Personality self does not know how to make amends, as the Essence does, it can still “pseudo-forgive and forget”. We come into every lifetime as an “idiot” about something, and presumably we learn during the lifetime to not be an idiot about that thing. “Responsibility” means that the older less-idiot self makes amends for the younger more-idiot self. This process of making amends includes the Essence self, which is on its own learning path and schedule, taking responsibility for the idiocy that transcends lifetimes.

Concluding Comments on Forgiveness

In all human transactions, there is the Personality self and there is the Essence self. When you the Personality self feel in retrospect that you have wronged another person and regret it, there is value in taking personal responsibility, and saying to the other person words to the effect, “Oops. My bad. I apologize. Please forgive me. Let’s all hope that I have learned my lesson and won’t do that again.” Where minor infractions are born of normal human stupidity and ignorance and foolishness, this procedure, if heartfelt and sincere, typically facilitates social harmony, and the offender and the offeree can get on with their lives. However, if your actions are so egregious that they have actually incurred Karma, and you later come to see the error of your ways, then you should approach the person and apologize and ask what you can do to make amends to the satisfaction of the other Personality self. The Essence self has a different standard of right and wrong and a different procedure for achieving justice, so there might still be a Karmic payback in another lifetime, negotiated by Fragments on the Astral Plane.

Contrariwise, when you the Personality self feel that another person has wronged you with some minor infraction, then, for the sake of your own mental health, it is Good Work if you can rise above your expectation and perception of right and wrong, and align the Personality self with the Essence self in order to “forgive and forget”. In the case that the other person has committed a Karmic offense against you, the Personality self should still do the best it can to neutralize the trauma during the lifetime, and let the wheels of Karma work out the remainder during another lifetime.

④ FORMATORY

This chapter is the product of a search for the word formatory in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the MT that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place.

The word Formatory appears about half a dozen times in the original Michaelian group transcriptions. One could guess what it probably means by its usage in the context in which it is used, but it is never actually defined in the transcriptions. As it turns out, it did not need to be defined because this is a term and concept in the original Michaelian group — one among many — that was adopted and adapted from the Gurdjieffian teaching, one of the spiritual teachings that some of the original Michaelian group founding members were familiar with. For an introduction to the general subject of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the involvement of founding original Michaelian group members with it, refer to the chapter “Gurdjieff, Ouspensky, Collin, Burton”. The term has a particular meaning apart from the common vernacular, and because of this specific meaning in the context of the Gurdjieffian teachings and the Michaelian teachings, it is on the jargon list, and therefore capitalized.

Even though the Michaels used the term Formatory on a few occasions during the original Michaelian group, Yarbrow did not mention [verify] it in her book about the original Michaelian group, Messages from Michael, perhaps because, near as I can tell, Yarbrow was not familiar with the Gurdjieffian teachings. The Michaels have not used it in subsequent groups so far as I have been able to determine, perhaps because subsequent groups have not been familiar with Gurdjieffian teachings. Therefore, the term, and even the concept referred to by the term, has not become common knowledge in the Michaelian teachings community subsequent to the original Michaelian group. Nevertheless, I believe Gurdjieff’s psychological insights are worth discussing, the subject of Formatory being one of them. I also believe that it is worthwhile to make the historical record of the original Michaelian group reasonably complete.

In this brief chapter, we will first get a definition from Gurdjieff, and then we will take a look at the original Michaelian group transcriptions.

Formatory per Gurdjieff

Following is the best definition that I found with an internet search, apparently taken from a lecture given by Gurdjieff at his school near Paris:

More About Formatory Apparatus

Prieuré, January 29, 1923

I have understood from conversations that people have a wrong idea about one of the centers, and this wrong idea creates many difficulties.

It is about the thinking center, that is, our formatory apparatus. All the stimuli coming from the centers are transmitted to the formatory apparatus, and all the perceptions of centers also are manifested through the formatory apparatus. It is not a center but an apparatus. It is connected with all the centers. In their turn, centers are connected with one another, but these connections are of a special kind. There is a certain degree of subjectivity, a measure of the strength of associations, which determines the possibility of intercommunication between centers. If we take vibrations between 10 and 10,000, then within this range there are many gradations divided into the definite degrees of strength of associations required for each center. Only associations of a certain strength in one center evoke corresponding associations in another; only then can a stimulus be given to corresponding connections in another center....

The best way for me to illustrate the formatory apparatus is by an analogy. It is an office with a typist. Every incoming paper comes to her, every client who comes in addresses himself to her. She replies to everything. The answers she gives are qualified by the fact that, in herself, she is only an employee, she does not know anything. But she has instructions, books, files and dictionaries on the shelves. If she has the wherewithal to look up some particular information she does so and replies accordingly; if she hasn't, she does not answer....
[><https://austingurdjieffsociety.weebly.com/more-about-formatory.html>< — retrieved 19 June 2022]

The above is an extraction from a lengthy webpage. Briefly, the formatory apparatus distorts and/or filters communication between Centers, such that it is difficult for a person to have a complete understanding of, an objective view of, and appropriate response to, internal and external phenomena. One of the stated goals of the Gurdjieffian teachings was to help students grow beyond subjective consciousness to objective consciousness.

Formatory per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they appear in the transcriptions. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

The term first appeared in an early original Michaelian group session, and it was used in the context of the teaching of the leader of the local Gurdjieff group, namely Robert Burton:

Dick: Four factors put me out of Robert's group: Miles Barth, Linda Kaplan, and Melanie McDonald, and this exercise of not using "very, really, a lot." I notice that Michael uses these words — not often, but they did use "very" tonight. I'd like a comment on that. Formatory language is really another subject.

Linda and Melanie are Baby Souls; Miles is a Mature Soul, Mid-Cycle.

We do not object to expressions of enthusiasm when enthusiasm is genuine. It is when you feel compelled to exclaim that it becomes "formatory" and of the "waking sleep". The expression "far out" can be valid or it can be inane. [20 October 1973]

The term "waking sleep" is also from Gurdjieff; refer to the chapter "Awakening from Sleep" for the whole story about that metaphor. The point of this comment from the Michaels is that their students should become conscious enough to use their speech or choice of words and expressions accurately and sincerely, rather than remain so unconscious that their choice of expressions is programmed or habitual or artificially stylized according to some cultural norm or expectation. The younger the soul, the more likely the person is to follow the cultural norm. The Michaels often enjoined the original Michaelian group members, typically older souls, to be awake and self-aware enough to shed their acculturation; refer to the chapter "Imprinting".

A few days later the subject came up again:

One concerns formatory speech and pertains to a question earlier asked [in the 20 October session]. We hear more formatory speech in response to verbalized insights than at any other time, especially those voiced by Dick and Sarah. We do not say that you should not comment on insights, but give some thought to understanding before exclaiming, "Wow, far out." The exercise the man Robert [Burton] imposed on his teaching is not desirable because it is not individualized, but the idea is a good one and we are proposing that similar ones be devised. [01 November 1973]

In this instance, "formatory speech" refers to thoughtless verbalizations or inane and mindless expressions.

The final occurrence of the term appeared a few months later:

I am wondering about Phyllis being in the Moving Part of Intellectual Center. That [Intellectual] is the formatory Center. It seems she is picking around the periphery of the subject. Could Michael comment on the Centers and how Moving Center is romanticized, and how the cosmic is romanticized?

Again, that [Gurdjieffian] system does not probe deep enough; it scratches the surface. Many times to probe deeply would shatter the system altogether, and many high physical teachers are guilty of this. Yes, your interpretation of the lady Phyllis's enTrapment is essentially correct. We will bring the more concise definition to you. [27 March 1974]

Referring to the chapter "Centering Traps" for an explanation of that phenomenon. Briefly, one of the stated goals of both the Gurdjieff and Michaelian teachings is to not be "trapped" in the Part of a Center, but to express each Center purely and simply. Being Trapped in a Part of a Center is fostered by the so-called "formatory apparatus", which allegedly distorts and/or filters communication between Centers.

There is another passage that discusses formatory language but that does not use that term:

We will now give response words we would like to see Photographed in yourselves and they are: "never", "forever", and "always." These irritate us far more than "very", "a lot", et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. Yes, it would be valuable for a while to Photograph these in each other. We will tell you when you have become Identified with the exercise, when it has become Mechanical. It would be interesting to tabulate all those situations to which you apply these absolutes. There are truly few conditions, and most of them are cosmic, to which these do apply. [21 December 1974]

Refer to the chapters "Photography", "Identification", and "Mechanical Man".

The point the Michaels are making is that it is Good Work to be exacting and accurate in one's use of words. The challenge is to become self-aware enough to notice when we are not being self-aware enough about our use of language. To assist our increasing self-awareness, other people can offer Photographs of our lack of self-awareness, or Mechanicality, in our abuse of language.

Concluding Comments on Formatory

It looks to me as if "formatory apparatus" is the Gurdjieffian term that is somewhat like the Tape Loops mentioned in the original Michaelian group; refer to the chapter "Bio-computer: its Programs and Tapes".

It also looks to me as if the "formatory apparatus" might be referring to the so-called "reticular activating system" of modern brain science:

The reticular formation is a set of interconnected nuclei that are located throughout the brainstem.... Neurons of the reticular formation, particularly those of the ascending reticular activating system, play a crucial role in maintaining behavioral arousal and consciousness. The overall functions of the reticular formation are modulatory and premotor, involving somatic motor control, cardiovascular control, pain modulation, sleep and consciousness, and habituation.... The reticular formation is essential for governing some of the basic functions of higher organisms and is one of the phylogenetically oldest portions of the brain.

[>https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Reticular_formation< — retrieved 23 September 2022]

The point to be made here is that so many of our psychological and spiritual problems as human beings can be attributed to the biological evolution of the physical organism, including brain structures. The pathway starts with the earliest vertebrates, and extends through fish through amphibians through reptiles through mammals through primates to humans. This path of evolution provides a heavy 'baggage' that it is extraordinarily difficult to surmount and transcend. Sometimes it seems to me as if almost the entirety of our difficulties on our spiritual paths can be attributed to the suffocating encumbrance of our animal heritage. But then again, the reason for reincarnation is to fully experience this phase of the story arc of evolution back to the Tao. This process will inevitably play out whether or not we consciously and intentionally participate in bypassing the "formatory apparatus", aka "reticular activating system", on a psychotherapeutic and/or spiritual path.

FUN — HUMOR — LAUGHTER — LEVITY— PLAY

This chapter is the product of a search for the word “fun” and “play” in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This phenomenon does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) Seriousness issues are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality.

The words expressing the concept are not capitalized in this chapter and/or other chapters of this Study Papers book because they have no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon concept that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular.

Basically and briefly, the Michaels recommended to the original Michaelian group members that they

Definition of Fun

So what is meant by fun? The online Merriam Webster dictionary definition is:

Fun per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. This is [not] a subject that would benefit by division into subcategories, as some subjects do. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given, even though this is not a subject where there was a development or evolution of a specific revelation of a facet of the Michaelian teachings, as was often the case with the original Michaelian group. As is my custom, I often provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words in the Michaels' answers are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer.

How does Bacchus, the god of wine, fit into Eleusinian mysteries?

It has been said by us before that rituals unify and bring together many who otherwise would not be able to participate. The same goes for festivals. They provide an excellent opportunity to play the fool in a controlled, safe environment, which is necessary for all souls in Ordinal Goals and Roles. Sages and Priests normally need no special invitations to be hams, but the same is not true for many Artisans and Warriors. Many Artisans are essentially nonverbal, except for those few who are like you, Dick, Intellectually Centered. Warriors fear the loss of respect that accompanies the loss of dignity. Timid souls often blossom during festivals. This was known in the ancient times, more so than today. The Bacchanalian cults arose from the celebration of the harvest and were sponsored at first by Attic vintners. This was so much fun that the cults spread and took on additional significance. There is nothing dull about spiritual growth. The need is to become more joyous and expansive, not more somber and introverted. [10 January 1974]

There you go. In the first appearance of the word “fun” in the original Michaelian group transcriptions we are told that the spiritual path should not be onerous. In fact, I would say that fun can sometimes be a guide to what the higher self wants for the Personality self.

The Tahitian islands are consummately Spiritualistic (fun-loving). [22 January 1974]

The parenthetical explanatory comment about the Attitude of Spiritualist being fun-loving was inserted by the original transcription editor.

The dictates of this culture are severe and stern. We doubt that it is much fun for anyone. This is not necessarily true of the entire Physical Plane. Although the Physical Plane is by nature solid, ponderous and complex, you make it even more so by trying to analyze these behavior patterns in terms other than instinct. [21 December 1974]

Well, that search was not much fun; the word only appears thrice. If we take that as an indication of its importance in the Michaelian teachings, then fun would seem to be unimportant. However, there are other instances found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions where something like fun was intentionally sought, and was commended by the Michaels. For instance:

We also ohm'd in a circle and acted out a, "Don't you ever, ever, EVER, EVER let me catch you brushing that dog's teeth with my toothbrush ... "

As the group becomes more and more cohesive, many more sharing experiences may take place without the self-consciousness present in more multi-disciplined gatherings. This will create a unique atmosphere in which growth is almost certain to occur. [06 February 1974]

Play per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Let's see what insights a search for the word "play" bring to light.

Dick: The reason I could sit there peacefully was I didn't have to worry about food. I have provided for my own children. If Essence is Snow White and Red Riding Hood, we have to go into this dependency on Michael or whomever is going to take care of us. Otherwise, we have to scurry around to produce what we need. I would be happy to go back into that state; it's so lovely. Unless you become independent, you must forage for yourself. To go into Essence completely, there must be trust. As a child, there is no trust; there is knowing that you will be cared for. Something tells the child as he grows older, that this idyllic situation will end and it will be up to him to take care of himself.

The Roles in Essence provide the necessary food, clothing and shelter without the scurrying. This adult play can be financially rewarding. That is why we have told you that communal living is an upward step in spiritual evolution. This allows you to pursue the Role in Essence. There will be those who will provide the other necessities. [27 October 1973]

Levity per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

Joan: Are the plans made on the Astral Plane?

Of course. You have the option of not planning at all and making hasty, last minute choices, which is precisely what has happened to some souls with whom you are acquainted. Usually, toward the end of the Young Soul Cycle, the choices become better and the soul chooses to review the past with far more thoroughness and attempts to strive toward completion of the Monads. There is also much "just plain living" as there is on the Physical Plane. Just as you, as students, do not pursue the [spiritual] path twenty-four hours a day, so the Astral beings do not either. We have told you all before that there is levity on the Astral Plane and to be aware of this. This should give you some insight into some of the options there. [17 April 1974]

Dick: We've waited a year and a half for spontaneity, and there has been no activity.

The insight that the majority of the students are Apollonian-oriented is a valid one. There is great difficulty in planning ahead for diversion, but not for work. Does this suggest areas that need development? [10 July 1974]

Per >https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Apollonian_and_Dionysian<

In Greek mythology, Apollo and Dionysus are both sons of Zeus. Apollo, son of Leto, is the god of the sun, of rational thinking and order, and appeals to logic, prudence and purity and stands for reason. Dionysus, son of Semele, is the god of wine and dance, of irrationality and chaos, representing passion, emotions, and instincts."

In other words, Dionysian-oriented people know how to play and have fun. On a spiritual path, it is Good Work to have a balance of both. The original Michaelian group was too Apollonian for their own good.

... This levity comes in part from anxiety.... [06 February 1974]
Humor is a good tension-breaker.

Concluding Comments on Fun and Play

The desire for fun comes much more naturally to Sages than it does to any other Role. One might even say that their type of fun, whatever it may be, is their philosophical guiding light to beauty, truth, love, and energy. In other words, whatever they find to be fun leads to whatever is their enlightenment. Some say “follow your bliss” — probably said by a Priest — but Sages say “follow your fun”.

“The Sage is the Artisan exalted.” [late October 1973] As an Artisan myself, who tends to be rather serious by nature, I look up to Sages as sources of fun in the form of the dramatic arts.

GAMES, PSYCHOLOGICAL

This chapter is the product of a search for the word game in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 3) some interesting things were said about the subject; 4) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 5) The playing of games is unavoidable, they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality, so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of them.

The word game is not capitalized in this chapter or other chapters of this Study Papers book because it has no special meaning in the Michaelian teachings; it is not a Michaelian jargon word that needs a definition apart from its use in the common vernacular. However, as we will see in this chapter, the word game is applied to both positive and negative phenomena, hence +game and -game.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in the original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. Psychological components of the Michaelian teachings are usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. In this case, the word game has both a positive and a negative connotation. The negative connotation is amenable to psychotherapy. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the pop psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on various websites, including https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

Definition of Game

So what is meant by game? The online Merriam Webster online dictionary definition is: My usual go-to source Wikipedia has an article that provides a definition and a description and an explanation, as follows (underlined words are my emphasis):

Game per the Original Michaelian Group Transcriptions

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. These extracts are presented in the chronological order in which they were given. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments.

The first appearance of the word game occurred several months into the original Michaelian group sessions:

Alice: This is the game of life. I mean, you can go and sit on a mountain somewhere — many do and they don’t have any expectations — but they are not playing the game like we are. [02 October 1973]

Each Role tends to prefer one or another metaphor for what life is all about. For instance, Scholars tend to see life as a school and Sages tend to see life as a theatrical play. Artisans tend to see life as an intellectual puzzle: they try to figure out how it works so that they can play the game with more skill. It so happens that Alice was an Artisan, and she was cognizant of the fact that different people play different kinds of games, and this fact often means that we experience discomfort and have misunderstandings with other people. The alternative lifestyle to playing this interactive game is isolation, and the Michaels often recommend against that lifestyle; refer to the chapter “Solitude, Solitary, Isolation, Seclusion”. One function of the Michaelian teaching is to make students more aware of this awkward fact, that people play different games, so that they can play their own game of life with more smarts.

Whereas the previous original Michaelian group passage used with word game with a positive connotation (+game), the word can also be used with a negative connotation, –game). In the following Q&A exchanges, the particular situation under discussion had to do with the sale of a property, and we all know how money can potentially lead to a –game called salesmanship:

Alice: He said that the owner did not wish it said.

You do not wish to destroy loyalty gained honestly through Essence by shady dealings through False Personality. We wish this Teaching to remain scrupulously honest.

Dick: We have wolves, too. This is what we want to stop using.

The moment you stoop to this type of dealing, you once again become identified with this game. The man Miles is heavily identified with this game. There is truth in the concept that we can obtain for you what you need. This man does not accept this completely and feels that the game of wits is still important. [27 October 1973]

Dishonesty is one of the manifestations of a person playing a –game; refer to chapters “Honesty and Dishonesty” and “Machinations” and “Manipulation”. Also refer to the chapter “Identification”, where there is further discussion of the phenomenon where a person loses their integrity in some illegitimate belief system, value system, or behavior system –game.

The next mention of game swings back to the positive connotation of the word:

Ray: Two weeks ago, Michael suggested further contact with meditation. I can't concentrate and I need more advice on this.

Meditation is the clearing of the mind of trivia, and allowing the free flow. Transcendental Meditation provides good groundwork for those new to the enlightenment game. The more exalted forms, such as that taught by Chögyam Trungpa, requires much preparation, and may take years to perfect. Also, many meditate for all of their lives and achieve nothing. To be effective, meditation must prepare one for activity, not rest.

The journey to enlightenment itself can be thought of as a game to be learned and played with increasing expertise.

The next mention of game swings back to the negative connotation of the word:

Edgar: If I try the stock market, could I make money without working so hard?

It is like any other monetary game and depends on the whimsy of the economy and how astute a guesser you are. It would not relieve your financial anxiety; it would create a new anxiety-laden set of obstacles. [22 November 1973]

The question is, do you know how to play the monetary game better than the stock market or not. Perhaps you are better off if you can monetize an excellent skill in some soul-fulfilling business venture of your own, in which case it would be a +game. There is not nearly as much self-improvement in playing the stock market as there is in playing with more personal ways to make a living.

The pattern of swinging back and forth between –game and +game continues:

Evelyn: About three years ago, my sister-in-law's personality changed. It troubles her and she would like some help to understand this.

We have discussed this lady at length. Her primary difficulty should be resolved if she would trust the intuition. The change that occurred is nothing more serious than a late manifestation [of the Fourth Internal Monad]. She feels now very insecure. She was very secure in her old role, where everything was clearly defined. Now the edges are blurred. She does not like this, but it is, of course, preferable and is the initial opening of the door. Warriors find the [spiritual] “path” especially steep and rocky. All her old relationships were taken for granted. For the first time in her life, she was faced with the challenge of creating new relationships out of totally new material and with a new game with different rules. [29 November 1974]

Warriors are competitive by nature, and they like challenges, but they also tend to get themselves into a metaphorical ‘rut’. The way that they get out of the old habitual mode is when they are presented with an exciting new game with new rules.

The Michaels regard Karma as a game:

Mallory: I'd like to ask about Ralph, a man I was in Alex Horn's group with 5 years ago and I've know him for 10 [years]. I'm becoming shy about Soul Levels.

Because he perceives that those in the "work" are on to something, does this give you a clue? This man is a Fifth Level Mature Soul in Growth. He is a Skeptic, Emotionally Centered Scholar. He is mostly Lunar, some Mercurial. The conflict is Karmic; they have played this game before. Ralph once left the Jesuit order in order to pursue her [Mallory].

Refer to the chapter "Karma" for more discussion about that instructive form of a game.

Betty: I would like to ask about the "witch hunt" at work. The nurses are dissatisfied with the MD's treatment of patients. The doctors sometimes won't come in the middle of the night to care for a patient. What is the purpose of their doing this and talking so awful? I can't separate.

This [Michaelian] teaching should enable you to dissociate from this destructive life game; it is played all over.

Gene: The game is, "I'm right and you're wrong."

The game is also: I am so well and you are so sick.

Betty: I remain aloof, but it affects me.

If you do not dissociate, you run the risk of becoming a leading player — and a losing one at that. [03 February 1974]

That might be an allusion to the famous pop-psychology book Games People Play by Eric Berne, which was published in 1964, and which described many "mind games" similar to the two mentioned above:

In the first half of the book, Berne introduces his theory of transactional analysis as a way of interpreting social interactions. He proposes that individuals encompass three roles or ego states, known as the Parent [Moving Center], the Adult [Intellectual Center], and the Child [Emotional Center], which they switch between. He postulates that while Adult to Adult interactions are largely healthy, dysfunctional interactions can arise when people take on mismatched roles such as Parent and Child or Child and Adult.

The second half of the book catalogs a series of "mind games" identified by Berne, in which people interact through a patterned and predictable series of "transactions" based on these mismatched roles. He states that although these interactions may seem plausible, they are actually a way to conceal hidden motivations under scripted interactions with a predefined outcome. The book uses casual, often humorous phrases such as "See What You Made Me Do", "Why Don't You — Yes But", and "Ain't It Awful" as a way of briefly describing each game. Berne describes the "winner" of these mind games as the person that returns to the Adult ego-state first. [https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Games_People_Play_\(book\))< — retrieved 13 May 2023]

The reason for my speculation above is that the Michaels referred to Berne's so-called "Transactional Analysis" with this comment:

The man Eric Berne knew this when he called the Intellectual Center "the adult," the Moving Center "the parent" and the Emotional Center "the child". [12 December 1976]

The Gurdjieffian and Michaelian teachings have much to say about responding to others from the appropriate Center for the situation, such as: you should not be intellectual ('Adult') with a person who is having an emotional meltdown ('Child'). If people interact with each other through different Centers, then the transactions devolve into unhealthy –games.

More is said about unhealthy –games in the next appearance of the word:

Mallory: More on "machinations," please.

Growth is a rocky Goal, and causes the soul to go through some elaborate and complicated machinations, which mask all of the other Goals. Many times, the soul in Growth is forced to play out all of the agonies of the other Goals in order to grow, such as the Rejection [Goal]-Dominance [Goal] seen often in many members of this group who are in Growth. Depression and elation usually manifests often in this Goal. There is sometimes the need to submit, i.e., to put oneself in the hands of the guru [Submission Goal]. There are also many times the need to feel accepted, to have the [Acceptance] Goal verified by society, to check out with life, the sanity of the soul's purpose. This often makes the soul who is still in False Personality go through a set of well-defined patterns.

You can now begin to Photograph these patterns in one another. There is the definite game-playing aspect to this that, on a lower level, is worked out in awareness groups. Sometimes, it is easier to observe the various machinations by observing awareness groups at work. Perhaps this film (Here Comes Everybody) would be valuable for all of you to see. [24 February 1974]

Later that year the Negative Poles of the Overleaves were revealed, and I would say that all of the Negative Poles, not just those of the Goal as described above, provoke sick –games. For this reason, many relationships, indeed many organizations, are based on the playing out of unhealthy –games. Refer to the chapter “Machinations” for the whole story about many other appearances of that word.

As with crossed Centers described previously, the general principle is that differences create an opportunity for an unhealthy –game to play out:

We have told you many times that communication with the higher planes should not be used as a parlor game, and in the light of the questioning one, we would reiterate this advice. There are denizens of the low Astral Planes who are no more admirable in death than they were in life. [27 March 1974]

An example of a “parlor game” might be teenager girls who use an Ouija board to ask about their romantic inclinations.

The thought that comes to my mind is that, inequalities of all kinds, not just the difference between Astral and Physical denizens, set up a situation where –game-playing becomes more likely; it might be a power differential or a smarts differential or a wealth differential or a status differential or a knowledge differential. It is important that we play +games with people who want to play the same +game, and the more well-matched the game-players, the more the challenge and the fun and the learning.

Parlor games were mentioned again in a session a few weeks later:

Would hypnosis of the group during meetings be helpful?

We feel that any serious move toward opening this door is Good Work, but steer clear of parlor games. [08 May 1974]

Here again we are admonished to not let something that could be a serious +game degenerate into a frivolous –game.

We first asked for a general comment from the teacher. This is what we received.

As long as you continue to play the game of the culture and undergo the constant role-switching that occurs day in and day out, there will not be too much outward change in you. But this does not mean that there has been no change. It is merely that the role-switching uses up a tremendous amount of psychic energy that could be utilized for Work on the Path. [21 December 1974]

Refer to the chapter “Culture” for more discussion of the –games that cultures play that are likely not consistent with the +games that the Essence wants to play.

Of all the varieties of relationships where –games can be played, the romantic relationship is one of the most fraught (along with politics and money):

Carolyn: I refuse to continue with this unresolved thing, to be put upon or shit upon.

There is, of course, the risk of involved game-playing developing — of the “No, please allow me to make the sacrifice,” if this is carried too far. This is a risk one always takes when one tries to convince another to retract a valid choice. Even if there is a game being played on the part of the one making the choice, the choice must still be considered valid....

Carolyn: I don't feel I am playing a game. I haven't said I am burning any bridges.

In very advanced students, there is a degree of detachment from the master Tapes that sometimes works against them in strange ways. For one thing, it sometimes makes them unaware of behaviors that are still continuing on lower levels, mostly by rote, to some degree. There is always, until Balance has been achieved, the risk of slipping back into these behavior patterns. In this cadre, there are students at all levels [of spiritual growth] and you can observe this easily. In society, most contracts and most interpersonal relationships are based upon manipulative behavior patterns. In the male-female relationships, this is especially apparent. [15 January 1975]

Refer to the chapter “Romantic Relationships” for the whole story in some detail.

... If there is any purpose to our being with you, you must cease this game of “If I tell him what I see, I might be wrong and he won't like me.” This is not confrontation tactics, but merely accepting responsibility for your perceptions and having the strength of vulnerability to express the perceptions.... [09 February 1975]

If one is not certain of oneself, then oneself will likely play some insincere –game.

There will be no global war. There will be frequent unrest, and you have chosen to partake in the culture that sustains unrest. Rest assured that this game has, of course, a conclusion. [Dimensions! June 1975]

Dick said we were all just spiritual dilettantes — the utilitarian value comes later — the value of the Overleaves. In order to “surrender” there has to be a feeling that there is something to achieve through this surrender.

There are two types of experience going on within this movement — and by ‘movement’ we mean the whole guru game that is now on-going. These are the true experiences and the cultural experiences. Most of those who go to EST do not experience anything but group highs, and this could have happened merely by smoking marijuana in the living room with a group of friends. Others have elected to change their lives, and this has occurred only through surrender to the processes. Faith is what determines success. [10 April 1977]

On this particular evening, we had a great deal of conversation about the Overleaves and just how much value they really hold for us. We talked about the fact that we feel we don’t always use them properly and wondered what we could do to use them more effectively.

The majority of all students of this and comparable teachings use the Overleaves and all other tools given to them in the manner that will allow them to control their environment to their greatest satisfaction and to keep the game they are playing going. Only the exceptional student uses the tool as it is intended. In the case of those of you here present, you use these tools as many less knowledgeable use religion — as a controlling device. All of you need to feel that you are an individual rather than a Fragment of a larger whole. This is the function of the ego — that is, to keep the illusion of separateness intact. If this [illusion] dissolves, the ego is in trouble. [04 November 1977]

We talked about the whys and wherefores of having Sequences and paying Karma, and why one would want to alter Personality if this is the Personality we have chosen to handle these things we have apparently agreed to do in this life. If Cynthia is no longer a tragic heroine, for example, how will she complete her Agreements?

You will know that you have reached that point when you discontinue the “yes, but” game. In other words, whenever you are willing to give up your pain, you have completed all that you came to complete and are ready to go on from there. [04 November 1977]

Ralph: It seems to me that the presentation of this teaching has focused on SRGA (Soul-Role-Goal-Attitude) [and] has not been successful in communicating to others. Should another approach be used? Do the SRGs make this teaching unique from all others?

We would hesitate to call this system of naming behavior patterns [Overleaves] as the cornerstone of our teaching. Rather, we would see you all ascertaining from those expressing interest in this teaching: whether or not they are ready to accept in full the concept that they have lived before and that this life is merely a continuation of an experience begun in another time frame. And by this we mean, to be sure within yourselves that they do in fact accept this as truth for them. All the rest, including the Soul Levels, will come easily. It is upon this premise [reincarnation] that the entire [Michaelian] teaching is based and it is therefore useless (underlined) to any student not knowing this truth for himself — it becomes a parlor game of meaningless words. [13 January 1978]

Concluding Comments on Game

② GLAMOUR

This chapter is the product of a search for the word glamour in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group channeling sessions. This word does not represent a significant component of the Michaelian teachings. However, there are good reasons to discuss the subject in this Study Papers book: 1) the subject came up numerous times during the original Michaelian group; 2) some interesting things were said about the subject; 3) the subject is related to a number of other components of the Michaelian teachings that are considered to be significant; 4) students can presumably benefit from having the mentions conveniently collected and commented all in one place; 5) the distractions of glamour are unavoidable in this world; they are pervasive in human psychology and sociology and spirituality — subjects covered extensively in this book — so it behooves us to have a working knowledge of it.

This chapter is one of many in this book that focuses on a psychological component of the Michaelian teachings as found in original Michaelian group transcriptions, rather than on a doctrinal or spiritual component. A psychological component is usually either a positive to be cultivated or a negative to be mitigated. As we will see, the Michaels tell us that glamour is a negative to be eschewed. The Michaelian version of psychology is not to be confused with the popular psychology of the self-improvement movement, those that do not have a spiritual core or perspective. Rather, the Michaelian psychotherapeutic path (aimed at improving psychological health) is a beneficial precursor to the spiritual path (aimed at improving soul health). To skip the former but attempt the latter is referred to as “spiritual bypassing”. This is discussed at length on such websites as https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Spiritual_bypass. To skip mitigating one’s psychological issues and attempt to go straight to enlightenment usually proves to be problematic.

The subject of this chapter is another one of those topics that seems to me to deserve to be capitalized as a jargon word in the Michaelian teachings. So far as I have been able to determine, it is not a word or a concept that came into the original Michaelian group via Gurdjieff, or any of the other teachings that original Michaelian group members borrowed from. The word does appear three times in Yarbro’s book Messages from Michael, which is about the original Michaelian group, but the word and concept has not become widespread in the Michaelian teachings communities since then, so far as I have been able to determine. However, it was mentioned in the original Michaelian group often enough that I deem it worthy of investigation, examination, and discussion. Because it was on the Michaels mind back then, apparently unprompted by the familiarity of original Michaelian group members with other teachings, I feel that it should be on our minds now.

Definition of Glamour

The meaning of the word glamour as used by the Michaels does not differ much from the dictionary definition. Underlined words in the following quotation are my emphasis on synonyms for glamour, some of which the Michaels themselves use, as we will see:

1: an exciting and often illusory and romantic attractiveness: “the glamour of Hollywood”; especially: alluring or fascinating attraction, often used attributively: “glamour stock”, “glamour girls”, “whooping cranes and other glamour birds”.

2: a magic spell

Synonyms: bewitchment, charm, enchantment, invocation, spell.

Examples of glamour in a sentence:

“She left her hometown, attracted to the glamour of the big city.”

“An acting career filled with glitz and glamour.” [<https://www.merriam-webster.com/dictionary/glamour> — retrieved 04 July 2021]

All of these words indicate that there is something false in one's perception of whatever the word glamour is applied to. That is, the allegedly glamorous object or event superficially looks better than it proves to be in the long run or upon closer examination. I searched the original Michaelian group transcriptions for these synonyms, and, where appropriate, I included them in this chapter.

Glamour in the Original Michaelian Group

The following extracts from original Michaelian group transcriptions are Q&A exchanges, where an original Michaelian group member asks a question (or makes a comment), and the Michaels provide an answer. As is my custom, I usually provide some explanatory comments following the question or answer. Underlined words are my emphasis, to draw attention to what it is that I comment on. Sometimes I embed words or phrases [in brackets] that I believe help to clarify the question or the answer. Numerous study papers related to this chapter are to be found among my comments. There is enough information about glamour in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group that it seems expedient to divide the material into three sections: the glamour of the Physical Plane, the glamour of spiritual teachings, and miscellaneous mentions of glamour.

[\[\[run search for "allure" \]\]](#)

Glamorous Physical Plane

The first time that the word appears in the transcriptions of the original Michaelian group, it came with something of a definition:

Carolyn: I have felt the need to express my opinions more lately, and I wonder if this is good. Sometimes I have spouted off.

[Tomas:] Do you understand the source of the negative emotions? If so, then you should examine them carefully and see if you can turn them into something positive. Hostility is never an act of conscious will. The only positive forces are peaceful, loving ones. Carolyn still has a tendency to slip into the patterns or vibrations of the moment. Many sleeping souls provide the necessary Shocks to keep her on the right track — constantly examining herself. This is a common failing among neophytes on the true path. There are always many doubts until the integration takes place, and the commitment is made and is irrevocable. Life on the material plane, with all its glamour, continues to lure you back. The glamour is illusion — Maya, if you prefer the more esoteric term. Maya is part of Karma and is present for a very specific purpose. It tests your spiritual growth all the time, and is your sole eternal safety checkpoint. When you reach the point in your spiritual growth when you "know" that all hostile feelings and thoughts and words — and even world wars — come from lower Centers in sleeping souls and they are not in control, then you will lose the desire or need to retaliate or spout off. It's like spouting off to a stone wall for all the good it does you. You gain nothing and lose a great deal. [24 July 1973]

Refer to the chapter "Maya" for an examination of one of the synonyms of glamour. Further on we see that, for younger souls the Physical Plane might seem glamorous, but for older souls, such as Carolyn, the attraction is weakening and the luster is wearing off.

Ellis: We all have negativity, and there is all this evil. What do we do with it? How do we handle it?

Evil per se exists only in the minds of those perceiving an action. If you happen to be a Young Soul, your desire will be to change that evil to good, "to right the unrightable wrong." You will not hesitate to wipe out the lives that stand in your way. After all, are they not evil? Mature Souls often perceive evil in themselves and seek to exorcise this. Young Souls perceive the differences in people often as evil. The Old Soul ordinarily does not perceive evil as such; he perceives the cause and does not seek to eradicate the agent. This is what is meant loosely by "acceptance". On a higher level, this acceptance becomes Agape. Your negativity can be dissolved as soon as you realize how futile it is. Souls enthralled in [the] glamour of the Physical Plane do senseless things, granted, but realize this, Ellis: the soul is eternal; these acts are temporal. [08 October 1973]

This passage tells me that the distinction between "good" and "evil" is subjective; it is the result of temporal shortsightedness on the part of the perceiver (in terms of Soul Age) and the perpetrator (also in terms of Soul Age). The apparent dichotomy between "good" and "evil" is due to glamour/Maya on the Physical Plane, but the dichotomy is understood in higher Soul Ages, and actually reconciled in higher planes.

Edgar: What happens when I am united with my Fragments?

When you finally reunite with all the Fragments, you will no longer be subject to the allurement of the Physical Plane and for you, Edgar, since you have been in touch with the occult for over ten thousand years, you will know this and you will experience the ecstasy. [31 December 1973]

Betty: Is my aura purple?

We do not agree with that. This aura is dark blue bordering on violet.

Betty: What is the significance of that?

This is significant to this lady's innate spiritual consciousness, yet there is still some drive toward the physical glamour. [15 May 1974]

Refer to the chapter "Auras" for more information about that subject. Life as a human on the Physical Plane is susceptible to all kinds of distractions from spiritual consciousness. If there was a specific physical glamour that beset Betty, it was not given. Some specifics are mentioned in the next Q&A exchange where glamour was mentioned:

At this point, Gene brought up the subject of trust. Asked for the group response as to how we felt about trusting him, etc. Considerable discussion followed.

If one is truly striving toward Balance, there will be a desire for harmony in the environment. They are one in the same. There is only chaos in the environments of those struggling with conflicts on the glamorous Physical Plane. The struggle to meet the expectations of others that is, sadly enough, most often without knowledge of those expectations. There is so much guesswork going on, how could you possibly trust? [24 September 1974]

These forms of glamour all arise from the Personality type that finds trauma-drama intriguing and attractive and appealing. The Personality feels more 'alive' when enmeshed in glamorous crazyness.

Arthur: We sold our house and are moving, having new friends. What direction to move in now?

For you, Arthur, this has been an enormous step. The next one will be when you are able to move with the other students [into a commune], and experience this growing group. Only then can you fully appreciate its influence on your present trend. Perhaps now that you have given up much glamour, you can continue to study and apply, and then further steps will be self evident, as they have been with other students. Your progress is so good right now. [08 October 1974]

That was just another general statement about the fact that there is spiritual progress in mitigating the distraction of glamour in one's life.

